Where the father of an illegitimate child has members of his own family living in the same community with whom he is almost constantly associated and maintains cordial relation, he does not "treat the child as if it were a legitimate child" within the meaning of Civ. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; G. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of David Jennings Baird, deceased. Petition by David Jennings Baird for a partial distribution of the estate. From a judgment and decree directing partial distribution as prayed for, Veronica C. Baird appeals. Judgment and decree reversed.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by Veronica C. Baird, as executrix of the last will and testament of David Jennings Baird, deceased, from a judgment and from a decree of partial distribution of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco. The petitioner, by the guardian of his person and estate, Lydia Margaret Valencia, applied for a partial distribution of the said estate on the ground that he is the illegitimate son of the decedent and said Lydia M. Valencia, and that he had been adopted by the decedent in the manner provided by section 230 of the Civil Code, that is to say, that the decedent had publicly acknowledged the petitioner as his own child, received him as such into his family, and had otherwise treated him as if he were a legitimate child.

On a former hearing a judgment denying the petition was made and entered by the superior court, sitting without a jury, from which an appeal was taken to this court. The judgment was reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial (Estate of Baird,

Rehearing Denied March 25, 1920.)

1. BASTARDS ⇐13 — FOUR ESSENTIALS FOR ADOPTION OF ILLEGITIMATE CHILD.

The four things essential to the adoption of an illegitimate child by its father under Civ. Code, § 230, are: That he shall be its natural father; shall have publicly acknowledged himself to be the father; shall have received the child into his family; and he shall have otherwise treated it as his legitimate child.

173 Cal. 617, 160 Pac. 1078) on the ground that the superior court erred in refusing the demand of the petitioner for a trial by jury as contemplated by sections 1716 and 1312 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A trial was thereafter had before a jury, which resulted in a verdict in favor of the petitioner, in approval of which the trial court made findings of fact and conclusions of law, entered judgment in favor of petitioner, and made a decree of partial distribution on June 14, 1918, distributing the entire estate to him, namely, certain real property situate in Contra Costa county, $10,000 in money, and 221 shares of the capital stock of the Sausalito Land & Ferry Company.

It is alleged in the petition that Lydia M. Valencia is the guardian of the estate and of the person of petitioner; that David Jennings Baird, the decedent, died on November 25, 1908, leaving an estate of the appraised value of $98,666.38, consisting of real and personal property; that the decedent left a last will and testament dated July 30, 1903, by which he bequeathed and devised his entire property to his mother, Veronica C. Baird, and to two brothers and to two half-brothers; that in said will the decedent appointed his mother, the said Veronica C. Baird, and I. I. Brown, executrix and executor, respectively; that petitioner is the child and son of the decedent and Lydia M. Valencia, and that neither the decedent nor Lydia M. Valencia was ever married; that petitioner was born in San Francisco on December 7, 1906; that at the time of and for more than one year preceding the birth of petitioner, the decedent and Lydia M. Valencia lived and cohabited together in San Francisco without having been married, and that during all of that time the decedent had a family, consisting of himself and Miss Valencia; that from the time of the birth of petitioner and up to the death of the decedent he maintained a home and family in San Francisco, consisting of the decedent, Miss Valencia, and petitioner, and of no one else, and that from and after the birth of petitioner and up to the death of the decedent he publicly acknowledged himself to be the father of the child to numerous and various persons by open and public declarations, statements, admissions, and acts; that upon the birth of petitioner the decedent received him into his family, constituted as aforesaid, as his own child, and that the petitioner remained and was by the decedent kept continuously and uninterruptedly in the said family as a part of the same and a member thereof, in the care and custody and control of the decedent, as the father of petitioner, up to the decedent's death, and did otherwise so treat the said child as if it were a legitimate child by the exercise of those acts, declarations, and conduct which are usual to the father of a legitimate child and legitimate born child with respect to such a child and the ordinary and usual treatment of such a child; that the decedent adopted petitioner as his own child; that the said will of decedent was made before petitioner was born, and that it left petitioner unprovided for by any settlement; that the decedent in no way provided for petitioner in said will, and that by reason thereof petitioner is entitled to the whole of decedent's property; and that the estate of decedent is but little indebted, and that the share of petitioner may be allowed to him without loss to the creditors of the estate.

The devisees and legatees of the decedent opposed the application for partial distribution. In their answer they denied all the material allegations of the petition as to the paternity and the adoption of the child, and alleged that the family of the decedent consisted of himself, his mother, sister, and brothers, into which family the child was never received; and that he indignantly denied in terms of opprobrium that the child was his, and continuously concealed its existence from them.

A mass of evidence was introduced in support of and against the claim of adoption, but in the consideration of the question here we will assume that, upon the evidence, the verdict of the jury, and the findings of the court, it was established that the decedent was the natural father of petitioner, and that he publicly acknowledged him as his own child. We will therefore discuss the evidence with special reference to the remaining propositions—whether petitioner was received into the family of the decedent, and by him otherwise treated as a legitimate child, and view it in the light most favorable to petitioner.

Beginning in the year 1902, at which time they set up housekeeping, and ending with the death of the decedent, he and Miss Valencia, though unmarried, lived together in various places in San Francisco under the assumed name of Mr. and Mrs. David Tyler. The petitioner was born in the St. Helen Apartments, one of their abodes, on December 7, 1906. Miss Valencia testified that for more than a year preceding this event and until the decedent died, they lived together as man and wife, accomplishing all the relations of man and wife, and that she had no relations whatever with any other man, and that she and the decedent constituted a family at that time, of which he was the head, and that petitioner was received into such family. The petitioner, the mother, and the decedent continued to live at the St. Helen Apartments until April, 1907, when they moved to the Octavia Apartments, where they remained for six months, and then went into a house at 230 I street. They were living in the latter place when the decedent died on November 25, 1908. The attending physician at the confinement of Miss Valencia testified that he was engaged by decedent considerably in advance of the birth of petitioner; that the decedent directed him to secure a nurse, and that the decedent paid all expenses.

According to the evidence, from the beginning of their housekeeping the decedent employed the servants and paid all the expenses of the household, and he would sometimes give orders to servants and to tradesmen. The bills for the household and other expenses were generally made out and paid in the name of "Tyler," the real identity of the members of the household, however, being known to some of those with whom they had dealings, also to many of their mutual acquaintances and friends. Miss Valencia was frequently introduced as the wife of the decedent by the name of "Tyler" and on occasions as "Mrs. Baird." According to a number of witnesses, he invited them in to see his "wife and baby." There is much testimony to the effect that the decedent habitually caressed, fondled, took care of, attended upon, and played with the child, gave directions to the servants concerning him, bathed him, and otherwise manifested a deep interest in its welfare. During the pregnancy of the mother the decedent expressed the hope that the child would be a boy. He called him "my boy," "papsy's boy," and "Davey," bought him toys, referred to himself as "pappy" and his "papsy," and "seemed to be proud of him and think a whole lot of him." He asked different persons how they liked the baby, if it looked like him, and seemed pleased when told that they resembled each other. On one occasion he remarked that some day petitioner would be president of the Baird estate. The decedent frequently discussed petitioner with neighbors, visitors, chauffeurs, café proprietors, bartenders, and others. He sometimes wheeled the child in a buggy in the neighborhood and in public parks, occasionally accompanied by the mother and the nurse, when, according to one of the servants, people would salute the decedent as "Baird" or "Dave." He also took the child on automobile trips and discussed plans for his education and for his future generally. The decedent had numerous pictures taken of the baby, some of which he had framed. Photographs of the child were found in the decedent's room at the Fairmont Hotel after his death. He and Miss Valencia were photographed together. He sent her cards and other communications while he was absent from San Francisco. A number of the decedent's personal effects, pictures, uniforms, trinkets, and souvenirs were found in Miss Valencia's possession after his death. He kept part of his wardrobe and other personal belongings in their various abodes, and sometimes when he had social engagements he would have her send his things to the hotel. When they went to the Alexander Apartments to live in the early part of 1906, he registered, according to the proprietress, under the name of "Baird." A "wedding ring" engraved "Dave to Dodie, 1907," was found in the decedent's safe deposit box following his demise. There is much evidence as to the proportion of his time that decedent spent with the mother and the child, how frequently the baby and the mother had their meals in cafés when he was not present, and how often he took his meals with them. Testimony was introduced to the effect that Miles T. Baird, a brother of the decedent, sometimes came to the apartment to see him after petitioner was born, that he brought the child toys and fondled him, and that on one occasion, at the Octavia Apartment, the decedent said to his brother, referring to petitioner: "Miles, he is a dandy. He beats your baby all hollow."

After the birth of petitioner, the decedent agreed to purchase the house at 230 I street by installment payments, directing that the deed be made out in the name of "Tydia M. Valencia," and which house was sold after he died, because of default in the payments. He paid for the furnishings in this house, which were also billed and insured in her name. The household telephone was in the name of "Mrs. D. V. Tyler." This was also true of the accounts for water, gas, and electricity. Miss Valencia testified that the decedent informed her on different occasions that he kept a room in a hotel, and it is not claimed on behalf of petitioner that, with the exception of Miles T. Baird, any relative of the decedent ever saw the child, or that he discussed it with them or any of them, or that it was ever received or introduced into the Baird family, or that any member thereof, save Miles T. Baird, ever visited or had any form of communication with the mother of the child. Benjamin H. Baird, a half-brother of decedent, testifying on behalf of the estate, stated that in the month of May, 1908, he asked decedent if he was the father of petitioner, and that he denied that he was.

The evidence on behalf of the estate shows that the decedent was about 28 years of age at the time of his death; that the estate left by his father was incorporated as the "Baird Estate," and that the decedent was the president thereof; that his relatives consisted of his mother, Veronica C. Baird, who was a widow, a sister, two brothers, John Rush Baird and Miles T. Baird, and two half-brothers, Benjamin H. Baird and Thomas R. Baird; that his brother, John Rush Baird, who is mentioned in the decedent's last will, died in December, 1905; that for a portion of the time from January, 1906, until his death the remaining relatives of the decedent were in San Francisco; that with the exception of Benjamin H. Baird and Miles T. Baird, as already noted, the decedent never mentioned the existence of the child to any of them; that after the earthquake and fire he had a room and bath in a lodging house where his half-brothers lived, and that thereafter until he died he kept a room either in the Little St. Francis Hotel, the Palace Hotel, or the Fairmont Hotel; that part of that period his mother lived in the same hotel with him; many witnesses were examined and city directories and telephone directories, post office and business records were produced to prove the decedent's residence addresses, which included the hotels and lodging house already referred to, and did not include any of the abodes where he kept the mother and the child; that his sister was in San Francisco part of the time from January, 1906, until she moved to New York; that, according to the testimony of Benjamin H. Baird, the only members of the Baird family who were in California from April, 1907, to January, 1908, were the decedent and Thomas R. Baird, and that Miles T. Baird left the state for Australia in April, 1907, and did not return until after the decedent passed away; that with the exception of Miles T. Baird all of the remaining relatives of the decedent gave testimony at the trial, and, excepting Benjamin H. Baird, they all denied that the child had ever been mentioned by the decedent in their presence or in the presence of any of them, and, including Benjamin H. Baird, they all denied that the child was ever introduced into the Baird family, or that any of them ever saw him, that they ever visited any of the places where petitioner lived with his mother, or that any communication ever passed between them and the mother and the child; that the decedent never mentioned petitioner to any of his friends, business associates, or to any of the persons with whom he had dealings in connection with the Baird estate; that when his mother would be in San Francisco, following her annual trips to Europe, decedent was in the habit of going to her room at the hotel, dining with her, and often remaining with her until 10 or 11 o'clock at night; that his mother returned from Europe in May, 1908, and remained in San Francisco until his death; that the decedent was on terms of cordial and affectionate intimacy with his relatives; that when they were in San Francisco he was in constant association with them.

In this summary of the evidence we have not attempted to cover every phase thereof, nor the numerous inquiries on cross-examination, nor the many apparent contradictions and inconsistencies as shown by the voluminous record before us, for the reason, as already indicated, that we shall resolve every question of fact in favor of petitioner. It may, however, contribute to a more complete understanding of the evidence to mention that the decedent in his relations with the mother of the child led a life of reckless dissipation, being habitually under the influence of intoxicants, and otherwise showing great demoralization; that for the most part the persons who figured prominently in their illicit relationship (excluding neighbors and those with whom they had business dealings), and upon whose testimony the case of petitioner very greatly depends, came into the life of the decedent through such relationship, some of them of loose morals, and just the kind of characters it might be expected would be their mutual companions, associates, and friends. There are frequent references to lively automobile parties, the bill in one month for automobile hire amounting to over $600, and, according to the evidence only one man ever sharing with the decedent the expense of such entertainment; and to trips to the beach, to roadhouses, to cafés, and the like, on occasions the entire night being given over to that kind of diversion.

The findings of the court are to the effect that, at the time of and for more than one year immediately preceding the birth of petitioner, the decedent and Lydia M. Valencia continuously lived and cohabited together in the city and county of San Francisco without having been married, and that during all of that time the decedent had and maintained a family, consisting of himself and Lydia M. Valencia, together with domestic servants, and that while so living together the petitioner was born as a result thereof; that while so maintaining a family, petitioner was born into the family and household of decedent at the St. Helen Apartments, and that from the time of petitioner's birth until about April 1, 1907, the decedent maintained in the St. Helen Apartments a family and household, consisting of himself, the petitioner, and Lydia M. Valencia, and household servants; that during said period of residence at the St. Helen Apartments the decedent received petitioner into his family as his own child, and that petitioner resided with the decedent at the St. Helen Apartments as a part and member of decedent's family sleeping in the same apartments and eating at the same table, and that during said period at the St. Helen Apartments, petitioner was fed, clothed, and provided with the necessities of life, was cared for and caressed by decedent, and was treated by him as a father would treat his own legitimate child; that at the Octavia Apartments petitioner was fed, clothed, and provided with the necessary comforts of life, cared for and caressed and was treated by decedent as a father would treat his legitimate child; that decendent moved from the Octavia Apartments to the house at 230 I street where he resided until his death, "and maintained in said dwelling * * * a household and family, consisting of himself, petitioner, and said Lydia M. Valencia and household servants"; and "that * * * during the minority of the petitioner, the said David J. Baird received the petitioner into his family as his own child, and otherwise treated the petitioner as if petitioner were his legitimate child." In the light of the instructions it is to be implied that the jury made similar findings.

Section 230 of the Civil Code reads:

"The father of an illegitimate child, by publicly acknowledging it as his own, receiving it as such, with the consent of his wife, if he is married, into his family, and otherwise treating it as if it were a legitimate child, thereby adopts it as such; and such child is thereupon deemed for all purposes legitimate from the time of its birth. The foregoing provisions of this chapter do not apply to such an adoption."

[1] Four things are therefore essential to the adoption of an illegitimate child by its father: (1) He shall be its natural father; (2) he shall have publicly acknowledged himself to be the father; (3) he shall have received the child into his family; (4) he shall have otherwise treated it as his legitimate child.

[2] Did the decedent receive petitioner into his family? Referring to the word "family," as it appears in section 230 of the Civil Code, it was declared in Estate of Gird, 157 Cal. 544, 108 Pac. 499, 137 Am. St. Rep. 131, Chief Justice Angellotti writing the opinion of the court:

"In Estate of Bennett, 134 Cal. 323 [66 Pac. 371], this court said: 'The meaning which is to be given to the word is to be determined by the context, and also from a consideration of the subject-matter to which it relates. Every case must depend upon its particular circumstances.' Mr. Jarman says (Jarman on Wills, *941): "'Family' is not a technical word, and is of flexible meaning.'"

It was declared in Estate of De Laveaga, 142 Cal. 169, 75 Pac. 790, that the father of an illegitimate child cannot adopt it unless he has a family, or at least a home into which he must receive the child.

The appellant has cited and discussed a number of authorities, including Estate of Gird, supra, and Estate of Jones, 166 Cal. 108, 135 Pac. 288, to which we may add the recent case of Estate of McNamara, 183 Pac. 552, in support of the contention that the decedent was the head of a family composed of himself and the mother of the child, and that at petitioner's birth he was received into such family by the decedent, but the facts in those cases differ so widely from those in the case at bar that we do not think it is necessary to discuss them, for in no case has it been held that a family constituted as this "family" was, as shown by the uncontroverted evidence in the case, would come within the meaning of the statute. If this was a family, it was a clandestine family, using the word "clandestine" to describe the character of the family, rather than the relationship that existed between the father and the mother of the child. Thus, in Estate of Gird, supra, the court held in favor of the adoption, where the relations between the father and the mother were clandestine and the child and the mother went under the name of her husband. It is the attitude of the father toward and his conduct in respect to the child and not the character of his relationship with the mother, which is the true test in determining whether the child was received into the family of the father. It would be a violation of the letter and spirit of the statute to hold that "the father of an illegitimate child" has received it "into his family," where the existence of the "family" rests upon concealment and dissimulation well calculated to keep from his own relatives, who are living in the same community and with whom he is on terms of intimacy, all knowledge either of the child or of his "family."

In this case the couple masqueraded as man and wife under a fictitious name assumed by the father and mother and given to the child in order to keep the decedent's family in ignorance of the meretricious relationship and of the child. As we have seen, the decedent was on cordial and intimate terms with the members of the Baird family. He constantly canvassed the affairs of the Baird estate with them, had other interests in common with them, corresponded with his mother and sister, arranged for the schooling of his half-brothers, and one year made a trip to New York to meet his mother on her return from Europe so that he might journey to San Francisco with her and other members of the family. In short, the relations between the decedent and his relatives clearly appear to be such, considering their respective modes of living, as usually obtain between a bachelor son and his relatives with whom he is on terms of cordial and affectionate intimacy, and plainly suggest that the motive for his course of conduct towards petitioner was to spare the Baird family humiliation. We think this is true in spite of the testimony of several of respondent's witnesses, from which it might be inferred that the decedent seized every opportunity to proclaim his shame, going so far, according to the testimony of the attending physician, as to name the child "David Jennings Baird." This witness, who had known Miss Valencia and the decedent for several years before petitioner was born, stated that he obtained the data for the birth certificate from the decedent, who was reluctant to give the information because "he wanted to keep it from his mother." It is worthy of mention that the birth certificate was not filed until February 14, 1907—more than two months after the birth of petitioner. This physician also stated that when he sent bills for his services to the decedent to the apartment or to the house he used the name "Tyler," and when to the Palace Hotel or the Fairmont Hotel, the name of "Baird." The evidence leads us to the conclusion that where the unmarried father of an illegitimate child lives in the same community and maintains constant relations with his own legitimate family, and at the same time, under an assumed name, maintains the illegitimate child clandestinely in another home with its mother, with whom he lives in illicit relations a great part of his time, he is not receiving the child as his own "into his family" within the meaning of section 230 of the Civil Code.

But, even if it be true from the testimony on behalf of respondent, that the decedent maintained an establishment at the places where the mother and the child lived which had something of the character of a family in the sense in which that term is used in some of the decisions, although clandestine with respect to his legitimate family, it cannot be denied, on the other hand, that he did not treat the child as if it were a legitimate child. A father of a legitimate child, under such circumstances, does not cause or allow it to be known by an assumed name. If he wanted the child to be deemed legitimate, he would have it known by his own name, he would naturally refer to it when associating with his own mother, sister, and brothers, and he would either take the child to see them or have them see the child. If he had been estranged from his own family he might not have done so, but that was not the case. When his relatives were in San Francisco he was associating with them as a member of the family during all of the time, yet he never in any sense treated the child as he would a legitimate child so far as they were concerned. It is a circumstance, proper to be considered in determining this question, that when the decedent discussed his will with I. I. Brown, whom he named as his executor, some time after the birth of petitioner, he made no change therein.

[3] Where the father of an illegitimate child has members of his own family living in the same community, with whom he is in almost constant association and maintains cordial relations, he does not treat the child as if it was a legitimate child, if he conceals its existence from such members of his real family, never has them visit the child or has the child visit them, or in any other manner acts toward the child with regard to his own legitimate relatives as any father reasonably would do if he intended to adopt the child as his own and treat it as his legitimate child. Such treatment is contrary to the sense in which section 230 of the Civil Code uses the phrase "otherwise treating it as if it were a legitimate child." The treating it as if it were legitimate is as essential to a legal adoption under that section as any of the other elements therein mentioned. Because of the want of such treatment we are of the opinion that there was no adoption.

Having reached this conclusion, it will serve no purpose to consider the numerous specifications of error in the rulings and in the instructions.

Judgment and decree reversed.

In re IMPERATRICE'S GUARDIANSHIP.
(S. F. 9163.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 2, 1920.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD 10—CUSTODY OF CHILDREN PROPERLY AWARDED TO GUARDIAN AS AGAINST NATURAL PARENT.

Where 14 year old boy nominated his own guardian under Code Civ. Proc. § 1748, and 13 year old boy expressed a preference for such guardian under Civ. Code, § 246, and where both disliked to return and live with their mother and stepfather, where their home environment had been bad, and where the estate of the deceased father of the children was about to be distributed, requiring appointment of a guardian of their estate, court's refusal to revoke order appointing person so preferred by the children guardian of the persons and estate of the two boys and younger sister and to award custody of children to the mother held proper.

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD 10—WELFARE OF CHILDREN IS THE CONTROLLING CONSIDERATION.

When resolving the question of guardianship of children, the court is controlled by what appears to be their best interest in respect to their temporal and moral welfare; and when a child is of sufficient age to form an intelligent preference, the court may consider that preference in determining the question.

3. GUARDIAN AND WARD 10—PARENT'S RIGHTS SUBORDINATE TO WELFARE OF CHILD IN AWARDED ITS CUSTODY.

Though primarily the parents of the child have the right by nature and statutory enactment to its custody, which right should be freely recognized in the absence of compelling reasons for its disregard, such right of the parent must give way to the health, safety, morals, and general welfare of the child.

In the matter of the guardianship of John Imperatrice and others, minor children of Rosa Conte, formerly Rosa Imperatrice. From an order denying a motion for revocation of letters of guardianship granted to Beulah E. Miller, Rosa Conte appeals. Affirmed.

George E. Church, of Fresno, for appellant.

Thomas F. Lopez, of Fresno, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from an order denying the petition of Rosa Conte for the revocation of an order theretofore made appointing one Beulah E. Miller guardian of the persons and estates of certain minor children.

In her petition the appellant, Rosa Conte, alleges that she is the mother of the three children therein named, and that their father, her former husband, is now deceased; that the latter left a small estate in which each of said children is entitled to share; that on the 27th day of March, 1918, the appellant was declared incompetent and committed to the Stockton State Hospital, where she remained as an inmate until the 17th day of March, 1919, when she was, by a certificate duly issued, restored to capacity; that the day after she was so restored to competency Beulah E. Miller, the respondent, after a hearing, was regularly appointed guardian of the persons and estates of said children. Upon these allegations the petitioner prayed that said order appointing respondent such guardian be rescinded and annulled, and that the said children be returned to her as their mother entitled to their custody.

The respondent, answering the said petition, admitted that the minors are the children of appellant, who was declared incompetent and later, as alleged, restored to capacity, and that she, the respondent, was appointed guardian of said minors. Continuing, said respondent alleged that the appellant is not a fit or proper person to have the care and control of said children, that her present husband is not a proper person to assist in the instruction or care of said children, and that if appellant should be given their care and custody and the control of their property, the latter, on account of appellant's incompetency and inability to care therefor, would come into the control of her said husband, who would improperly expend and waste it. She further alleged that she is experienced in the care and handling of children, and that in the exercise of the authority theretofore conferred upon her she had placed said children in proper homes with good environment, where they will receive proper care and education. She therefore prayed that her said letters of guardianship be not revoked.

and answer the appellant merely put in evidence the certificate of restoration to capacity, and rested, relying upon the rule that unless some good reason exists based upon what appears to be the best interests of the children she, as their surviving parent, is entitled to be appointed their guardian (21 Cyc. 24; Guardianship of Salter, 142 Cal. 412, 76 Pac. 51; In re Campbell, 130 Cal. 380, 62 Pac. 613). The difficulty at the bottom of appellant's case, however, is that the evidence in the record shows that it falls squarely within the exception to the above rule, according to which exception the welfare of the children must be given priority in certain cases over the otherwise natural right of the parent. According to the testimony of Ella M. Towle, a probation officer of the county in which the present matter arises, these children were neglected by their mother. Her testimony shows that in November, 1917, she found them ragged and dirty and two of them running the streets; that with the consent of their mother she placed them in the county orphanage. Another witness, Mrs. Rebecca M. Carter, matron of the county orphanage, testified that the children were extremely dirty and their heads full of lice. The children remained in the orphanage from December, 1917, to May, 1918. Two of them—boys, one 14 and the other 13 years of age—were called as witnesses upon the inquiry, and they both expressed their preference that Miss Miller act as their guardian, and stated that they would not like to return to the life they endured with their mother and stepfather; that under her supervision good homes were provided for them; that they were able to keep clean, were properly clothed, and could go to school regularly. These boys also testified that their former home environment was bad; that their stepfather had an ungovernable temper; that on one occasion, in the presence of the younger boy, he shook his fist at their mother and threatened to break her head, on another occasion in essaying to strike her he missed and hit the boy's sister, and on another occasion threw a knife at the witness.

This testimony, like all the other evidence in the case, was uncontradicted, and appears to have been given free from suggestion, nor was its force impaired by cross-examination. The respondent testified that the children had been boarding in homes under the supervision of the county welfare department, and any expenses incurred on their behalf had been borne by the county treasury. One of the boys being over 14 years of age, was permitted, subject to the approval of the court, to nominate his own guardian (Civ. Proc. § 1748); the other boy was 13 years old at the time of the trial, and showed himself to be of sufficient capacity to express an intelligent preference (Civ. Code, sec. 246).

As to the little girl, she was not called as a witness, and the record is silent as to her, except it appears that she is permitted to be with her mother from time to time and on such occasions assists in the housework. The mother of these children, unfortunately, is unable to give them the care and proper home environment necessary for their welfare, and if left with her and their stepfather disastrous results for the future of these children may reasonably be apprehended. In addition to what has been said, it also appeared upon the hearing of the petition that the estate of the father of the children is about to be distributed, giving rise to the necessity for the appointment of a guardian of their estate.

[2, 3] When resolving the question of the guardianship of children the court is controlled by what appears to be for their best interest in respect to their temporal and moral welfare; and when a child is of sufficient age to form an intelligent preference the court may consider that preference in determining the question. This rule requires no citation of authority. And while primarily the parents of a child have the right, by nature and statutory enactment, to its custody, which right should be freely recognized in the absence of compelling reasons for its disregard, yet whenever conditions are shown to be such, by reason of the mental and moral limitations or delinquency of parents, that to allow the child to continue in their custody would be to endanger its permanent welfare, this right of the parent must give way, its preservation being of less importance than the health, safety, morals, and general welfare of the child. 21 Cyc., p. 35. The order is affirmed.

RISCHARD v. MILLER. (L. A. 5319.)

1. CONTRACTS $\S$ 320—BUILDING CONTRACTOR HELD ENTITLED TO RECOVER PRICE WITH REDUCTION FOR SLIGHT DEFECTS.

Several defects in construction of a dwelling, all of which could, at a cost of not over $100, be easily remedied to conform to the building contract, held within the rule that where there has been no willful departure from a contract, and no omission of any of its essential parts, but the contractor has performed in good faith all its substantive terms, and omissions are so slight that they cannot be regarded as an integral or substantive part of the contract, and owner can be compensated by recoupment, the contractor can recover contract price, less such recoupment.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1170(3)—THOUGH PLEADING ASKING SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE DID NOT AVER PRICE WAS ADEQUATE, JUDGMENT NOT REVERSED.

Cross-complaint for specific performance of part of building contract that owner shall, in payment of \$1,250 of the price for building, convey a lot to contractor, is sufficient, at least to prevent a reversal, in view of Const. art. 6, $\S$ 4½, as to errors not resulting in miscarriage of justice, though not alleging the price fixed for the lot was adequate, or that the contract was just and reasonable; it showing that plaintiff valued the lot at the price fixed when he made the contract, and bringing suit to enforce contract being in effect an affirmation that it was just and reasonable.

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE $\S$ 115—CROSS-COMPLAINT NEED NOT ALLEGE DEMAND FOR DEED, WHERE DEMAND WOULD HAVE BEEN FUTILE.

Cross-complaint for specific performance of the part of the building contract that owner shall, in payment of part of price for building, convey a lot to contractor, is sufficient, though not expressly alleging a demand for deed; it averring that the owner was notified that the building was completed, and that he refused conveyance, and the owner's action for damages on the ground that the building was not completed showing that a formal demand at time of cross-complaint would have been an idle ceremony, in which case averment of demand is unnecessary.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by Eugene Rischard against R. C. Miller. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ticknor & Carter, L. L. Riccardi, and J. W. Morin, all of Pasadena, for appellant.

J. H. Merriam, of Pasadena, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment. The complainant alleges that the plaintiff and the defendant made a contract whereby the defendant undertook to construct a dwelling house on a lot belonging to the plaintiff, in accordance with certain plans and specifications, for the sum of $2,600; that the defendant had completed the building, but had failed to construct it according to the plans and specifications, whereby the plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $1,378.

The answer denies the allegations of the complaint concerning the failure to construct the building as provided in the plans and specifications. The defendant also filed a cross-complaint, alleging that by the terms of the contract sued on the sum of $1,250 of the contract price was to be paid to the defendant by the plaintiff 35 days after notice of completion, and that this payment was to be made by the conveyance from the plaintiff to the defendant of a lot adjoining that upon which the building was constructed, free and clear of incumbrance, valued in the contract at $1,250; that the defendant had constructed the building in accordance with the terms of the contract, and gave notice of completion thereof to the plaintiff; and that plaintiff had refused to convey to the defendant, as the final payment thereon, the said lot, as he had agreed to do. Thereupon he prayed for a decree enforcing performance of the agreement to convey the said lot to him.

The court made findings in accordance with the allegations of the cross-complaint, and that, although in a few minor and trivial matters the building did not strictly and technically comply with the terms of the contract, the departure was not willful nor intentional on the part of the defendant, and that the defects were capable of being easily remedied to conform to the terms of the contract at an expense not exceeding $99.50. Thereupon the court concluded that the defendant was entitled to have the contract enforced in his favor, with an abatement of $99.50 on the contract price on account of the defects found to exist, by the conveyance of said lot by the plaintiff to the defendant, upon the payment by defendant to the plaintiff of the difference between the sum of $1,250, at which the lot was to be accepted as payment, and the amount found due and unpaid on the contract price. Judgment was given accordingly in favor of the defendant for specific performance.

[1] The plaintiff insists that the defects of construction found by the court were so serious and important to the performance of the contract that the case does not come within the rule which allows the enforcement of a contract by one party where it has been substantially performed by him, although not completely performed in accordance with its terms. In Connell v. Higgins, 170 Cal. 556, 150 Pac. 769, the court considered this question and quoted a passage from section 1607 of Elliott on Contracts, defining the meaning of the term "substantial performance," as applied to questions of this character. The rule there stated is that if there has been no willful departure from the terms of the contract, and no omission of any of its essential parts, if the contractor has performed in good faith all of its substantive terms, or if the omission is so slight that it cannot be regarded as an integral or substantive part of the contract and the other party can be compensated therefor by a recoupment in the way of damages, the contractor may recover whatever is due upon the contract less such recoupment, especially in a case where the other party has received the benefit of what has been done, and is enjoying the fruits of the work.

The defects stated in the findings are all of the character thus defined. On the foundation wall there was what is termed a "slight burning of the concrete" at one point, which could be removed at the cost of $25. There was a slight settling of the floor around a pillar in one of the rooms. Ten dollars would have paid for correcting the defect. The pieces of glass in a cabinet door were not of precisely the size specified in the contract. The change could have been made for $3.50. Half-inch water pipe had been used as laterals to connect the service pipe with half-inch openings in the faucets. Three-quarter inch was specified. The change could have been made for $25. The evidence showed that half-inch pipe was usual in such cases, and was as serviceable in all respects as three-quarter inch pipe. In one of the rooms No. 2 flooring had been used, instead of No. 1; but it was so clear of all imperfections that the plaintiff himself did not discover it at the time, although he was present when it was being laid. In one of the closets a hat cupboard was specified, and was not put in. It could have been put in for $5. A depression in the cement floor on the front porch could have been corrected for $1. These comprise all the defects in the findings for which the $99.50 was involved. The uncontradicted evidence would have supported findings much less favorable to the plaintiff than those made by the court. The defects did not to any appreciable extent affect the use or value of the house as a dwelling place.

[2, 3] The objection that the cross-complaint does not aver that the price fixed for the lot was adequate, or that the contract was just and reasonable to the plaintiff, is without merit, or at all events not sufficient to warrant a reversal. Const., art. 6, § 4½. It does show that the plaintiff himself valued it at the price fixed when he made the contract to convey it, and by himself suing to enforce the contract he in effect affirmed that it was just and reasonable. The objection that a demand for the conveyance was not alleged is also, and for like reasons, insufficient for reversal. It alleges that the plaintiff was given notice that the building was completed, and that he refused to convey the lot, as he had agreed to do. His own suit for damages on the ground that the building was not completed shows that a formal demand at the time the cross-complaint was filed would have been but an idle ceremony. In such a case an averment of a demand for a deed is unnecessary. Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 281.

We find no ground upon which the appeal can be sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. MILLER. (Cr. 483.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 19, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, March 18, 1920.)

1. LARCENY $\S$ 58—IDENTIFICATION OF AUTO TRACED TO DEFENDANT WITH THAT STOLEN SUFFICIENT.

Evidence of identity of auto, traced as coming from defendant, with that stolen, held sufficient.

2. LARCENY $\S$ 64(7)—EVIDENCE OF COMMISSION BY DEFENDANT SUFFICIENT.

Evidence, including recent unexplained possession, held sufficient to justify inference that theft of auto was committed by defendant.

3. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 720(5)—STATEMENT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY AS TO ABSENCE OF CLAIM OF AUTO BY PERSON HAVING IT, AND TESTIFYING TO PURCHASE BEFORE THEFT, LEGITIMATE ARGUMENT.

Statement of district attorney, on prosecution for theft of auto, that there was no evidence that C. had ever demanded or sought to recover the car, C. being the person in whose possession it was found, and he having testified that he bought it before the alleged theft, was legitimate argument, it being proper to attack the witness' veracity.

4. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1037(2)—MERE FORMAL OBJECTION TO STATEMENT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY IN ARGUMENT DOES NOT REQUIRE REVIEW.

Dismissal, without comment, of assignment of error based on statement of district attorney in argument would be justified, defendant having made only a "formal" objection, and not having requested a direction that the jury disregard the statement.

5. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 721(6)—STATEMENT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY AS TO DEFENDANT'S FAILURE TO PRODUCE WITNESS TO ACCOUNT FOR POSSESSION OF STOLEN CAR NOT COMMENT ON DEFENDANT'S FAILURE TO TESTIFY.

Statement of district attorney that defendant produced no witness to account for his possession of the stolen car was not a violation of his right to have no comment on his failure to testify in his own behalf.

6. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 721½(2)—DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S COMMENT ON FAILURE TO EXPLAIN POSSESSION OF STOLEN CAR PROPER.

For district attorney to comment on defendant's failure to offer explanation of his possession of the stolen car is proper.

7. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1166½(12)—EXPRESSION OF JUDGE RENDERED INNOCUOUS BY SUBSEQUENT CLEAR INSTRUCTION.

Expression of doubt by court as to whether or not failure of defendant to explain possession of recently stolen property raised a presumption of guilt was rendered innocuous by subsequent clear instruction that recent unexplained possession, by itself, was insufficient for conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

D. O. Miller was convicted of theft, denied a new trial, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Ben F. Woolner, of Oakland, and W. C. Le Hane, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was charged, in an information in the superior court of Stanislaus county, with the theft of a light Buick automobile, the property of one J. W. Ross. He was convicted by a jury, and from the judgment sentencing him to the penitentiary, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, an appeal has been taken. Some of the facts upon which respondent relies for a justification of the verdict are undisputed, and others follow as a fair inference from certain evidence appearing in the record. We are warranted by this record in stating the case as follows: On November 16, 1917, Ross had the car standing on the street near his office in the city of Modesto in said county of Stanislaus. When he went to get the machine, about 6 o'clock in the evening, he found it had been taken away. On January 27, 1918, the car was recovered from the possession of a man named Christiansen at Fresno. It had been delivered to said Christiansen by the defendant herein on or about the 24th day of November, 1917. After Ross learned of the finding of his car, he went to a garage used and operated by the defendant at Oakland, and there found and identified certain parts of the equipment which had been on his car when taken away and which had been removed therefrom. When the machine was recovered the engine number had been changed. Certain parts of the equipment had been removed and replaced by different equipment of similar mechanical character. About the time that the car was stolen defendant had been seen to drive into a garage at Riverbank, a town situated between Modesto and Oakland and about ten miles from Modesto, with a Buick automobile in his possession which answered the description of the machine taken belonging to Ross. When defendant was arrested for the theft he made no explanation of how he came into the possession of said machine; he did not claim that he had purchased it, nor did he state how long he had been in possession of it. In fact, the officer who arrested him testified that he made no statement concerning it whatever. Defendant was not called as a witness, and the only thing in the record tending in the slightest to rebut the inference of guilty possession was the statement of two witnesses that defendant said he had purchased the machine from a woman at Redding.

[1, 2] It is the claim of appellant that the evidence is insufficient to justify the conviction. The claim is based upon the contention, first, that there was no sufficient identification of the machine as the property of Ross which was stolen; and, second, that, if so, there was not sufficient evidence to justify the inference that defendant was the perpetrator of the crime.

There is no merit whatever in the first of these contentions. J. W. Ross told an apparently straightforward story, and pointed out the marks of identification by which he reached the conclusion that the machine was his property; and he declared, "and with all these identification marks I knew positively and absolutely that that was my car"; and, furthermore, in reply to the question, "You have no doubt of it?" he answered, "No question of doubt whatever." Something may be said in defense of the other claim, but a reading of the record convinces us that the verdict is sufficiently supported to withstand an attack on appeal. The possession of the property shortly after the commission of the crime is, of course, an important circumstance. Appellant's failure to offer any explanation when arrested could scarcely be of less significance in the minds of the jury than a confession of guilt. The jurors would naturally and reasonably conclude that if he had purchased the property or acquired possession of it honestly he would be swift to declare and explain the circumstances that vindicated his conduct. If he had purchased it from a woman in Redding or any one else, is there any one so unsophisticated as to believe that he would not have so declared and at least have made an effort to locate the vendor? His silence, when it would have been so easy for him to speak if innocent, is quite persuasive and convincing. Appellant claims that the incriminating force of this possession is materially weakened by the circumstance that it was not a "recent possession," since he was not arrested until more than two months after the theft. But this view ignores the fact that Christiansen himself testified that he purchased the machine from the defendant on November 24, 1917; and from the testimony of one Tony Lewis, who was working for defendant, it is a fair inference that appellant had the machine in his possession for at least a week before that. This would certainly bring it very close to the date of the theft. The jury had the right to conclude, also, that defendant had changed the number on the motor, and had removed certain portions of the equipment and replaced them with others, for the purpose of concealing the identity of the car, and that he was seen with the car, near the time of the larceny, about 10 miles from Modesto. Of course, the evidence is circumstantial and not as conclusive as in many cases, but we think it cannot be said that the verdict is legally unsupported.

The case of People v. Luchetti, 119 Cal. 501, 51 Pac. 707, seems to have been no stronger for the prosecution than this, and yet the Supreme Court upheld the conviction. We may compare the facts of the two cases to show their similarity. Therein the cow (the property alleged to have been stolen) was missing one evening, and the next morning she was sold by the defendant to a butcher. The recent possession of the stolen property was the principal evidence against the defendant, as in the case at bar. In that case the defendant, however, took the stand and testified that he obtained the cow from one Joe Riverio. He gave quite a plausible account of the asserted transaction. It was held, though, that the jury had a right to reject his story as a fabrication. The Supreme Court attached much importance to the fact that the defendant made no effort to secure the attendance at the trial of said Joe Riverio or to have him arrested. The case here is worse for the defendant, since he made no explanation, or did not attempt, either when arrested or at the trial, to excuse or justify himself. If we may believe that he stated to two of the witnesses that he purchased the machine from a woman in Redding, then it is entirely fair to assume that it was false, since he made no effort to verify it. In the Luchetti Case, the court quotes from the authorities as to the significance of the possession of the stolen property and says:

"Appellant contends that having given a reasonable account of the circumstances attending his possession of the cow, that it removes the inference of guilt, and that therefore the verdict should have been in his favor. But whether the account he gave was either true or reasonable was for the jury to determine, and in such case we cannot disturb the verdict, unless we can say that his explanation of his possession was so clearly and evidently true that the opposite conclusion could only be reached by a jury under the influence of passion or prejudice. We think the jury rightly concluded that his story was fabricated, and therefore that he was guilty of the larceny."

When we recall the silence of the defendant herein and his failure to make any effort to show the honesty of his connection with the affair, we can readily understand the significance that the jury must have attached—and justly so—to the circumstance of his possession of the stolen property.

[3] Complaint is made of the conduct of the district attorney in his argument to the jury. One of the statements assigned as error was: "Now there is no evidence here that Mr. Christiansen has ever sought to recover this car; he never made a demand for the car." This was within the scope of legitimate argument. The district attorney had the right to attack the veracity of said witness Christiansen. It is not claimed that there was any evidence that he had sought to recover the car or had made a demand for it. This was a circumstance tending to show his knowledge or belief that the car had been stolen from Ross. Thus would be shaken the credit to be attached to his statement that he purchased the car on November 3d, more than two weeks before the theft. Indeed, one can hardly read the testimony of Christiansen without reaching the conclusion that he was more anxious to shield the defendant than to tell the truth.

[4, 5] Another statement was: "And Mr. Miller has sat there during all this trial writing down all the evidence and telling his counsel what to do, and yet he did not produce one witness of any kind to tell you where that machine came from." Thereupon counsel for appellant said: "We make a formal objection to the statements of the assistant district attorney to the effect that Mr. Miller has been sitting here taking down all the evidence, and instructing his counsel, as prejudicial, and not before this court and nothing in the evidence to that effect, and assign it as misconduct." It is to be observed that appellant made only a formal objection, and he did not request the court to direct the jury to disregard the statement. We would be justified, therefore, in dismissing the assignment without comment, but it is clear that the only part of the statement of any importance relates to the failure of the defendant to produce any witness to account for the possession of the property, and this was not in violation of the rights of the defendant. In People v. Waugh, 30 Cal. App. 402, 158 Pac. 336, the district attorney called attention to the fact that defendant's possession of the stolen jewelry shortly after the robbery "was unexplained by any sworn testimony." This was held to be proper, the court stating that it "was not indicative of a purpose on the part of such official to use against defendant the fact that he did not take the stand in his own behalf. People v. Fitts, 4 Cal. App. 432 [91 Pac. 536]."

[6, 7] We may add, moreover, that the trial court did sustain appellant's objection, and, in effect, did direct the jury to disregard said statement. The only other similar criticism is based upon the condition of the record, as follows:

"Mr. Maddux thereupon proceeded with the closing argument on the part of the people: * * * Mr. Fowler: 'I object to the remarks of the district attorney, which is an inference that the defendant had to take the stand and explain his part of the transaction, which is a violation of his constitutional rights; and I assign it as prejudicial misconduct, and ask the court to instruct the jury to disregard the remarks of the district attorney.' Mr. Maddux: 'I have made no such inference.' The Court: 'I understand that he simply referred to the fact that he had not made that explanation,'

Mr. Maddux: 'I made no such inference.' The Court: 'Read what Mr. Maddux said, Mr. Reporter.' Reporter: 'I was not taking his argument, Judge.' The Court: 'Well, take down the statement, Mr. Reporter.' Mr. Maddux: 'I did make the statement that it is incumbent upon him, when he was caught redhanded with this automobile in his possession, it was up to him to explain where he got that machine. That is what I said, and that is what I say now, and you can take a thousand exceptions if you like.'"

This was followed by a further discussion between counsel, Mr. Maddux insisting that he made no such statement as was imputed to him by counsel for appellant. The court finally said:

"The courts have differed very much on this question—as to the question of what burden may be on the defendant when he is found in the possession of recently stolen property. There seems to be a good deal of doubt, and there is some doubt in my mind whether a person under those circumstances is called upon to make an explanation—in other words, there is a presumption of guilt if he does not make an explanation."

After some further remarks by the court and counsel the court concluded as follows:

"I am somewhat in doubt as to what the real law is on that question in view of the various holdings, so I have taken the view of giving the benefit of the doubt to the defendant and to instruct the jury that it is a circumstance tending to establish guilt. It is a suspicious circumstance. Of course, if he explained it that would be a benefit to him; if he did not explain it, then it is a matter for the jury to take into consideration, with other circumstances, which may or may not tend to establish guilt. I think I shall so instruct the jury, but with that explanation I think it is not necessary for me to say anything further. The district attorney, as I understand it, is simply giving his view of the law."

The court subsequently instructed the jury as follows:

"You are instructed that the evidence of the recently unexplained possession of stolen property, standing alone, is not sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty, even in a case of larceny. * * * In cases of larceny the mere unexplained possession of stolen property is not alone sufficient to warrant a conviction, but it is a circumstance tending to show guilt, that can be taken into consideration in determining the guilt of the accused person; and such unexplained possession and other evidence tending to show guilt justifies the jury in arriving at a verdict of guilty, if the same, taken as a whole, satisfy the minds of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty that the person accused is guilty of the larceny."

It may be stated that the jury was clearly instructed that the presumptions of law are in favor of the innocence of the defendant, and that the burden of proof is upon the people to establish the guilt of the accused to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt before the jury can be justified in finding a verdict of guilty. We think it clear that the said statement of the district attorney was not intended, and could not be so understood by the jury, as referring to the failure of the defendant to take the stand; but that it referred to his failure to make any explanation of his possession of the property prior to the trial of the case. The situation is similar to that presented in the case of People v. Fitts and People v. Waugh, supra, wherein the question is fully considered and discussed. While the district attorney had no right to use against the defendant to his prejudice the fact that he had not testified as a witness, it was entirely legitimate to comment upon his failure to offer any explanation of his possession of the stolen property. The expression of the trial court, "In other words, there is a presumption of guilt if he does not make an explanation," might be deemed prejudicial if considered apart from the context. But when the whole sentence is read it is perfectly apparent that the court meant to express a doubt whether such presumption exists. But the expression of such doubt is rendered innocuous by the subsequent clear instruction of the court on the subject.

In conclusion we may state that the trial court was extremely careful to protect and safeguard all the rights of the defendant; that no errors were committed in the rulings during the progress of the trial; that the jury was fully and clearly instructed upon every phase of the issue involved; and, after a consideration of the entire record, we cannot say that the verdict was unjust.

The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES — 15 — PLAINTIFFS
HAVING SECURED ENFORCEMENT OF RESTRICTIVE

CANNOT RECOVER FOR BREACH OF COVENANT.

Where plaintiffs secured compliance with a restrictive building permit by means of an injunction, they cannot resort to action at law for damages, for the proceeding in equity was an election of remedies.

Action by George P. Thresher and another against Wesley Clark and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Leon F. Moss, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Meserve & Meserve and Hunsaker, Britt & Edwards, all of Los Angeles (W. E. Mitchell, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This action was brought to recover the sum of $10,000 as liquidated damages for a breach of certain restrictive building covenants contained in a contract for the sale of a building lot, forming part of a tract of land known as Westmoreland Place, situated in the city of Los Angeles, Cal.

The facts are fully stated in the case of Miles v. Clark, 187 Pac. 167, decided by this court December 2, 1919. In that case plaintiffs herein were interveners, and they there sought and obtained the specific performance of the contract for a breach of which they are in this action seeking damages. This action was brought after the Miles suit was instituted. Upon its institution the defendants herein filed an amended answer in the Miles Case, in which they set up the contract here sued upon, and pleaded as a separate defense to the complaint in intervention that as the present plaintiffs had brought this action they had thereby elected to sue for damages, and had no right to seek the relief asked by their complaint in intervention in the Miles Case, viz. specific enforcement of that contract. Plaintiffs herein disposed of that defense by obtaining a finding from the court in that case that they had elected to pursue the remedies prayed for by them in their complaint in intervention in preference to any other remedies to which they might have been entitled in the premises.

In the case at bar the findings of the trial court are: (1) That none of the allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint are true; (2) that by reason of the pendency of the action of Miles v. Clark, and by reason of the findings therein, ever since the entry of said judgment the plaintiffs in this action are barred from further proceedings herein upon the cause of action for liquidated damages set out in their complaint.

Respondents urge that the judgment in this case should be affirmed:

(1) For the reason that there is no pretense in plaintiffs' pleading of their having suffered any actual damage; that neither the nature of the case made by the complaint, nor of the contract on which plaintiffs have sued, make it impracticable or extremely difficult to fix plaintiffs' actual damage, if there be any, and that therefore the case is not one permitted by the statute for liquidated damages;

(2) That in the action of Miles v. Clark, plaintiffs having obtained a judgment which gives them all they would have obtained had the covenant, for the breach of which they sue herein, been fully kept and performed, they cannot have the fruits of the covenant and also damage for the loss of these fruits;

(3) That the nature of the contract is such that the $10,000 claimed is a penalty.

Whether the contract is one for liquidated damages or a penalty is immaterial, for, in either case, the plaintiffs waived their action at law when they elected to resort to equity to enforce their agreement. Under their pleadings they are not entitled to both remedies, and cannot, therefore, carry both actions to judgment and satisfaction. Having availed themselves of their equitable remedy and recovered judgment thereon they thereby foreclosed themselves from the further prosecution of this action. Abbott v. 76 Land & Water Co., 161 Cal. 42, 118 Pac. 425; Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Thomas v. Joslin, 36 Minn. 1, 29 N. W. 344, 1 Am. St. Rep. 624.

The judgment is affirmed.

TURNER v. LOS ANGELES RY. CORPORATION. (Civ. 3182.)

STREET RAILROADS $\S$ 114(9) — VERDICT FOR COLLISION WITH AUTOMOBILE HELD WARRANTED.

In an action for injuries by negligence in so propelling a street car that it struck plaintiff's automobile, stalled on the track in plain view of the motorman, evidence held to support verdict for plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Robert E. Turner against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and Norman S. Sterry, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Geo. M. Harker and S. M. Bernard, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action for personal injuries, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant in so propelling one of its street cars that it struck plaintiff's automobile while stalled on the track in plain view of the motorman in charge of the car. It is further alleged in the complaint that at the time the street car was being operated at a dangerous and unsafe rate of speed, and was not properly provided with suitable emergency brakes, or other appliances for stopping suddenly, should occasion arise. The defendant denied any negligence on its part, and pleaded contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff as a further defense. The trial by jury resulted in a verdict for $500, for which amount judgment was entered, and the defendant appeals.

It admits that "the amount of the verdict is very small in comparison to the injuries sustained by the plaintiff," and presents for our consideration but "the single question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict." It relies particularly upon the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff, and asserts that certain physical facts, which it seeks to have this court judicially notice, were not overcome by the evidence.

There is absolutely no merit in any of appellant's contentions. The new automobile, in which were the plaintiff, his wife, and two men, stalled on the track of defendant's car line at the bottom of a perceptible grade, about 9:30 o'clock at night. By direction and assistance of a police officer the automobile was moved a few feet to the side. A street car of defendant then passed safely, at a signal from some of the auto party, but going very slowly. The engine of the automobile could not be started by cranking, and plaintiff stepped on the running board to release the emergency brake, which was set, in order to allow the car to be pushed nearer the curb. As he did so, and before his hand reached the brake lever, another car of the defendant, coasting down the grade, at a rate of speed stated by some of the witnesses to be 30 miles per hour, collided with the automobile, and, striking the plaintiff, inflicted the injuries complained of. The front part of the street car cleared, but the rear step struck the rear left-hand hub of the automobile. The automobile had not moved after the first street car passed. The night was clear, the view of the motorman was unobstructed, the street car was equipped with a tungsten headlight in perfect order, and the tail light of the automobile was burning brightly. None of those working around the automobile heard the approaching street car, or any bell ringing until just before the collision.

The evidence is not only sufficient to support the verdict of the jury, but warrants a conclusion that at the time of the accident the car of the defendant was being operated in a manner amounting to a negligent disregard of the rights of persons using the street. Without further statement of the testimony of the various witnesses, suffice it to say that every question presented by the appeal was a matter solely for the consideration of and final determination by the jury, at the trial of the cause. Gumpel v. San Diego Electric Ry. Co., 178 Cal. 166, 172 Pac. 605; O'Connor v. United Railroads, 168 Cal. 43, 141 Pac. 809.

The judgment is affirmed, with $100 added costs imposed upon the defendant for instituting a frivolous appeal.

CALIFORNIA PACKING CORPORATION v. KATO. (Civ. 296S.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 16, 1920.)

ATTACHMENT  8—ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT TO DELIVER TOMATOES IS NOT "ACTION ON EXPRESS CONTRACT FOR DIRECT PAYMENT OF MONEY," BUT IS "ACTION FOR UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES."

An action to recover the difference between the price at which defendant agreed to sell tomatoes and the market price on day of delivery is an "action for unliquidated damages," not one on an express contract for the direct payment of money, and an attachment cannot be issued in such action under Code of Civil Procedure, § 538.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William S. Wells, Judge.

Action by the California Packing Corporation against S. Kato. From an order denying his motion to dismiss the attachment, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Sapiro, Neylan & Ehrlich, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro and Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion to dismiss an attachment. The action was brought by respondent to recover damages from the appellant by reason of a breach of his agreement to sell and deliver a crop of tomatoes. It is alleged in the complaint that under the terms of the contract between the parties the defendant agreed to sell and deliver, and plaintiff agreed to buy, when the same became ripe and ready for delivery, all tomatoes grown on a designated parcel of land. The price agreed to be paid was the sum of $15 per ton. The damage alleged is the difference between that price and the market price of the tomatoes on the day that appellant contracted to deliver them, and upon every day after that time to the filing of the suit, which market price is alleged to be $25 per ton.

The affidavit for attachment contains the averment that the defendant in the action "is indebted to plaintiff in the sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000) over and above all legal set-offs and counterclaims upon a contract for the direct payment of money, to wit, a contract by which the defendant agreed to pay plaintiff the difference between three thousand dollars ($3,000), the contract price of a certain crop of tomatoes, and five thousand dollars ($5,000), the market value of said tomatoes." It further shows that the contract was made, and was payable, in this state, and complies fully with section 538 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which prescribes what an affidavit for attachment must contain.

The defendant made a motion to dissolve the writ of attachment upon the ground that the same was improperly and irregularly issued, in that there is a fatal variance between the affidavit upon which it was issued and the complaint in the action, specifying two reasons: (1) That it appears upon the fact of the complaint in the action that the defendant is not indebted to plaintiff upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money; (2) that the action is one for damages only, and the damages are not liquidated.

Respondent insists that the action is one upon an implied contract for the direct payment of money, to wit, an implied contract to pay the buyer the difference between the contract price and the market value of the goods.

After this matter was submitted and first decided the decision of the Supreme Court in Willett & Burr v. Alpert et al. (Sup.) 185 Pac. 976, was handed down. A petition for a rehearing has since been denied. In that opinion the precise question presented by this appeal was considered and decided. We are unable to distinguish the nature of the transactions in the two cases. There the contract was to sell a large amount of railroad equipment. It was alleged in the complaint that the defendant delivered only 425 tons instead of 600 tons of rails, and that by reason of such failure the plaintiff had been damaged. An attachment was issued, the affidavit therefore being in the usual form, and, as in the case at bar, alleged that each of the defendants was indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $6,562.50 upon an express contract for the direct payment of money.

A motion was made to dismiss the attachment, which was granted. One of the grounds of the motion was that the writ of attachment was irregularly issued in that the claim sued upon "was not an indebtedness due from defendant to plaintiff upon a contract, express or implied, for the direct payment of money, but that, on the contrary, said alleged claim set forth in plaintiff's complaint herein is for an alleged breach of contract upon a claim for unliquidated damages."

After an exhaustive examination of the question thus presented, and a study of the authorities cited, many of which have been presented for our consideration, the court upheld the lower court's ruling. The heart of the decision is contained in the following quotation:

"To recapitulate, it is plain in the present case that there is no express contract for the direct payment of money; it is also plain that there is no implied contract unless the law creates the fiction of one for the purpose of permitting an action upon a common count; and, finally, it is a well-settled rule that an action upon a common count will not be permitted in such a case as this, where there is an express contract to do something else than pay money, and damages are sought because of the failure of the defendant to do that something else. It follows that the present action is not one in which the statute authorizes the issuance of an attachment. To hold otherwise would be simply to wipe out the statute and permit an attachment in every action for damages for a breach of contract, regardless of whether or not the contract be one for the direct payment of money."

The order appealed from is reversed.

PEOPLE v. MORALES. (Cr. 691.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 26, 1920.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW §369(2), 371(12)—EVIDENCE OF OTHER OFFENSES ADMISSIBLE TO ESTABLISH MOTIVE.

Evidence of other offenses committed both before and after that charged is admissible against defendant where it tends to establish a material fact in the particular offense charged or a motive therefor.

2. CRIMINAL LAW §371(1) — EVIDENCE OF OTHER OFFENSES ADMISSIBLE TO PROVE SPECIFIC INTENT.

Evidence of other offenses committed both before and after that charged is admissible against defendant where a specific intent is a material ingredient of the offense charged.

3. CRIMINAL LAW §369(1)—EVIDENCE OF OTHER OFFENSES ADMISSIBLE IN CASES OF SEXUAL CRIMES.

Evidence of other offenses committed both before and after that charged is admissible against defendant in the case of sexual crimes to prove the inclination or lascivious disposition of defendant.

4. CRIMINAL LAW §369(6) — INTOXICATING LIQUORS §233(2) — EVIDENCE OF SUBSEQUENT SALES AND POSSESSION OF LIQUOR INADMISSIBLE IN PROSECUTION FOR SELLING.

In a prosecution for selling alcoholic liquors in no-license territory, evidence for the prosecution that defendant, three days after the alleged commission of the offense, had sold some drinks, and also, still later, had sold and offered to deliver a number of half pint bottles of the same kind of liquor, and that, still later a raid was made on his premises, and a number of bottles of whisky found, was inadmissible.

5. CRIMINAL LAW §1186(4)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE OF SUBSEQUENT OFFENSES PREJUDICIAL.

In a prosecution for selling alcoholic liquors in no-license territory, where defendant denied under oath that he had sold the whisky as charged, the improper admission of evidence that after the date of the offense charged defendant had sold certain drinks, etc., was prejudicial in such a degree as to deprive defendant of a fair trial, so that conviction must be reversed despite Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

Jose Morales was convicted of selling alcoholic liquors in no-license territory, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Miguel Estudillo and Walter C. Davison, both of Riverside, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Thomas A. Wood, of Los Angeles, for the People.

JAMES, J. Defendant has appealed from a judgment directing that he pay a fine in the sum of $600 or suffer the alternative of imprisonment until the fine be satisfied in the proportion of $2 for each day that he shall be so imprisoned. An appeal is also taken from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

Appellant was accused of having, on the 22d day of June, 1919, in certain "no-license territory," sold, furnished, distributed, and given away alcoholic liquors. These acts, under the provisions of the statute known as the Wylie Law, constitute a high-grade misdemeanor. The principal evidence showing that appellant had on the day charged committed the alleged crime was that furnished by two detectives, who testified that two pints of whisky were delivered to one of them, for which $6 was paid for each pint. The defendant testified and denied that he had sold the whisky as charged. Over the objection of defendant, the prosecution was permitted to show that the appellant, on the 25th of June, three days after the alleged commission of the offense charged, had sold some drinks of whisky, and that on July 12th he had sold and offered to deliver a number of half pint bottles of the same kind of liquor. Evidence was also admitted showing that a raid was made on the premises of appellant on the 14th of July, 1919, and that a number of bottles of whisky were found upon the premises. When testimony as to the subsequent sales of the whisky was offered, appellant's counsel made objection on the ground that such testimony was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. Counsel for the people evidently assumed the testimony was competent; for he stated to the court, when confronted with the objection, that he was offering it "on the ruling that prior or subsequent evidence may be shown to prove the probability or improbability of the offense." The trial judge agreed with the prosecutor that the testimony was admissible, although he instructed the jury that it was not "evidence of the authenticity of the offense of the 22d, but because of the rule that permits such testimony." That this testimony, if incompetent, in view of the denial made by the defendant that he had sold any liquor to the detectives, was highly prejudicial, cannot be doubted. Had the evidence referred only to the alleged transaction occurring on June 22d, the jury might have been left with a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant. But, with evidence of repeated sales accumulated before it, it is quite natural that such doubt would be dissipated. Evidence of other offenses committed, both before and after that charged against a defendant, is sometimes admissible. The cases, however, in which such proof may be made have been classified by the California courts.

[1] We find that such evidence is admissible where it tends to establish a material fact in the particular offense charged, or a motive therefor. People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 513, 36 Pac. 16; People v. Hatch, 163 Cal. 368, 125 Pac. 907; People v. Walters, 98 Cal. 138, 32 Pac. 864.

[2] It is admissible also where a specific intent is a material ingredient of the offense charged. People v. Bercovitz, 163 Cal. 636, 126 Pac. 479, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667; People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 66, 72 Pac. 600; People v. King, 23 Cal. App. 259, 137 Pac. 1076; People v. Zimmerman, 11 Cal. App. 115, 104 Pac. 590.

[3] It is admissible also where sexual crimes are charged, to prove the inclination or lascivious disposition of a defendant. People v. Koller, 142 Cal. 621, 76 Pac. 500.

The charge here involved does not fall within either classification adverted to; in fact, in similar cases it has been directly held to the contrary. See People v. Clark, 28 Cal. App. 670, 153 Pac. 719; People v. Dial, 28 Cal. App. 704, 153 Pac. 970. In the case first cited a reversal of the judgment was ordered because of the admission of such improper testimony, and it was there held that a miscarriage of justice had resulted in consequence of such error. In the latter case the judgment was not reversed because of the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution; the court observing that no evidence was offered by the defendant, except the testimony of one witness, which did not refer to the particular act there charged.

[4, 5] The record in this case, as has already been observed, shows that the defendant denied under oath that he had made the alleged sale. We think that the case cannot properly be brought within the saving grace of the constitutional provision. The errors complained of, in our opinion, were prejudicial to such a degree as to have deprived the defendant of a fair trial.

The judgment and order are reversed.

PEOPLE v. VELARDE. (Cr. 689.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 21, 1920.)

1. COUNTIES ⇐20½—SUBJECT TO GENERAL LAW BOARD OF SUPERVISORS CAN EXERCISE ALL LOCAL POLICE POWER.

By Const. art. 11, § 11, giving a county police power, within its limits and subject only to general laws, its board of supervisors is vested with right to exercise the entire police power of the state.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⇐10(2) — ORDINANCE THAT LIQUOR TRANSPORTED INTO OR THROUGH COUNTY BE LABELED HAS SUBSTANTIAL RELATION TO PROHIBITION.

Provision of a county ordinance inhibiting transportation into or through the county of liquor without a label showing its kind and quality and the names and addresses of consignor and consignee, does not clearly appear to have no substantial relation to the primary purpose of the ordinance, to prohibit liquor traffic in the county, and so cannot be said to transcend the legislative power.

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⇐10(2) — COUNTY ORDINANCE HELD NOT EXERCISE OF POLICE POWER BEYOND BOUNDARIES.

County ordinance, inhibiting transportation of liquor into or through county unless bearing a certain label, is not an attempted exercise of police power beyond the county's limits.

4. COUNTIES ⇐55—POLICE ORDINANCE NEED NOT EXPRESSLY EXEMPT MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

If a county, in the exercise of its police power, cannot extend its jurisdiction over incorporated cities and towns therein, a police ordinance thereof need not expressly exempt them.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⇐87 — INTOXICATING LIQUORS ⇐17—POLICE ORDINANCE NOT INVALID FOR INCIDENTAL IMPAIRMENT OF PROPERTY VALUE.

A county ordinance, the primary purpose of which is to prohibit liquor traffic in the county, is not unconstitutional, in so far as it inhibits transportation of unlabeled liquor into or through the county, though there be an incidental impairment of property value in liquor transported by the owner and intended for his own use.

6. COUNTIES 55—LIQUOR ORDINANCE HELD GOOD IN PART, THOUGH INVALID IN PART.

Validity of the part of a county ordinance inhibiting transportation of unlabeled liquor into or through a county, and providing a penalty therefor, is not affected by another part, as to sale to addicts to inordinate use, being invalid, because covered by the general law providing a different penalty.

7. CRIMINAL LAW 1036(1)—OBJECTION, ON APPEAL, THAT ORDINANCE WAS ADMITTED WITHOUT PROOF OF PUBLICATION, TOO LATE.

An ordinance having been admitted without objection, it is too late to object for the first time on appeal that there was no preliminary proof of its publication.

8. CRIMINAL LAW 351(9)—OFFER OF BRIBE FOR RELEASE FROM ARREST ADMISSION OF GUILT.

Evidence that defendant offered money to the person arresting him to let him go is admissible.

9. INTOXICATING LIQUORS 222—INFORMATION NEED NOT ALLEGE VIOLATION OF COUNTY ORDINANCE WAS OUTSIDE MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

Though a county ordinance inhibiting transportation of unlabeled liquor into or through a county has no application in an incorporated city or town, the information for violation thereof need not allege the offense was outside such a city or town; but it is enough that it is in the language of the ordinance.

10. CRIMINAL LAW 304(6)—JUDICIAL NOTICE OF COUNTY BOUNDARIES.

Judicial notice will be taken that a well-known spot in a county is outside an incorporated city or town.

11. CRIMINAL LAW 1215—FINE AND IMPRISONMENT AND ALSO ENFORCEMENT OF FINE BY FURTHER IMPRISONMENT NOT AUTHORIZED BY COUNTY LIQUOR ORDINANCE.

Under an ordinance providing that one convicted of violation thereof shall be fined in not exceeding $600, or imprisoned for not more than seven months, or both, the court cannot punish by both, and also enforce payment of the fine by further imprisonment till the fine is paid.

12. CRIMINAL LAW 1215—CODE AUTHORIZING JUDGMENT FOR FINE TO DIRECT IMPRISONMENT TILL PAID INAPPLICABLE TO JUDGMENT FOR FINE AND IMPRISONMENT.

Pen. Code, § 1205, authorizing a judgment that defendant pay a fine to also direct that he be imprisoned till the fine be satisfied, does not apply where the judgment is for both a fine and imprisonment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

Pablo Velarde was convicted of violation of a county ordinance, and appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Miguel Estudillo, of Riverside, and R. A. Moore, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Loyal C. Kelley, of Riverside, for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Upon an information, filed in the superior court of Riverside county, defendant was convicted of a violation of section 5 of an ordinance of that county, whereby it is provided that—

"It shall be unlawful for any person * * * to carry, haul, transport, furnish, deliver or ship into the county of Riverside or through, over or across any portion of said county * * * any intoxicating liquor without having placed upon each package and consignment thereof a mark or label showing the true name and quantity of each kind of liquor therein contained, and the names and addresses of the consignor and consignee, * * * and all such packages shall be so marked and labeled before leaving the place of business of the person * * * so furnishing, shipping or delivering the same, provided, however, that this section shall have no reference to interstate commerce passing through the county."

The information charges that defendant "did * * * carry and transport a quantity of intoxicating liquors through, over, and across the county of Riverside, without having placed on each package and consignment" the mark or label required by the ordinance. Defendant was found guilty as charged. He was sentenced to the county jail for the period of two months, and, in addition, to pay a fine of $500, and, if in default in payment of the fine, to "serve out this sentence in the county jail at the rate of $2.00 per day."

Prohibition of the liquor traffic within the county is the primary purpose of the ordinance. Section 1 thereof declares that the sale, gift, or delivery of alcoholic or intoxicating liquors within the boundaries of the county, outside of municipal corporations, is prohibited. Section 5, the provisions of which defendant is charged with having violated, evidently was intended to facilitate the enforcement of the prohibitory provisions contained in section 1. Defendant attacks the constitutionality of section 5 upon a number of grounds, none of which, we think, is tenable.

[1, 2] The board of supervisors has the power to provide that no package or consignment shall be brought into or transported through the county unless the prescribed label shall have been placed thereon before leaving the place of business of the person furnishing the package of liquor, even though, as here, that place be in another county, namely, the city of Los Angeles. Section 11, article 11, of the Constitution reads:

"Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."

Thus there is vested in every county police power by direct grant under the Constitution. The power thus conferred is as broad as that vested in the Legislature itself, subject to these two exceptions: That it is local to the county or municipality, as the case may be, and is subject to general laws. The board of supervisors of Riverside county was therefore vested with the right to exercise within its jurisdiction "the entire police power of the state, subject only to the control of the general laws." In re Isch, 174 Cal. 180, 162 Pac. 1026. See, also, Ex parte Campbell, 74 Cal. 20, 15 Pac. 318, 5 Am. St. Rep. 418; Odd Fellows' Cem. Ass'n v. San Francisco, 140 Cal. 226, 73 Pac. 987. That the county, in the exercise of its police power, may prohibit the selling of intoxicating liquors within its jurisdiction is undoubted. It also is well established that when a county, asserting its recognized authority, undertakes to suppress what it is free to regard as a public evil, it may adopt such measures having reasonable relation to that end as it may deem necessary in order to make that action effective. It does not follow that because a transaction, separately considered, is innocuous, it may not be included in a prohibition the scope of which, in the legislative judgment, is regarded as essential to the accomplishment of the primary purpose of the enactment.

With the wisdom of the exercise of the legislative judgment the court has no concern; and, unless it clearly appear that the ordinance has no substantial relation to a proper purpose, it cannot be said that the limit of legislative power has been transcended. To hold otherwise would be to substitute judicial opinion of expediency for the will of the law-making body—a notion foreign to our constitutional system. Purity Extract, etc., Co. v. Lynch, 226 U. S. 192, 33 Sup. Ct. 44, 57 L. Ed. 84. Clearly, if a mark or label, such as is required by this ordinance, be put upon every package or consignment of intoxicating liquor that is brought into or transported through or across the county, it will greatly facilitate the enforcement of the ban which section 1 of the ordinance places upon the sale of intoxicating liquors within the county. Experience has shown that the ingenuity of man is such that it is almost impossible to draft a prohibition law so broad in its scope that some method cannot be devised for evading it; and no doubt it was deemed necessary to prohibit intoxicating liquors from being brought into or transported over or across the county without the prescribed mark or label in order that the real purpose of the ordinance, the prohibition of the liquor traffic within the county, might be attained. It is obvious that, if the consignor is required to put the mark or label on the package at his place of business, wherever it may be, it will greatly facilitate the detection, and therefore the prevention, of "bootlegging" and similar illicit liquor sales. If a person should be found traversing the county with packages of intoxicants which, on inspection, appeared to be labeled as required by the ordinance, his bona fides could readily be ascertained by instantly telephoning or telegraphing to the consignor's place of business, even though it were outside the county, and thus the authorities could ascertain whether the liquor really was intended for a bona fide sale and delivery to some person at some place where such sale and delivery would be legal—that is, legal at the time when this information was laid, which was prior to the operation of the Eighteenth Amendment and the recent sweeping national prohibition legislation.

There is nothing unreasonable or oppressive about the ordinance or in the penalties provided for a violation of its provisions.

[3] The ordinance is not an attempted exercise of police power beyond the county's limits. The purpose of that part of the ordinance under which defendant is charged is to prevent the transportation of intoxicating liquor across the county unless it be marked with a certain prescribed label. It operates only upon an act done within the county, namely, the act of carrying or transporting through or across the county any intoxicating liquor that has not been marked or labeled in the prescribed manner. If a person bringing intoxicating liquor into the county does not choose to place the prescribed label upon the packages, the result merely is that he cannot bring the liquor into or transport it across any part of the county. The ordinance, therefore, has no extraterritorial operation, and there has been no attempt to give it any such effect. State v. Nelson, 66 Minn. 166, 68 N. W. 1066, 34 L. R. A. 318, 61 Am. St. Rep. 399.

[4] It is not essential to the validity of section 5 that it should expressly exclude incorporated cities and towns from its operation. For the purpose of this decision we shall assume that none of the police power that the Constitution has directly granted to the county can be exercised within the limits of any incorporated city or town in the county, irrespective of whether any city or town has or has not exercised its police powers in such a manner that the regulations of the two political entities necessarily must conflict if each be enforced—an assumption, however, that runs counter to what seems to be an intimation in Ex parte Mansfield, 106 Cal. 403, 39 Pac. 775, to the effect that a county ordinance, passed in the exercise of the county's police powers, is inoperative within the limits of a city or town in the county when, and only when, its enforcement would annul or supersede some regulation of the city or town made in the exercise of its police powers. But, notwithstanding the assumption we have thus made in favor of appellant, a county police regulation is not void merely because the ordinance does not expressly exempt from its operation the territory of all the incorporated cities and towns within the county. If, as appellant's counsel assume, the county, in the exercise of its police powers, never can extend its jurisdiction over territory embraced within the limits of any incorporated city or town, nevertheless it is not necessary to the validity of the ordinance that it shall expressly exempt from its operation that over which it can have no jurisdiction. A failure thus to expressly exempt from the ordinance territory over which, according to appellant's contention, the county cannot exercise its police powers, is not evincive of an attempt to assert the county's authority over such territory.

[5] There is no merit in the contention that section 5 is unconstitutional merely because it may operate to prohibit the untrammelled transportation through or across the county of liquor that is the property of the person so transporting it, intended for his own personal use, and not for sale or illegal disposition within the bounds of the county. If the liquor be the personal property of a person, intended for a legitimate use by him, the requirement of section 5 does not for that reason deprive him of any constitutional right. It is well settled that, in legislating in behalf of public morals, health or safety, the state, or a county, by reason of its police power, may enact laws or ordinances that incidentally impair property value. Here the impairment of property value, if any there may be, is most certainly not the primary object of the ordinance. If there is any such impairment of property right, it is solely because it is a necessary incident to the main purpose. As a means of preventing the illegal sale of liquor within the county, outside of municipal corporations, the county has the right to prescribe any reasonable regulation as a condition to the exercise of the right to bring liquor into or transport it across any part of the county, even though such liquor be owned by the person bringing it into the county and it be intended for his own personal use. Crane v. Campbell, 245 U. S. 304, 38 Sup. Ct. 98, 62 L. Ed. 304; Barbour v. Georgia, 146 Ga. 667, 92 S. E. 70, 2 A. L. R. 1095, affirmed 249 U. S. 454, 39 Sup. Ct. 316, 63 L. Ed. 704; Ex parte Zwissig, 42 Nev. 360, 178 Pac. 20; State v. Brown, 40 S. D. 372, 167 N. W. 400; Fitch v. State, 102 Neb. 361, 167 N. W. 417.

[6] Nor is there any merit in the contention that the ordinance is void by reason of an asserted conflict between the penalty provided by the ordinance for a violation of section 9 thereof and the penalty provided by the state law for a violation of the act to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquor to persons addicted to the inordinate use thereof. Stats. 1915, p. 49. Assuming, for the purpose of this decision only, that, as contended by appellant, section 9 of the ordinance and the general law enacted by the state Legislature to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors to persons addicted to the inordinate use of such liquors cover the same matter, and assuming, also, that for this reason there is a conflict between the penalty provided by the ordinance and that provided by the general statute for the same offense, and that for this reason section 9 of the ordinance is void, nevertheless such conflict, if any there be, cannot affect the validity of the section under which defendant has been prosecuted—section 5. A county ordinance, like a legislative statute, may be good in part and upheld, while a part may be illegal and void; and if there are several provisions of an ordinance, some of which are void and others valid, and a penalty is provided applying to each offense separately, the ordinance may be enforced as to the offenses respecting which it is valid, just as if the void parts never had been incorporated therein. Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 208, 24 Pac. 747; Ex parte Mansfield, supra. For these reasons we are satisfied that that part of the ordinance under which defendant was prosecuted is a valid and constitutional by-law of the county of Riverside.

[7] At the trial the district attorney offered in evidence a copy of the ordinance. Defendant made no objection to the offer. Thereupon the ordinance was introduced in evidence. It is now claimed, for the first time, that there is a failure of proof, in that there was no evidence of publication of the ordinance. Doubtless the ordinance was not admissible in evidence until the prosecution had first made preliminary proof of its publication, and of any other fact that might be a necessary prerequisite to the existence of an operative ordinance. But, without objection, it was received in evidence as an ordinance that had been duly adopted and had become operative. It is too late now to raise the point that its adoption was not attended by every act necessary to make it operative as an ordinance of the county. The failure to object to its introduction must be construed as an admission that it was competent evidence, and that all essential prerequisites to make it an existing and operative by-law of the county had been complied with. Flora v. Lee, 5 Ill. App. 629.

[8] Appellant complains that the court erred in permitting the introduction in evidence of a shotgun that was in his automobile at the time of his arrest. Witnesses for the prosecution testified about the shotgun, but it was not introduced in evidence. There is, therefore, no basis for the objection. It likewise is claimed that the court erred in permitting a witness for the prosecution, one of the arresting officers, to testify that, soon after the arrest, defendant offered the witness $200 if he would let him go. Such evidence, like evidence of flight, is admissible as an admission tending to show consciousness of guilt. It is not to be supposed that one who is innocent, and conscious of the fact, will resort to bribery. State v. Case, 93 N. C. 545, 53 Am. Rep. 471; Turpin v. Commonwealth, 140 Ky. 294, 130 S. W. 1086, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 794, 140 Am. St. Rep. 378; 16 C. J. 556.

[9, 10] It was not necessary that the information should specifically allege that the offense was committed outside of an incorporated city or town. It followed the language of the ordinance, and that was sufficient. The evidence showed that the offense was, in fact, committed in the county of Riverside and outside of any incorporated city or town. Defendant, while actually violating section 5 of the ordinance, was arrested at a spot on a well-known highway, about a mile and a half east of Wineville. The court will take judicial notice that that place is not within the limits of any incorporated city or town. A careful examination of the record convinces us that defendant had a fair and impartial trial, free from any prejudicial error.

[11, 12] There is, however, one part of the judgment appealed from that is manifestly void. That is the portion ordering the retention of defendant in custody until he pay the fine. There is nothing in the ordinance itself that authorizes any such method for enforcing payment. Nor is there any statute giving the court power to impose the alternative of imprisonment in default of payment of the fine, where, as here, the fine is coupled with a sentence of imprisonment. The penal clause of the ordinance provides that a person convicted of a violation of any of its provisions shall "be fined in the sum of not more than $600, or be imprisoned in the county jail of Riverside county for not more than 7 months, or be punished by both such fine and imprisonment." When the county legislative body has said that imprisonment shall not exceed a certain term, it ought not to be held that, after the court has imposed both a fine and a term in jail, it can imprison beyond the maximum period provided by the ordinance. And yet that is precisely what could be done if it were held that, under this ordinance, the court could punish by both fine and imprisonment, and likewise enforce payment of the fine by further imprisonment until the fine should be paid. See the reasoning of Mr. Justice McFarland in Ex parte Wadleigh, 82 Cal. 521, 23 Pac. 190. Nor can this part of the sentence be upheld under section 1205 of the Penal Code. That section does not apply to cases in which the judgment is for a fine coupled with a sentence of imprisonment. Ex parte Rosenheim, 83

Cal. 388, 23 Pac. 372; People v. Brown, 113 Cal. 35, 45 Pac. 181.

The judgment is modified, by striking out that part thereof which provides that, in default of payment of the fine, the defendant "serve out this sentence in county jail at the rate of $2.00 per day." As thus modified, the judgment is affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 19, 1920.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS $\S$ 85(1), 96 — EVIDENCE PRESUMED SUFFICIENT; ALLEGATIONS OF PETITION UNDER WHICH MINORS WERE HELD.

In habeas corpus proceedings to obtain the release of female minors from the custody of the juvenile probation officer, it must be assumed that ample evidence was presented to justify the finding and commitment, and allegations of the petition under which the minors were detained should not be criticized with the same degree of severity after a full hearing has been had, with ample opportunity for all parties in interest to present whatever evidence they might desire, as would be proper if it were tested before any trial was had or any evidence introduced.

2. INFANTS $\S$ 16 — PETITION SUFFICIENTLY SHOWED PARENTS WERE INCAPABLE OF EXERCISING PROPER CONTROL AND THAT MINORS WERE LIABLE TO FALL INTO EVIL WAYS.

A petition charging that minors were neglected and delinquent children, in "that they are both of school age and have not been attending the public schools of the said county of B., and that they have been keeping undesirable company with men, to wit, two Hindu men, going about from place to place in automobiles with such men," etc., held to sufficiently charge that their parents were incapable of exercising proper parental control, and that the minors were leading an idle life, associating with undesirable persons in a manner likely to induce lewd and immoral practices, and that their home was an unfit place for their habitation, comfort, discipline, and development, justifying their commitment under Sts. 1915, p. 1225.

In the matter of the application of Ruby H. Hunter and Pearl M. Hunter for a writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the superior court of Butte county for release of female minors from the custody of the juvenile probation officer. Writ denied.

W. E. Davies, of Marysville, for petitioners.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The application was made by the parents of said Ruby H. Hunter and Pearl M. Hunter for a writ of habeas corpus to secure their release from the custody of the probation officer of Butte county. The contention is that, by reason of the insufficiency of the petition against them in the juvenile court in which said commitment was made, said juvenile court had no jurisdiction to commit said minors to the custody of said probation officer. Said petition, in its charging part, alleged:

"That said Ruby H. Hunter and Pearl M. Hunter are neglected and delinquent children, in this, that they are both of school age, and have not been attending the public schools of the said county of Butte, and that they have been keeping undesirable company with men, to wit, two Hindu men, going about from place to place in automobiles with said Hindus, and associating with them at various and different times, and that one of said Hindus had a desire to marry one of said girls, made application to the county clerk of Butte county for a marriage license to marry her, and was refused such license by the said county clerk, and that Ruby H. Hunter and Pearl M. Hunter, in company with their father, John Hunter, and their brother, Robert Hunter, then went to Sacramento and made application for a license to marry and were refused such license, and that the parents, both of them, do not and cannot exercise the proper parental control and management of the said two minor children, that the said two minor children are of the age of 17 years, and have only gone so far as the third grade in the grammar schools of the county, and that they are both sound and healthy, physically and mentally."

The matter came on regularly for hearing before the superior court of said county, sitting as a juvenile court, and, all the parties in interest being present, the evidence was heard, and, after due consideration, the court found that the parents of said minors were incapable of exercising proper parental control over said Ruby H. Hunter and Pearl M. Hunter, and that they and each of them were at said time, and now are, in need of such proper parental control, that by reason of the neglect of the said father and mother the home of said minors was and is an unfit place for them, "and that the said Ruby H. Hunter and Pearl M. Hunter for a period of time prior to the said 15th day of December, 1919, were and neither of them were properly disciplined, controlled, and managed, and that they and each of them were leading a very neglectful and careless life and in danger of being led astray or induced into immoral or lewd lives, and, if not properly cared for, managed, controlled, and disciplined, were and each of them were in great danger." It is further found that said minors for two months had been keeping company and going about the country with two Hindu men, taking rides with them about the country, and attending picture shows, that their education had been neglected, that they were not required to attend school, that said minors were in great need of proper care and training and parental control, and that the parents were neglectful of the education of said minors, and made little effort to manage and control them; that as a result of these facts said Ruby H. Hunter and Pearl M. Hunter "were and now are in danger of leading and living a life of immorality." The court thereupon committed said minors to the detention home of said Butte county, directing "that they be safely cared for and maintained until the further order of this court and said Ruby H. Hunter and Pearl M. Hunter are to continue to be and remain wards of the county until they and each of them obtain the age of 21 years, unless otherwise ordered by this court."

It is not disputed that, by virtue of the provisions of the Juvenile Court Law (Stats. 1915, p. 1225), the findings of the court were and are sufficient to justify the commitment of said minors to said detention home. In this connection we may call attention to the fact that said Juvenile Court Law applies to the following persons under the age of 21 years, to wit: One "who has no parent or guardian willing to exercise or capable of exercising proper parental control; or who has no parent or guardian actually exercising such proper parental control and who is in need of such control" (section 1, subd. 2); and one "who is leading, or from any cause is in danger of leading, an idle, dissolute, lewd or immoral life" (section 1, subd. 11).

[1] It may be further stated that we must assume that ample evidence was presented to the court to justify said finding and said commitment. Under such circumstances, after a full hearing with ample opportunity for all parties in interest to present whatever evidence they might desire, it is apparent that the allegations of the petition upon which the proceeding was based should not be criticized with the same degree of severity as would be proper if it were tested before any trial was had or any evidence introduced. Indeed, as a matter of substantial justice, it is fair to say that by reason of the alleged defects in said petition no prejudice has resulted to petitioners, since they are now held by a commitment issued out of a court of competent jurisdiction and based upon sufficient findings, which, in turn, we must assume, were the product of a full and fair investigation and trial in a case authorized by said Juvenile Court Law.

[2] Moreover, while said petition is somewhat defective in all of its material allegations, and some of its averments are entirely without pertinent significance, yet we cannot say that it appears therein that the court had no jurisdiction to inquire into the question whether said minors should be committed to the custody of said probation officer. In fact, by fair intentment it does appear that their parents were incapable of exercising over said minors proper parental control, that said minors were leading an idle life, associating with undesirable persons in a manner likely to induce lewd and immoral practices, and their home was an unfit place for their habitation, comfort, discipline, and development. No further comment upon said petition is deemed necessary.

Of course, it is a serious matter to deprive parents of the care and companionship of their minor children, especially their daughters, but we must assume that the court acted for the best interests of the girls as well as of the community. It may be added that it is to be hoped that within a short time it may be found safe and advisable to return said minors to the custody of their parents. This the lower court has the authority to do, but no warrant has been shown herein for us to interfere with that discretion, or to disturb the commitment.

The writ is discharged and the petitioners remanded.

PEOPLE v. HARRIS. (Cr. 688.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Jan. 26, 1920.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 586, 1144(7)—CONTINUANCE A DISCRETIONARY MATTER; APPELLATE COURT MUST ASSUME THAT GRANT OF CONTINUANCE WAS IN ACCORDANCE WITH REQUEST.

Application for continuance was addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and in the absence of counsel's requesting a further continuance than that granted, the appellate court must assume, nothing appearing to the contrary, and in the absence of any objection made to the extent of the postponement of trial, that the order made was in accordance with defendant's request.

2. JURY $\S$ 116 — EXCUSING OF JURORS BY COURT NOT GROUND FOR CHALLENGE TO PANEL.

Where challenge to the entire panel of jurors in a burglary case was based on the action of the trial court in excusing two jurors of its own motion, no such ground for challenge existing under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1059, the challenge was properly denied.

3. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 614(1), 1151—NO REVERSAL WHERE NO ABUSE OF DISCRETION IN FIXING TIME FOR BURGLARY TRIAL AFTER CONTINUANCE.

It cannot be said that the trial court abused its discretion in fixing the time of defendant's trial for burglary for July 25th, trial having first been set for July 9th, and continuance having been granted to July 22d, and, without such abuse being made to appear, the appellate court cannot interfere with the trial court's action.

4. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1144(8)—WHERE CHALLENGES NOT EXHAUSTED, APPELLATE COURT MUST ASSUME THAT DEFENDANT WAS ACCORDED ALL RIGHTS.

Where defendant did not exhaust all of his peremptory challenges, the appellate court must assume that he was accorded every right to which he was entitled in relation to the choice of a lawful jury.

5. JURY $\S$ 109, 133 — DEFENDANT CANNOT COMPLAIN OF ERRONEOUS REJECTION OF JUROR EITHER AFTER OBJECTION OR ON COURT'S OWN MOTION.

If a juror not possessing the requisite qualifications is allowed to sit against the objections of defendant, it constitutes ground for reversal, but he is in no position to complain either because the court erroneously rejects a juror challenged for cause, or, acting on its own motion, excuses a juror without just cause.

6. JURY $\S$ 109 — DEFENDANT IN CRIMINAL CASE NOT ENTITLED TO HAVE EXCUSED JURORS SIT.

Defendant charged with burglary had no vested right to have certain excused jurors, though qualified, sit in the trial of his cause.

7. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1166½ (6)—DEFENDANT TRIED BY COMPETENT JURORS CANNOT COMPLAIN TWO OTHERS WERE EXCUSED.

Where it appears that defendant was tried for burglary by 12 competent, fair, and qualified jurors, he cannot complain that the trial court, acting within its discretion, rejected or excused two other qualified jurors, even though no cause existed for such action.

8. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 406(3)—INCRIMINATING STATEMENTS BY DEFENDANT IN JAIL NOT MADE UNDER PROMISE OF REWARD ADMISSIBLE.

In a prosecution for burglary, where a witness testifying as to incriminating statements made by defendant in jail stated in positive terms that he held out to defendant no hope of reward, and said nothing from which defendant could have drawn such an inference, his testimony as to defendant's statements was admissible; defendant's admissions not having been made under promise of reward.

9. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 351(9) — ESCAPE AND FLIGHT AFTER ARREST WITH ASSAULT ON OFFICER ADMISSIBLE.

In a prosecution for burglary, evidence of defendant's escape and flight from jail after his arrest, and that, when apprehended a few hours later on, in resisting the officer, he tried to cut the latter's throat with a razor, was proper as tending to show consciousness of guilt.

10. BURGLARY $\S$ 37 — BAG OF BURGLAR'S TOOLS FOUND IN POSSESSION OF DEFENDANT'S MISTRESS HELD ADMISSIBLE.

In a prosecution for burglary, the trial court properly admitted in evidence the bag of burglar's tools which, while not in defendant's actual possession, was in the apartment of a woman with whom he was unlawfully living, and to whom he telephoned an order to deposit the same in a parcel room, which she did, and received a check, found under the carpet of the apartment by officers, who thus obtained the bag.

11. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 655(1)—COURT'S THREAT IN PRESENCE OF JURY TO GAG OBSTREPEROUS DEFENDANT NOT ERROR.

Where defendant, on his trial for burglary, frequently interrupted witnesses, calling one a "God damned liar," the court's threat, pursuant to its duty to maintain order, to have defendant gagged, though in the presence of the jury, was not error, since if necessary to orderly proceedings, the court would have been justified in actually adopting such means, instead of threatening them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Lewis B. Harris was convicted of burglary and grand larceny, and from the judgment, and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Guy Eddie, of Los Angeles, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Arthur Keetch, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Thomas A. Wood, of Los Angeles, for the People.

SHAW, J. Upon an indictment charging him therewith, defendant was convicted of the crimes of burglary and grand larceny. He appeals from the judgment which followed and from an order of court denying his motion for a new trial.

The accusation is based upon the alleged act of defendant in feloniously entering the banking room of the First National Bank of Artesia and unlawfully taking therefrom certain moneys, bonds, and other personal property belonging to the bank.

[1, 2] At his arraignment, on May 19, 1919, defendant entered a plea of not guilty, and, with his consent, his trial was set for July 9th following. On July 3d defendant, in person and without the presence of counsel, appeared in court, and at his request the time of trial was continued to July 22d. On July 19th he, with new and different counsel, appeared in court, and, upon the ground that such counsel required more time to prepare for the trial, moved for a further continuance, which motion was granted, and the time of trial fixed for July 25th. The contention of appellant seems to be that, although he did not ask it, the court should have postponed the trial to a later date than the 25th of July. The application for the continuance was one which addressed itself to the sound discretion of the court, and, in the absence of counsel requesting a further continuance than that granted, we must assume, for aught that appears to the contrary and in the absence of any objection made to the extent of the postponement, that the order made was in accordance with defendant's request. At all events, it cannot be said the court abused its discretion in fixing the time of trial for July 25th, and, without such abuse being made to appear, this court cannot interfere with the action taken. People v. Ponchette, 30 Cal. App. 400, 158 Pac. 338; People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 341, 19 Pac. 161.

The indictment alleged the offense was committed on or about March 29, 1919. In his opening statement the district attorney stated that the evidence would show that the crime was committed on March 25, 1919. Thereupon counsel for defendant moved for a continuance upon the ground that he did not have witnesses present to prove where the defendant was on March 25th. This motion was denied without prejudice to counsel's renewal of the motion if it were found necessary for him to secure such witnesses; in response to which counsel expressed himself as satisfied with the ruling. The fact that such application was not made, although the trial continued for a period of two weeks, is indicative of the fact that no reason existed for renewing the motion.

[3-7] It appears that at the beginning of the trial, and "before any of the names in the jury box of jurors regularly in attendance in department 18 had been drawn, and while the roll of the trial panel whose names were in the jury box was being called by the clerk, on reaching the names of Ida M. Bruns and W. E. Grosh, the court excused said two jurors from further attendance as jurors." Thereupon counsel for appellant interposed a challenge to the entire panel, based upon the action of the court in excusing the said jurors of its own motion, which challenge, since no ground existed therefor under the provisions of section 1059, Penal Code, was properly denied. Nevertheless appellant insists that his substantial rights were, in some indefinite way, prejudiced by virtue of the action of the court, and assigns the same as ground for reversal. We perceive no merit in the contention. Defendant was entitled to be tried by a lawful jury, and since, as shown, he did not exhaust all of his peremptory challenges, we must assume that in this respect he was accorded every right to which he was entitled. If a juror not possessing the requisite qualifications is allowed to sit against the objections of a defendant it constitutes ground for reversal, but he is in no position to complain, either because the court erroneously rejects a juror challenged for cause, or, acting on its own motion, excuses a juror without just cause. In People v. Arceo, 32 Cal. 40, it is said:

"Thus, it appears, in many instances, parties not positively disqualified under the law, yet, in fact, not qualified or fitted to discharge the duties of jurors in the given case, and in some cases where there was really no sort of objection, courts have discharged them in the exercise of their discretion, and their action has been affirmed on appeal."

In discussing a like point, where the court of its own motion discharged an entire panel of 12 jurors, the court, in People v. Murray, 85 Cal. 350, 24 Pac. 666, said:

"The court had the undoubted right to discharge them, or any of them, at any time, without giving any reason for such discharge, and without the existence of any reason. The only difficulty apparent in this case is that the jurors were discharged for what might, under some circumstances, be an insufficient reason. But as no reason was necessary, the fact that an insufficient one was assigned as the ground of the order can make no difference."

To the same effect is People v. Searcey, 121 Cal. 3, 53 Pac. 359, 41 L. R. A. 157. Since defendant had no vested right to have the excused jurors sit in the trial of his case (Asevedo v. Orr, 100 Cal. 300, 34 Pac. 777), and it appearing without question that defendant was tried by 12 competent, fair, and qualified jurors, he is in no position to complain that the court, acting within its discretion, rejected the two jurors. Conceding no cause existed for such action, the effect thereof is precisely the same as though the court had granted a challenge for insufficient cause.

While appellant claims the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, his counsel directs our attention to facts and circumstances, clearly established by the testimony of witnesses for the state, from which it would seem impossible for impartial and rational minded men to arrive at any conclusion other than that expressed by the jury in the verdict rendered; indeed, instead of the evidence being weak and unsatisfactory, as suggested by appellant, it would, in our opinion, be difficult to conceive of a stronger chain of incriminating circumstances than that presented by the evidence.

Many of the court's rulings in admitting and rejecting testimony are assigned as error. As to some of these, even though the alleged errors in the ruling were conceded, no possible prejudice could, in view of the conclusive character of the evidence, have resulted from the rulings.

[8-10] One of appellant's chief complaints is that the court erred in permitting the witness Frampton to testify to a conversation had with defendant in the county jail, where in the latter made incriminating admissions. It is claimed that such admissions were made under a promise of reward. There is no merit in this contention, for the reason that the witness testified in positive terms that he held out no hope of reward, and said nothing from which defendant could have drawn such an inference. On the contrary, the statements are shown to have been made freely and voluntarily by defendant, prompted, perhaps, by the hope that his proposed return of part of the stolen property would, under a plea of guilty, obtain for him favorable consideration in the punishment to be imposed. For the same reason, the court did not err in admitting like testimony of witness Hutton. Evidence of defendant's escape and flight from the jail after his arrest, and the fact that when apprehended a few hours thereafter he, in resisting the officer, tried to cut the latter's throat with a razor, was clearly proper as tending to show consciousness of guilt. People v. Flannelly, 128 Cal. 87, 60 Pac. 670; People v. Crowley, 13 Cal. App. 325, 109 Pac. 493. Neither did the court err in admitting in evidence the bag of burglar's tools which, while not in defendant's actual possession, was in the apartment of a woman with whom he was unlawfully living and to whom he, by telephone, communicated an order, directing her to take the same and deposit it in a parcel room, which she did, receiving a check therefor, which was found under the carpet of the apartment by the officers, who thus obtained possession of the bag. People v. Winters, 29 Cal. 658.

[11] During the course of the trial the defendant, by his obstreperous conduct and abusive language, constantly interfered with the orderly proceeding thereof, and, notwithstanding the repeated orders of the court admonishing him to keep quiet and cease interrupting the witnesses, he continued his interruptions and abuse, in one instance calling the witness on the stand "a God damned liar," and upon the court saying to him, "We will suspend the trial until you keep still," he replied, "I don't care if you suspend it until doomsday." During another outbreak of defendant, the court ordered the bailiff to see that he was seated and, defendant continuing his interruptions, the court said: "Put a gag on him. Gentlemen, we are going to have order." Whereupon defendant's counsel asked that the jury be excused, to which the court replied: "I will not excuse the jury when the defendant brings upon himself a scene like this." The conduct of the defendant and the scenes enacted by him were such that the court was forced to order a recess for 15 minutes. Although the order of the court to put a gag on defendant was not carried out, appellant assigns the language of the court as prejudicial misconduct. It was the right of the defendant to be present at his trial, and this right, notwithstanding his obstreperous conduct, was accorded him. It is the duty of a judge in the administration of justice to preserve the order of the court and see to it that all persons whomsoever, including the defendant himself, indulge in no act or conduct calculated to obstruct the administration of justice. In the case of State v. Allen, 45 W. Va. 65, 30 S. E. 211, where the court had under consideration the question of the power of the trial court to restrain the violence of a defendant on trial by shackling him, it was said, in justifying the action, that it was a matter for the discretion of the trial court, in the exercise of which, however, the court should not resort to such extreme measure unless rendered necessary to curb the prisoner's violent and obstreperous conduct or to prevent his threatened escape. While in this case the threat of the court to have the prisoner gagged was not carried out, nevertheless, if necessary to the orderly proceedings of a court, the trial judge would be justified in adopting such means as a last resort to control an obstreperous defendant, by reason of whose conduct the trial could not proceed without such action.

There are other alleged errors, including the action of the district attorney in discussing the evidence, none of which, however, other than those discussed, requires any consideration. In most cases they are puerile and absolutely without merit; indeed, the record taken as a whole is, in our opinion, free from any prejudicial error and the character of the evidence such as to leave no doubt whatsoever as to the defendant's guilt.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MORTGAGES — 435 — GUARANTOR PROPERLY JOINED AS DEFENDANT IN ACTION TO FORECLOSE MORTGAGE.

Regardless of Code Civ. Proc. § 726, as to docketing of judgment for balance against defendants personally liable where proceeds of sale in foreclosure are insufficient, where assignor of mortgage and note guaranteed payment of note, it was properly joined with the makers in action to foreclose mortgage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by Lucy M. Titus against Richard S. Woods and others. Judgment foreclosing mortgage, and the Guarantee Mortgage Company of San Diego appeals. Affirmed.

Sweet, Stearns & Forward, of San Diego, for appellant.

Wirt Francis and Ralph E. Jenney, both of San Diego, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to foreclose a mortgage made by the defendants Richard S. Woods and Mary C. Woods to appellant, Guarantee Mortgage Company of San Diego, to secure the payment of a promissory note of $1,250 and interest, dated March 29, 1912. The complaint alleges that the note and mortgage were assigned by appellant to the plaintiff by an instrument in writing on the 17th day of July, 1912, and "that at the time of the assignment of said note and mortgage as aforesaid the said defendant Guarantee Mortgage Company of San Diego for a valuable consideration guaranteed the payment of said promissory note." To the complaint the appellant demurred on the grounds:

"That it did not state a cause of action against the appellant; that there is a misjoinder of parties defendant in that the appellant was improperly made a party thereto and improperly united as a defendant with the makers of the mortgage as well as with the other defendants; that there is a misjoinder of causes of action in the complaint in that a cause of action against appellant as a guarantor is improperly united with one for the foreclosure of the mortgage; that a cause of action against the appellant on a contract of guaranty was improperly united with a cause of action against the makers of the promissory note;" and that the complaint was uncertain and ambiguous for certain reasons therein enumerated.

The demurrer was overruled, and appellant declined to answer. Judgment of foreclosure was rendered August 29, 1917, in which the clerk of the court was ordered to docket a judgment for any deficiency that might remain unpaid of the indebtedness secured by the mortgage after the sale of the mortgaged land. The mortgaged property was sold, a deficiency reported by the commissioner, and deficiency judgment was docketed against appellant on October 10, 1917. From these judgments the appeal has been taken.

We understand that the only ground of demurrer upon which appellant really relies as possessing merit is that, as a guarantor of the payment of said note, it was improperly joined with the makers thereof in the suit to foreclose the mortgage. The argument is that the liability of appellant was based upon an entirely different obligation from that of the makers of the note; it having been held by the Supreme Court of this state "that there is no privity or mutuality or joint liability between the principal debtor and his guarantor"; in other words, the appellant as a guarantor made an entirely independent contract upon which he was liable without regard to the foreclosure of the mortgage as against the principal debtors. Bull v. Coe, 77 Cal. 54, 18 Pac. 808, 11 Am. St. Rep. 235; Adams v. Wallace, 119 Cal. 67, 51 Pac. 14; Kinsel v. Ballou, 151 Cal. 754, 91 Pac. 620.

The character of the obligation of a guarantor is also carefully considered in the case of Cooke v. Mesmer, 164 Cal. 332, 128 Pac. 917, an action brought against the guarantors of the payment of certain notes, and the court said:

"It is thoroughly settled that an action on such a guaranty is one upon an independent contract of the guarantor, with which the principal debtor has nothing to do."

We may add that the same principle appears in the provisions of Civil Code, § 2806 et seq.

From the foregoing it would follow, of course, that an action could be brought against the guarantor without joining the maker or any other party to the note as a defendant, and it is urged by appellant that a guarantor has the right to insist that he be sued alone. Many authorities are cited in support of the claim, but to make proper application of the doctrine therein announced, not only the peculiar facts of each instance, but also certain statutory provisions of the various jurisdictions, must be considered. For example, in Cottrell v. New London Furniture Co., 94 Wis. 176, 68 N. W. 874, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin held that the guarantor of a mortgage note was improperly joined with the maker in the foreclosure suit for the reason that the case was simply a guaranty of "the collection of the note" and therefore the guarantor did not become liable on his contract of guaranty until the guarantee had "exhausted all the remedies which the law gives him for the collection of his debt from the principal debtor without avail. This means the prosecution of a suit against such principal debtor to judgment and execution." It was further held that in the foreclosure of the mortgage it was improper to enter a deficiency judgment against said guarantor, for the reason that the statute in that state permitted such judgment only against the party personally liable for the debt, and that the guarantor was not thus personally liable, but his obligation did not arise until the remedies against the mortgagor had been exhausted. The difference between the obligation of the guarantor in that case and in this leaves the decision without much value herein. Other citations could be easily distinguished, although some, like Walsh v. Van Horn, 22 Ill. App. 170, involve a situation closely analogous to this.

On the other hand, respondent finds comfort in the statement of the rule by the leading text-writers. For instance, in 2 Jones on Mortgages, section 1710, this is declared:

"A personal judgment for a deficiency may be had against one who in assigning a mortgage has made a guaranty of it."

Again, in section 1432:

"But where the court has power to decree the payment of any deficiency there may be after the sale of the property as well against a third person as against the mortgagor, then a mortgagee who has assigned his mortgage and guaranteed the payment of it or any other person who has become a guarantor or surety of the debt is a proper though not a necessary, party to a suit to foreclose the mortgage."

Pomeroy in his Code Remedies (4th Ed.) § 231, treats at length the subject of necessary and proper parties to foreclosure proceedings and says:

"Those persons who own or have an estate in the land to be sold under the decree, and those who in the original creation of the debt or by any subsequent assumption of it are debtors to the mortgagee, and therefore liable to a personal judgment for a deficiency, have an interest in the controversy adverse to the plaintiff, and are beyond doubt necessary parties, if the plaintiff desires to obtain all the relief which the law affords him, namely, of sale and personal judgment for deficiency."

The learned author concludes that the doctrine is universally established that—

"All who are personally liable for the debt secured by the mortgage may generally be united as defendants, and must be made defendants if the plaintiff seeks to obtain a decree affording him all the relief which the court can grant."

In Wiltse on Mortgage Foreclosure (3d Ed.) § 253, it is said:

"An assignor of a mortgage who in the assignment or by a separate instrument guarantees the payment or collection of the mortgage is personally liable to his assignee, and may be made a defendant to an action for foreclosure, for the purpose of recovering against him a judgment of deficiency. In those states where no provision is made for the recovery of a personal judgment in an action to foreclose a mortgage such a guarantor cannot, of course, be made a party to the action; the only remedy against him is a separate action at law. * * * In actions at law a distinction is made between a guaranty of payment and of collection; but in the equitable action of foreclosure, if a party is in any way liable for the debt, he can be made a defendant."

It is no doubt true that in equity the rule as to proper parties is more liberal and comprehensive than prevails at law. It arises, of course, from the purpose of equity to avoid a multiplicity of suits and to settle for all time, as far as possible, any controversy as to the subject-matter of the action. In view of this principle, a guarantor of the mortgage debt might be made very properly a party to the foreclosure, even though the practice might be otherwise if the action were purely one at law.

This consideration, as well as the provisions of the statute and the terms of the particular guaranty, must be kept in view in consulting the various decisions on the subject.

In this state there seems to be no direct adjudication of the question before us; although it has been held that the liability of a general guarantor is substantially the same as that of an indorser, and that it is proper to join the latter in an action with the maker of the note. Riggs v. Waldo, 2 Cal. 485, 56 Am. Dec. 356; Reeves v. Howe, 16 Cal. 152; Eastman v. Turman, 24 Cal. 382; Jones v. Goodwin, 39 Cal. 493, 2 Am. Rep. 473; Loustalot v. Calkins, 120 Cal. 688, 53 Pac. 258; Hubbard v. University Bank of Los Angeles, 125 Cal. 684, 58 Pac. 297. It is true, however, that in the Loustalot Case, supra, the court said:

"Upon an examination of the authorities from other states having statutory provisions substantially similar to the one found in our Code, we find those authorities preponderating to the effect that a guarantor and the maker of a promissory note may not be joined as parties defendant; but that question is not directly before us, and we pass it by for that reason."

But the court held that section 383 of the Code of Civil Procedure should be given a liberal construction so as to include the indorser Calkins. The language of said section is:

"Persons severally liable upon the same obligation or instrument, including the parties to bills of exchange and promissory notes and sureties on the same or separate instruments, may all or any of them be included in the same action, at the option of the plaintiff."

If the liability of the indorser and the guarantor is substantially the same, there would seem to be as much reason for including and classifying one as the other among the parties to the note.

Be that as it may, we feel satisfied that, by implication at least, section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorized the plaintiff to include appellant as a party defendant. Said section provides that, if the proceeds of the sale in foreclosure "are insufficient, and a balance still remains due, judgment must then be docketed by the clerk in the manner provided in this Code for such balance against the defendant or defendants personally liable for the debt." Of course, judgment could not be docketed against a person liable for the debt unless he was made a party defendant; and since appellant herein, as guarantor, was clearly liable for the debt, does not the quoted language warrant the course that was pursued in joining said parties?

But, regardless of the terms of the statute, it seems clear that, in an action to foreclose, the guarantor of the note is a proper party, for the reason that he is interested in the account to be taken in the suit of the amount due, the payment of which he has guaranteed. He is certainly vitally interested also in the foreclosure sale in which the proceedings may result, that it shall be lawfully and properly conducted; and that the property shall be sold for as much as possible in order that his own liability may be minimized or averted. Jarman v. Wiswall, 24 N. J. Eq. 267. Indeed, as a matter of practical importance, it is rather a favor than otherwise, in a case like this, to join the guarantor with the maker of the note. He is thus afforded an opportunity to aid the plaintiff in securing, if possible, the payment of the entire indebtedness from the principal debtor. On principle there would seem to be greater reason for not joining a surety, since he has a right to insist that the creditor exhaust his remedies against the original debtor. But since in the first instance the guarantor herein could have been sued alone for the entire debt, it is at least true that no prejudice has resulted from said ruling of the court.

The judgments are affirmed.

FOX-WOODSUM LUMBER CO. v. FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND. (Civ. 2529.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 27, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 25, 1920.)

SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS — 81(2) — CLAIMS AGAINST CONTRACTOR HELD NOT FILED WITHIN 90 DAYS AFTER COMPLETION OF CONTRACT.

In action by materialman upon bond given by contractor building schoolhouses pursuant to Deering's Gen. Laws 1915, held, that claims constituting the subject of the action were not filed within 90 days after completion of contract; the time of completion being the date the buildings were turned over to board of trustees and accepted as finished, though the contractor was required 60 days later to replace certain temporary fixtures.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by the Fox-Woodsum Lumber Company against the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. L. Abrahams, of Los Angeles, P. B. D'Orr, of Atlanta, Ga., and Joe Crider, Jr., and Chas. W. Fricke, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

G. C. De Garmo, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Robert P. McMullen was the contractor for the construction of certain schoolhouses for the Tropico school district, and pursuant to the provisions of Act No. 2895, entitled "An act to secure the payment of the claims of materialmen, mechanics, * * * employed * * * upon * * * municipal, or other public work" (Deering's Gen. Laws, 1915, p. 1467), caused defendant, as surety, to execute the bond specified therein. Plaintiff and its assignor furnished materials used in the doing of the work by the contractor, for the payment of which this action was brought on the bond. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendant has appealed.

The act, as it then read, provided that—

"Any materialman * * * whose claim has not been paid by the contractor * * * shall, within ninety days from the time such contract is completed, file with the * * * body by whom such contract was awarded, a verified statement of such claims, together with a statement that the same had not been paid" —and that upon so doing such claimant may at any time within six months sue to recover upon the bond.

The sole contention of appellant is that the claims constituting the subject of the action were not filed within 90 days after the completion of the contract, without which, respondent properly concedes, the judgment should be reversed.

The court found "that on the 29th day of January, 1915, and within 90 days after the completion of said buildings, said plaintiff filed with the board of trustees of the Tropic school district a verified notice in writing," so required, wherein the amount of such claims was specified and which in all respects complied with the provisions of the statute. In our opinion, this finding is, as claimed by appellant, not supported by the evidence. It conclusively appears that, except as to the installation of certain plumbing fixtures required by the specifications, the buildings called for by the contract were fully completed on September 30, 1914, at which time other fixtures than those specified were installed, and upon the contractor depositing with the treasurer of the board his certified check for $152 as security for his furnishing, when procurable, the fixtures specified in lieu of those installed, the board filed in the office of the recorder of Los Angeles county its unqualified written acceptance of the work and thereupon took possession of said buildings and from thence on used and occupied the same for school purposes, and 30 days after acceptance paid to the contractor the balance in full of the contract price. On December 5, 1914, the contractor replaced the temporary fixtures called for by the specifications, at which time, rather than on September 30th, the trial court concluded the buildings were completed. As shown by the record, McMullen's only obligation to install the specified fixtures was that contained in his contract. He was unable to procure these and he thereupon deposited with the treasurer his certified check for $152, which, together with the fixtures so installed, were, by agreement, substituted for those called for by his contract. In the absence of a covenant on his part so to do—and we agree with respondent there was none—it was optional with him whether he installed other fixtures or forfeited his check, which was exacted in lieu of such compliance with his contract. Under the circumstances, and without further compliance, he could have enforced payment of the balance due upon his contract. That this was the construction placed upon the transaction is made manifest by the fact that the school board, in recognition of his being entitled thereto, and long before the specified fixtures were installed, paid to McMullen the full contract price. That the parties to the contract might have agreed upon the substitution of other fixtures in lieu of those specified admits of no question, and, in effect, that is precisely what they did, requiring the contractor to forfeit the difference in price, provided he was unable to procure the ones called for by his contract, or, if he could obtain them, declined to exercise his option to install the same. Upon respondent's argument, carried to its logical conclusion, the buildings could not be deemed completed until the installation of the fixtures specified, although years might elapse.

The buildings were completed on September 30, 1914, when the board, vested with full power to do so, formally accepted the same, took possession thereof, and occupied them for school purposes. Otherwise, and if such acts were not conclusive evidence of completion, such action could only be established by a judgment of court.

Not only for the reasons given, but under the statutory rules governing the rights of laborers and materialmen in analogous cases involving the right to enforce mechanics' liens, which we think applicable (section 1187, Code Civ. Proc.; Giant Powder Co. v. San Diego Flume Co., 78 Cal. 196, 20 Pac. 419), the judgment should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 501(3)—EVIDENCE NOT REVIEWABLE WHERE RECORD CONTAINS NO SPECIFICATION DIRECTED TO INSUFFICIENCY.

No question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings can be considered on appeal, where the record contains no specifications of any kind directed to insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, although the bill of exceptions contains the evidence received at the trial.

2. TRIAL $\S$ 396(5)—FINDING OF REASONABLE SUM FOR SERVICES PROPER THOUGH COMPLAINT ALLEGED AN AGREED SUM.

Where complaint, in addition to alleging an agreement to pay a specified sum, averred that such sum was the reasonable value of the services rendered, court did not err in finding for plaintiffs a less amount as the reasonable value of the services rendered, based upon evidence introduced at the trial to which defendant made no objection; no miscarriage of justice being shown to have resulted.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover the amount of a commission alleged to be due on a contract to pay for services rendered by the plaintiffs in procuring for the defendants a tenant to whom the defendants made a lease of real property.

[1] With one exception, all of the points urged by appellants consist of claims that the evidence is insufficient to support certain findings of fact. The bill of exceptions contains the evidence received at the trial, but the record contains no specification of any kind directed to insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. This being so, no question of sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings can be considered on this appeal. Regoli v. Stevenson (Sup.) 176 Pac. 158; Carter v. Canty (Sup.) 186 Pac. 346, decision filed December 26, 1919.

[2] Appellants further contend that the complaint counts upon an express agreement for the payment of a specified sum; that the findings of fact negative the allegation of an agreement to pay that amount; and that the court's finding that the amount awarded is a reasonable sum for the services rendered is not responsive to any allegation contained in the complaint; for which reasons appellants claim that the judgment should be reversed. The complaint, in addition to alleging an agreement to pay a specified sum of $1,116, averred that such sum of $1,116 is the reasonable value of the services rendered. The court, besides finding that the defendants did not expressly agree to pay the stated sum, further found that the sum of $792 is the reasonable value of the services performed under the contract by which it is found that the defendants did employ the plaintiffs to perform said services. This finding establishing the reasonable value of the services performed is based upon evidence introduced at the trial, to which evidence it does not appear that any objection was made. It cannot be seen that the defendants were misled in any way, or that any miscarriage of justice has resulted from the judgment rendered.

The judgment is affirmed.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER $\S$ 314(1)—IN ACTION AT LAW TO RECOVER INSTALLMENT PLAINTIFF NEED NOT ALLEGE THAT CONTRACT WAS FAIR; "SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE."

An action for the amount of certain installments due and unpaid as part of the purchase price provided in a contract of sale of real property is not an action for "specific performance" of the contract, under Civ. Code, § 3391, but is an action at law, and it is not necessary to allege or state facts showing that the contract is, as to the defendant, fair, just, and reasonable.

CONREY, P. J. In this action the plaintiffs recovered judgment for the amount of certain installments due and unpaid as part of the purchase price provided in a contract of sale of real property. Appellant contends that such action is necessarily an action to compel specific performance of the contract; that, therefore, the complaint does not state a cause of action because it does not contain any allegations of fact showing that the contract is as to the defendant fair, just, and reasonable. Civ. Code, § 3391. It appears to be settled law that such an action, brought merely to recover money due on the contract is an action at law. Ehrhart v. Mahony, 170 Cal. 148, 148 Pac. 934; Samuel v. Allen, 98 Cal. 406, 33 Pac. 273. The decisions relied upon by appellant (such as O'Hara v. Wattson, 172 Cal. 527, 157 Pac. 608, and Glock v. Howard, etc., Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17) do not hold and do not necessarily imply that an action at law to recover such installments due cannot be maintained. In such action at law it is not necessary to allege or to state facts showing that the contract is as to the defendant fair, just, and reasonable. The complaint in this case stated a cause of action. Amaranth Land Co. v. Corey (Sup.) 186 Pac. 765, decided January 8, 1920. The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by Emogene A. Craig, executrix of the last will of J. H. Craig, deceased, against R. P. Shea. From judgment for plaintiff defendant appeals. Reversed.

Mulford & Dryer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hugo D. Newhouse, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WOOD, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment awarding $3,750 damages for false representations made by the agent of defendant upon the sale of a 30-acre walnut grove. Mr. Craig died after the entry of judgment, and the executrix of his will has been substituted as plaintiff.

There is no dispute as to the representations made by the agent of defendant. It is alleged in the complaint, and the plaintiff testified at the trial, that he purchased the property believing and relying upon such representations, which were:

"That 15 acres of the grove was planted to trees of the age of 12 years, and the remaining 15 acres to trees of the age of 18 years; that the gross income of the orchard would be from 12 to 18 per cent. upon $30,000."

Prior to coming to California Mr. Craig had been for many years the assistant controller of the United State Steel Corporation. His business did not bring him in contact with outside people, and while he had made some investments in real estate he had always acted through the advice of an attorney. He arrived in Los Angeles from New York City in April, 1914. At that time he was 62 years of age, in poor health, suffering from rheumatism, accompanied with severe pains in his legs, and was unable to walk more than a few feet at a time. Previously he had written to his daughter-in-law in Los Angeles to see if she could find a walnut grove for him. She had communicated his wishes to Neil Durlfinger, who was employed under some form of contract, sharing commission in the office of Mr. Mesick, a real estate agent.

Within two or three days after his arrival in Los Angeles city he, his wife and his daughter-in-law were taken in an automobile by Mr. Mesick and Mr. Durlfinger to see the grove in question, which is located about 13 miles from the city. On the way Mr. Mesick told plaintiff that he was going to show him one of the prettiest ranches in Southern California. He also made the statements as to the ages of the trees, and some time during the day the one as to income. The party remained at the grove about 15 or 20 minutes. The plaintiff walked out and examined two of the trees, and drove about the place. He was charmed with its appearance. In his language:

"It was certainly a pretty looking ranch, and it is to-day. I had never seen a walnut ranch bearing, and we stood around in amazement looking at those trees. They were very large and fine looking, in blossom, with the leaves just budding out, and there was a nice fence in front with roses at every post."

The same evening, in response to his invitation, Mr. Mesick called upon Mr. Craig, at which time the latter requested the agent to submit an offer of $25,000 to Mr. Shea, and at Mr. Mesick's suggestion he gave him his check for $1,000 as an evidence of good faith. His offer was accepted the following day and the transaction thereafter closed. Mr. Mesick received a commission from the defendant upon the sale, but had no previous authorization from Mr. Shea to sell the property. The latter had purchased it in 1913, expecting to make it his home. Some three months before the sale to plaintiff he changed his mind, and spoke to Mr. Mesick, with whom he had been on "intimate friendly terms for years," about finding a purchaser for $30,000. He told Mr. Mesick that the trees were 12 and 18 years old. He made no statement of any kind in reference to income from the property, and he testified at the trial that he obtained his information as to the age of the trees from the former owner of the property. Mr. Shea and Mr. Craig never met until some time after the sale was consummated.

The trial court found that the trees were of the age of 28 and 42 years respectively, instead of 12 and 18 years, as represented, and that the property would have been worth $3,750 more than its actual value if the trees had been of the ages as represented.

Plaintiff produced four witnesses of experience in walnut growing who testified that hard-shell nut trees of the age of 42 years produce no income, and they variously estimated that the 15-acre tract would have been of a value of from $200 to $500 greater with walnuts of the age of 18 years. On the other hand, there were eight witnesses for the defendant, of many years' experience in the walnut industry, five of whom were appraisers for banks making loans upon property in the locality. They testified that the age of trees will not diminish the production or lessen the value of this land with its deep, rich alluvial soil. As trees grow larger the limbs interlace and overlap, so that it then becomes necessary to remove some of the trees to let in the sunlight and air, which increases the production per tree to the extent that it does not lessen the output from an acre.

In confirmation of this theory it appears that in 1911 there was an injurious and drastic pruning of the orchard by one of the witnesses, who testified that a hard-shell tree had no value after it reached the age of 40 years. At that time one of the defendant's witnesses expostulated with the wielder of the pruning implements, and told him that it would take 5 years for the trees to recover. This pruning is characterized by counsel for both appellant and respondent as no less a crime than that of "murder." It was also shown that the year 1914 was a poor year for hard-shell nuts all over the county.

The value of the crop of the entire orchard for each of the years 1913 and 1914 was less than two-thirds of the amount that plaintiff's witnesses estimated it should be from 15 acres of soft-shell trees, such as composed the younger grove. Mr. Gooch, who for nearly 25 years up to 1912 was president of the Walnut Growers' Association, and who handled and inspected the nuts that came from this property during all that time, testified, without contradiction, that it always produced good average crops.

Having shown that there is a difference of opinion among walnut growers themselves as to the materiality of the statements as to the age of the trees, we approach the vital question as to whether the evidence shows that the plaintiff was in fact influenced by such statements or considered them to be material.

The court did not find that the plaintiff placed any reliance upon the representation as to income, but it did find "that he was induced to purchase the property because he relied upon the statements as to the ages of the trees."

"Question: What statements were made to you as to the physical condition of the property by either Mr. Mesick or Mr. Durfinger? Answer: It is my recollection that Mr. Mesick stated to me that it was one of the prettiest ranches in Southern California he was going to show me, and the trees on it were 18 and 12 years old. They told me they were walnut trees. During the same day he stated to me that the revenue would be from 12 to 18 per cent. on the price asked, which was $30,000. * * * Other than my visit to the ranch and the conversation with Mr. Mesick and Mr. Durfinger I did not make any other independent investigation of the property. I purchased this property relying upon the statements of Mr. Durfinger and Mr. Mesick."

The plaintiff further testified that he did not examine the soil. He thought that his attention was called to it as not being gritty or having any sand in it; that he did not ask about the age of the trees; that he knew nothing about walnut trees, whether they were good at 15 years or 40 years, whether one at 40 was as good as one at 20 years, and nothing of the relation of the age to income qualities. He was dissatisfied, as far as the revenue was concerned, after he harvested the crop about the last of October or the early part of November. He distinctly remembered that somebody had said prior to Christmas that the trees were older than 18 and 12 years; that they were too large for the reported age. After hearing these rumors he did not commence to investigate. He really did not believe it so. He did not remember if he said in the latter part of the year that he would commence action against Mr. Shea for damages. He might have done so. If he did, it would have been on the ground of revenue then. About the 20th of January or 1st of February following he made a payment of $4,375 on account of the purchase price. Either before or after Christmas the neighbors told him the trees were 25 years old; some said 30 years. He had no idea for a long time and did not know that it was because of the age of the trees that the ranch would produce no revenue. About March 11, 1915, he went to see Mrs. McLean, a former owner of the property, to get confirmation as to whether or not these trees were older, and she denied that she had made a statement about the age of the trees to Shea. Plaintiff could not tell just when he became convinced that he had been "buncoed" out of the revenue because of the age of the trees. While he made no inquiry as to the age of the trees, yet it appears that he did ask the agent what return he would get on his investment.

Considering this evidence with the view of upholding the finding of the trial court, is there a reasonable inference that plaintiff would not have made the contract but for the statements as to the ages of the trees? The plaintiff did not so state. All the inferences seem against it. If the agent or any other person had stated that the income diminished after the age of 40 years, or at any other age, an inference might be drawn that the plaintiff relied upon the false statements of the agent. His own testimony shows that he never had the slightest interest in those statements, even after he heard they were false, until some one told him it was the age of the trees that caused his lack of income. Under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence it is unreasonable to suppose that a man who regarded the character of the soil with such utter indifference, who was lost in admiration of the trees and the beauty of the place, and who had no information or opinion about the relation of age to income, did regard as of any consequence these statements as to age. He saw the trees in health, in blossom, and in bud. That signified fruit, irrespective of age, unless other causes intervened. He inquired about income, but not about the ages of the trees, or any other causes that might affect the income. The conclusion seems inevitable that Mr. Craig did not rely upon the statements as to ages of the trees, and that he never attached any importance to these statements at the time of the purchase, or after he learned that he had been deceived in the ages of the trees, until the relation of age to income was suggested. Then, and not until then, did he become interested.

The evidence does not meet the requirements of the authorities cited.

It is proper for us to say that we understand that, in the event of another trial, the question of the effect of the false statements as to income will not arise, without evidence indicating that the owner authorized such statements, as it seems to be conceded that the case of Samson v. Beale, 27 Wash. 557, 68 Pac. 180, contains a correct exposition of the law to the extent that it holds that false representations made by the agent, not authorized by the owner, will release the purchaser from his contract, but will not bind the owner in damages.

Plaintiff should be permitted to amend the complaint. It is unnecessary to lengthen the opinion by pointing out the defects, for they were discovered by counsel at the time of drawing his findings.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [4] The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1, is denied altogether without reference to the matter contained in the next to the last paragraph of the opinion dealing with the liability of an owner on account of unauthorized false representations on the part of the agent. This portion of the opinion is not essential to the decision and we express no opinion in regard thereto.

All concur.

CRAIGLOW v. WILLIAMS et al.
(Civ. 3175.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 20, 1920.)

1. EVIDENCE — 43(1)—TRIAL JUDGE BOUND TO TAKE JUDICIAL NOTICE OF FILES OF OWN COURT.

Trial judge is bound to take judicial notice of files of his own court.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES — 291—ONLY ONE ACTION FOR ENFORCEMENT OF DEBTS SECURED BY MORTGAGE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 726, there can be but one action for the enforcement of a debt secured by a mortgage on personal property.

3. PLEADING — 284—SUSTAINING DEMURRER TO SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT LEFT ORIGINAL COMPLAINT AND ANSWER STANDING.

Sustaining a demurrer to a supplemental complaint left the original complaint and answer standing, and the issues there presented to be disposed of.

4. CHATTEL MORTGAGES — 255—STATUTE PROVIDING THAT THERE BE BUT ONE ACTION FOR ENFORCEMENT OF DEBT DOES NOT APPLY TO SURETY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 726, providing that there can be but one action for a recovery on a debt or for the enforcement of any right secured by a mortgage on any real or personal property, applies only to the primary debtor, and does not apply to one who signed a note secured by a mortgage as a surety.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by W. E. Craiglow against C. J. Williams and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. T. Reed and E. P. Sample, both of San Diego, for appellant.

Sam Ferry Smith, of San Diego, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought to recover the sum of $2,100, with interest, upon a promissory note made, executed, and delivered by defendants to plaintiff, and for the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage executed by the defendants Williams to secure the payment of said note. Summons and complaint were duly and legally served upon all defendants. Defendants Williams defaulted. The defendant Sterne interposed a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, after which he served and filed his answer herein. After entry of the default of the defendants Williams, a decree of the court was entered, wherein it was found that the defendants Williams were personally liable to the plaintiff for the principal, interest, attorney's fees, and costs of suit, and the mortgaged property was ordered sold and the proceeds thereof applied to the payment of said indebtedness.

The property was accordingly sold, leaving a deficiency of balance still due the plaintiff of $1,796.70.

It will be observed that the plaintiff proceeded with the action, took judgment of foreclosure, and made a sale of the mortgaged property, without trying any of the issues raised by the answer of the defendant Sterne. Thereafter the plaintiff served and filed a "supplemental complaint," setting out the default of the defendants Williams, the finding of personal liability against them, and each of them, as to the said principal indebtedness already set forth, including the deficiency, and asking for judgment against the defendant Sterne for the amount of such deficiency. Defendant Sterne interposed a demurrer to this "supplemental complaint," and at the same time filed an answer thereto. This demurrer was sustained, without leave to amend, and thereupon judgment was ordered and entered in favor of the defendant Sterne, and against the plaintiff for costs. This appeal is from the order sustaining the demurrer and the judgment so entered.

Appellant contends that he does not know upon what theory the trial court based its decision, "unless it conceived all the defendants in the action to be joint obligors, and that hence only a joint judgment, instead of a joint and several judgment, could be rendered," and then argues that, if the latter, clearly under the provisions of section 579 of the Code of Civil Procedure defendant Sterne could be proceeded against and a judgment rendered against him after default of the defendants Williams, and, if the former, the entry of a default judgment against the defendants Williams for a deficiency, as already stated, was null and void, and should have been so treated by the court.

[1, 2] The trial judge is bound to take judicial notice of the files of his own court and, by the "supplemental complaint" on file, notwithstanding the sustaining of a demurrer thereto, it appears in this case that the whole matter has proceeded to judgment and a sale of the mortgaged property, and consequent ascertainment of the deficiency, before the answering defendant had any opportunity to try the issues involved. By the terms of section 726, Code of Civil Procedure, it is provided that—

"There can be but one action for a recovery of a debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real or personal property, which action must be in accordance with the provisions of this chapter."

The following cases are cited by respondent as supporting this contention, and with which we agree: Gnarini v. Swiss American Bank, 162 Cal. 181, 121 Pac. 726; Crisman v. Lanterman, 149 Cal. 651, 87 Pac. 89, 117 Am. St. Rep. 167; Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 681, 65 Pac. 1110; Woodward v. Brown, 119 Cal.

283, 51 Pac. 2, 542, 63 Am. St. Rep. 108; McKean v. German-American Bank, 118 Cal. 334, 50 Pac. 656; Toby v. Oregon, etc., Ry. Co., 98 Cal. 490, 33 Pac. 550; Barbieri v. Ramelli, 84 Cal. 154, 23 Pac. 1086; Biddell v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 354, 30 Pac. 609; Brown v. Willis, 67 Cal. 235, 7 Pac. 682.

[3, 4] An examination of the promissory note, set out and referred to in the complaint, however, will disclose that it is in form a joint note, not joint and several. In the answer of defendant Sterne it is set forth, among other things, that "this defendant alleges that he executed said note as surety, and not otherwise," etc. Only for this fact the judgment might have been sustained. The defendant having, by his own verified pleading, shown that he was surety, and not a primary debtor, we think it was error to enter judgment "that the plaintiff take nothing by this action," etc. It would seem, although we do not so hold, that the original answer of the defendant Sterne was overlooked at the time judgment was entered; for, even though the court sustained the demurrer to the "supplemental complaint," still the original complaint and answer stood, and the issues there presented were still undisposed of.

"A supplemental complaint is not an amendment to a pleading, and is not so classified in the Code; but it is only authorized for the purpose of bringing before the court facts material to the case occurring after the former complaint or answer, and leaves the former pleading intact." Giddings v. Seventy-Six L. & W. Co., 109 Cal. 116, 41 Pac. 788.

To dispose of the case thus presented, without trial of the issues involved, it would seem to us, was prejudicial to the rights of defendant Sterne.

"The rule in this state as to section 726 clearly is that this section applies to the primary debtor and was enacted for his benefit; that it does not apply to an individual guarantor or surety, or to a subsequent indorser upon a promissory note, nor in fact to any case where there is no privity of contract existing between the two obligations—that is, where the primary debt and the obligation under the mortgage are separate and distinct obligations." J. I. Case T. M. Co. v. Coppen Bros., 32 Cal. App. 194, 162 Pac. 647; Murphy v. Hellman, etc., Bank, 185 Pac. 485, and cases there cited; Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 146 Pac. 665, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 171; Kinsel v. Ballou, 151 Cal. 760, 91 Pac. 620.

For this reason the judgment cannot be sustained. Lest we may be misunderstood in this matter, it should not be implied that the plaintiff should have judgment on the issues framed by the pleadings; and we purposely refrain from indicating, to say nothing of expressing, our views on that phase of the case, leaving it an open question, to be ascertained and disposed of by the court at the next trial of this action, if any there be. Judgment reversed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; SLOANE, J.

STINSON CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. v. LEMOORE CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. et al. (CRESCENT CANAL CO., Intervener).

STINSON CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. et al. v. PEOPLE'S DITCH CO. et al. (Civ. 1911, 1912.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 24, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 19, 1920.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨143—NO RIGHT TO DIVERT MORE WATER THAN NECESSARY.

One actually diverting water under a claim of appropriation for a useful or beneficial purpose cannot by such diversion acquire any right to divert more water than is reasonably necessary for such use or purpose.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨994(3)—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES A MATTER FOR TRIAL JUDGE.

The credibility of the various witnesses was to be determined by the exercise of a wise discretion on the part of the trial judge, and is not a matter for the court on appeal.

3. EVIDENCE ⇨574—TESTIMONY BASED ON OBSERVATION OF HIGHER QUALITY THAN EXPERT OPINION.

Testimony of farmers from nearly every section of the irrigation districts in question, and their superintendents, ditch tenders, and others, who testified from their observation, experience, and knowledge as to the character of soil, excessive irrigation, etc., was of a higher quality than the mere opinion of an expert.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨152(8)—PERSUASIVE EVIDENCE THAT AMOUNT OF WATER DIVERTED WAS NEEDED.

That defendants for many years used a certain quantity of water is persuasive evidence that such quantity was actually needed for the purposes for which it was used.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⇨152(7)—EVIDENCE AS TO CONDITION OF SOIL YEARS BEFORE SUIT TO DETERMINE PRIORITY OF RIGHTS INCOMPETENT.

In suit involving priority of rights to divert water for irrigation and other useful farm purposes, where examination of soil by witness was made years before suits were brought, his report as to the condition of the soil should not have been admitted, without some showing that the essential conditions had not materially changed.

6. TRIAL ⇨98—MOTION TO STRIKE INCOMPETENT TESTIMONY SHOULD HAVE BEEN GRANTED WITHOUT IMPOSING CONDITION.

The court, in ruling on appellants' motion to strike out testimony of respondents relating to time subsequent to the beginning of the action, should not have imposed condition that motion would be granted, if appellants would consent to have all such testimony stricken out, including their own.

7. EVIDENCE $\hookrightarrow$ 560 — DEFENDANTS ENTITLED TO INTRODUCE EXPERT EVIDENCE AFFECTING WEIGHT OF TESTIMONY OF PLAINTIFFS' WITNESS.

Defendants should have been allowed to introduce testimony of their expert witness that plaintiffs' witness, whose testimony as to the condition of the soil had been admitted, had taken the poorest sections of the irrigation districts in question from which to select his samples.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1046(5)—IRREGULARITIES PREVENTED FAIR TRIAL TO APPELLANTS AND REQUIRED NEW TRIAL.

In view of erroneous rulings with reference to admission and exclusion of evidence, and trial court's remarks, which naturally would prevent witnesses for appellants from giving a candid and complete statement concerning the subject-matter in question, a new trial will be granted; the evidence seeming to preponderate in favor of the right of appellants to a larger supply of water than was accorded them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by the Stinson Canal & Irrigation Company against the Lemoore Canal & Irrigation Company and others, in which the Crescent Canal Company intervened, and action by the Stinson Canal & Irrigation Company and another against the People's Ditch Company and another. The two cases were tried together, and from the judgments rendered, and from orders denying motions for new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

E. C. Farnsworth, of Visalia, L. L. Cory, of Fresno, and H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, for appellants.

Frank H. Short, W. A. Sutherland, and M. K. Harris, all of Fresno, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. These two cases, and another, Cuthbert Burrel Co. et al. v. People's Ditch Co. et al., 188 Pac. 85, were tried together, and there is but one bill of exceptions in all three cases. It was agreed, at the oral argument herein, that these two could and should be treated in one opinion, since they involve the same general issues as to the rights of the Stinson Canal Company and the Crescent Canal Company. The trial of the cases consumed a period of 26 days, and the record embraces over 2,400 printed pages. The transcript and the briefs contain conclusive evidence of the stupendous amount of labor on the part of counsel in the trial and in the presentation of the cases on appeal. It may be added that it has been no small task to examine the voluminous record, and it is scarcely less difficult to determine to what controverted points specific attention should be given in this opinion. The embarrassment of the situation may be suggested by the statement that there are over 400 assignments of error, and 150 of these are argued with apparent sincerity and confidence by the able and distinguished counsel for appellants. If the opinion is not to be unduly prolonged, most of these points, of course, must go without recital, exposition, or discussion. Indeed, few of them possess merit, and it is considered necessary to notice only two or three controverted points.

Speaking generally, it may be stated that in the first action the complaint alleges that plaintiff is the owner of a canal which leads out of a certain slough, called Boggy slough, connected with Kings river, in Fresno county, and that plaintiff has the right to divert from this slough 165 cubic feet per second of the waters of said Kings river, and to use the same for irrigation and other useful purposes; that plaintiff has used this water continuously for 15 years; that the defendants claim an interest in these waters adversely to plaintiff, but without right; that about the 1st of March, 1905, by means of a certain ditch constructed by defendants, they wrongfully diverted from the river, and ever since have continued to divert a large quantity of water, about 85 cubic feet per second, which belongs to plaintiff, and which, otherwise, would have flowed down the river into plaintiff's ditch, and have been diverted and used by plaintiff.

The Crescent Canal Company filed a complaint in intervention, by which it appears that said company owns a canal which heads in the lower North fork of Kings river and runs across the country in Fresno county in a general westerly direction for about 20 miles, and that it is the owner of a right to divert, by means of this canal, 213 cubic feet of water per second and to use the same for irrigation and other purposes; that for more than 20 years it has diverted this amount of water "openly, peaceably, continuously, and uninterruptedly, under claim of right against defendants and the whole world"; that defendants claim a right to this water adversely to intervenor, but without any right thereto. Defendants, in their answer to plaintiff, alleged that they have a prior right to use and divert from Kings river 600 cubic feet of water per second; that they are the owners of a large ditch—which is described—that was constructed in 1873, and that, by means of this ditch, the said Lower Kings River Water Ditch Company, from October, 1873, to October 18, 1902, appropriated and used for irrigation, and other useful purposes, said amount of water; that on the latter date said company granted and conveyed unto the Lemoore Canal & Irrigation Company its said ditch and the right to divert from said Kings river said quantity of water; that ever since said date said grantee has appropriated and diverted from said river, except when unlawfully prevented by other parties, the said 600 cubic feet of water per second; and that said grantee has been the owner of said ditch and the right to appropriate and divert from Kings river said quantity of water. There is also a suitable allegation of title by prescription to said amount of water and that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations. The answer to the complaint in intervention is of a similar nature, and the prayer is, likewise, that the intervenor take nothing, and that it be adjudged that appellants are entitled to 600 cubic feet of water per second, and that they have a prior right to said water. The complaint in this action was filed on April 26, 1905, the answer thereto was filed on November 9, 1905, the complaint in intervention was filed on December 3, 1906, and the answer to this on March 9, 1909. It may be stated that there is really only one appellant in this action, to wit, the Lemoore Canal & Irrigation Company.

On October 1, 1906, the second action was brought, the Stinson and the Crescent Company uniting in the complaint. This pleading, in its averments, is similar to the other complaints hereinbefore alluded to, and as to the defendants it alleges that within two years last past they have "unlawfully, without right, and against the wishes of plaintiffs, entered upon Kings river above plaintiffs' said points of diversion, and by means of dams and obstructions placed in the river, and by means of large ditches leading therefrom have wrongfully and without plaintiffs' consent appropriated and diverted from said river through their respective ditches a large quantity of water, to wit, about 400 cubic feet of water per second and have deprived plaintiffs of the waters of said river." The prayer was for an injunction to restrain the defendants from diverting said water or any portion thereof. The defendants filed a joint answer in the case denying the material allegations of the complaint and alleging as affirmative matter that ever since 1873 the People's Ditch Company has been and is now the owner of a large ditch constructed to convey part of the water of Kings river for the purpose of irrigation and other useful purposes from the head of its ditch into the county of Kings; that said company is the owner of the right to so divert 600 cubic feet of water per second, and that it has, ever since March, 1874, so appropriated and diverted from said river, except when unlawfully prevented by other parties, said amount of water when there was a sufficient quantity flowing in the river; and that it has been continuously used for said purposes. In said answer appears a similar claim of the Last Chance Water Ditch Company to 600 cubic feet of water per second. It is also disclosed that the stockholders of both these canal companies have been and are the "owners of large quantities of agricultural and horticultural lands in Kings county which have been and are now used by said stockholders for raising agricultural and horticultural crops and domestic stock, and that these lands, in order to be successfully cultivated, so as to produce crops, require irrigation, and without irrigation they will not produce crops, and without water said stockholders will be unable to keep or maintain live stock upon their lands." It was averred that this right to said 1,200 cubic feet of water is superior to any of the rights of plaintiffs, or either of them, and, furthermore, that defendants have a prescriptive title to this water by reason of adverse use thereof for more than 5 years.

The cases were tried in 1913—8 years after the first complaint was filed—and judgment was rendered in January, 1914. A motion for a new trial in each case was made, and it was denied on March 6, 1916. On the 3d day of April following, the appeal was taken.

In the first case, the court found that the defendant, the Lemoore Company, as successor in interest to the defendant, Lower Kings River Company, is entitled to divert from Kings river, at the head of its canal, 250 cubic feet of water per second; that the plaintiff, the Stinson Company, is entitled to divert from said river 165 cubic feet per second, and the intervenor, the Crescent Company, is entitled to divert 213 cubic feet per second from said river; that the right of the Lemoore Company is superior and prior to the right of either the Stinson or the Crescent Company to the extent of said 250 feet, but no more; and it was decreed that defendant, the Lemoore Company, be enjoined from diverting any greater quantity of water than said 250 cubic feet, or in any manner from interfering with the additional flow of the waters of said river or any of its branches or channels to the head of the respective canals of the plaintiff and the intervenor to the full extent and quantity of the said 165 and 213 feet, respectively.

In the second case, the court found that the defendant, People's Ditch Company, was entitled to divert and appropriate 360 cubic feet of water per second from said river, and the Last Chance Company 250 cubic feet per second, and that each of these rights is superior and prior to the rights of plaintiffs or either of them. The finding as to the right of appropriation by the Stinson and the Crescent Company was the same as in the other case, confining them to said 165 and 213 feet, and providing that their rights are prior and superior to the rights of the defendants to divert any water in excess of the said 360 feet by the People's Company and the 250 feet by the Last Chance Company. The defendants were therefore restrained and enjoined from diverting water in excess of said amounts.

Thus we see that respondents were awarded the amount of water which they claimed, but its appropriation was made subject to the prior right of the Lemoore Company for 250 cubic feet per second, of the People's Company for 360 feet, and of the Last Chance for 250 feet. Appellants, however, were dissatisfied with the decision of the trial court as to the number of feet of water to which they were and are entitled, and hence their appeal.

An important, and indeed vital, question in the case, is whether the evidence does not compel the conviction that appellants are entitled to more water than was awarded them, or, conversely, whether there was any substantial showing to support the conclusion of the court that their prior right should be limited to the number of feet which we have mentioned. This consideration resolves itself into the two elements: First, the number of cubic feet which was appropriated by appellants; and, second, the number of feet that was necessary for the purpose to which the water was devoted, or, in other words, the extent of the "duty of water" required by the situation of said appellants. It is conceded that these are the elements involved in the inquiry, and, moreover, it cannot be disputed that, as to both considerations, appellants made an impressive showing. Many farmers, and others who were familiar with the construction and operation of appellants' canals, testified to facts strongly supporting the inference that for many years the asserted amount of water was appropriated and used. This was supplemented and aided by actual measurements of the flow in said canals, which were made by various experts, who testified to the results of their investigations.

As to the quantity of water needed for appellants' purposes, quite a number of competent witnesses testified that the full amount claimed was actually needed and was reasonably necessary for the proper irrigation of the lands covered by the several water systems of appellants and for the use of their stock. In their brief they set out at length this evidence, contrast it with what they are pleased to call the "very weak and unsatisfactory showing" of respondents, and they declare themselves "at a loss to see why or under what theory the trial court allowed plaintiff, Stinson Canal & Irrigation Company, 165 feet of water per second, with only about 8,000 acres of land under cultivation, or why the court granted the Crescent Canal Company 213 cubic feet of water per second, with only about 10,000 acres," while appellants were allowed only 860 cubic feet with some 135,000 acres of land to be supplied with water.

To this assertion, respondents answer:

"Appellants' only difficulty in connection with this branch of the case seems to have resulted from a failure to appreciate that the amount of water awarded to the respective parties in second feet do not at all, of themselves and without a consideration of their relation to acre feet, indicate anything as to the correctness of the judgment. Obviously the duty of water must be resolved upon a consideration of the needs of the lands in question in acre feet, even though to produce a given result in acre feet the second foot unit of measurement must be adopted. It is therefore the effect of the judgment in producing acre feet for the respective parties which is to be considered and not the number of second feet allotted to them respectively."

Indeed, it can be said, with fairness to respondents, that they do not seriously dispute the contention of appellants as to the amount of water appropriated and used by them for many years; but they seek to justify the judgment on this very ground that the lands thus irrigated required no more water than the court allotted to them. In fact, they quote the testimony of their own witnesses to show that appellants were greatly favored in that their canals were so located and constructed as to enable them, for many years, to enjoy the prior appropriation and use of a much larger volume of water than was awarded them by the lower court, and also larger than was available for the use of respondents.

Respondents insist that the court's award is justified upon the theory of the duty of water and the beneficial use upon appellants' lands, and they decline to consider specifically any question as to the size and capacity of the ditches of the respective parties or the quantity of water diverted by these ditches and distributed to the lands of the various irrigating systems.

In support of their contention that the needed and beneficial amount of water was awarded, they claim, in the first place, that the number of acres of land actually irrigated by appellants has been exaggerated by the latter; and, in the second place, conceding that the extent of the irrigated area has been correctly represented by appellants, nevertheless, the finding of the trial court that the amount awarded to them is sufficient for the beneficial use to which it is and has been applied, is supported by credible evidence.

As to the area of the land actually irrigated, there is room for some diversity of opinion; but it is deemed unnecessary to quote the evidence in that respect.

[1] Concerning the amount of water required by each irrigated district—whatever its extent—in other words, how much water could be devoted to a beneficial use, it is deemed proper to notice more particularly the contentions of the parties. As to the legal principle involved in the question, it is not disputed that it is the settled law of this state:

"That one actually diverting water under a claim of appropriation for a useful or beneficial purpose cannot by such diversion acquire any right to divert more water than is reasonably necessary for such use or purpose, no matter how long a diversion in excess thereof has continued, and that there is no such thing as the acquirement by such appropriator of a title by prescription in so far as the excessive diversion is concerned." California, etc., Co. v. Madera, etc., Irr. Co., 167 Cal. 78, 138 Pac. 718.

The rule is very clearly stated also in Hufford v. Dye, 162 Cal. 153, 121 Pac. 403, as follows:

"It is the well-settled law of this state that one making an appropriation of the waters of a stream acquires no title to the waters but only a right to their beneficial use and only to the extent that they are employed for that purpose. His right is not measured by the extent of his appropriation as stated in his notice or by his actual diversion from the stream, but by the extent to which he applies such waters for useful or beneficial purposes. Beyond that his appropriation or diversion of more than can be applied by him gives him no right to the excess and this is subject to appropriation by any other person who may use it for similar beneficial purposes."

On this branch of the case, to support their theory, respondents relied largely upon the testimony of certain experts, among whom the most important are I. Teilman, W. C. Hammatt, and F. E. Twining. The first had been engaged in distributing and supervising the distribution and use of water for irrigation under several different systems in the valley, and had made a special study of the subject of the duty of water; he was familiar with the canals of the Lemoore Company and the People's Company, and the crops irrigated therefrom; and he had recently made a detailed examination of those systems and the lands subject thereto. He testified as to the amount of water required by the orchards, vineyards and alfalfa throughout these districts, and concluded that a duty of water of one acre foot would be sufficient. It was also his opinion that too much water had been used on the lands of appellants, thereby causing "the country to be water-logged." Ascribing the duty of water indorsed and advocated by this witness, it would be a reasonable inference that the court awarded to appellants, the Lemoore and the People's Company, as much water as they could use to advantage on the land.

W. C. Hammatt had been a civil engineer for 20 years and he was experienced regarding the use of water for irrigation purposes; acting for respondents, he had investigated the territory under the three canal systems of appellants. He described, in detail, his investigations, and concluded that, "taking it all together," water to the depth of one foot would be sufficient for the irrigation of the whole territory. His opinion, also, it may be said, supports the theory of respondents that appellants are accorded all the water they actually need for irrigation. However, it may be well to note that his knowledge of the territory was acquired by this witness in a two days' automobile trip in which he traveled 180 miles, and as to his examination of the soil he testified:

"My examination there was the same as the others, merely a superficial examination of the soil conditions; kicked up a little dirt, and picked it up in my hands, and threw it away again."

His examination was rather hurried and incomplete, one would think, to form the basis for an opinion of much value as to the needs of some 135,000 acres of land. But, of course, we cannot say how much weight it was accorded by the learned trial judge.

F. E. Twining, an analytical chemist, made an extensive examination of the territory covered by the irrigation systems of appellants, analyzing some 70 samples of soil. He testified at great length, and the written report of his investigations was received in evidence. The report covers 30 pages of the transcript, and constitutes a comprehensive review of the character and condition of the various soils of the irrigated territory. The following quotation will afford some indication of the nature of this report:

"(17-21) badly incrustated all around. South between 1 (18-21) and 6 (18-22) 1 S. W. 12 Sample section 1 N. E. Cor. 7 Gov. map good—Hanford sand South of this to Hanford with exception of 2 or 3 spots, in Fancher sandy loam. Fancher sandy loam—covers a considerable area near the center of and small areas throughout the Hanford district. This soil contains enough clay to bind the soil grains, and if cultivated in a wet condition often bakes and forms clods. In much of this area the water table is kept very close to the surface during the irrigating season, and certain small areas and depressions have become water-soaked, resulting in drowning out of crops and accumulation of alkali. The soil does not contain much alkali, but over-irrigation, especially subirrigation, is, however, always dangerous, as the soluble salts become concentrated on the surface and become injurious or even prohibitive to plant growth. This has occurred in many places throughout the area."

Of course, we cannot say with certainty, but we think it probable that the report and testimony of this witness were considered by the trial court of great, if not of decisive, importance.

These witnesses were met by expert witnesses on the part of appellants, who gave a different account of the said territory, as to the character of the soil and other conditions, and who expressed the opinion that the land had not been excessively irrigated. In the matter of experts, therefore, there was a sharp conflict and the not unusual antagonism. It must be admitted, however, that as to actual knowledge of the care, cultivation, and development of the land through a long period of years, the advantage was all upon the side of appellants. Farmers from nearly every section of the said irrigation districts testified as to the land which they knew had been irrigated by the respective canals of appellants; also their superintendents, ditch tenders, stockholders, and irrigators, the presidents and directors of the various systems, testified from their observation, experience, and knowledge; and, if credit be given to this mass of testimony, the conclusion would almost inevitably follow, not only that appellants used, through a long period of time, the amount of water which they claimed, when it was available in Kings river, but that they irrigated substantially the said number of acres, to wit, 135,000, and that said water was applied to a beneficial use and that it all was reasonably necessary for irrigation and the other purposes to which it was devoted.

[2, 3] It is true that the credibility of these various witnesses was to be determined by the exercise of a wise discretion on the part of the trial judge, and it is not for us to say that their statements should have been accepted at their full face value; but it is at least apparent that this class of testimony is of a higher quality than the mere opinion of an expert. It is the difference between practice and theory, between experience and mere observation or examination. There is this, also, to be said: That it is not at all probable that a number of farmers would use, for many years, for the purpose of irrigation, an amount of water that would destroy or impair the value of their land. Of course, they would not willingly do so; and it is hard to believe that, in these days of intelligent and scientifically directed agriculture, these men, who have located and built up a thriving community, would make such a grievous mistake as to cause deliberately their lands to become water-logged and depreciated for all the purposes of husbandry.

[4] The very fact that they used for so many years a certain quantity of water is, indeed, very persuasive evidence that such quantity was actually needed for such purposes. It is not conclusive evidence of that fact, but it is a circumstance of impressive significance. The evidence having shown, therefore, that appellants diverted and used for many years a larger quantity of water than is awarded in the judgment, the strong probability is that it was all needed. The value of such use as evidence of the need for the water is apparent, and we may add that it is so recognized by the Supreme Court in the California Pastoral, etc., Co. Case, supra, wherein it is said:

"In determining how much of the water in fact used had been reasonably necessary for the purpose for which it was used, we believe that a court should be liberal with the appropriator to the extent, at least, that it should not deprive him of any portion of the amount of water that he had in fact used for the period necessary to gain title by prescription unless it is clearly and satisfactorily made to appear that he has used more than was reasonably necessary. The presumption would appear to be in his favor, for ordinarily one would not take the pains to use upon any land more than was reasonably necessary under all the circumstances."

It may be added that the thriving orchards, vineyards, and alfalfa fields throughout the district and the number of prosperous farmers therein argue strongly that the water has been at least beneficially appropriated. Again, a portion of the waters—how much does not appear—has been used for stock, which seems to have been overlooked by respondents, and in estimating the amount of water that must be diverted at the head of the canals to irrigate suitably the lands of appellants, allowance does not seem to have been made by the experts for respondents for the amount which must be considered—varying from 30 to 50 per cent.—for seepage and evaporation before the water reaches the land to be irrigated.

These things have been mentioned, not for the purpose of holding that the testimony of the experts is necessarily insufficient to support said finding, but to emphasize the importance of the rulings made by the trial court in reference to these witnesses. We may take the instance of the witness Twinning as the most striking. After stating that he had made analyses of the soils of this territory at various times and the last "in February of this year," he was asked this question:

"In February of this year, and will you describe in a general way just what you did in making those soil surveys?"

A general objection was made to the question, and also—

"that any such examination made at that time of the condition of the soil would not show or tend to show the condition of the soil at the time of the commencement of any of these actions, and it does not prove or tend to prove any issue in the case."

[5] This examination by the witness was made years after the suits were brought, and before his report was admitted in evidence there should have been some showing that the essential conditions had not materially changed. Indeed, it is a fair inference from the report itself that there had been an important change, at least as to the presence of alkali near the surface of the ground, caused, as he claimed, by excessive irrigation. Respondents seek to justify the ruling on the ground that both sides offered such evidence on the promise that it would be shown that the conditions remained essentially unchanged, and that appellants, especially, almost at the outset of this case, declared:

"We will connect that, and show that the same conditions existed prior to the suit as in 1909."

The conditions, though, to which appellants referred, related to the amount of water actually used, the number of acres irrigated, and the kind of crops produced. In fact, the witness Boland was not permitted to testify as to the character of crops that were grown and produced upon the land and the number of acres of those crops at a time subsequent to the beginning of the actions. In reply to the question of the court, "When was this?" appellants stated:

"He made an examination this year and four years ago; this for the purpose of showing the lands are irrigated and what the water is used for. We expect to connect that, and show that the same character of crops were produced before the commencement of the action."

The court replied:

"I don't like that, because that simply multiplies the evidence almost indefinitely, and this is a very questionable method of procedure. Besides, those things are subject to constant change anyway."

Furthermore, in response to a statement by appellants that the only way to make it relevant would be to show that the conditions had not changed, the court said:

"That would be impossible. I am solicitous to keep out any irrelevant and immaterial testimony, because it occupies so much time."

[6] When a motion was subsequently made by appellants to strike out the testimony of respondents relating to the time subsequent to the beginning of the action, the court stated it would be granted, if appellants would consent to having all such testimony stricken out, including their own. We think this condition should not have been imposed.

But assuming that the court did not commit prejudicial error, or error at all, in overruling said objection to the testimony, appellants attempted to have portions of Twining's said report stricken out on the ground, apparently, that they constituted mere argument and hearsay. The record as to this shows the following:

"Mr. Farnsworth: If the court please, this statement of the witness, in addition to containing a tabulation of samples, and the depths, and what he found as to alkali, contains, I notice on a very cursory examination, many statements and arguments of this witness, and I desire to object to it on that ground. We didn't see this thing, and understand from counsel's statement that it was simply a tabulation with reference to that matter, and we have had this—it appears from a cursory examination in the two or three minutes recess.

"The Court: I think I understand you. It is my understanding that it contains simply was he—

"Mr. Sutherland (interrupting): It was expressly identified as a transcript of the witness' notes. Now the notes contain statements as to the character of the soil, whether sandy loam or whatever it might be, and that is included as a very proper part of the record.

"The Court: Well, proceed with the cross-examination.

"Mr. Farnsworth: Sir? I was going to say, we haven't had a chance to examine that thing, and we have had to examine it under a disadvantage under those circumstances—that we haven't had a chance to look at these different matters that are tabulated.

"Mr. Sutherland: You can look at them one by one as you examine the witness.

"Mr. Farnsworth: Well, there are 81 of them, you state, and over different sections. We haven't had a chance to compare them.

"The Court: Well, he has testified to a certain number of them. Proceed."

It is true that appellants made no formal motion to strike out any specific portions of this report, nor did they expressly ask the court for time to examine it; but the court precluded any such action on the part of appellants by summarily ordering them to proceed with the cross-examination. This was a matter of importance, and appellants were entitled to greater consideration than they received. It was proper, undoubtedly, for the witness to refer to the report to refresh his memory (section 2047, Code Civ. Proc.), and as a mere tabulation of his analysis of the various samples there was no valid objection to its admissibility, but it contained much extraneous matter that should have been excluded.

[7] An attempt was made also by appellants to prove by one of their expert witnesses that Mr. Twining had taken the poorest sections of the irrigated territory from which to select his samples. The court sustained an objection to this line of examination. We think appellants should have been allowed to make the showing for whatever it was worth, as affecting the weight and significance of the deductions to be made from the witness Twining's examination of the character of the soil.

Some other rulings of the court are subject to criticism, but we shall pass them without specific mention.

[8] Whatever mistakes were made in the various rulings of the court might be regarded as without prejudice, were it not that the evidence seems to preponderate so strongly in favor of the right of appellants to a larger supply of water than was accorded them, and that the nervous condition of the trial judge was apparently so impaired as to make it difficult for him to consider with due care and patience the contentions and evidence of appellants. This latter phase of the subject has been stated by one of the counsel for appellants as follows:

"Now, in that connection, we think we were not given a fair trial. We are satisfied in our own minds that is fact. Judge Church was the trial judge. No one has a greater admiration for Judge Church than myself. * * * I had no reason to believe he was in the slightest degree prejudiced against these companies, simply because they appropriated water and used it in Kings county. I didn't think that would affect his judgment, and I don't know consciously that it did; but I do know that when we came to the trial of this case we were met, with the very first witness we produced on the stand, with an antagonism that we were not able to overcome. There was not a witness we produced on the stand but that was interrogated, cross-examined, and in a measure intimidated, by the conduct of the court. Now, I don't mean that he was intentionally prejudiced, or that he was taking sides; but there must have been some unconscious bias, to which we are all more or less subject, because we are human, that some way or other affected Judge Church in the trial of this case, because I say that the record shows throughout that we did not get an impartial trial."

The zeal of counsel, as often happens, "because we are human," has led him to overstate the case; but a reading of the record shows no inconsiderable cause for complaint. In the cross-examination of this witness, Twining, at one point, the court said:

"It seems to me that any further questions of this nature are obviously meant for mere delay, and I don't want to hear any more of them, because I will make the same ruling."

Again:

"If there are a lot of statements which you don't know anything about, ask him, but make it as brief as possible, and not ask him a thousand questions, when one or two would be sufficient."

Further:

"I have tried to conduct this case with some degree of expedition, but it is impossible to do so."

While Louis Hansen, a witness for appellants, was being cross-examined the following occurred, as shown by the transcript:

"Q. How did you learn the section lines of that section? A. Why there is a road on 17 and 18—

"The Court: Strike out the answer. Do you know what the question is? Mr. Hansen, do you know what the question is? A. No.

"The Court: Read the question, then. (Question read.)

"Mr. Harris: Section 17, right there (showing on the map). A. Yes, sir; I see something on that map, there was no road opened on the north side—

"The Court: Come back and take your seat, then; the court will know if you are answering the question or not."

Several other answers the court of its own motion struck out, and after the witness had stated that he knew the west line of a certain section the record shows the following:

"Q. How did you know? How did you find out? A. That is something I can't hardly explain to you. The county road goes—

"The Court: Say that you don't know, then. A. All right; I will. I did know, in fact, though."

The court struck out several other answers of this witness, and concluded by lecturing all the witnesses to be perfectly frank and candid, and not try to make out a case for either side. When John Rea, a witness for appellants, was on the stand, he was asked—

"if there was anything to interfere, in passing along the road, with your view, so you could determine with your knowledge of the land how much of the land was actually irrigated from the People's Ditch?"

An objection was made to the question and the court said:

"I will confess frankly to you that I don't think there is anything of value in any answer or question of that kind."

In sustaining an objection to another question the court, among other things, said:

"We can't try this case entirely upon hearsay evidence. * * * There ought to be a fair, candid presentation of the matter and nothing else, by a fair, candid witness throughout, so that the court might finally, in determining these matters, determine it in a way that it would, in some sense, do justice to the people concerned, all of them; that is the only interest that ought to be had by anybody, and it is the only interest that the court has—not to see one party get an advantage of some other party by hook or crook, or something of that kind, but to have a fair and candid presentation, so that we know it is such and feel that it is, * * * and therefore I get a little irritated when I find that people are willing to say, or any one is willing to say, most anything. I don't like that kind of testimony at all. It is not that kind that ought to come into courts."

In another instance, when an objection was made by respondents to a question on the ground that it called for a conclusion the court said:

"That is a case with nearly every question; with nine cases out of ten they have called for conclusion or opinion."

Again, when another witness stated that he was acquainted with the location of the canals, the court:

"What do you mean by that—speaking acquaintance, bowing acquaintance?"

To another witness for appellants the court said:

"Don't be trying to make out a case."

At another point:

"Certainly there ought to be some method of shortening the work. It is so tedious that we can hardly keep awake. There is not enough variety to keep up interest here."

There was, indeed, some excuse for the impatience of the trial judge. It does seem that the trial was unduly prolonged, and it was no doubt true, as the court said:

"Well, I guess we are having our nerves tried a little too much by the strain of the continuous hearing of this case. I find my own nerves, I have to confess, are considerably tried, and I don't know but what I have to apologize to you, all of you."

But it must be said that great interests were involved, and it is not surprising that counsel were alert and anxious to present every consideration that they deemed important. It may be added that they seem to have been extremely courteous throughout to the trial judge, and they hardly deserved the reprimand that was frequently administered. While said remarks of the court are not to be deemed so serious as if the cause had been tried before a jury, and while some of them were undoubtedly of a jocular nature, and all were well intended, the natural effect upon the witnesses for appellants of the frequent interruptions and lectures would be to interfere with and prevent a candid and complete statement of the knowledge of the witness concerning the subject-matter of his testimony.

The appropriate attitude of the trial judge is, of course, a matter of general knowledge, and it requires no extended consideration. We may cite, however, in this connection, Perkins v. Perkins, 29 Cal. App. 68, 154 Pac. 483, and Pratt v. Pratt, 141 Cal. 247, 74 Pac. 742. In the former it was held that the court placed an improper restriction upon the plaintiff in the conduct of her case. It was said:

"We think that the attitude of the trial judge in restricting counsel in his examination of the plaintiff as to the matter adverted to was error of a prejudicial kind. The case of Pratt v. Pratt, 141 Cal. 247 [74 Pac. 742], is in point."

In this latter case the trial judge virtually threatened to prejudge the testimony of the defendant as a witness, and intimated that unless the daughter was withdrawn as a witness he would regard "the fact of her having contradicted the mother in the father's interest as a matter seriously discrediting the latter's testimony." It was held that this was a prejudicial irregularity, preventing a fair trial to the defendant. This case is not so flagrant, but the strictures were so severe as to discourage a full presentation of the evidence. The trial judge, learned and incorruptible as he is, failed to maintain his usual judicial poise, and this fact being considered in connection with the other circumstances to which attention has been directed, it seems that the interests of justice demand a new trial.

The judgment and order in each case are reversed.

CUTHBERT BURREL CO. et al. v. PEOPLE'S DITCH CO. et al. (Civ. 1913.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 26, 1920.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by the Cuthbert Burrel Company and others against the People's Ditch Company and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and certain defendants appeal. Reversed.

El C. Farnsworth, of Visalia, L. L. Cory, of Fresno, and H. Scott Jacobs, of Hanford, for appellants.

Frank H. Short, W. A. Sutherland, and M. K. Harris, all of Fresno, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The action arises out of conflicting claims to the use of the waters of Kings river. Plaintiffs had judgment and the appeal is by defendants the People's Ditch Company, the Last Chance Water Ditch Company, the Lemoore Canal & Irrigation Company, and Lower Kings River Water Ditch Company, from said judgment. The defendants Lake Land Canal & Irrigation Company and the Union Water Ditch Company have not appealed.

This action and two others (Stinson Canal & Irr. Co. v. Lemoore Canal & Irr. Co. et al., etc., Interveners, and Stinson Canal & Irr. Co. and Crescent Canal Co. v. People's Ditch Co. et al.) were consolidated in the court below and tried together. An opinion reversing the judgments and orders in the other cases was filed in this court on the 24th day of December, 1919. See 188 Pac. 77.

The object of this action by the plaintiffs was to establish the riparian character of their lands (described in the complaint) and to obtain injunctive relief against the alleged acts of the defendants in interfering with the riparian rights of plaintiffs.

The complaint, by appropriate averments, sets up the riparian rights of the plaintiffs, alleging that their lands (described in the complaint), are situated and border upon and along Kings river, a natural water course, and upon and along certain branches of said river; alleges that the use of water from said river and its tributaries and branches is necessary for the purpose of properly farming said lands, and that the defendants are and have been for a long period of time taking from said river and diverting to and upon their lands larger quantities of water than are necessary for their legitimate uses or quantities far in excess of the amounts which they (defendants) can or ever have put to a beneficial use and are thus interfering with the rights of plaintiffs as riparian owners.

The People's Ditch Company and the Last Chance Water Ditch Company filed an answer to the complaint, denying certain allegations thereof and affirmatively alleging: That the People's Ditch Company, since 1873, and the Last Chance Water Ditch Company, since 1874, have been the owners, respectively, of large water ditches, for the purposes of irrigation, watering of live stock, etc., and that each of said defendants has appropriated and diverted from Kings river 600 cubic feet of water per second. The beneficial use of such water was alleged, as was also the open, notorious, and adverse possession thereof.

The Lemoore Canal & Irrigation Company also filed an answer, setting forth that, in 1902, it purchased from Lower Kings River Water Ditch Company all its property, including canals, ditches, and the right to appropriate 600 cubic feet per second of water, which ditches and water right had been owned by the latter company since 1873.

Appellants contend that the following findings of the court are not supported by the evidence: (1) That Kings river is a natural water course where it crosses the lands of plaintiffs and that plaintiffs' lands are riparian. (2) That the People's Ditch Company has diverted and put to a beneficial use only 360 cubic feet of water per second. (3) That the Last Chance Water Ditch Company has diverted and put to a beneficial use only 250 cubic feet of water per second. (4) That the Lower Kings River Water Ditch Company and its successor, the Lemoore Canal & Irrigation Company, have diverted and put to a beneficial use only 250 cubic feet of water per second.

As is stated in the opinion in Stinson Canal & Irr. Co. v. Lemoore Canal & Irr. Co., etc., 188 Pac. 77, there is but one bill of exceptions in all three cases. With the exception of the testimony addressed to the question of the riparian character of the lands of plaintiffs, the evidence is precisely the same in this as in the other cases—that is, upon the question of the quantity of water necessary for the purposes of the defendants and that which they claim they have for many years diverted from Kings river and used upon their lands for a beneficial purpose, the evidence is the same in this action as in the other cases. The findings as to the quantity of water to which the defendants were found by the court to be entitled are the same in all three cases. The rulings upon the evidence of which the defendants complain in this action, with the exception of those with respect to the evidence bearing upon the question of the riparian character of the lands of plaintiffs, are precisely the same as those made in the other actions. Indeed, the rulings here complained of, with the exception above indicated, are the very same rulings and refer to evidence bearing upon the question (as vital in one action as in the others) of the quantity of water which the defendants claimed the right to divert from Kings river, and which they claimed they had for many years prior to the institution of these actions so diverted, upon their lands and put to a beneficial use. The criticism made by defendants of the manner in which the case was tried below is as applicable to this as to the other actions, since the said criticism grows out of and is founded upon precisely the same rulings and the same alleged hostile or impatient attitude of the trial judge towards witnesses introduced by the defendants to support the claims of their answers.

In view of the foregoing situation, what is said and the conclusion arrived at in the opinion of this court in Stinson Canal & Irr. Co. v. Lemoore Canal & Irr. Co. et al., and Stinson Canal & Irr. Co. v. People's Ditch Co. et al., supra, are applicable to this case. In those cases, the plaintiffs, as appropriators, claimed the right to divert a certain quantity of water from Kings river to and upon their lands, and alleged that the defendants were wrongfully interfering with that right. It was not claimed in those actions, nor is it claimed here, that the defendants were not entitled to take water from said river for their purposes, but that they were and had been so diverting water in quantities far in excess of the amounts necessary for their purposes, or which had been or could be put by them to a beneficial use, and that in so doing they had impaired and were impairing the right of the plaintiffs to take the amount of water necessary for the proper irrigation of their lands and such other necessary uses as are incidental to the business of farming. In those cases, then, the vital question involved was as to the amount of water which each of the contending litigants was entitled to divert from Kings river to be used for a beneficial purpose. So, in the case now before us, as above stated, aside from the question of the riparian character of the lands of plaintiffs, the vital question was as to the respective quantities of water necessary for a beneficial purpose the parties hereto were entitled to take from said river. And it is as to the testimony addressed to that proposition as it affected all three of the cases that the complaints are made by the defendants of the rulings, and of the manner generally in which the case was tried, and upon which complaints we predicated our judgment of reversal in the other cases.

It follows that, upon the authority of the opinion in Stinson Canal & Irr. Co. v. Lemoore Canal & Irr. Co. et al., and Stinson Canal & Irr. Co. et al. v. People's Ditch Co. et al., 188 Pac. 77, the judgment and the order herein must be reversed; and it is so ordered.

TOWER v. WILSON (SOLINSKY, etc., Intervener). (Civ. 2644.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 19, 1919. Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing, Feb. 16, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1011(1)—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE WILL NOT BE DISTURBED.

Findings by the trial court on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. TRIAL ⇨397(5)—RELATIVE TO WHAT FINDINGS SHOULD BE MADE, COMPLAINT HELD TO STATE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED.

Where the first count of plaintiff's complaint sought to recover from defendant a sum of money on the theory of quantum meruit, it appearing that defendant transferred to plaintiff a half interest in a mining claim for $175,000, although defendant had acquired claim for about $60,000, held, that the second count, which was nothing more than a specific rehearsal of the probative facts relied on to support the cause of action and did not allege that plaintiff was in any wise damaged, or that the value of the one-half interest in mining claim was less than the amount paid for it, was one for money had and received, and hence findings disposing of the first were sufficient to dispose of the second count.

3. TRIAL ⇨393(1)—FINDINGS ON MATERIAL ISSUES NEED NOT FOLLOW THE PLEADINGS.

Findings by the trial court on material issues need not follow the pleadings; but, if the truth or falsity of each material allegation not admitted can be demonstrated from the findings, they are sufficient under the Code.

4. TRIAL ⇨397(5)—THERE NEED BE NO SPECIFIC FINDINGS ON ALLEGATIONS IN THE ANSWER WHICH WERE UNNECESSARY.

Where the answer was sufficient without averments of affirmative matter, the findings which otherwise disposed of the issues are sufficient, though they did not dispose of the affirmative matter.

5. TRIAL ⇨404(5)—ULTIMATE FINDING OF FACT THAT DEFENDANT WAS NOT INDEBTED TO PLAINTIFF HELD TO DISPOSE OF ENTIRE CONTROVERSY.

The ultimate finding, in an action on quantum meruit for money had and received, that defendant was not indebted to plaintiff, held to dispose of the entire controversy and to conclude the same.

6. TRIAL ⇨404(3)—FINDINGS SHOULD BE CONSTRUED TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT.

The finding of an ultimate fact should be construed to support the judgment, and facts necessary to support the judgment should be inferred from the ultimate finding when such inference is warranted.

7. BROKERS ⇨34—BROKER IN PARTICULAR TRANSACTION DOES NOT OCCUPY CONFIDENTIAL RELATION AND OWE TO CLIENT THE DUTIES OF AN AGENT WITH RESPECT TO TRANSACTION OUTSIDE BROKERAGE TRANSACTION.

The fact that defendant was plaintiff's broker in stock and grain transactions did not create any confidential relation or relation of agency which would require the broker to disclose to plaintiff, to whom he sold a half interest in a mining claim, the amount which he paid therefor, and hence the failure of the broker to disclose that fact would not give rise to an action.

8. PLEADING ⇨236(7)—DENIAL OF PLAINTIFF'S REQUEST TO FILE AN AMENDMENT IN AN ACTION FOR MONEY HAD HELD NOT ERROR.

In an action by plaintiff, who claimed that defendant, occupying confidential relation, misrepresented to him the amount for which a mining claim could be purchased, and that defendant was bound to account for the excess received, held, that it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse to allow plaintiff at the conclusion of the trial to set forth an amendment inconsistent with the original complaint which raised new and distinct issues.

9. SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM ⇨29(2)—DEFENDANT, IN ACTION FOR MONEY HAD ARISING OUT OF SALE OF INTEREST IN MINING CLAIM, MAY COUNTERCLAIM FOR AMOUNT FOR WHICH PLAINTIFF WAS LIABLE AS STOCKHOLDER IN MINING CORPORATION TO WHICH THE MINE WAS TRANSFERRED.

In an action by plaintiff who acquired a half interest in a mining claim from defendant, and who asserted that defendant misrepresented the price at which the mining claim could be acquired, held, that defendant could, under Code Civ. Proc. § 438, recover by way of cross-complaint an amount due from plaintiff on account of plaintiff's ownership of stock of a mining corporation to which the two had transferred the mining claim; the counterclaim arising out of the same transaction.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨931(9)—NO PRESUMPTION ON APPEAL THAT FINDINGS OF FACT WERE WAIVED UNLESS THERE ARE NO FINDINGS SHOWN.

An assumption that findings of fact were waived as to matters claimed not to be covered by the findings of fact actually made and filed cannot be indulged in, there being no such presumption except in the absence of any purported findings.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Albert E. Tower against J. C. Wilson, in which F. J. Solinsky, as trustee in bankruptcy of the defendant, was permitted to intervene. Thereafter the defendant died, and Mabel C. Wilson, his administratrix, was substituted as defendant. From a judgment against plaintiff and in favor of the intervenor, who filed a counterclaim, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, A. L. Shinn, of San Diego, and U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robt. B. Gaylord and Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, all of San Francisco, for respondent Solinsky.

Metson, Drew & Mackenzie, W. H. Metson, and Samuel M. Shortridge, all of San Francisco, for defendant John C. Wilson.

WASTE, P. J. This is an action brought to recover the sum of $148,750, the difference between the sum of $175,000 plaintiff paid for a one-half interest in certain mining property, and one-half of the amount alleged to have been the actual price of the same, and claimed to be a secret profit, made by J. C. Wilson, confidential agent of plaintiff, in the purchase of a mine to be operated as a joint adventure. After the trial, and before judgment, defendant John C. Wilson was duly adjudged a bankrupt, and F. J. Solinsky, as trustee of said bankrupt, was permitted to intervene in the action. Wilson thereafter died, and Mabel C. Wilson, administratrix of his last will and testament, was substituted as defendant in the action in the place and stead of her deceased husband. Judgment was thereafter entered that plaintiff take nothing by the action, and that F. J. Solinsky, as such trustee, have and recover from plaintiff upon a counterclaim, based upon a stockholder's liability, established to the satisfaction of the court, the sum of $32,718.57, together with interest and costs. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The original complaint filed in the action was in assumpsit to recover the sum of $142,500, money had and received by said John C. Wilson, for the use and benefit of plaintiff. Prior to the trial plaintiff filed his third amended complaint, containing two causes of action. The first count, following the original complaint, is in assumpsit, to recover the sum of $148,750, together with interest, for and on account of money had and received. In the second count it is alleged that during the month of February, 1909, said John C. Wilson was employed by plaintiff as, and became, his general agent and broker; that Wilson, as such agent and broker of plaintiff, transacted a large amount of business for plaintiff, buying and selling shares of capital stock of various corporations listed upon the New York stock exchange; that the relations existing between plaintiff and Wilson were close, intimate, and confidential; and that at all of said times plaintiff had and reposed in him great trust and confidence, and acted and relied upon his advice without seeking or obtaining any independent counsel; that, during the month of November, 1909, Wilson represented to plaintiff that there was a valuable mine, located in Mariposa county, for sale, and which could be purchased for $350,000; that Wilson proposed and advised that plaintiff and he purchase said mine for their joint use and benefit, for the said sum, each to pay one-half of the purchase price, the mine, when bought, to be conveyed to a corporation, to be organized, the capital stock of which would be equally divided between plaintiff and Wilson; that plaintiff, believing in, and relying upon, the said representations made by Wilson, and having confidence in him, made no independent investigation for the purpose of ascertaining the truth, or falsity, thereof, agreed to the said proposal; that the representations were false and untrue, and so known to defendant Wilson in that he knew said mine could be purchased by him for a sum not exceeding the sum of $60,000; that plaintiff paid defendant the sum of $175,000, one-half of the alleged purchase price of the said mine, to enable Wilson to purchase the mine after adding thereto a like amount; that Wilson thereupon purchased the mine, paying therefor the sum of $52,500 only, which sum he paid out of the $175,000 paid by the plaintiff, and no part of the purchase price of the mine was actually paid by Wilson.

Upon the trial, by leave of the court, amendments to the third amended complaint were filed by plaintiff, in which it is alleged that at the time the representations were made, and thereafter, Wilson concealed from plaintiff the fact that the said property could have been purchased for the sum of $52,500. The amendment also sets forth that it was not until June 1, 1912, that he learned that Wilson had purchased the property for less than $350,000. In the answer filed by Wilson, all material averments contained therein were specifically denied. As an affirmative defense it was alleged that Wilson was the holder of a duly executed and recorded agreement for the purchase of the mine, in possession of the property, developing and working the same, that prior to the 1st day of December, 1909, he had expended large sums of money in development of the mine, which, "as defendant believed," was of the value of $350,000 and upwards; that he offered to sell plaintiff one-half interest in the mine for the sum of $175,000, and was informed, and believed, that plaintiff had made his own investigation of the value of the mine, and as to the desirability of his purchasing a one-half interest therein; that he (Wilson) made no representations to plaintiff, which were not wholly true, and which he did not himself believe to be true; that he informed plaintiff of the existence of his option to purchase the mine, and that plaintiff, being fully advised, "voluntarily accepted defendant's proposition."

By way of counterclaim against plaintiff, Wilson also alleged the incorporation of the Oro Rico Mines Company, the issuance of 1,500,025 shares, the ownership of 750,005 shares by plaintiff; that said corporation became indebted to Wilson in the sum of $90,059.61 of moneys theretofore expended for the use and benefit of the corporation, no part of which had been paid; and that, by reason of plaintiff's stockholder's liability, he was indebted to Wilson in the sum of $45,429.34.

The uncontradicted facts are that defendant was engaged in the general stock and bond business in San Francisco. Acting as his manager, and in charge of his business, was B. A. Wilbrand, who had full authority from defendant Wilson to deal with the patrons and clients of the brokerage business to the same extent as his principal. Plaintiff, before coming to San Francisco, was president of a corporation engaged in the business of mining iron ore, connected with another company engaged in extracting the ore from the mine just referred to, and with a railroad related to the other two corporations. Prior to leaving New York, he appears to have dealt extensively in securities listed on the New York stock exchange. He came to San Francisco with a letter of introduction, from an eastern stock-broking firm, to Wilson, which he presented to Wilbrand soon after his arrival. Shortly thereafter, he met Wilson, and took up the matter of investment in stocks, becoming a constant visitor at Wilson's office, where he was in frequent consultation with Wilson and Wilbrand, being supplied with special information by them. Within a short time he opened an account with Wilson. Plaintiff's relations with Wilson gradually became more friendly, and, within a short time, he did all his business, soon amounting to a large sum, with Wilson's office directly. Wilson bought and sold stocks and securities, and in the grain market, being limited only by the condition of Tower's general account, basing his dealings upon his own judgment, and without advice from plaintiff.

Further undisputed facts are that Wilson was the owner of an agreement, or option, duly recorded in Mariposa county, where the property was located, for the purchase of a mine from A. H. Ward, for the sum of $60,000, with the right to enter upon and develop the property, which he had done. It consisted of some nine claims on the "mother lode." He had paid nothing for the option, but had loaned the owner of the mine $2,500, evidenced by a promissory note, and secured by a mortgage covering an undivided three-quarters interest in the property. As the final outcome of the deal between the plaintiff and Wilson, in December of 1909, plaintiff signed, and delivered to Wilson, his promissory note for $175,000. Wilson and wife thereupon executed to plaintiff a deed for an undivided one-half of the mining property. Wilson transferred, from plaintiff's account with himself, the sum of $25,000, which he credited on the note. He paid Ward $25,000 in cash, returned to him the note for $2,500, and gave him his own note for $25,000, making in all a payment of $52,500, the total amount paid, in consideration for which Wilson received a deed to the mining claims. In April following, a corporation, the Oro Rico Mines Company, of which plaintiff was one of the incorporators, and of which he became president, was formed to take over the property. Of its 2,000,000 shares of capital stock, a certificate for 1,500,000 shares was issued to Wilson, the consideration being the title to the mining property, which Wilson thereupon conveyed to the corporation. This certificate was canceled and two certificates in lieu thereof were issued, one for 750,000 shares was delivered to plaintiff, and one for a like number to Wilson. The corporation took over the operation of the mining property theretofore carried on by Wilson. He had already advanced $7,446.36 in that work, which the company agreed to repay. Both plaintiff and Wilson thereafter advanced large sums to the corporation, to enable it to carry on the mine. The excess of the amount advanced by Wilson for that purpose, over the sum contributed by plaintiff, formed the basis of the counterclaim set up by Wilson in this action, on which the judgment was granted to his trustee in bankruptcy.

The details of the transaction, which culminated in the execution and delivery of the note for $175,000 to Wilson, are sharply conflicting. According to the testimony of the plaintiff, in November, 1909, Wilson broached the project and informed him that he knew where they "could get" a mine, located in Mariposa county, out of which, if they could get it, they could make a lot of money; that "they would go half and half," the sum of $175,000 to be contributed by each. Plaintiff suggested the price was large, whereupon Wilson explained that he could take his time in paying for it, and that, if plaintiff would go in on the deal, he (Wilson) would furnish the money, and finance it for the running of the mine. He referred to certain securities owned by plaintiff on which he could realize a profit and pay for the mine. He did not tell plaintiff at any time that he had an option on the property, or that he had any interest therein. Plaintiff was having domestic troubles, and did not wish to own real property. Wilson suggested that a corporation be formed, and the mine be conveyed to it, each to own one-half of the stock. Plaintiff, so he further testified, made no independent investigation, or inquiry, concerning any matter connected with the deal. He had confidence in Wilson, trusted him in all matters of business, believed his statements concerning the mine, and relied wholly upon the representations made by him, believing them to be true. He finally decided to accept the offer, and told Wilson "to go ahead." He did not search the title to the property, or examine any abstract, until 2½ years later, just before the present action was begun. He claims to have had no knowledge of the Ward option, or of the price paid by Wilson for the mine until about that time.

According to the testimony of Wilson, corroborated in part by his manager, Wilbrand, it was plaintiff who opened the negotiations relative to the purchase of the mine, stating that Wilbrand had told him about it. After going into the matter thoroughly, plaintiff asked, "What is the proposition?" Wilson offered to sell him a one-half interest in the property for $175,000. Wilson's further testimony is that on plaintiff's saying, "You are making an awful lot of money out of this," he told Tower that he thought the property was worth $500,000. "I believed it was the big thing at that time," he testified, "and I believed that Mr. Tower was going to make a great deal of money out of it. I told him that if he went into the mine with me and bought that property, and developed the property, both of us would make a great deal of money." Wilson further testified that he fully explained all the details of the matter to plaintiff, including his option, and told him he was already in possession of, and developing the property, giving the name of the mining engineer in charge, and also referring plaintiff to others for information. He denied ever stating that the mine could be purchased for $350,000, but claimed that the offer was always to "sell" a half interest in it for $175,000. Wilson also testified that diagrams, tabulated statements, indicating the interest of Ward in the mine, were produced by him and examined by plaintiff. According to his testimony, also, when the organization meeting of the Oro Rico Mines Company was held, the plaintiff was present. The Ward option, an abstract of the property, the deeds from Ward to Wilson, Wilson to Tower, Tower to Wilson, and Wilson and wife to the mining company, were all produced and commented upon by the attorney conducting the meeting. That plaintiff had knowledge of the option is borne out by the evidence of Wilson's manager, Wilbrand, who testified that he informed Tower of all the details of the matter, including the price at which Wilson could purchase the mine. In passing, it may be said, the trial court did not appear to have put very much reliance upon this witness' testimony.

[1] Much of appellant's argument rests upon the assumption that the facts were as contended for by him, and that it was error for the trial court to find otherwise. This court is not in position to now determine that question. Without going into detailed discussion of many matters appearing in the record, which no doubt appealed to the trial court with persuasive force, suffice it to say that the very brief epitome of the long record we have included in our statement of the facts presents, in the main, the conflicting testimony of the parties in relation to the real matter at issue. If there are discrepancies, inconsistencies, and improbabilities in the evidence, these were matters for the trial court to pass upon in connection with its consideration of the entire testimony in the case. Blanc v. Connor, 167 Cal. 719, 723, 141 Pac. 217. An appellate court will not disturb findings based upon evidence wherein, as here, there is a substantial conflict. Reynolds v. Jackson, 25 Cal. App. 490, 144 Pac. 305; Ryder v. Bamberger, 172 Cal. 791, 799, 158 Pac. 753. As the trial court accepted Wilson's testimony as the correct statement of the issue, the findings are consistent with the facts, and find ample support in the evidence.

[2] A further contention of the appellant is that the court failed to make its findings upon material issues. The plaintiff first states his cause of action as a quantum meruit, the specific allegation being that Wilson "was indebted to plaintiff * * * for and on account of so much money had and received * * * for the use and benefit of plaintiff." The second count, as shown in our former reference to it, is nothing more than a specific rehearsal of the probative facts relied upon to support the cause of action. Appellant so states in his opening brief. There is no allegation that plaintiff has been in any way damaged by these acts. If the interest in the mining property sold to plaintiff by Wilson be of less value than plaintiff paid for it, the fact is not stated. We are not permitted, therefore, to regard the second cause of action as one of damages for fraud. Holton v. Noble, 83 Cal. 7, 8, 23 Pac. 58; Wainwright v. Weske, 82 Cal. 193, 196, 23 Pac. 12. Plaintiff is seeking a return of the money he claims Wilson unlawfully obtained from him. His second cause of action seems to rest upon the implied contract, upon the part of Wilson to repay the difference between the $175,000 received by him, and one-half of the amount he paid Ward as the purchase price of the mine, which sum he is alleged to have inequitably received, and a demand for the return of which, plaintiff avers, has been made and refused. It comes squarely within the definition of an action for money had and received. London, etc., Fire Ins. Co. v. Liebes, 105 Cal. 203, 207, 38 Pac. 691. It is obvious, we think, that these counts relate to the same matter, and are an attempt to declare upon an alleged liability growing out of the same transaction. We are therefore of the opinion that the findings are sufficient, and when properly construed will be found to dispose of every material issue in the case.

[3] It is not necessary that the findings of the court on material issues shall follow the pleadings. If the findings, taken together, are such that the court can say the ultimate facts necessarily result therefrom, they are sufficient. If the truth or falsity of each material allegation not admitted can be demonstrated from the findings, the requirements of the Code, relating to such matters, are met. Millard v. Legion of Honor, 81 Cal. 340, 342, 22 Pac. 864; Mott v. Ewing, 90 Cal. 231, 235, 27 Pac. 194. In another case in which "the cause of action was single, but was stated in different forms in the complaint: First, for money loaned; second, for money had and received; and the third count set out a contract in writing," what was done under it, and an agreement "to repay to plaintiff all moneys he had advanced or paid * * * under the contract," the Supreme Court said:

"Appellant * * * specifies that the issues under the first and second counts were not found upon by the court. These counts were upon the same cause of action as the third, and it so appeared upon the face of the complaint. As they rested upon the same facts, the facts found include them." Haines v. Stilwell, 5 Cal. Unrep. 27, 30, 40 Pac. 332, 333.

See, also, Leeke v. Hancock, 76 Cal. 127, 130, 17 Pac. 937.

[4-6] Appellant particularly complains that the court failed to specifically find upon the issues of confidential relationship between Tower and Wilson, the volume and character of the business transacted by Wilson as Tower's agent, the confidence and trust reposed in Wilson by Tower, his acting without seeking independent advice, his failing to make an investigation as to the proposed mining venture, and as to the alleged concealment and suppression of facts relating to the actual purchase of the mine from Ward. He complains also that the court did not find specifically upon certain affirmative allegations of the answer. Those allegations followed and their effect was but to emphasize the denials of the answer. The answer was sufficient without the affirmative matter. It was not necessary that there should be specific findings on such allegations. Needham v. Chandler, 8 Cal. App. 124, 127, 96 Pac. 325; Murphy v. Bennett, 68 Cal. 528, 531, 9 Pac. 738. The trial court did find, however, that Wilson was "not indebted to plaintiff in the sum of $148,750, or any other sum, for or on account of so much money had or received * * * from plaintiff for the use, or benefit, of plaintiff, or at all." This was a finding upon the ultimate fact, the amount, if anything, due from defendant to plaintiff (Jacobs v. Ludemann, 137 Cal. 176, 182, 69 Pac. 965), and, we think, necessarily included the whole controversy (Southern California Ry. Co. v. Slauson, 6 Cal. Unrep. 874, 876, 68 Pac. 107). See, also, Jessen v. Peterson, Nelson & Co., 18 Cal. App. 349, 352, 123 Pac. 219. It must receive such construction as will uphold, rather than defeat, the judgment predicated thereon. Whenever, from facts found, other facts may be inferred which will support the judgment, such inference will be deemed to have been made by the trial court. Its failure to find from the evidence the facts deemed by appellant to be essential to a recovery by him, as well as its own construction of the findings which it had made, by rendering judgment in favor of the defendants, must be regarded as its own conclusion that the evidence was insufficient to justify such findings as would authorize a decision in favor of plaintiff. Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 77, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257; Lomita L. & W. Co. v. Robinson, 154 Cal. 36, 40, 97 Pac. 10, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1106. In other words, the court having found the ultimate fact in favor of the defendants, in effect finds and concludes that the contra probative facts alleged by plaintiff are untrue. In addition to the finding quoted, the court did find with great particularity that the transaction between plaintiff and Wilson was not as alleged, and testified to by plaintiff. The findings also recite that Wilson did not represent that there was a mine which could be purchased for $350,000, or any sum, and never proposed to Tower that they two acquire the property for their joint use or benefit, or that each should pay one-half of the purchase price; the mine when acquired to be conveyed to a corporation and operated by them jointly through the company. The court also found specifically that Wilson paid the whole of the purchase price of the mine with his own money, and upon his purchase of the same on his own account. From the evidence in the record, from the judgment ordered, and from the facts found, it is evident that if more complete findings had been made they would have been adverse to appellant. In such case the failure to find is not a ground for the reversal of the judgment. Krasky v. Wollpert, 134 Cal. 338, 342, 66 Pac. 309. This, we think, disposes of all the questions suggested by the appellant as to the lack of findings.

Aside from the foregoing conclusions, which we think are of compelling force, respondent calls our attention to the fact that there is nothing in the record affirmatively indicating or showing that the appellant did not waive findings. Therefore, absence of findings is not a fatal defect, and the judgment is supported even in the absence thereof. Richardson v. City of Eureka, 110 Cal. 441, 446, 42 Pac. 965; Baker v. Baker, 139 Cal. 626, 627, 73 Pac. 469; Ladd v. Myers, 4 Cal. App. 352, 353, 87 Pac. 1110.

[7] The only logical inferences which may be drawn from the findings, and, as we said before, there is evidence, if accepted by the court, to support them, are that Tower knew that Wilson had the option on the mine, and that Wilson was guilty of no concealment, misrepresentation, or violation of confidence in the matter and that Tower did not rely absolutely upon Wilson in the matter of the mine deal. Each was therefore in a position to form an independent judgment concerning the transaction. The fact that Wilson was Tower's broker in the stock and grain deals did not raise any agency or confidential relation concerning the sale of the mine. In negotiating concerning that property, the two stood on equal terms, and neither owed the other any special duty of a fiduciary nature. Hallidie v. First Federal Trust Co., 177 Cal. 600, 604, 171 Pac. 431. This being so, it was no breach of faith for him to sell Tower a one-half interest in the mining property, no matter what it may have originally cost, provided, and the court's findings so imply, there was no fraud or deceit in the matter. Wilson, under such circumstances, was not bound to disclose the profit which he was making in the transaction. Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90, 97, 35 Pac. 444.

[8] At the conclusion of the trial, the court announced its views as to how the case should be decided, and directed counsel for the defendants to prepare findings. The appellant thereupon sought to amend his third amended complaint by adding thereto a third count, which he styled a "further, separate and distinct cause of action." The court denied the application for leave to amend. In the proposed amendment it was, in substance, averred that Wilson, owning the Ward option and in possession of the property, induced plaintiff to purchase a one-half interest in the mine, which he represented to be worth over a million dollars, for $175,000, without disclosing the amount Wilson had paid, or would pay, for the property, and for the purpose of making a large profit out of the transaction. There was no error in the ruling. It was within the discretion of the court to refuse to allow the filing of the proposed amendment, presented as it was at the conclusion of the trial. The matter set forth in the proposed amendment was inconsistent with the averments of the original complaint, as finally amended, and with the testimony of the plaintiff given at the trial. Furthermore, it raised new and distinct issues, requiring an answer from the defendant, and which could have been asserted under the first cause of action of the original complaint. The plaintiff was therefore not injured. There was no abuse of discretion in refusing plaintiff permission to amend as to the matters set forth. Williams v. Youtz, 178 Cal. 107, 172 Pac. 383; Bowman v. Wohlke, 166 Cal. 121, 128, 135 Pac. 37, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1011.

[9] Appellant's further contention is that the court was not warranted in awarding judgment on Wilson's counterclaim. He asserts that the basis of the claim—Tower's liability as a stockholder in the corporation owning and operating the mine—was not connected with the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action as required by the first subdivision of section 438 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This provision is to be construed as permitting matters growing out of the same transaction, which may constitute an independent cause of action, to be set up by way of counterclaim.

"Every transaction is more or less complex, consisting of various facts and acts done by the respective parties, and it frequently happens that one or more of these acts would, if viewed by itself, be such a violation of duty as to give to the other a right of action, but the obligation thus created may be so counterbalanced by other matters growing out of the same transaction that no compensation ought to be made therefor. While the parties are carrying their agreement into execution, and mutual rights and obligations accrue by reason of the failure of either or both of them to comply strictly with its terms, neither party should have the right, so long as the agreement is in force and is in process of execution, to recover the damage sustained by him from any breach of duty by the other, without at the same time satisfying any obligation against himself growing out of the same affair. In such a case the rights of the one are so dependent upon the rights of the other, that simple equity requires that the respective causes of action in behalf of each should be adjusted in a single suit." Story & Isham C. Co. v. Story, 100 Cal. 30, 35, 34 Pac. 671, 673.

Under the theory of either plaintiff or defendant, the interposition of the counterclaim by the defendant was proper. The money advanced by plaintiff, and by defendant, to carry on the mine, was contributed under and as part of the original agreement for the purchase of the property, whatever that agreement may have been, and which forms the basis of plaintiff's action to recover from defendant. Plaintiff seeks to get back from Wilson, on one theory, part of the purchase price paid for his interest in the mine, and through another relation to recover an alleged secret profit, both claims being based on an alleged agreement, between the two parties, to acquire the property and to carry it on as a joint venture through the instrumentality of the corporation formed for the purpose. While carrying their agreement into execution, mutual rights and obligations accrued, through the advancement by each of them, of large sums of money for the use and benefit of the corporation, to which that project was committed. Whether the Oro Rico Mines Company was a mere agency, or a naked trustee, charged with carrying out the agreement, as appellant insists, we are unable to perceive how the liability of the stockholders for any indebtedness incurred by it would differ from that legally imposed upon stockholders in ordinary cases. None of the cases cited by appellant indicates that it does. They merely go to the point of holding that, as between the original incorporators, the corporation is a trustee, and the court will dispose of its assets in accordance with the original agreement made between them; they, to that extent, some of the cases holding, being regarded as partners in the concern.

Tower recognized the fact, and proceeded on the theory that the interests of himself and Wilson were represented and measured by the ownership of the stock in the corporation after it was formed. His testimony establishes that very clearly. He testified that, when Wilson and he were seeking to adjust their affairs in 1912, it was on the basis of Wilson's "stockholder's proportion of the advances made by me." We feel that it needs no further discussion on our part to demonstrate that the counterclaim was properly entertained by the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1, is denied.

[10] We desire to say, however, that we do not concur in that portion of the opinion which seems to hold that it may be assumed that findings of fact were waived as to matters claimed to be not covered by the findings of fact actually made and filed. Such an assumption has never been indulged in except in the absence of any purported findings. This portion of the opinion is not in any way essential to a decision.

All concur.

HINES, Director General of Railroads, v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (S. F. 9384.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 4, 1920.)

MASTER AND SERVANT ~~§~~382—COMPENSATION RECOVERABLE NOTWITHSTANDING AGREEMENT RELEASING EMPLOYER.

Employé was entitled to compensation for inguinal hernia sustained during course of employment, under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917, notwithstanding his agreement, made at time of employment, releasing employer from any claims arising on account of hernia, the existence of which then appeared as the result of a physical examination; such an agreement being ineffectual, under section 27a, to exempt employer from liability for compensation fixed by the act.

In Bank.

Proceedings under Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917, for compensation by Desiderio Dell 'Era, opposed by Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads, United States Railroad Administration (Southern Pacific Railroad), employer. Award of compensation by Industrial Accident Commission, and employer applies for certiorari. Application denied.

The following is the agreement referred to in the opinion:

Having submitted myself to an examination by an examining physician of the Southern Pacific Company, with a view of entering the service of that company, it has been found that I have a congenital defect, viz.: lax inguinal rings. I have been fully advised and informed concerning such condition, and it has been explained to me that because of such congenital defect, a protrusion of the abdominal contents, commonly known as rupture or hernia, may take place at any time and due wholly to said congenital defect. Realizing this and in consideration of my employment by the Southern Pacific Company I hereby agree to hold the said company blameless in event of said rupture or hernia so appearing, and that I will not apply to said company or its hospital department during my term of service for any operation or treatment therefor; and for the consideration herein above expressed I do hereby release the Southern Pacific Company from any and all claims that may arise on account of rupture or hernia so appearing while in its service.

It is further understood and agreed that I am not entitled to hospital benefits for the following further disability from which I am now suffering, to wit: Chronic affection of tonsils.

It is further understood and agreed that I am entitled to and will be given hospital benefits for all other disabilities than those I am now subject to, in accordance with the rules and regulations of the hospital department of the said company.

Henly C. Booth, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. We are satisfied that, in view of the provisions of section 27a of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 855), petitioner cannot avail himself of the agreement relied on.

The application for a writ of review is denied.

Where petition invoking original jurisdiction of appellate court for writ of mandate to compel city clerk to receive and file nominating petition shows on its face that the jurisdiction of the superior court was similarly invoked in a mandamus proceeding between the same parties and involving the same subject-matter, and that superior court denied peremptory writ, the prior proceeding in the superior court is a matter for abatement of proceeding in appellate court.

2. MANDAMUS ⇐141—APPELLATE COURT AND SUPERIOR COURT HAVE CONCURRENT JURISDICTION.

The appellate court and the superior court have concurrent jurisdiction to grant an original application for mandate.

3. JUDGMENT ⇐713(1) — MATTER ADJUDICATED NOT OPEN TO INQUIRY IN SUBSEQUENT ACTION.

When a court of competent jurisdiction has adjudicated directly upon a particular matter, the same point is not open to inquiry in a subsequent action for the same cause and between the same parties.

4. MANDAMUS ⇐178—DECISION OF SUPERIOR COURT WITHIN ITS JURISDICTION CONCLUSIVE EXCEPT ON APPEAL.

Where petitioners petitioned superior court for writ of mandate to compel city clerk to receive and file nominating petitions they must abide by its decision unless decision is reversed on appeal.

5. MANDAMUS ⇐9—FINAL JUDGMENT OF LOWER COURT IS A BAR TO APPLICATION IN APPELLATE COURT.

In proceedings in appellate court for writ of mandate to compel city clerk to receive and file nominating petitions, the pendency of a prior proceeding between the same parties involving the same subject-matter in the superior court is a good defense by way of a plea in abatement, and when the judgment of the superior court becomes final, it may be pleaded in bar of a similar proceeding in appellate court between the same parties.

Petition by Sol Cohn and others for a writ of mandate to be directed against Edwin Isensee, City Clerk of the City of San Buenaventura. Writ denied.

Walter E. Barry, of Ventura, for petitioners.

H. F. Orr, of Ventura, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Petitioners, invoking the original jurisdiction of this court, have petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, the city clerk of the city of San Buenaventura, to receive and file the nominating petition of each of four electors of the city—upon whose behalf the petition for the writ is presented—whereby each of the four is nominated for election to the office of city trustee, to be voted for at a special recall election to be held January 27, 1920.

[1] Respondent demurs to the petition upon the ground that it appears on the face thereof that a final judgment has been entered in the same matter by the superior court in and for Ventura county.

It appears from the petition that on January 8, 1920, the jurisdiction of the superior court for Ventura county was similarly invoked in a mandamus proceeding between the same parties and involving the same subject-matter, that the superior court issued an alternative writ returnable before it January 12, 1920, and that on that day the court, after due hearing, gave judgment for the respondent and denied the peremptory writ. Notwithstanding the petition filed in this court discloses this prior adjudication by the superior court, we directed the issuance of the alternative writ of mandate, returnable before us on this 19th day of January, 1920, upon the theory that, while an appeal from the judgment of the superior court would afford a plain remedy, the remedy by appeal is neither speedy nor adequate, since, in the nature of things, the appeal could not be decided until long after the date set for the recall election. Upon more deliberate consideration, we are convinced that the prior proceeding in the superior court is matter for abatement of the original proceeding before us.

[2, 3] This court and the superior court have co-ordinate or concurrent jurisdiction to grant an original application for mandate. When a court of competent jurisdiction has adjudicated directly upon a particular matter, the same point is not open to inquiry in a subsequent action for the same cause and between the same parties. The doctrine of estoppel by judgment does not rest upon any superior authority of the court rendering the judgment. Indeed, in the issuance of writs of mandamus, this court and the superior court are peers. Unless reversed on appeal, the judgment of the superior court, when final, is a conclusive determination of the rights of the respective parties to the proceeding. It is an adjudication by a competent tribunal, and not an adjudication by every competent tribunal, to which the petitioner for a writ of mandate is entitled. It does not accord with the orderly administration of the law to allow an application for mandamus to be made to the superior court, and, failing there, to this court, and, mayhap, to the Supreme Court, should the petitioner fail here.

[4, 5] Having elected to submit the issue to the superior court petitioners must abide by the judgment of that tribunal unless and until it be reversed on appeal. The superior court having adjudicated the merits of the application, that adjudication is as conclusive upon this court, except on appeal, as upon another superior court. The pendency of the prior proceeding in the superior court is good defense by way of a plea in abatement, and, when the judgment of the superior court becomes final, it may be pleaded in bar of a similar proceeding here between the same parties. *Santa Cruz Gap T. The demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the writ denied.

COHN et al. v. ISENSEE, City Clerk.
(Civ. 3281.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California. Jan. 23,
1920.)

1. STATUTES $\S$ 225½—SPECIAL LAW DOES NOT EXCLUDE GENERAL LAW NOT ANTAGONISTIC.

Though it is a general rule that a special controls a general statute without regard to their respective dates, still it is not always or necessarily true that a special law entirely excludes from its field of operations the provisions of a general law, where the two can occupy the same domain without any inherent antagonism.

2. ELECTIONS $\S$ 170—BLANK SPACES MUST BE LEFT IN CITY RECALL ELECTION BALLOTS.

It was the intention of the Legislature that the requirement of Pol. Code, §§ 1196, 1197, requiring blank spaces to be left on ballots wherein the voter may write the names of the candidates of his choice, should apply to recall elections in cities under the Recall Act of January 2, 1912, just as in the case of every other election of public officers.

3. STATUTES $\S$ 225—CONSISTENT STATUTES RELATED TO SAME SUBJECT CONSTRUED TOGETHER.

All consistent statutes which can stand together, if related to the same subject, shall be construed together, and with reference to the whole system of which they form a part, and shall be harmonized and effect given to all, if this can consistently be done, so as to make the law consistent in all its parts and uniform in its application and results.

4. STATUTES $\S$ 181(1)—PURPOSE OF CONSTRUCTION IS TO ASCERTAIN INTENT.

The purpose of all rules of construction of statutes is to ascertain, if possible, the intention of the Legislature; for it is the legislative intent that must control.

5. ELECTIONS $\S$ 163—BALLOTS NOT FURNISHED BY STATE AT RECALL ELECTION INVALID.

All ballots to be used at city recall elections under St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128, must be printed and furnished at the public expense just as at all other elections, and the use of any ballot other than such as may be furnished by the state is absolutely prohibited, in view of Pol. Code, §§ 1196, 1197.

6. ELECTIONS $\S$ 21—LEGISLATURE CANNOT RESTRICT ELECTORS TO PERSONS WHOSE NAMES ARE ON BALLOTS.

In view of Const. art. 2, § 1, it is not within the power of the Legislature to pass enactments restricting electors in their choice of candidates, or prohibiting them from voting for persons whose names are not printed on the ballots.

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW $\S$ 48—CONSTRUCTION SHOULD BE IN FAVOR OF CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Where a statute is fairly susceptible of a construction that makes it harmonize with the Constitution and comport with the legitimate powers of the Legislature, that is the construction which it should receive.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 154—OFFICER RECALLED AT ELECTION NOT REMOVED UNTIL QUALIFICATION OF SUCCESSOR.

A city officer is not removed from office by a vote of a majority of the voters for his recall, where no votes are cast for a successor; there being no vacancy in office unless a successor is voted for and fails to qualify, under St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 130.

Petition by Sol Cohn and Ralph W. Cummings for a writ of mandate to compel Edwin Isensee, City Clerk of the City of San Buenaventura, to provide for the use of voters official ballots with blank spaces. Writ granted.

Walter E. Barry, of Ventura, for petitioners.

H. F. Orr, of Ventura, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an original petition for a writ of mandate to compel respondent, as the city clerk of the city of San Buenaventura, to provide for the use of the voters at a recall election, to be held in that city on the 27th day of this month, official ballots with blank spaces wherein the voter may write the names of persons whose names are not printed on the ballot.

It appears from the petition, to which a general demurrer has been interposed, that, following the filing of a recall petition, signed by the necessary number of qualified electors and petitioning for the recall of two of the city trustees, the city's board of trustees fixed January 27, 1920, as the date for holding the recall election; that sample ballots have been provided by respondent; that there is no blank space on any of the sample ballots wherein the electors may write in the names of candidates; and that respondent refuses to provide, for use at the recall election, official ballots having thereon any such blank space or spaces. Attached to the petition is one of the sample ballots. From this sample ballot it appears that there is no name thereon other than the names of the two incumbent officers sought to be recalled, and that, by instructions printed on the ballot, the electors are instructed to vote on the question of recall by stamping a cross in the voting square after the word "Yes" or the word "No." There does not appear on the ballot the name of any person nominated as a candidate to succeed either of the two incumbents whose removal is to be voted upon at the recall election. This, we were informed by counsel at the argument, is because the petitions that were signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, nominating candidates for election to succeed the incumbents, were not filed by respondent for the reason that, as he claimed, there were certain fatal defects in a matter of procedure. See case No. 3278, 188 Pac. 278, decided by this court January 19, 1920.

The matter now presented to us involves the question whether certain provisions of sections 1196 and 1197 of the Political Code—provisions that require the official ballots for every election of public officers to have thereon a blank space or spaces to permit the electors to write in the names of persons whose names are not printed on the ballot—are applicable to elections for the recall of elective officers in incorporated cities and towns held under the act entitled "An act to provide for the recall of elective officers of incorporated cities and towns," approved January 2, 1912. Stats. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128.

No question relating to remedy or parties is made. Petitioners and respondent both seek a decision on the merits of the only question presented, namely, the construction of the act for the recall of city and town elective officers. The importance of the question would justify a most painstaking examination of the grounds of our conclusion, but the necessity for a speedy decision, in order to afford a sufficient opportunity to print the ballots before the election on the 27th instant, precludes that mature deliberation which the question deserves; only yesterday was the petition for the writ filed in this court.

The act to provide for the recall of elective officers for incorporated cities and towns and the two Political Code sections in question are in pari materia. One statute (the Code) deals with the general subject of elections in comprehensive terms; the other (the recall act) deals with but a part of the general subject of elections, but deals with that part in a minute and definite way.

In determining the question with which we are confronted—the proper construction to be placed upon the act for the recall of elective officers of incorporated cities and towns—we are not embarrassed by any possible conflict between the comprehensive scheme for recall elections provided by the Constitution itself, where the person sought to be recalled is a state officer, and a general law of the Legislature. (See article 23 of the Constitution for the scheme provided thereby for the recall of an elective public officer of the state.) The Legislature, by this same article of the Constitution, is expressly empowered to enact laws prescribing the procedure for the recall of elective officers of cities and towns. The language of the organic law is:

"The recall shall also be exercised by the electors of each county, city and county, city and town of the state, with reference to the elective officers thereof, under such procedure as shall be provided by law."

It was pursuant to this authorization that the Legislature, at its special session held shortly after article 23 was adopted, passed the act of January 2, 1912, providing for the recall of elective officers of incorporated cities and towns.

The act for the recall of elective city and town officers provides a comprehensive scheme of recall election. As a part of that scheme, the act describes what shall be printed on the recall ballot. It does not, however, expressly declare, as do sections 1196 and 1197 of the Political Code, that the ballots shall be printed with blank spaces to allow the voter to write in names not printed on the ballot. So far as pertinent, the language of the recall act is:

"There shall be printed on the recall ballot, as to every officer whose recall is to be voted on thereat, the following question: 'Shall (name of person against whom the recall petition is filed) be recalled from the office of (title of the office)?' following which question shall be the words 'Yes' and 'No' on separate lines, with a blank space at the right of each, in which the voter shall indicate by stamping a cross (x) his vote for or against such recall. On such ballots, under each such question, there shall also be printed the names of those persons who have been nominated as candidates to succeed the person recalled, in case he shall be removed from office by said recall election; but no vote cast shall be counted for any candidate for said office unless the voter also voted on said question of the recall of the person sought to be recalled from said office. The name of the person against whom the petition is filed shall not appear on the ballot as a candidate for the office. If a majority of those voting on said question of the recall of any incumbent from office shall vote 'No,' said incumbent shall continue in said office. If a majority shall vote 'Yes,' said incumbent shall thereupon be deemed removed from such office, upon the qualification of his successor. The canvassers shall canvass all votes for candidates for said office and declare the result in like manner as in a regular election. If the vote at any such recall election shall recall the officer, then the candidate who has received the highest number of votes for the office shall be thereby declared elected for the remainder of the term. In case the person who received the highest number of votes shall fail to qualify within ten days after receiving the certificate of election, the office shall be deemed vacant and shall be filled according to law."

The Code sections, so far as their provisions are pertinent, read:

Section 1196:

"* * * It shall be the duty of the clerk or secretary of the legislative body of any incorporated city or town to provide separate ballots for every election for city or town officers in which the electors, or any of the electors, of such city or town participate, and to cause to be printed in such separate ballots the name of every candidate whose name has been filed with such clerk or secretary in the manner provided for by law. All ballots shall be not to exceed twenty-four inches in length, * * * and below the printed names of the candidates for each office, the necessary blank space or spaces to permit an elector to write in the names of persons whose names are not printed on the ballot. [Then follows a provision for a special watermarked paper with a design to be furnished by the secretary of state.] At any special or separate local election, paper marked with the design used at the previous election may be used. Nothing in this Code contained shall prevent any voter from writing upon his ballot the name of any person for whom he desires to vote for any office, and such vote shall be counted the same as if printed upon the ballot, and marked as voted for."

"There shall be provided at each polling place, at each election at which public officers are voted for, but one form of ballot for all the candidates for public office, and every ballot shall contain the names of all the candidates whose nominations for any office specified on the ballot have been duly made and not withdrawn, as provided by law, together with the title of the office arranged to conform as nearly as practicable to the plan hereinafter set forth. * * * All ballots shall be not to exceed twenty-four inches in length, * * * with proper blank spaces to allow the voter to write in names not printed on the ballot."

It will be noticed that the Code provides that there shall be but one form of ballot for all candidates for public office (section 1197), and that at every election for city and town officers the ballot furnished by the city clerk shall contain the "necessary blank * * * spaces to permit an elector to write in names of person whose names are not printed on the ballot" (section 1196).

[1, 2] Though it is the general rule that a special controls a general statute, without regard to their respective dates, still it is not always or necessarily true that a special law entirely excludes from its field of operations the provisions of a general law, where the two can occupy the same domain without any inherent antagonism. We are of the opinion that the recall act of January 2, 1912, and the two sections of the Political Code from which we have quoted, should be read together with a view to giving effect to what we deem to be a consistent legislative policy, namely, to provide that at each and every election held in this state at which a candidate for public office is to be voted for, whether it be a general municipal election or a special municipal election for the recall of an incumbent, none but official ballots furnished by the state shall be used, and on each and every ballot there shall be suitable spaces wherein any qualified elector may express his choice by writing in the name of any person, and not be required to choose between the persons whose names may be printed on the ballot as nominees for election. Though the two Code sections are a part of the general law that deals with the subject of elections in a general and comprehensive manner, and the act of January 2, 1912, is confined to the special subject of elections for the recall of elective city or town officers, there is no inconsistency between the provisions of the latter act (which for the sake of distinction, we shall designate as the special act or statute) and those provisions of the Code sections that we have quoted (which we shall refer to as the general act or statute.) The two acts are in pari materia, and, without creating any inconsistency or repugnancy between the two, the field covered by the special act may likewise be occupied by the general act, in so far as the latter provides" that, at every election for city and town officers, the official ballots shall contain "the necessary blank space or spaces to permit an elector to write in the names of persons whose names are not printed on the ballot."

[3] The rule is that all consistent statutes which can stand together, if related to the same subject, shall be construed together, and with reference to the whole system of which they form a part, and shall be harmonized, and effect given to all, if this can consistently be done, so as to make the law consistent in all its parts and uniform in its application and results. Lambert v. Board of Trustees, 151 Ky. 725, 152 S. W. 802, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 180, 183. Where, as here it does not clearly appear that the Legislature intended to prescribe by the special statute all the rules that should govern recall elections, and where, as here, it does appear that the language of the general statute is so comprehensive that it literally embraces the subject-matter of the special statute (sections 1196 and 1197 make express provision for every election for city or town officers in which the electors of the city or town participate), the special will not exclude the general statute from the field that it occupies, unless there is a necessary repugnancy between the acts. Casey v. Harned, 5 Iowa, 1; Talcott v. Commissioners, 53 Cal. 199.

[4] The purpose of all rules of construction is to ascertain, if possible, the intention of the Legislature; for it is the legislative intent that must control. Respondent's contention amounts to this: Though the special act does not, in so many words, say that no space shall be left on the ballot wherein the elector may write the name of any person who is his choice for the office that may become vacant by the recall of the incumbent, nevertheless this result must follow from an application of the maxim, "expressio unius est exclusio alterius." This maxim expresses but one of the canons of interpretation. It should not be used as a guide for the construction of a statute when, if adopted, its application would invalidate the very statute sought to be construed, by making it violative of some constitutional inhibition. Only by holding that the general statute (that is, the provision of the Political Code that requires blank spaces to be on the ballots) occupies with the special statute the field covered by the latter can we avoid invalidating the special act.

The Constitution of this state guarantees to every qualified elector the right to vote at all elections that may be authorized by law:

"Every native citizen of the United States, every person who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under or by virtue of the Treaty of Queretaro, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county in which he or she claims his or her vote ninety days, and in the election precinct thirty days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law." Const. § 1, art. 2.

[5, 6] It is apparent from a reading of the act for the recall of elective city or town officers that all ballots to be used at recall elections held thereunder are required to be printed and furnished at the public expense, just as at all other elections, and that the use of any ballot other than such as may be furnished by the state is absolutely prohibited. If, therefore, the ballots that are required to be used at a recall election have no blank space wherein the voter may write the name of a person whose name is not printed on the ballot, the voter must be compelled to vote for the person or persons whose name or names may be printed on the ballot furnished him, or be deprived of the privilege of voting for any person whatever. If that is the construction that must be placed upon the act for the recall of elective city and county officers, the statute must be held to be unconstitutional and void; for it is not within the power of the Legislature to restrict electors in their choice of candidates or prohibit them from voting for persons whose names are not printed on the ballots. Eaton v. Brown, 96 Cal. 371, 31 Pac. 250, 17 L. R. A. 697, 31 Am. St. Rep. 225; Britton v. Board of Commissioners, 129 Cal. 337, 342, 61 Pac. 1115, 51 L. R. A. 115; Spier v. Baker, 120 Cal. 370, 375, 52 Pac. 659, 41 L. R. A. 196; Sanner v. Patton, 155 Ill. 553, 40 N. E. 290; 15 Cyc. 289; note on page 686 et seq. 91 Am. St. Rep. As was said by Mr. Justice Henshaw in Britton v. Board of Commissioners, supra, speaking with reference to statutes restricting the ballots to those furnished by the state:

"But, where such laws have been upheld, the right of the voter freely to express his preference has always been preserved, as in this state, by blank spaces wherein he may write the names of the candidates of his choice." 129 Cal. 342, 61 Pac. 1117, 51 L. R. A. 115."

It is no answer to say that the voter, by filing a nominating petition, may have the name of the nominee of his choice placed upon the ballot. He may not be able to induce the requisite number of electors to join with him in so nominating the candidate of his choice. If the narrow construction of this act that respondent contends for be the only permissible construction, the voter is deprived of his constitutional right of suffrage, deprived of the right of exercising his own choice; and where that right is taken away, there is nothing left worthy to be called the right of suffrage; the boasted free ballot becomes a delusion. To justify a construction that would make such consequences possible, the legislative language should be so clear and unequivocal that it cannot with reason he said that room is left for any other permissible construction.

[7] It is a well-recognized canon of interpretation that, where a statute is fairly susceptible of a construction that makes it harmonize with the Constitution and comport with the legitimate powers of the Legislature, that is the construction which it should receive. Chesebrough v. San Francisco, 153 Cal. 559, 567, 568, 96 Pac. 288. A construction of an election law that will permit the virtual disfranchisement of any qualified voter should never be adopted if the statute be fairly susceptible of any other meaning. Bowers v. Smith, 111 Mo. 45, 20 S. W. 101, 16 L. R. A. 754, 33 Am. St. Rep. 491; Park v. Rives, 40 Utah, 47, 119 Pac. 1034; Eckerson v. Des Moines, 137 Iowa, 452, 115 N. W. 177.

In the light of the foregoing considerations, we are satisfied that it was the intention of the Legislature that the requirement of sections 1196 and 1197 of the Political Code with respect to blank spaces on the ballots, wherein the voter may write the names of the candidates of his choice, should apply to recall elections held under the recall act of January 2, 1912, just as in the case of every other election of public officers.

[8] There is another consideration which impels us to this construction of the act in question. It is this: If the requirement of the Code sections relative to blank spaces on the ballots should be held not to be applicable to municipal recall elections, then it would be possible for the act for the recall of elective city and town officers to defeat its own purpose. The purpose of the recall statute is to enable a majority of the voters, voting at any recall election, to remove an unfaithful or undesirable incumbent of any elective office of the city or town. But if, as in the instant case, no nominating petition has been filed nominating a candidate for the office, and if, therefore, no name of such nominee be printed on the ballot, then, even though a majority of the voters vote 'Yes' on the question of the incumbent's recall, their purpose must be frustrated if they are not to be permitted to write in the name of any person as their choice for the office. The language of the act is that, if a majority of the voters shall vote "Yes" on the question of recall, then "said incumbent shall thereupon be deemed removed from such office upon the qualification of his successor." But if, as in the present case, no candidate's name is printed on the ballot, and if no voter can write in the name of any person as his choice for the office, then there is no "successor" who can qualify, and consequently no vacancy in the office to be filled by appointment or otherwise. For the act says, in effect, that the incumbent, though a majority vote for his recall, is not for that reason alone deemed to be removed. He is not deemed removed until the "qualification of his successor." This reasoning is in no wise vitiated by the last sentence of the section, which reads:

"In case the person who received the highest number of votes shall fail to qualify within ten days after receiving the certificate of election, the office shall be deemed vacant and shall be filled according to law." Stats. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 130.

This language refers only to a vacancy created by a failure to qualify on the part of a person whose name was printed or written on the ballot, and who received the highest number of votes cast at the election.

For the foregoing reasons we think the demurrer should be overruled, and a peremptory writ issued as prayed.

It is so ordered.

We concur: SLOANE, J.; THOMAS, J.

MATTHEWS v. DIGGES. (Civ. 3064.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Jan. 26, 1920. Rehearing Denied Feb. 24, 1920; Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 25, 1920.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT §79(2) — ASSIGNEE OF LEASE IS BOUND BY NOTICE OF FORFEITURE GIVEN TO ASSIGNOR.

An assignee of a lessee, who took his assignment of the lease with full knowledge that notice of forfeiture and demand for possession had been served upon his assignor, stands in no better position than the original lessee.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR §1011(1)—FINDINGS BASED ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE NOT DISTURBED.

Findings of trial court based on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT §106—COVENANT TO POISON SQUIRRELS HELD A CONTINUING ONE FOR ENTIRE TERM.

A covenant of a lessee to poison squirrels was a continuing one, and it was specious to argue that, since the covenant set no time within the term of the lease within which it was to be performed, a forfeiture could not be declared for its breach.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT §94(2)—THREE DAYS' NOTICE HELD UNNECESSARY WHERE COVENANT VIOLATED RELATED TO POISONING OF SQUIRRELS.

A covenant respecting the duty of the lessee to poison squirrels was a continuing one which could not be performed within three days after notice of its violation, and it was unnecessary to give such notice before forfeiting the lease for a violation thereof, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 3.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ¶112(2)—ACCEPTANCE OF RENT NOT WAIVER OF BREACH OF COVENANT TO POISON SQUIRRELS.

Although the acceptance of installments of rent might be a waiver of prior breaches of a covenant to poison squirrels on the leased premises, it was not a waiver of a subsequent failure to poison squirrels; the covenant being a continuing one.

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ¶103(1)—ASSIGNEE OF LESSEE WHO VIOLATED COVENANTS NOT ENTITLED TO RELIEF FROM FORFEITURE.

An assignee of a lessee, who took an assignment of the lease with full knowledge that the owner had given notice of forfeiture and demand for possession by reason of breach of a covenant by the lessee to poison squirrels on the premises, was not entitled, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1179, to be granted relief from the forfeiture of the lease; the matter of granting or denying such application being one lying largely in the discretion of the trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; J. A. Bardin, Judge.

Action by John L. Matthews against Robert M. Digges. From judgment in plaintiff's favor, and from an order made after final judgment denying defendant's application to be relieved from a forfeiture of a lease declared by said judgment, the defendant appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watonsville, Daugherty & Theile, of Salina, and Thos. E. O'Donnell, of Hollister, for appellant.

C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. There are two appeals in this case presented in the same transcript; one an appeal from the judgment in the plaintiff's favor, the other an appeal from an order made after final judgment, denying the defendant's application to be relieved from the forfeiture declared by said judgment under section 1179 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The action was one in unlawful detainer after forfeiture of certain demised premises alleged to have arisen through the breach of certain covenants in the lease thereof by the plaintiff to certain lessees named Wood and Judge, assignors of the defendant. The lease in question was executed by said plaintiff to Wood and Judge on March 22, 1917, the property covered by said lease consisting of two separate ranches containing in the aggregate about 9,000 acres of land, known as the San Lorenzo ranch and the Bitterwater ranch, and situate in the counties of San Benito and Monterey. About 600 acres of the land of these ranches was tillable, the balance being grazing land. The plaintiff alleged that there were three certain covenants of this lease which had been broken by the predecessors of the defendant prior to the latter's assignment of the lease. By one of these the said lessees were required to take proper care of a small orchard on one of these ranches; by another to take proper care of a certain cream separator thereon; by the third of these covenants the lessees were to use reasonable efforts to poison the squirrels upon the leased property. The plaintiff, in his amended complaint, alleged the breach of all three of these covenants, but upon the trial of the cause the court found that as to the first two of these in the order above stated the averments of said complaint were untrue. As to the covenant to poison squirrels the trial court found the covenant had been broken so as to entitle the plaintiff to declare a forfeiture of the lease and to recover possession of the premises in this action. Judgment decreeing such forfeiture and recovery was accordingly entered in the plaintiff's favor, and from such judgment the first of the appeals herein was taken.

After the entry of such judgment the defendant moved the trial court for an order relieving him from such forfeiture under section 1179 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which motion was upon the hearing thereon denied, from which order denying the same the second appeal was taken.

[1] Upon the first of these appeals the appellant makes several contentions. The first of these is that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the finding of the trial court that there was a breach of the covenant in said lease requiring the lessees to poison the squirrels upon the leased premises such as would entitle the plaintiff to declare a forfeiture of said lease. The covenant in relation to the poisoning of squirrels upon the lands in question reads as follows:

"The parties of the second part also agree that they will at their own cost and expense use reasonable efforts to poison squirrels upon said leased property, the party of the first part at his own cost and expense to furnish the necessary poison."

It may be stated in limine with respect to the breach of this covenant that it was broken, if at all, by the original lessees in said lease; that the plaintiff's notice of his claim of forfeiture for such breach and of his demand for the possession of the premises was served upon the said original lessees prior to the assignment by them of their said lease to the defendant herein, and that the said defendant took said assignment of said lease with full knowledge that said notice of forfeiture and demand for possession had been served by plaintiff upon his assignors. It cannot, therefore, be successfully claimed that the defendant herein stands in any better position respecting this action and these appeals than his said predecessors in interest would have occupied had no such assignment been made.

the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings and conclusions of the trial court as to a sufficient breach of the foregoing covenant to justify a forfeiture of the lease, it may be said that, after a careful reading of the evidence in the case, we are entirely satisfied that there was sufficient evidence furnished by the plaintiff and his witnesses, both as to the fact that the plaintiff had on his part in said covenant supplied the necessary poison to enable his lessees to perform their part of said covenant, and as to the fact that they had not reasonably performed their part thereof, to justify the findings and conclusions of the trial court in both of these regards. The evidence, it is true, is conflicting as to both of these matters, but the trial court resolved these conflicts in the plaintiff's favor, as it was entitled to do, and with its findings and conclusions in so doing we are not at liberty to interfere. The appellant's rather specious argument—that since the covenant in question sets no specific time within the five-year term of the lease within which they were bound to perform it, and hence that a forfeiture was prematurely declared—had apparently little weight with the trial court, and could have little with any person at all familiar with the pest of ground squirrels in farming or grazing communities and with the necessity of regular and organized measures for the extirpation of this troublesome and destructive rodent on the part of owners and occupiers of such lands and insisted upon by the laws of the state especially framed for this purpose. It was clearly the duty of the lessees of these premises under the terms of this covenant in their lease to reasonably keep in a state of reduction the squirrels thereon. This, according to the positive testimony of the plaintiff and his witnesses, they did not do, since they testified, and the court found, that as a result of their failure of reasonable efforts in that regard the said leased property continued to be infested with squirrels. We find no merit, therefore, in the appellant's contention as to the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of the court in respect to the plaintiff's performance and his lessees' breach of their respective parts of the foregoing covenant in said lease.

[4] The appellant's next contention is that the plaintiff's written notice and demand of possession of the premises covered by said lease was insufficient, for the reason that he failed to serve therewith the three days' notice to perform the covenants of said lease or deliver possession, as required by subdivision 3 of section 1161 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A reference to said section, however, shows that it is only in cases where the conditions and covenants of a lease violated by a lessee can be performed within three days after the giving of such notice that the duty is cast upon the lessor to give notice to his lessee to perform the same within said time or surrender possession of the leased premises. In the case at bar the evidence sufficiently showed, and the court found, that the conditions of the foregoing covenant respecting the poisoning of squirrels upon the leased premises could not have been performed within three days after notice of its violation. It was therefore unnecessary for the plaintiff to include in his notice and demand for possession the alternative otherwise required by said section of the Code. Schnittger v. Rose, 139 Cal. 656, 73 Pac. 449; Zucco v. Farullo, 174 Pac. 929.

[5] The appellant's next and final contention upon the first of these appeals is that the plaintiff waived any breach of the covenant in question by accepting rent after such breach and with full knowledge thereof, and by other conduct on his part amounting to such waiver. By the terms of the lease in question the full rental of the premises covered by it was to be the sum of $25,000 for its entire term, $2,500 of which was to be paid upon the 1st day of September of each year, and $2,500 upon the 1st day of each April thereafter. On the 5th or 6th of April, 1918, the original lessees under said lease sent to plaintiff by mail their check for the installment of the rent then a few days overdue, which check the plaintiff in due course received and retained. He did this knowing that at the time his said lessees were not performing their covenant to poison the squirrels upon the leased premises; and it might be argued that had such lessees thereafter and before the serving upon them of the plaintiff's written demand for the surrender of said premises performed their continuing covenant in respect to the poisoning of squirrels, their lessor's acceptance of the said installment of rent would have constituted a waiver of their past breaches thereof under the authorities cited by appellant. But the covenant was, as above stated, a continuing covenant; and, this being so, the plaintiff's acceptance of the installment of rent due on the 1st of April did not, and could not, constitute a waiver of the continuing breach of such covenant after the payment of such past-due rent. German Sav. Bk. v. Gollmer, 155 Cal. 683, 688, 102 Pac. 932, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066; Jones v. Durrer, 96 Cal. 95, 30 Pac. 1027; McGlynn v. Moore, 25 Cal. 384; Taylor, Landlord and Tenant (9th Ed.) § 501. We are therefore of the opinion that the plaintiff's receipt of the installment of rent in question did not operate as a waiver of the terms and conditions of said covenant, at least as to his lessees' continuing breaches thereof; nor do we think that his subsequent conduct, without reciting the details thereof, amounted to such a waiver.

[6] Upon the second appeal the appellant contends that he was entitled, under section 1179 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have been granted relief from the forfeiture of the lease, which had been assigned to him after the immediate lessees' breach thereof, and after the plaintiff's written notice and demand for possession duly served upon them. As before stated, the appellant, as such assignee of said lease, stands in no better position than his assignors, having taken the same with knowledge of its breach by them and of the lessor's action in respect of terminating the same. His application for relief and his showing made thereon were met by the plaintiff with a denial of its essential averments and with a counter showing as to its alleged facts; the matter was heard before the trial court, and upon such hearing the respective parties testified in support of and in denial of the equities presented by the defendant's said application. The trial court, after hearing such testimony, denied the application. The matter of granting or denying such an application is one which lies so largely in the discretion of the trial court that it would require a very clear showing of an abuse of such discretion to justify a reversal of the order made thereon. No such showing has been here presented, but, on the contrary, it was made to appear, not only that the defendant making such application had taken his assignment of said lease with his eyes open to the fact that he was buying a lawsuit, but that, as between himself and the plaintiff, a state of hostility existed which boded ill for any satisfactory resumption and continuance of their relations as landlord and tenant under said lease. The trial court had the parties before it and was thus in the position— which this court is not—of determining where the equities between the parties lay. With such determination we will not attempt to interfere.

Judgment and order affirmed.

FRAZEE v. FOX FILM CORPORATION.
(Civ. 2764.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Jan. 30, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1011(1)—FINDING OF COURT WITHOUT JURY BASED ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE IS CONCLUSIVE.

The trial court's finding of fact in an action tried without a jury, based on conflicting evidence, is conclusive on the appellate court, both as to conflicts between witnesses for the respective parties, and as to conflicts between witnesses for the same parties.

2. EVIDENCE ⇨208(2), 210—PLEADINGS AND AFFIDAVIT INADMISSIBLE AS JUDICIAL ADMISSIONS.

In an action on a contract which plaintiff claimed to have entered into with defendant corporation, where the president of the corporation testified that the one with whom plaintiff claimed to have contracted did not represent the corporation at that time, and the one with whom plaintiff claimed to have contracted testified that he did not engage him to perform services for the defendant corporation, held that pleadings and affidavit, filed by defendant corporation about a year after the making of the alleged contract, which were signed by the person with whom plaintiff claimed to have contracted as general manager, were inadmissible in evidence as judicial admissions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dana R. Weller, Judge.

Action by Edwin A. Frazee against the Fox Film Corporation. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Emmet H. Wilson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Alfred Wright and Alexander Macdonald, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiff sought to recover $800, alleged to be due him as the balance of salary upon a contract made with defendant whereby he was employed by the latter as a director of the production of motion pictures for a compensation of $200 per week and a royalty on all pictures so produced. Judgment went for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

By answer defendant denied the alleged making of the contract, or that it ever at any time employed plaintiff in any capacity or agreed to pay him any compensation for services rendered to it, or that it agreed to pay plaintiff a royalty on the pictures produced under his direction, and further denied that plaintiff, as alleged, worked for it from July 17, 1916, to January 14, 1917, or worked for it at all; in accordance with all of which denials the court found in favor of defendant.

[1] Plaintiff's first contention is that the findings are without sufficient support. It appears from plaintiff's testimony that about July 16, 1916, in the city of Los Angeles, he was by oral agreement employed by A. Carlos, acting for and on behalf of defendant, at a salary of $200 per week, in addition to which he was to receive a royalty of $200 upon the first picture produced and $300 on each picture thereafter produced; that he produced four pictures upon which no royalty was paid; that his employment continued from July 17, 1916, to January 14, 1917, during which time, except for the last four weeks, he had received from defendant his salary of $200 per week, but was paid nothing on account of the royalty. As against this evidence, it appears from the testimony of William Fox, president of defendant corporation, that prior to May, 1916, Mr. Carlos was general representative of the company in its sales department, which position he resigned on said date and came from New York City to Los Angeles, where he entered the employ of another corporation, known as the William Fox Vaudeville Company, as general manager of its studios in Los Angeles, and from the time of his resignation occupied no position whatever with defendant, had no authority to act for it, and performed no duties in connection therewith. A. Carlos testified that, while he employed plaintiff at a salary of $200 per week, his act in so doing was for and on behalf of and as the manager of the William Fox Vaudeville Company, for which plaintiff performed services as director of moving pictures, but that he never at any time agreed to pay him any royalty on pictures so produced as director. In addition to this testimony it also appears that plaintiff, upon the payment of his salary, signed pay roll vouchers, whereby he acknowledged the weekly receipt of $200 from the William Fox Vaudeville Company, thus recognizing it as his employer. Upon this conflicting evidence so presented, it was the sole province of the trial court to determine the questions in issue; and, having done so, its findings thereon must be deemed conclusive and binding upon this court. This rule, which needs no citation of authorities, applies with equal force to conflicting testimony between the witnesses for defendant, as it does to like conflicts between witnesses of the respective parties. Hence, conceding the testimony of Carlos to be inconsistent with that of Fox, both of whom were witnesses for defendant, the question as to which one of them was entitled to credence in the statements made was for the determination of the trial court.

[2] Another alleged error is predicated upon the rulings of the court in rejecting certain documentary evidence offered by plaintiff for the purpose of showing that Carlos, with whom he made the contract, was the representative of and acting for defendant. One of these documents consisted of an application made March 17, 1917, by Mrs. O'Connor to the Industrial Accident Commission for an award of compensation for injuries alleged to have been sustained by her as an employé of defendant on September 26, 1916. The answer thereto was signed, "Fox Film Corporation, by A. Carlos, Its General Representative." Another document was the verification of an answer filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county on August 1, 1917, in the case of Standing against the defendant, which likewise was made by A. Carlos as the general representative of defendant. The third document was an affidavit made by him on March 10, 1917, for the removal of an action pending in the superior court to the federal court, and wherein he stated that he was the general representative of defendant. The court sustained objections to the introduction in evidence of all these documents. At most, the proffered evidence was a mere repetition of the testimony given by Carlos, and hence not admissible for the purpose of impeachment. Appellant, however, insists that the documents were admissible as substantive evidence showing admissions against interest and tending to contradict the witness Fox. The contract under which plaintiff was employed was made on or about July 17, 1916, and the question presented for solution was whether Carlos at such time had power to act for defendant, rather than as to his authority to act on the dates of March 10th, March 17th, and August 1st, in the year 1917, when he represented himself as the general representative of defendant. It might readily be conceded that on these dates he was the general representative of defendant, but such fact would not justify the inference that he held such position nearly a year before such dates; and hence the documents could not be deemed evidence tending to contradict the statements of Fox, as president of the corporation, that Carlos was not connected therewith, and had no power to act therefor at the time of plaintiff's alleged employment by defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 773(4)—JUDGMENT AFFIRMED IN ABSENCE OF BRIEF AND ORAL ARGUMENT.

JAMES, J. [1, 2] From an examination of the clerk's transcript, prepared in accordance with the alternative method of appeal, we learn that the plaintiff in this action gave notice of appeal from the adverse judgment and from an order made after judgment denying plaintiff's motion to vacate and set aside the same. The latter motion appears to have been, in effect, a motion for a new trial, and, so considered, the order denying the same is not appealable. The clerk's transcript and reporter's transcript were filed in this court on November 7, 1917, and thereafter stipulations were made between the parties extending time to appellant to file his brief to August 15, 1918. Appellant filed no brief and did not appear at the time set for oral argument.

No reason is presented to us, therefore, to show that the judgment as entered by the trial court was in any wise defective, erroneous, or improper.

The appeal from the order is dismissed; the judgment is affirmed.

Taylor & Forgy, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to recover on a contractor's bond given pursuant to the provisions of section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals on the judgment roll.

It appears that the Boynton Company and the Nelson Manufacturing Company furnished materials to a subcontractor and used in the construction of a building, for which payment was not made, which claims and all right, title, and interest in and to the bond, after the completion of the building and before the commencement of the action, were, as found by the court, duly assigned by said companies to plaintiff, who was the legal owner and holder thereof. In addition to these findings, all of which were in favor of plaintiff, the court made the following finding:

"That at the time said Boynton Company and said Nelson Manufacturing Company assigned their said claims to the plaintiff the plaintiff paid therefor the full amount of said claims, and that the money therefor was furnished to him by said Hughes, the owner of the building, and neither of said claimants has any further interest therein."

[1] Upon this finding appellant asks for a reversal of the judgment, his contention being that it appears therefrom that Hughes, the owner of the building, had paid the claims to the materialmen, and hence no action therefor could be founded on the bond. We do not so interpret the finding. On the contrary, construing it in support of the judgment, it appears therefrom that plaintiff obtained from Hughes the money with which he acquired the claims, as to the validity of which, and the assignor's right to recover upon the bond in the absence of an assignment, no attack is made. The court found that the claims which were the subject of transfer by assignment were unpaid, and that they were duly and regularly assigned to plaintiff. From whom or how he obtained the money paid in acquiring the claims was not a matter which concerned defendant, since, as to him, the assignment would have been equally valid without such payment. Hence the fact so found seems to be wholly immaterial.

[2] Equally without merit is appellant's contention that no recovery could be had on the bond except in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien on the building, wherein there should be, as a condition of such recovery, an adjudication of an unpaid balance. By the terms of the bond executed in pursuance of the provisions of the statute, it inured to the benefit of all persons furnishing materials to be used in the work described in the contract, to all of whom it accorded a right of action for materials so furnished, either in a separate action upon the bond or in any suit brought to foreclose mechanics' liens upon the property. General Elec. Co. v. American Bonding Co., 182 Pac. 444.

While the action was brought against both the contractor and his surety, it is claimed that judgment was rendered against the surety only, which fact is urged by appellant as another reason for reversal. Not only does the bond, in express terms, authorize the bringing of an action against the principal and surety, or either of them, but appellant does not even suggest that a suit may not be maintained against a surety for the default of his principal.

The judgment is affirmed.

FARRAR v. FARRAR. (Civ. 3069.)

1. DIVORCE ⇨213—INABILITY TO PAY NO DEFENSE TO CLAIM FOR TEMPORARY ALIMONY AND SUIT MONEY.

It is no defense to wife's application for temporary alimony and necessary suit money, pending her husband's appeal from a decree denying him a divorce and granting the wife a divorce on a cross-complaint, to show that the husband is without means.

2. DIVORCE ⇨262—ON NONPAYMENT OF TEMPORARY ALIMONY PROCEEDINGS MAY BE STAYED.

While the court may not punish a husband, suing for divorce, for contempt, or dismiss his suit, if he is unable to pay or earn the amount awarded his wife as temporary alimony and suit money, nevertheless the court will refuse to proceed with the action until he has made the payments.

3. DIVORCE ⇨213—WIFE NEED NOT RESORT TO HER NONINCOME-PRODUCING PROPERTY BEFORE APPLYING FOR TEMPORARY ALIMONY.

Where the wife is the owner of nonincome-producing property, the law does not require her to have recourse to such property before applying for temporary alimony and suit money pending an appeal by her husband, or to impair the capital of her separate estate.

4. DIVORCE ⇨214(3)—WIFE MUST SHOW NEW CONDITIONS TO BE ENTITLED TO INCREASE IN ALIMONY PENDING APPEAL.

Where a wife petitions for temporary alimony pending her husband's appeal from divorce decree to an amount in excess of permanent alimony thereby awarded her after a trial on the merits, it should be incumbent upon her to adduce evidence of new conditions that show a necessity for the increase, or else that the amount allowed by decree was inadequate in the first instance.

5. DIVORCE ⇨182—ORDER FOR ALIMONY PENDING APPEAL SHOULD PROTECT HUSBAND FROM PAYING ALIMONY TWICE.

It was the duty of trial court, in making an order for temporary alimony and suit money pending appeal, to protect the husband against the possibility of being compelled by reason of possible affirmance of the judgment, which awarded permanent alimony, or the dismissal of appeal therefrom, to pay alimony twice for any period of time.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order made after judgment, requiring him to pay defendant the sum of $60 per month as alimony pending plaintiff's appeal from an interlocutory decree of divorce, and the further sum of $25 to pay for printing defendant's brief on that appeal.

Plaintiff commenced an action for divorce against defendant. Defendant filed an answer and cross-complaint. The trial court found against plaintiff on the issues tendered by his complaint, and with defendant on the issues tendered by her cross-complaint, adjudged that she was entitled to a divorce, and, by its interlocutory decree of divorce, awarded defendant permanent alimony at the rate of $35 per month. From that judgment plaintiff took an appeal, and stayed execution thereof by giving the necessary undertaking. Thereupon defendant made a motion for temporary alimony pending such appeal, resulting in the order here under review.

[1, 2] It is no defense to defendant's application for temporary alimony and necessary suit money, pending her husband's appeal, to show that the husband is without means, or that his condition and circumstances will not allow of his making such provision. The action was brought by him, and he, not she, is pressing the appeal from the judgment. If a husband comes into court for a divorce, complaining of his wife, and she makes a defense, he must expect to furnish her with money to enable her to make her defense, and likewise money wherewith to support herself during the litigation, and his poverty or inability to earn the money is no excuse. While the court may not punish him for contempt or dismiss his suit, if he is unable to pay or earn the amount awarded his wife, nevertheless the court will refuse to proceed with the action until he has made the payments. Purcell v. Purcell, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 194; Cohen v. Cohen, 11 Misc. Rep. 704, 32 N. Y. Supp. 1082; 14 Cyc. 755; State v. Superior Court, 85 Wash. 607, 148 Pac. 882, L. R. A. 1915E, 567. See, also, Winter v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 295, 11 Pac. 633. Bishop states the rule as follows:

"But a plaintiff husband, destitute both of funds and ability, will in a proper case have his suit suspended until he can do justice to his defending wife. If he cannot alimment her, and give her the means of defense, he cannot have his divorce." Bishop, Marriage, Div. & Sep. (2d Ed.) § 981.

This consideration disposes of a number of appellant's points, as, for instance, that the wife's affidavit, upon which the order was based, was filed some time previous to the making of the order; that the court erred in receiving evidence of the condition of appellant's bank account as of a certain date anterior to the making of the order, and receiving in evidence a certain check for $1,000. The sole purpose of these items of evidence was to show plaintiff's ability to pay. But, as we have seen, ability to pay is not a sine qua non, where, as here, the husband is the actor, pressing for a final decree in his own favor.

[3] Nor is it any defense to the order appealed from that the wife has property in her own right. It does not appear that her property is income-producing. Her affidavit states that she has no income whatever, except $2.50 per month, and that she is dependent upon her husband for support. Where the wife is the owner of nonincome-producing property, the law does not require her to have recourse to her own resources first, or to impair the capital of her separate estate. White v. White, 50 Ill. App. 149.

[4] For these reasons the court below was warranted in awarding respondent some alimony for her support and maintenance, as well as suit money, during the pendency of her husband's appeal from the judgment. We think, however, that the amount allowed as temporary alimony for the wife's support, pending her husband's appeal, should have been limited to the amount awarded by the divorce decree as permanent alimony; also that the husband should have been protected against the possibility of being compelled to pay twice for a part of the period covered by the pendency of his appeal from that decree.

The evidence upon which the interlocutory decree of divorce was granted is not before us. We must assume that the decree awarding the wife $35 a month as permanent alimony was based on sufficient evidence. That decree is evidence that the amount allowed thereby for permanent alimony was an adequate amount for that purpose. Ordinarily temporary alimony should not exceed permanent alimony. Indeed, it has been said that temporary alimony should, under all ordinary circumstances, be less than permanent alimony. Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 46, 16 Pac. 345. At any rate, in the absence of necessity for an increase, temporary alimony, pending an appeal from the judgment, should not exceed the permanent alimony awarded by that judgment. To entitle a wife, petitioning for temporary alimony pending her husband's appeal from the divorce decree, to an amount in excess of the permanent alimony thereby awarded her, after a trial on the merits where all the facts and circumstances may be, and presumably are, adduced and considered, it should be incumbent upon her to adduce evidence of new conditions that show a necessity for the increase, or else that the amount allowed by the decree was inadequate in the first instance. In the absence of such showing, the amount awarded by the decree must be presumed continuously adequate for her support until the judgment appealed from has become final, or, if the judgment be reversed, until a final judgment shall have been rendered in the divorce suit. Smith v. Smith, 147 Cal. 143, 81 Pac. 411. The record here furnishes no evidence that such showing was made.

[5] Moreover, it was the duty of the trial court, in making the order from which this appeal was taken, to have protected the husband against the possibility of being compelled, by reason of the possible affirmance of the judgment or the dismissal of the appeal therefrom, to pay twice for any period of time. In so far as the order fails to give such protection, it is erroneous. Sheppard v. Sheppard, 161 Cal. 348, 119 Pac. 492.

The order appealed from is modified by striking therefrom the words "$60 per month," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "$35 per month"; also by inserting at the end of the order the following:

"Provided, however, that all amounts paid hereunder by plaintiff to defendant on account of alimony at the rate of $35 per month shall, in the event of the affirmance of the judgment in this action providing for permanent maintenance at that rate, be credited in favor of plaintiff in satisfaction pro tanto of such judgment; and provided, further that if, in the event of the affirmance of the portion of such judgment providing for such permanent maintenance, plaintiff pays defendant thereunder at the rate of $35 per month for support and maintenance for any period of time covered by this order, such payment shall operate pro tanto as a satisfaction of the requirements of this order as to support and maintenance for such period of time, and plaintiff shall not be required to make under this order any further payment on account of support and maintenance for such period of time."

As so modified, the order is affirmed, appellant to pay his own costs on this appeal.

In the absence of express agreement, payment of a debt, whether pre-existing or contemporaneous, by a check which is subsequently dishonored, will not discharge the debt, and, though a receipt is given, the creditor may sue for the debt.

2. SALES ⇐191 — SELLER ACCEPTING GOOD CHECK NOT ENTITLED TO REPUDIATE ON DISHONOR BY BANK OTHER THAN THAT ON WHICH DRAWN.

Where the seller of hogs was paid part of the price on account by a check which was in fact good, but which was dishonored on presentation to a bank other than that on which it was drawn, he was not warranted in repudiating the contract and refusing to comply with its terms, and, the seller having accepted the check without objection, the buyer could rely on the fact that he would in the usual course of business present it for payment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by L. Goodman against A. Williamson. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. J. Emmons, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

E. A. Klein, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

SHAW, J. On the 14th day of December, 1917, defendant, in Kern county, sold for delivery to plaintiff on or about December 17th, 88 head of hogs of an average weight of 210 pounds, for the price of 13½ cents per pound, on account of the purchase of which and as part payment thereon plaintiff at the time paid to defendant by check on the American Savings Bank at Los Angeles the sum of $1,000, which defendant without objection accepted for the purpose given. At all times plaintiff had sufficient funds to his credit in the bank on which the check was drawn, to pay the same. Defendant, however, without presenting or causing it to be presented for payment to the American Savings Bank, where concededly it would have been honored, presented it to a bank at Bakersfield, and upon its refusal to pay the money thereon he repudiated the contract of sale, and refused to deliver the hogs in accordance with his agreement. Thereupon plaintiff brought this action for breach of the contract, in which the court found that defendant made the contract of sale upon which plaintiff had paid him on account of the purchase price the sum of $1,000, which check, without collection, defendant retained until lost or destroyed; that plaintiff was ready, able, and willing to fulfill his part of the contract, but that defendant refused to perform the same on his part, as a result of which plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $440, for which judgment was entered against defendant, and from which he appeals.

The evidence tended to show that the total weight of the hogs was 18,480 pounds, the value of which was 16 cents per pound, and hence the damage as found by the court, under section 3308, Civil Code, was 2½ cents per pound, from which it is apparent the court did not err in its finding as to the amount of damage sustained by plaintiff on account of defendant's breach of the contract.

[1, 2] Appellant's chief contention is that the check was taken merely for collection, and therefore could not be deemed payment, and notwithstanding the fact that it was concededly good and would have been paid upon presentation to the bank upon which it was drawn, he insists that when the First National Bank of Bakersfield refused to give him the cash thereon he was entitled to repudiate the contract. It is quite true, as claimed by appellant, that in the absence of express agreement so to do, payment of a debt, whether pre-existing or contemporaneous, by check which is dishonored will not discharge the debt, and that, although a receipt is given, the creditor may sue to recover the debt; but such facts do not exist in the instant case. On the contrary, the check was not dishonored; it was concededly good, and, as appears from the evidence, would have been paid upon presentation to the bank upon which it was drawn. Counsel for appellant cites no authorities or principle of law, and we know of none, supporting his assertion that the mere fact that a bank other than the one upon which the check was drawn refused to cash it warranted defendant in repudiating the contract and refusing to comply with its terms. Defendant having accepted the check without objection, plaintiff was entitled to rely upon the fact that he would in the usual course of business present the same for payment, upon which, under the circumstances shown and unless dishonored, his obligation upon the contract was precisely the same as though he had received the thousand dollars in cash. No ground exists for the claim that the check was received by defendant as an agency for its collection.

The judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES FURNITURE CO v. HANSEN. (Civ. 3146.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 5, 1920.)

1. REPLEVIN ⚡62—NONPAYMENT OF VALUE OF PROPERTY NEED NOT BE EXPRESSLY ALLEGED.

A complaint for claim and delivery which alleged unlawful detention of property without plaintiff's consent does not fail to state a cause of action because it did not in terms allege that the damages for the unlawful detention had not been paid.

2. REPLEVIN ⚡76—DAMAGES FOR UNLAWFUL DETENTION MAY BE AWARDED.

Damages may be awarded to compensate one entitled to possession of personal property for the time it was unlawfully detained by defendant.

3. REPLEVIN ⚡76—REASONABLE VALUE OF USE IS MEASURE OF DAMAGES FOR DETENTION.

The reasonable value of use of personal property unlawfully detained is the measure of damages for the unlawful detention.

4. REPLEVIN ⚡76—JUDGMENT CANNOT AWARD FUTURE USE VALUE.

A judgment in replevin cannot award to plaintiff the reasonable value of the use of the property for the time between the judgment and the delivery of the property or payment of its value by defendant.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1151(2)—ERROR IN GIVING ITEMS OF DAMAGES WHICH CAN BE STRICKEN NOT CAUSE FOR REVERSAL.

Error in awarding plaintiff in replevin future damages will not cause reversal but judgment will be affirmed as modified, where such damages can be stricken out without impairing determinative effect of judgment.

6. EVIDENCE ⚡353(14)—CONTRACT AND LIST OF PROPERTY SUBSEQUENTLY ATTACHED HELD ADMISSIBLE.

In an action of claim and delivery, the written lease contract, expressing the terms on which the property was delivered to defendant, objected to as incomplete, and a list of the property, made and attached to the contract after its execution, were competent evidence, where it was undisputed defendant had received the property.

7. SALES ⚡479(4)—RESERVATION OF TITLE GIVES RIGHT TO RECOVER POSSESSION WITHOUT RETURNING PAYMENTS.

A sale contract, reserving title in the seller until all payments have been made, irrespective of an express provision to that effect, authorizes the seller to retake possession of the property on breach of the conditions without returning the payments already made.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1011(1)—COURT'S FINDING ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE CONCLUSIVE.

Where the evidence as to the price of merchandise conditionally sold was conflicting, the trial court's finding thereon in favor of plaintiff is final.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action for claim and delivery by the Los Angeles Furniture Company against H. A. Hansen. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Judgment modified and affirmed.

F. E. Davis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
 Horace S. Wilson and Frank Lillard, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was one of claim and delivery by which recovery of possession of a certain lot of furniture was sought to be secured. The judgment was in favor of plaintiff, and defendant has appealed.

The complaint was in the usual form appropriate to the character of the action, and contained all the essential allegations. Demand for possession was alleged to have been made on the 4th day of May, 1917, and that possession was refused to be delivered to the plaintiff by the defendant, and the value of the property was alleged to be the sum of $1,500. By an amendment made to the complaint the following allegation was added:

"That defendant, without the consent of plaintiff, now detains said personal property from the possession of the plaintiff to its damage in the sum of $1,500, the value of the property, and the further sum of $100 per month, the reasonable usable value of the said property, from the said 4th day of May, 1917, as damages for the detention thereof."

[1] It is first contended that the complaint failed to state a cause of action because it was not in terms alleged that the damages had not been paid. We think that an express allegation of nonpayment of the damages accruing subsequent to the time that the detention of the property became unlawful was not necessary, and that such a condition would be implied from the allegations made.

[2] The second point urged is that the court by its judgment awarded damages in excess of those permitted by law, when it included the following term in the judgment:

"The additional sum of $90 per month from the 4th day of May, 1917, damages for the unlawful detention of said furniture, until said property is delivered to the plaintiff or the value thereof paid."

[3-5] In the findings of fact it was determined that $90 per month was "the reasonable usable value of the said property." That damages may be awarded to compensate the person entitled to the possession of personal property for the time that it shall be unlawfully detained by a defendant is not and cannot be disputed. That the reasonable value of the use of the personal property is a proper measure in particular cases to be applied, we think also must be affirmed. However, we do not believe that it lies within the power of the court in determining such damages to provide that the same shall continue to accumulate at a monthly rate after the date of the judgment, and for that reason we are of the opinion that the judgment is in part erroneous. The unauthorized portion of the judgment, however, may be stricken out without impairing the judgment in its determinative effect upon all material issues involved.

[6] Several other points are made in the brief of appellant. He contends that a sale upon credit of the merchandise claimed was shown by the evidence, and that it was not made to appear that any right was reserved in the plaintiff to retake possession of the articles of furniture. On the part of the plaintiff it was shown that, after some negotiation with the defendant as to articles desired by the latter and as to their price, the defendant came to the place of business of the plaintiff, and there signed the document, which was in form a lease contract, and which provided that for the use of merchandise not described in the writing itself defendant was to pay the total rental of $1,600, $500 of which was to be paid on or before the 16th day of December, 1916, and $100 on the 12th day of each and every "following month." At the time this writing was signed all of the merchandise desired by the defendant had not been collected together; some of it, it appears, had not been made, and when the lot was completed a list thereof was attached to the lease contract. It was admitted by the defendant at the trial that he had received all of the goods described in the list attached to the lease. His counsel objected, however, to the introduction of the document designated as a lease on the ground that it was incomplete, and objected to the attached list being received in evidence, for the reason that it was not made a part of the alleged contract at the time of its execution. The writing was executed as evidence of the terms of an agreement then made respecting the property which was to be delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant. It was competent evidence to show the assent of the defendant to those terms and conditions. There was no uncertainty made by the evidence as to an understanding of what merchandise was intended to be covered by the contract. As before mentioned, defendant at the trial admitted that he had received all of it.

[7] The fact that prior to the time when default occurred in the making of the payments under the lease contract the defendant had paid to the plaintiff the sum of $600 is made the basis for the argument further advanced by the appellant that the plaintiff could not retain the money of the defendant and recover possession of the property itself, or its value. Conceding the contract to represent in legal effect a conditional sale, the right of the plaintiff to retake possession was not only covered by the express terms of the contract, but the fact that title was reserved in the plaintiff until all payments had been made would give such a right, irrespective of an agreement expressed to that effect. Liver v. Mills et al., 155 Cal. 459, 101 Pac. 299; Van Allen v. Francis, 123 Cal. 474, 56 Pac. 339. The case cited by appellant on the proposition (Muncy v. Brain, 158 Cal. 300, 110 Pac. 945), is not in point, for in that case the seller sold pledges held as security, and applied the proceeds on the alleged purchase price, and also sued to retake the property itself. The court there said, and, of course, very properly, that in cases under such contracts the seller could affirm the right of the buyer to the possession and sue for the purchase price, or retake possession and relinquish claim to the unpaid price, but that both remedies were not open to him.

[8] The principal dispute between the parties at the trial seems to have been over the price of the merchandise; the contention of the defendant being that the agreed price was less than that claimed by the plaintiff. The court, however, resolved the disputed questions in favor of the plaintiff; and, as there was a conflict in the evidence, the trial court's determination thereunder was final.

A careful consideration of each of the questions raised by the appellant leads us to the conclusion that the judgment should not be disturbed, except in that part where damages to accumulate after the date of the judgment are provided for.

The judgment is modified by striking from that portion which reads, "The additional sum of $90 per month from the 4th day of May, 1917, damages for the unlawful detention of said furniture, until said property is delivered to the plaintiff or the value thereof paid," the words embraced in the last clause, to wit, "until said property is delivered to the plaintiff or the value thereof paid." As so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

GRANT v. LOS ANGELES TRANSFER CO.
(Civ. 3180.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 2, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1006(5)—THIRD VERDICT NOT DISTURBED AS EXCESSIVE, EXCEPT ON EXTRAORDINARILY STRONG SHOWING.

Where a negligence case was tried three times, and the verdict on the first trial was $15,000, on the second $10,500, and on the third, $10,000, the verdict on the third trial will not be disturbed on appeal, as being grossly excessive, except on an extraordinarily strong showing that it was excessive and actuated by passion or prejudice.

2. DAMAGES ⇨130(2)—$10,000 NOT EXCESSIVE FOR FRACTURE OF TIBIA AND FIBULA AND A CRUSHING INJURY TO LEFT LEG OF BOY.

A verdict of $10,000 held not excessive to a boy, who was rendered very ill and had a compound fracture of the tibia and fibula and a crushing injury to his left leg, just below the knee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Charles Grant, a minor, by his guardian ad litem, Virginia Grant, against the Los Angeles Transfer Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hickcox & Crenshaw, Norman S. Sterry and George H. Moore, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought to recover damages for the negligence of defendant. A verdict in the sum of $10,000 was awarded plaintiff, and judgment was entered accordingly. There was a motion for new trial, which was denied. The appeal is from the judgment.

From the record we find that, on January 16, 1917, plaintiff, a minor, was injured in an accident at the corner of Ninth and Los Angeles streets, in the city of Los Angeles, through the admitted negligence of the defendant. The plaintiff was taken to the city receiving hospital, was there given temporary aid and assistance, and then removed to the county hospital. The injury consisted of a compound fracture of the tibia and fibula, and a crushing injury to the left leg, just below the knee. The boy was extremely ill when first taken to the hospital, and required stimulation, which was given him by injecting salt solution into his veins. Infection thereafter set in, and his life was in danger. It was some time before the infection began to subside, after which the injury gradually improved. Since that time his general condition, which was very poor, has been continually improving. It is claimed by appellant that there will be no permanent injury, "except perhaps, a slight shortening of the leg, but this is indefinite."

Appellant informs us that the judgment appealed from is the result of a third trial. The first trial was had on June 7, 1917, when a verdict of $15,000 was rendered. This verdict, however, was set aside by the trial judge, Hon. Frederick W. Houser, and a new trial ordered, because the verdict was excessive. Shortly thereafter, and as the parties were about to try the case anew before the same judge without a jury, the court stated that without further proof than was offered at the former trial he would enter judgment for $10,000. Thereupon defendant objected to his trying the case, and the matter was transferred to another department of the same court, where, on the 6th day of September, 1917, it was tried before Hon. Leslie R. Hewitt, judge, and a jury, the result of which was a verdict in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $10,500. The court thereafter denied a motion for a new trial, but, upon the discovery that an instruction had been given which jeopardized the verdict, by consent of counsel for both parties, a new trial was ordered. Trial was again had, on January 17, 1918, resulting in a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $10,000. The judgment entered in accordance therewith is the subject of this appeal.

The only evidence in the case is as to the extent and probable duration of plaintiff's injuries. Only one point is raised by the appeal, namely, that the "amount of the verdict was excessive, and was given under the influence of passion or prejudice."

[1, 2] We have read the entire record, and are not able to agree with appellant in its contention. No good purpose can be served by discussing the evidence, or any part thereof, or in dwelling long upon, or giving a verbose statement of, our reasons for the conclusion reached. Suffice it to say that we have presented to us here the fact that three juries and two trial judges have passed upon the case at different times, and that each and all of them have concluded that $10,000 was not too great a verdict to be awarded herein. Under this state of the record, coupled with the fact that "it has been repeatedly said by the courts, as well as the text-writers, that 'in actions for personal torts the law does not attempt to fix any precise rules for the admeasurement of damages, but from the necessity of the case leaves their assessment to the good sense and unbiased judgment of the jury,' and that the appellate tribunal 'will not interfere in such cases, unless the amount awarded is so grossly excessive as to shock the moral sense and raise a reasonable presumption that the jury, in reaching their verdict, were actuated by passion or prejudice" (Scragg v. Sallee, 24 Cal. App. 133, 140 Pac. 706), we think it would require an exceedingly strong case to move an appellate court to set aside the verdict for the reasons urged. It would be going far afield, in our opinion, in the face of these facts, to assume, as a matter of law, that all these—the three juries and two judges—were moved to reach their conclusions "under the influence of passion or prejudice." No such case is here presented.

Judgment affirmed.

HALL v. CLINE, Sheriff. (Civ. 2738.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 29, 1920.)

1. TROVER AND CONVERSION ⇨54—DAMAGES FOR TIME AND MONEY SPENT IN PURSUIT RECOVERABLE.

In an action for the wrongful conversion of property, under Civ. Code, § 3336, plaintiff is entitled to recover fair compensation as damages for time and money properly expended in pursuit.

2. COURTS ⇨122—AMOUNT INVOLVED IS DETERMINABLE BY GOOD FAITH OF DEMAND IN COMPLAINT.

Whether superior court has jurisdiction in action at law, as one in tort for conversion, is to be determined by demand of complaint made in good faith and reasonably supported by allegations on which founded, and if demand amounts to $300, as in case of the value of the property, plus damages for expenditures made in pursuit, the court has jurisdiction for all purposes, regardless of the amount plaintiff may actually recover.

3. COSTS ⇨263—FIFTY DOLLARS ASSESSED IN ADDITION TO COSTS ON FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 957, where the appeal is not only frivolous, but that it was taken for delay is apparent from an inspection of the record and appellant's brief, the sum of $50 to be paid to plaintiff appellee as damages, will be added to the costs on appeal awarded him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dana R. Weller, Judge.

Action by Harry E. Hall against John C. Cline, Sheriff of Los Angeles County. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. L. Sacks, of San Francisco, for appellant.

George H. Moore and Raymond E. Hoyt, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiff sued to recover $275 as the value of personal property alleged to have been converted by defendant, and also to recover damages in the sum of $200, claim for which was based upon alleged expenditures made in the pursuit thereof.

The court found that defendant converted the property as alleged, the value of which it found to be $240, but it was untrue that plaintiff had suffered any damage on account of expenses incurred in pursuit of the property.

[1, 2] Judgment followed for plaintiff for $240, from which defendant appeals on the judgment roll. The sole ground upon which he claims a reversal is that the court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment. His contention is that the alleged demand of $200 as damages, made in the complaint, was not the subject of a real controversy, but inserted for the purpose of justifying the prayer for a demand within the jurisdiction of the superior court, citing Lehnhardt v. Jennings, 119 Cal. 192, 48 Pac. 56, 51 Pac. 195. In an action for the wrongful conversion of property a plaintiff is entitled to recover a fair compensation as damages for time and money properly expended in pursuit thereof. Civ. Code, § 3336. The record is free from anything tending in the slightest degree to show that the demand for damages was in the nature of a fraud practiced upon the court. On the contrary, it appears to have been made in utmost good faith, and hence is governed by the rule announced in Gardiner v. Royer, 167 Cal. 238, 139 Pac. 75, where it is said:

"Whether the superior court has jurisdiction in an action at law is to be determined by the demand or prayer of the complaint, made in good faith and reasonably supported by the allegations on which it is founded, and that if this demand amounts to $300, exclusive of interest, such court has jurisdiction of the case for all purposes, entirely regardless of the amount which the plaintiff may finally be held to be entitled to recover."

[3] That the appeal is not only frivolous, but was taken for delay, is made apparent from an inspection of the record and appellant's brief in support of the alleged error. The Legislature, by section 957, Code of Civil Procedure, has wisely provided that as a means of discouraging the making of appeals for such purpose the court may, in affirming the judgment, add to the costs on appeal such damages as may be just. The remedy may seem a harsh one, for the reason that as a rule a client is governed largely in such matters by the advice of his attorney who lends himself to such practice; but there is no other method to prevent the growing evil.

To the costs on appeal herein made for delay there is added the sum of $50 to be paid to plaintiff as damages. The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Leafie E. Brewthauer against Frederick W. Brewthauer. From a judgment for defendant denying a divorce, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial granted.

Louis J. Euler, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Morris M. Ferguson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. The plaintiff brought this action to obtain a decree of divorce. Findings and decree were in favor of the defendant, denying a divorce, from which the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The essential features of the case may be gathered from the following quotations from the findings of the court:

"That on or about April 13, 1917, plaintiff and defendant had a quarrel about the repair of a pair of glasses for the plaintiff; that the quarrel became violent on both sides; that plaintiff called defendant an ex-convict, a name calculated greatly to excite the defendant, whereupon the defendant struck at the plaintiff, striking her upon the arm; that he threatened to leave her upon this occasion.

"That in the month of December, 1916, the defendant refused longer to sleep in the same bed with plaintiff, the bed they had been occupying being a large double bed; that thereafter plaintiff slept upon a lounge, which, however, was not an unfit sleeping place.

"That the allegations of paragraph 6 of the complaint have not been proven, except it is true that the defendant stated to two persons that the plaintiff unnecessarily and cruelly beat and struck her daughter; that these statements did not at the time come to the attention of the plaintiff, were believed by the defendant to be true, and were not made maliciously; that the defendant did for more than a year maintain an annoying attitude towards the plaintiff; that the plaintiff also maintained an annoying attitude towards the defendant; that there is no proof that the defendant was during said time insolent towards the plaintiff; he did sulk at times; he did not for weeks at a time refuse to speak to the plaintiff; that within a year last past the defendant did tell one person, but he did not tell various parties that he hated the ground that the plaintiff walked on, and that he would not live with the plaintiff; that he said this, however, not for the purpose of annoying and causing suffering on the part of the plaintiff, but because he did hate the plaintiff, and did not intend to live with her; that the plaintiff had no affection for the defendant.

"That on April 15, 1917, the defendant left and deserted the plaintiff, but such desertion was not against the will or without the consent of the plaintiff; that the conduct of the defendant towards the plaintiff found and alleged in the complaint inflicted certain suffering upon the plaintiff, but the defendant did not by said acts and conduct or otherwise wrongfully or willfully inflict upon the plaintiff a course of grievous mental or physical suffering."

A reading of these findings produces, at least, a feeling that the law should not try to compel this woman to remain the wife of a man who hates the ground she walks on, who has been guilty of inflicting physical violence upon her, who does not intend to live with her, who for months has refused to let her occupy their common bed or sleep in the same room with him, and compelled her to sleep on a cot in another room.

It would seem that when the relations between a husband and wife are as reflected by these findings, such a condition is presented "as utterly to destroy the legitimate ends and objects of matrimony" (Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 Pac. 298, 16 L. R. A. 660), and, the ends and object of matrimony between them having been utterly destroyed, it were better for them and for society that the union be legally dissolved.

We are of the opinion that some of the findings above referred to are not supported by the evidence; that some are contrary to the evidence; and that there is an absence of findings on some of the material allegations of the complaint.

[1] We are also of the opinion that the general finding to the effect that the defendant had not been guilty of extreme cruelty towards the plaintiff is not in accord with the facts proved or admitted by the defendant.

As illustrative of the general attitude of the defendant towards the plaintiff, we quote from the testimony as follows: The plaintiff testified:

"Well, for weeks at a time he hadn't spoken to me at the table or in the room or at any place. Sulky and disagreeable. If I would ask him for anything he would tell me to go to hell and call me an old she-devil and such things all the time."

Gertrude Lynch, a daughter of the plaintiff, testified:

"For several years past he has been sulky. He was always unkind. When she would ask for clothing—I heard her ask him for clothing on one instance—and he would tell her to go and lay down, as though he were talking to a dog, and he was always telling her to go to hell, and she was an old she-devil, and calling her a damn fool, always sulking. At the table he would sit and not ask her for anything to eat. He would go around and search for things at the table rather than talk to her at the table."

The defendant was a witness on the trial in his own behalf, but did not deny any of this testimony. It stands uncontradicted.

The complaint alleged:

"That for more than a year last past the defendant had circulated stories regarding the plaintiff that she had unnecessarily, cruelly, and unmercifully beat and struck her daughter, and that said stories were false."

The court finds:

"That the defendant stated to two persons that the plaintiff unnecessarily and cruelly beat her daughter, but these statements did not at the time come to the attention of the plaintiff, were believed by defendant to be true, and were not made maliciously."

The witness Schultz testified:

"He (defendant) said that she (the plaintiff) was mistreating her something awful, cruelly, and used to pull her by the hair and stamp her with her feet, and he felt sorry for her."

The plaintiff testified that the statement of the defendant was utterly false. The daughter referred to testified:

"I don't remember any whipping as long as I can remember, and certainly not in the last few years; she never treated me unkindly."

The defendant made no denial of having circulated the stories. The court made no finding as to their truth or falsity. The defendant testified to no act witnessed by him, nor to any information received from any source, that caused him to believe the things he was telling were true, and there is no evidence to sustain the finding that the defendant believed his wife had cruelly treated her daughter.

The complaint alleged:

"That on the 15th day of March, 1917, the defendant without the consent of the plaintiff herein deserted this plaintiff."

The finding of the court was:

"That on April 15, 1917, defendant left and deserted the plaintiff, but such desertion was not against the will or without the consent of the plaintiff."

The plaintiff testified:

"Q. Did you leave him, or did he leave you? A. He left me.

"Q. Tell the court the circumstances of his leaving on that occasion. A. Well, he offered me $30 to get out and pay my board some place, which I refused.

"The Court: Q. Did you then leave? A. I didn't leave. He left."

There is no denial of this testimony. The finding that defendant deserted the plaintiff with her consent is contrary to the evidence.

The complaint alleged:

"That during the month of November, 1906, while plaintiff and defendant were living at East Twelfth Street, Los Angeles, the defendant became angry, cursed and swore at the plaintiff, grabbed her by the throat, choked and threatened to kill her."

As to this allegation the court finds:

"That the acts alleged in subdivision A (being the one above quoted) occurred at a time too long prior to the commencement of this action to justify a finding of extreme cruelty based upon said allegation, and the conduct of the defendant as alleged in said subdivision, whatever that conduct was, was subsequently condoned by the plaintiff."

[2] 1. It is probably true that a court would not grant a divorce upon a single act of cruelty occurring so long ago. But the plaintiff was not asking for a divorce based upon one act. She was asking for a divorce founded upon the cumulative effect of all the acts and conduct of the defendant, extending over a period of years. This act was alleged as one of a series.

Mr. Bishop, in discussing cruelty (volume 2, § 1430) says:

"This conduct may consist, under very specific circumstances, of a single act. But commonly, with one or a few acts pre-eminently reprehensible, it is the sum of the entire conjugal life."

[3] A finding in favor of the plaintiff that defendant had, in 1906, choked her and threatened to kill her would have thrown much light upon the defendant's character, his attitude toward the plaintiff, his disposition to be cruel, and his willingness to give scope to such disposition in cruel treatment of his wife. It was error not to make a finding on the allegation. The finding that the acts had been condoned by the plaintiff is not sustained by the evidence. "Condonation implies a condition subsequent; that the forgiving party must be treated with conjugal kindness." Civ. Code, § 117. "Condonation is revoked, and the original cause of divorce revived: * * * (2) When the condonee is guilty of great conjugal unkindness, not amounting to a cause of divorce, but sufficiently habitual and gross to show that the conditions of condonation have not been accepted in good faith, or not fulfilled." Civ. Code, § 121.

It is apparent from the record that, since 1906, the defendant has made no attempt to treat the plaintiff with conjugal kindness. The defendant, by his testimony, interwove the 1906 incident with the occurrences of April, 1917. Speaking of the quarrel that led to his assaulting his wife on April 7, 1917, he said:

"She reminded me of our last quarrel (referring to the time in 1906 when he choked her), and I said, 'Yes, I wish I had killed you then, and then I would have served my sentence in San Quentin, and would have gladly done it instead of living with you.'"

And the plaintiff testified:

"He said he would do San Quentin gladly to see me lay dead at his feet. And I told him it would not be his first trip there. And he said: 'By God, no, and I will kill you;' and he struck me two heavy blows. I raised my arm. He struck me on it, and it was swollen to the elbow the next day. He struck me with his fist, and said he was proud of it."

The witness, Effie Eyster, referring to the same incident, testified:

"As I went through the hall to go into the bedroom I heard him say: 'I will kill you. I will kill you, by God; I will kill you'—and a muffled scream. I saw her the next morning, and her arm was swollen."

The defendant testified that on this occasion he did strike her, but only on the back of her hand and with his finger tips, and that she never screamed or let out a sound.

This reference to the testimony shows that plaintiff only referred to San Quentin in response to defendant's brutal expression of regret that he had not killed her in 1906 (when he choked her) and served out his time in San Quentin. It was only in this connection, and under these conditions, that the plaintiff referred to his prison career.

We are of the opinion that, for all of the reasons above suggested, the plaintiff is entitled to a new trial; and it is so ordered.

KARST v. SELLER et al. (Civ. 2082.)

1. VENUE ⇐41—COMPLAINT HELD TO STATE CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST BOTH DEFENDANTS.

A complaint alleging that defendants were engaged in business of selling motortrucks, and conspired to deceive and did deceive plaintiff in the sale of a motortruck, states a cause of action against both defendants, so that venue cannot be changed to county of nonresident defendant, unless joinder of defendants was fraudulent.

2. VENUE ⇐41—IN SUIT FOR RESCISSION OF CONTRACT ONLY CONTRACT PARTIES CAN BE JOINED.

In a suit to recover purchase price after rescission of a contract for fraud, only the parties to the sales contract can be joined, and the joinder of a resident defendant not a party to such contract does not prevent change of venue, though he may be liable in damages for assisting the fraud.

3. VENUE ⇐78—CANNOT BEGIN NEW ACTION AGAINST THE SAME PARTIES AFTER CHANGE.

Where an action against a nonresident and two resident defendants had been removed for trial, plaintiff could not begin a new action in the same county against the nonresident defendant and one of the residents.

4. VENUE ⇐41—STATING CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST RESIDENT DEFENDANT IS NOT CONCLUSIVE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, authorizing change of venue, though a resident defendant was joined solely to prevent the change, the fact that the complaint states a cause of action against both defendants is not conclusive, but it may be shown that the cause of action stated does not in reality exist.

5. VENUE ⇐78—FINAL DETERMINATION OF APPEALABLE ORDER IS CONCLUSIVE.

The trial court's ruling granting a motion for change of venue after trial of issues of facts, from which an appeal will lie, is a final adjudication of all matters involved in the motion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by Fred J. Karst against H. A. Sellar and another. From an order changing the place of trial, plaintiff appeals. Order affirmed.

Stewart & Stewart and Wm. H. Holmes, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Norman A. Eisner, of San Francisco, and Overton, Lyman & Plumb, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SLOANE, J. Plaintiff appeals from an order changing the place of trial of this action from the county of Los Angeles to the city and county of San Francisco.

The order was made on the application of the defendant Seller on the grounds that he is a resident of San Francisco; that no cause of action exists in favor of plaintiff against the other defendant, J. E. Armstrong; and that the attempt to state a cause of action against said Armstrong was fraudulent, and for the sole purpose of having the action tried in Los Angeles county, where said plaintiff and the defendant Armstrong reside.

[1] The complaint is on an action to recover money paid, notes given, and damages incurred by reason of a rescinded contract of sale of a motortruck to plaintiff by alleged fraudulent and false representations. It is alleged that the two defendants were engaged in the business of selling motortrucks and conspired together to deceive, cheat, and defraud plaintiff; that they falsely, fraudulently, and willfully represented the truck to be a two-ton truck, entirely new, in perfect running order, whereas it was only a ton and a half truck, was not new, and had been misused and damaged; that these facts were known to defendants and unknown to plaintiff; that he had no knowledge of motortrucks himself, but relied upon the representations and was induced thereby to make the purchase; and that he was damaged, etc.

For the purposes of the issue presented on motion for change of venue, or as against a general demurrer, this complaint states a cause of action against both defendants. If the order appealed from can be sustained, it must be on the alleged ground that the joinder of the defendant Armstrong was fraudulently made for the sole purpose of holding the action in the courts of Los Angeles county. It is provided in section 395, Code of Civil Procedure, that—

“If any person is improperly joined as a defendant, or has been made a defendant solely for the purpose of having the action tried in the county where he resides, his residence must not be considered in determining which is the proper county for the trial of the action.”

Respondents, in support of the order granting the change of venue, rely upon certain facts appearing in the bill of exceptions. It appears that previous to filing this complaint plaintiff brought suit in Los Angeles county on this same cause of action against the defendant Seller alone. A change of venue was granted because of defendant's residence in San Francisco, and the papers were transmitted to the superior court of San Francisco county, whereupon plaintiff dismissed the action and brought another suit on the same cause of action, again in the county of Los Angeles, joining as defendants J. E. Armstrong and one Sanford Wixon, the latter being also a resident of the county of Los Angeles. A change of venue to San Francisco was ordered also in this case. It does not appear from the record on what ground, but it seems to be conceded by the argument that it was on the application of defendant Seller, and because of his residence in San Francisco. Whether the ruling of the court, however, was on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action against the Los Angeles defendants, or on the ground that no meritorious ground of action existed against them, is not indicated. Neither does it appear from the bill of exceptions on behalf of the plaintiff that the second action was dismissed. From all that appears from the record it may still be pending in the superior court of San Francisco. However, no issue is raised on this appeal as to another action pending, and all we have to consider is whether or not a valid cause of action, pleaded in good faith, is set out in the complaint here against J. E. Armstrong.

[2] We do not think the record on the order before us disproves the existence of a cause of action against Seller and Armstrong, jointly, on the alleged facts; but such cause of action, if it exists, is a cause of action for damages for fraud and deceit, and not for recovery on rescission of the contract. The complainant, in such a case as this, may rely on the rescission of the contract, and sue to recover the consideration and his damages in attempting to carry out the contract, or, recognizing the contract, he may sue for damages for the fraud perpetrated. The action in which the order here appealed from was made is on the rescission, and it is contended—we think rightly—that only the parties to such contract, or those in privity with them, can be joined. While the complaint in this action charges both defendants jointly on the contract, the record on the motion for change of venue discloses that the contract in question was one between the plaintiff and defendant Seller alone. The fact that defendant Armstrong fraudulently participated in inducing the execution of the contract, while it would render him liable in an action for damages, does not make him a party to the liability involved in the rescission.

[3] But, irrespective of the correctness of respondents' contention on this point, we are of the opinion that plaintiff was estopped by the order granting a change of venue in the second action from again renewing this same action in the Los Angeles court. That action joined defendants Seller and Armstrong on the same state of facts as form the basis for the present suit. The court granted a change of venue to San Francisco on the application of defendant Seller because of his being a resident of that city and county. The facts pleaded in that case are shown to be the same as actually exist in this. If they would not justify the joinder of the two defendants then, they will not justify it now. The court, on a hearing of the matter, must necessarily have held that under that state of facts the defendant Armstrong was not a necessary party defendant. The record does not disclose on what showing of facts, outside the allegations of the complaint, the order changing the place of trial was made in that action, but we must presume it was such as to support the order.

[4] Under the provisions of section 395, Code of Civil Procedure, supra, and the decision of the Supreme Court in McDonald v. California Timber Co., 151 Cal. 159, 90 Pac. 548, the mere fact that the complaint in this case states a cause of action against Armstrong is not conclusive. It may be shown that the cause of action stated does not in reality exist. As we have pointed out, the lower court, by the order made on the second suit, passed upon that point; and we are satisfied, whether the matter may be considered res adjudicata or not, that a defendant, having been determined to be an improper party on one application for change of place of trial, cannot again, and, perhaps, again and again, be made a defendant to give jurisdiction under the same state of facts, by merely camouflaging them in a different form of action which such facts will not support.

[5] The action of the court on the questions involved in the order for change of place of trial has all the characteristics of a final judgment. Issues of facts are presented and tried on their merits, and an appeal lies from the order. We find no California decisions on this point, but the general rule in other jurisdictions seems to be that if a motion involves a substantial right, and a full hearing is afforded thereon, and the order made on such motion is appealable, such order is a final adjudication of all matters involved in the motion. Ann. Cas. 1914D, 975; Hoge v. Norton, 22 Kan. 374; Truesdale v. Farmers' Loan, etc., Co., 67 Minn. 454, 70 N. W. 568, 64 Am. St. Rep. 430; Bennett's Administrator v. Russell's Executrix, 39 Mo. 152, 90 Am. Dec. 457; Fitterling v. Welch, 76 Minn. 441, 79 N. W. 500; Rogers v. McCord-Collins Co., 19 Okl. 115, 91 Pac. 864; Smith v. Zalinski, 94 N. Y. 524.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

HUNT, County Treasurer, v. CONTINENTAL NAT. BANK et al. (Civ. 3174.)

HIGHWAYS  113(4)—NO MATERIAL AND LABOR LIEN ON BONDS ISSUED TO CONTRACTOR FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

The remedy provided for materialmen and laborers under Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, is not available to them in cases where their claim arises out of the doing of labor or the furnishing of material or appliances to and for a contractor having a contract for road work under the provision of Road District Improvement Act 1907 (St. 1907, p. 806); their only recourse being the bond of the contractor, and filing with the board of supervisors notice of their claims to withhold payment not effecting a lien on the bonds to be used in paying the contractor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

Interpleader action by John N. Hunt, as County Treasurer of the County of Los Angeles, against the Continental National Bank and others. From an adverse judgment, the named defendant appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. J. Hill, of Los Angeles, for respondent Hunt.

James, Smith & McCarthy, of Los Angeles, for respondent Western Reinforced Concrete Pipe Co.

G. P. Adams and W. W. Orme, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Parsons & Gotshall.

Robert E. Abbott, of Los Angeles, for respondents Acme White Lead & Color Works and Richard Rothwell.

W. C. Petchner, of Los Angeles, for respondent Adams & McKee Hardware Co.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of certain defendants in an action in interpleader brought by the plaintiff, as county treasurer of Los Angeles county, to determine certain conflicting claims to certain bonds issued by the said treasurer under the provisions of the Road District Improvement Act of 1907. The facts out of which the controversy arose are undisputed and are briefly these:

The supervisors of the county of Los Angeles undertook the construction of a road therein under the provisions of the Road District Improvement Act of 1907. St. 1907, p. 806. The contract was regularly let to a contractor, and the work completed thereunder and duly accepted by said board, and the bonds provided in said act to be issued in payment for such work were duly issued by the said treasurer of the county as required by the terms of said act. In the meantime, and after the execution of the contract, and prior to the completion of the work, the contractor, in consideration of money advanced to him by the Continental National Bank to enable him to prosecute such work and as security for such advances, assigned to the said Continental National Bank his said contract and his rights thereunder to the issuance to him of the said bonds to be issued in payment for said work. Upon the completion of said work, various laborers and materialmen who had performed labor upon or supplied materials and appliances for use in the performance of said work, and whose claims had not been paid by the contractor, filed with the said board of supervisors notices of their claims, with notices to withhold payment to the contractor under the provisions of section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and thereby undertook to assert their respective claims of right to receive the amounts of their said claims out of the said bonds before any issuance of the same to or payments thereunder to the contractor or his said assignee. The Continental National Bank, as such assignee, also presented its claim of right to receive all of said bonds under and by virtue of its said assignment thereof from said contractor. To determine these adverse claims to the bonds in question, the plaintiff, as such treasurer, instituted this action, and the parties defendant, having been thus interpleaded, presented their respective claims to the trial court, which by its judgment undertook to declare that the said labor and material lien claimants had by virtue of their said stop notices under section 1184, Code of Civil Procedure, established their right to payment of their said claims out of said bonds and had liens thereon, which the trial court attempted to enforce and satisfy by directing certain of said bonds, amounting in value to the sum of $4,560.58, the aggregate amount of said labor and materialmen's claims, should be delivered to the sheriff of said county, to be collected by him as payable, the proceeds thereof to be applied in satisfaction of such claims.

The Continental National Bank appeals from such judgment and urges two main contentions upon such appeal. By the first of these it raises the question as to whether the remedy provided for laborers and materialmen under the terms of section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure is available to them in cases where their claims arise out of the doing of labor or the furnishing of materials or appliances to and for a contractor having a contract for road work under the provisions of the Road District Improvement Act of 1907. Upon an examination of the Road District Improvement Act in the light of the recent decision of the case of Adamson v. Paonessa (Sup.) 179 Pac. 880, we are constrained to hold that the contention of the appellant upon this question must be upheld. It is true that the above-cited case arose out of the doing of street work under the provisions of the Street Improvement Act of 1911, but otherwise the position of the respective parties to that case and to the case at bar is practically identical. Each is a case in interpleader; in each the plaintiff is the treasurer, entitled to issue the bonds in controversy; in each case the assignee of the contractor's rights under his contract is one of the claimants to the whole of the bonds to be issued in payment of the improvement work. The other claimant in the cited case is the bondsman of the contractor, who has paid certain claims for material and labor, and has by so doing become subrogated to the rights of said claimants; while in the instant case it is the labor and material claimants themselves who are directly insisting upon the application of a portion of the bonds to the payment of their claims.

In respect to the acts of the Legislature of 1907 and of 1911, providing for street and road improvements to be paid for upon what may be termed the bond issue plan, out of which the conflicting claims in each of these cases arose, they differ somewhat in their verbiage, but their general effect is the same. They each provide a method of payment for improvements undertaken thereunder, which is not that of payment in money, for which the public official body ordering the improvements of the county or municipality or district within and for the benefit of which the improvements are made are directly liable, but for which payment a plan of assessment of the property within the public subdivision benefited by the improvement in question is to be carried into effect, and out of the funds derived from such assessment the bonds to be issued in the first instance for such improvements are to be eventually paid. Each of these two acts of the Legislature contains a section requiring the contractor to give a bond which shall inure to the benefit of any and all performing labor upon or furnishing materials to be used in the improvement undertaken under each of said acts. In each of said acts it is specifically provided that the bonds to be issued thereunder are to be payable exclusively out of the funds derivable exclusively from the assessment of the area, and that the county or municipality issuing such bonds shall not be otherwise holden for the payment of the same. Such being the similarities of these two acts of the Legislature, the Supreme Court, in dealing with the question as to whether the provisions of section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure were available to laborers or materialmen having unpaid claims for such labor or materials supplied to contractors for street improvement work done under the provisions of the act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), held that under the terms of the act there was no existing fund out of which the contractor was to be paid, and hence no money provided in the hands of any official or body which could practicably be retained in order to meet the claims of those seeking to have such funds or money retained in order to meet their claims asserted through the method provided under section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court quotes the provisions of said section as amended in 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1315), and then proceeds to say:

"This provision is clearly applicable only to cases where the contractor is to be paid either by the owner of the property upon which the work is done or by the person, public or private, by whom the contract was made. It cannot be applied where payment is not to be made in that manner, but is to be made by a number of different persons' not parties to the contract each of whom pays independently his separate share of the amount due."

The court concludes that under the Improvement Act of 1911 the only recourse of unpaid laborers and materialmen is to the bond of the contractor, which is made to expressly inure to their benefit.

It may be claimed that a distinction can be drawn between the provisions of the Improvement Act of 1907 and those of the act of 1911, arising out of the fact that in the latter act the bonds are to be paid by assessments levied upon the individual property of each person benefited by the improvement of the street, while in the act of 1907 the bonds are to be paid by district taxation; but this is a distinction without a difference, since under each act the official body issuing the bonds does not bind the county or district or municipality to pay the same, but only to take the legal steps for the levy and collection of the special taxes out of which the bonds are to be paid. We can therefore perceive no escape from the application of the reasoning and conclusions of the Supreme Court in the foregoing case to the case at bar, and it follows therefrom that the laborers and materialmen who are the real respondents herein, having no rights under section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure which would enable them to reach and impound the bonds issued for the work done by the contractor under the provisions of the act in question, the court was in error in its attempt to sequester any portion of such bonds as against the claim of right of the Continental National Bank to receive the whole thereof as the assignee of the contractor.

This view of the case renders unnecessary any consideration of the merits of the several claims of the respondents as laborers and materialmen under the provisions of section 1184, Code of Civil Procedure, since none of them were entitled to relief in this case under said section.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to the trial court to enter a judgment directing the delivery of the bonds in question, and of all moneys collected thereon by the plaintiff, to the appellant, Continental National Bank.

PALMER v. GUARANTY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK. (Civ. 2547.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 27, 1920. On Petition for Rehearing, Feb. 21, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 763—RESPONDENT CAN IMMEDIATELY ASK FOR SUPPLEMENTAL RECORD IF BRIEF IS DEFECTIVE.

Where the appeal is taken under the alternative method and the brief omits parts of record necessary to illustrate the points, respondent can avoid the delay which would otherwise result under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, as amended, prohibiting adverse decision for insufficiency of the brief, and authorizing court to require a supplemental brief, by applying at once, on the service of defective brief, for an order directing the filing of a supplemental record.

2. WITNESSES $\hookrightarrow$ 164(3) — PLAINTIFF SUING EXECUTOR CANNOT IDENTIFY HANDWRITING OF DECEDENT.

In an action against an administrator, where deceased's signature to a letter, admitting an absolute deed to be a mortgage, was disputed, it was error, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, to permit plaintiff to testify that the signature to the letter was that of deceased.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS $\hookrightarrow$ 437 (7)—ACTION NEED NOT BE BEGUN ON INSUFFICIENT CLAIM.

Where, after a claim so defective that it could not be the basis for an action was rejected, a proper claim was filed within the time allowed, an action might be begun within three months after the rejection of that claim, though more than that time had elapsed since rejection of defective claim.

On Petition for Rehearing.

4. TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 105(2)—INCOMPETENT TESTIMONY BY ADVERSE PARTY, NOT OBJECTED TO, CANNOT SUPPORT RECOVERY.

Testimony of plaintiff, in an action against an administrator incompetent under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, though admitted without objection, is of no evidentiary value, and cannot support a judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by George K. Palmer against the Guaranty Trust & Savings Bank, as executor of the last will of J. F. McDermott, deceased, to enforce a claim against the estate. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed, and petition for rehearing denied.

Gilbert F. Wyvell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thomas A. Sanson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff. The action is to recover upon a claim against the estate of J. F. McDermott, deceased, presented to the executor and by it rejected. As appears from the complaint, the claim grew out of the fact that plaintiff borrowed from deceased $300, and by grant deed, intended as a mortgage to secure same, conveyed to the lender a certain lot upon which the grantee gave a mortgage for a loan procured by him, and thereafter conveyed his equity in the lot in exchange for other property. The claim was for the sum of $1,154.40, alleged to be the difference between what McDermott received for the property and the sum due him on the loan so made to plaintiff.

The appeal is had and taken under the alternative method, and while appellant in its brief directs attention to a number of rulings which it insists are errors committed by the court, and upon which it bases an argument for reversal, it has neglected to print in its brief the parts of the record necessary to illustrate the points made, as required by section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, and without reference to which its argument is unintelligible. Hence counsel for respondent, relying upon what is said in Miller v. Oliver, 174 Cal. 404, 163 Pac. 367, and Williams v. Hawkins, 20 Cal. App. 162, 128 Pac. 754, to the effect that the court will, in considering the questions presented, confine itself to an inspection of the portions of the record so printed in appellant's brief, and, unless they exhibit the error, will affirm the judgment appealed from, has, except as to one or two questions, submitted the case without serious argument. As a result of the action of the courts pursuant to the provisions of section 953c in affirming judgments on appeal upon what is printed in appellant's brief or supplement thereto, and without referring to the typewritten transcript, the Legislature in its wisdom, and to relieve such attorneys from the consequences of acts due to indolence or incompetency, amended the section by providing that no appeal should be decided adversely by reason of such omission, but that the court should direct the party to print and serve upon the adverse party and file with the court a supplement to his brief wherein should be set forth "in full that portion of the record relied upon by such party and not printed in any former brief," and which "may be desirable for the full presentation of the points at issue." It might be urged with some reason that under this provision the court should first acquaint itself with the points made in the brief and then, after a careful examination of the typewritten record, inform appellant's attorney just what parts of the record were necessary to illustrate the points made by him in his brief, which is about as practical as the Dutchman's flea powder, the efficacy of which depended upon catching the flea, choking its mouth open and administering the poisonous powder, which was guaranteed to kill. However this may be, it is clear that under the amendment of the statute the power of the court upon such defective record is restricted to a continuance of the hearing of the appeal, the purpose of which may be to delay respondent in collecting a righteous judgment, and grant appellant's counsel further time to present a record under an order therefor, and to such an extent as may be necessary to fully illustrate the errors of which he complains. Under this method, not only is little left to the attorney of an appellant, but it is well calculated to encourage indolence and relieve him of responsibility to his client, who, as a result, is, or may be, the victim of such negligence. That few attorneys bearing the reputation for painstaking care in prosecuting appeals have adopted this substitute method of presenting their records encourages the hope that if the Legislature does not repeal it attorneys generally will abandon it. There should be one, and only one, method of presenting a record on appeal, and this should be simple, clear, and free from uncertainty in its procedure.

[1] We may suggest, however, that counsel for a respondent might prevent such delay in the hearing of an appeal by at once, upon the service of such defective brief, applying to the court for an order directing appellant to serve and file a supplemental record, as required by the amended section, and, upon an order extending his time therefor, postpone the filing of his brief until a proper record is presented.

In the instant case, while the record is defective as illustrating most of the alleged errors, it is sufficient in presenting two points urged for a reversal, both of which are covered by respondent's brief, and since upon one of them we think the judgment must be reversed, we feel the interests of the parties will be best served by disposing of the question, rather than by continuing the hearing to the next calendar.

[2] It appears that the deed made by plaintiff to McDermott was a grant deed. Nevertheless he claims that it was intended by the parties as a mortgage to secure a loan. The burden was upon him to establish the fact that, though in form unconditional, it was intended as a mortgage. For this purpose he offered in evidence a letter purporting to be signed by J. F. McDermott, the effect of which was to prove plaintiff's contention. The genuineness of the signature thereto was not admitted, and plaintiff, over defendant's objection, was permitted to testify that he knew the handwriting of J. F. McDermott, and that the signature attached to the letter was that of McDermott, and thereupon it was admitted in evidence. In so ruling the trial court erred. Section 1880, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that:

"The following persons cannot be witnesses:
* * * 3. Parties or assignors of parties to an action or proceeding, or persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted, against an executor or administrator upon a claim, or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person."

It clearly appears that the witness was a party to an action prosecuted by him against the executor of deceased, upon a claim arising in a transaction had by him with defendant's testator and made against his estate, and that the subject of plaintiff's testimony as such witness was the fact as to whether or not the deceased in his lifetime signed the letter, and without proof of which fact the contents of the letter could not be received in evidence. As to whether McDermott agreed to what was stated in the letter was made to depend upon whether he signed the same or authorized his signature thereto. Respondent directs our attention to the cases of Cowdery v. McChesney, 124 Cal. 363, 57 Pac. 221, and Roche v. Ware, 71 Cal. 375, 12 Pac. 284, 60 Am. Rep. 539, which decisions are to the effect that in an action upon a claim, proof of which appears in the books of account caused to be kept by deceased, such plaintiff, who, as bookkeeper for deceased, kept the books or is cognizant of their correctness, may, notwithstanding the provision of section 1880, Code of Civil Procedure, testify to facts the establishment of which is a necessary prerequisite to the admission of the books in evidence. To our minds, however, these cases cannot be deemed authority upon which to support the rulings of the court in permitting the testimony here received. While there was other testimony which, in a slight degree, bore upon the question as to whether or not the deed was intended as a mortgage, it was of a very meager nature, and hence it cannot be said that the court would have reached the conclusion it did without the added weight given by the contents of the letter.

[3] The claim which forms the basis of the action was presented on October 7, 1916, which was in due time, and following its rejection this action was instituted within three months thereafter, as provided by the statute. It further appears that theretofore, on March 9, 1916, the executor had forwarded to plaintiff, then in Florida, a claim which he executed and sent to the executor. This claim was defective and insufficient as the basis upon which to found an action, by reason of which fact the subsequent claim was presented within the time plaintiff was entitled to present the same. Nevertheless, plaintiff, upon the authority of Gillespie v. Wright, 93 Cal. 169, 28 Pac. 862, insists that the action should have been brought upon the claim first filed, and, since it was not instituted until more than three months thereafter, the action on the second claim was barred. On the contrary, if a party makes an improper attempt to present a claim to an administrator, particularly where it is so defective as to be insufficient to constitute the basis for a cause of action, he is not estopped from presenting one in due form, if within proper time, and upon which an action may be based. Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 660, 48 Pac. 800; Warren v. McGill, 103 Cal. 153, 37 Pac. 144.

For the want of a sufficient record upon which to consider them, other alleged errors are not discussed.

The judgment is reversed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Respondent's petition for a rehearing is denied.

[4] The decision is not based upon the ground that the testimony of Palmer was received over defendant's objection, but founded upon the fact that section 1880, Code of Civil Procedure, declares that a party in an action prosecuted against an executor upon a claim arising in a transaction with a deceased person cannot be a witness as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of the deceased. Hence, conceding, as claimed by petitioner, that no objection was interposed to the reception of the testimony given by Palmer, nevertheless the same must be deemed of no evidentiary value.

SECCOMBE v. GLENS FALLS INS. CO.
(Civ. 2698.)(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division I, California. Jan. 29, 1920.)1. INSURANCE — 612(2)—FAILURE TO RENDER PRELIMINARY PROOFS OF LOSS BARS RECOVERY.

Failure of the owner of insured property to render preliminary proofs of loss to the insurer as required by the policy bars a recovery on the policy under a provision thereof that no suit or action for the recovery of any claim shall be sustained until compliance with the requirements therein.

2. INSURANCE — 612(2)—FAILURE TO RENDER PROOFS OF LOSS HELD NOT TO PREVENT RECOVERY BY MORTGAGEE.

An insurance policy, to which was attached a union mortgage clause making the loss payable to the holder of a trust deed, held to contain in effect two contracts, one with the owner and one with the mortgagee, on whom no duty of furnishing proofs of loss was imposed, and to permit a recovery by the mortgagee notwithstanding failure of the owner to furnish such proofs as required by the policy.

3. INSURANCE — 146(3)—POLICY CONSTRUED AGAINST INSURER AND SO AS TO AVOID FORFEITURE.

Uncertain language in a policy should be construed most strongly against the insurer, and so interpreted, if possible, as to avoid a forfeiture under Civ. Code, § 1442.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by A. H. Seccombe against the Glens Falls Insurance Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Charles L. Chandler and Dexter & Ellis, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John R. Layng, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Upon the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the court sustained an objection to the introduction of any evidence thereunder and gave judgment for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

The action is based upon a policy of fire insurance issued to May Prutsman upon property of which she was the owner, and upon which she had executed a deed of trust in favor of plaintiff to secure a promissory note executed by her to him, which policy contained a provision for his benefit as mortgagee. The policy, clause A, contains a statement that—

"Subject to all the conditions of this policy, loss, if any, on building, payable to A. H. Seccombe (who holds trust deed). Mortgage clause attached."

The mortgage clause so referred to reads as follows:

"Union Mortgage Clause. New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Rhode Island Standard Mortgage Clause with Full Contribution. Loss or damage, if any, under this policy on building only, shall be payable to A. H. Seccombe (who holds trust deed) * * * as first mortgagee (or trustee), as interest may appear, and this insurance, as to the interest of the mortgagee (or trustee), only, therein, shall not be invalidated by any act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner of the within described property."

Clause C provides:

"This policy is made and accepted subject to the foregoing stipulations and conditions and those hereinafter stated, which are hereby specially referred to and made a part of this policy. * * *"

Clause D, headed "Duty of Insured in Case of Loss," provides that—

"When a loss occurs the insured must give to this company written notice thereof without unnecessary delay, * * * and "within sixty days after the commencement of the fire the insured shall render to the company * * * preliminary proof of loss, consisting of a written statement signed and sworn to by him, setting forth" certain matters unnecessary to here specify.

Clause E provides that—

"No suit or action on this policy for the recovery of any claim shall be sustained, until after full compliance by the insured with all the foregoing requirements."

It appears from the complaint that the dwelling house covered by the policy was destroyed by fire on November 26, 1915, and that neither May Prutsman as owner nor plaintiff as mortgagee, within 60 days after the commencement of the fire, as provided in clause D, rendered to defendant preliminary proof of the loss.

[2] As held by the trial court, respondent insists that the same rule applies to plaintiff as mortgagee, and that, since neither he nor the owner complied with the provision as to rendering the required proofs, his right to maintain the action is likewise barred. As to this question, due in some cases, perhaps, to the difference in interpretation of the language of the contract, the authorities are not in harmony. Thus, in Southern H. & B. Loan Ass'n v. Home Insurance Co., 94 Ga. 167, 21 S. E. 375, 27 L. R. A. 844, 47 Am. St. Rep. 147, where the mortgage clause was identical with the one here involved, it is held that the mortgagee could not recover, where neither he nor the owner complied with the provision in rendering proofs within the time specified. Other courts, however, have adopted the rule announced in section 2795 of Joyce on Insurance, that—

"The mortgage clause making the mortgagee the payee, and stipulating that the insurance should not be invalidated by the mortgagor's acts or neglect, constitutes an independent contract between said mortgagee and insurer, and in such case the subject matter of the insurance is the mortgagee's insurable interest, and not the real estate, and the risk will not be avoided by any acts of the mortgagor, whether done prior or subsequently to or at the time of the issue of the policy."

To the same effect is Clement on Fire Insurance, volume 1, p. 208, where it is said:

"The failure of the mortgagor and owner to furnish such proofs, either wholly or within the stipulated time, constitutes one of the neglects, from the invalidating consequences of which the mortgagee is exempted."

In Reed v. Firemen's Insurance Co., 81 N. J. Law, 523, 80 Atl. 462, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 343, the court construes a like mortgage clause as a contract between the insurer and the mortgagee separate and independent from the policy upon which it is ingrafted, reference to which, however, is had only for the purpose of showing the contract to which the mortgage clause refers, and in deciding the point said:

"The express terms of the policy limit the furnishing of such proof to the insured. Therefore a demand upon the mortgagee to do so is without the express agreement contained in the contract, and is not binding upon the mortgagee."

To the same effect are the cases of Eddy v. London Assurance Corp., 143 N. Y. 311, 38 N. E. 307, 25 L. R. A. 686, Heilbrunn v. German Alliance Ins. Co., 202 N. Y. 610, 95 N. E. 823, Smith v. Union Ins. Co., 25 R. I. 260, 55 Atl. 715, 105 Am. St. Rep. 882, and Hanover Fire Ins. Co. v. Bohn, 48 Neb. 743, 67 N. W. 774, 58 Am. St. Rep. 719.

Upon the authority of the cases cited we are constrained to hold that the policy in effect contained two separate contracts of indemnity: One insuring the risk of the mortgagor who by the terms of the contract was bound by the stipulation contained in clause D under which, as a condition of recovery, she was required in case of the insured property being destroyed by fire to render proof thereof within 60 days from the commencement of the fire, and the other insuring the risk of the mortgagee which, since it contained no provision requiring him so to do, could not as a condition of his right to recover for his loss be required to render preliminary proof as to the destruction of the property. As to his rights in the contract, it was expressly provided by the union mortgage clause that no act or neglect of the mortgagor or owner, upon whom by clause D was imposed the duty of making such proof, should invalidate the mortgagee's interest in the insurance. This conclusion is unaffected by the fact that clause A declares that, "subject to all the conditions of this policy," loss is payable to plaintiff, for the reason that such provision is qualified by what is said in clause B, referred to in clause A as the "mortgage clause attached."

[3] If this were not so, and conceding the stipulations inconsistent, the uncertain language used should be construed most strongly against the insurance company, and so interpreted, if possible, as to avoid a forfeiture. Section 1442, Civ. Code; Welch v. British American, etc., Co., 148 Cal. 223, 82 Pac. 964, 113 Am. St. Rep. 223, 7 Ann. Cas. 396; Harp v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 130 Ga. 726, 61 S. E. 704, 14 Ann. Cas. 299.

While clause E provides that no suit or action on this policy for the recovery of any claim shall be sustained until after full compliance by the insured with all the foregoing requirements, it has reference to the owner to whom the policy was issued, and not to rights under the contract made with the mortgagee.

While section 2541, Civil Code, provides that where the mortgagor as insurer neglects the performance of acts necessary to the validity of the insurance, the mortgagee named in a policy as being entitled to indemnity in case of loss may perform them, such provision is restricted to acts "prior to the loss," which, if not performed, would avoid the insurance.

In our opinion, the complaint is sufficient in stating facts to constitute a cause of action, and hence the court erred in refusing to permit plaintiff to introduce evidence thereunder.

The judgment is reversed.

Action by Charles G. Gardner as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Knox Automobile Company, against the City of Glendale Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Benj. E. Page and Arthur C. Hurt, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jones & Evans and Muhleman & Crump, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought by plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy of the Knox Automobile Company to recover the purchase price of a combined hose and chemical fire apparatus sold to the city by the Vance-Canavan Motor Company, as agents for the Knox Automobile Company. The defendant alleged payment and facts upon which it claimed an estoppel against plaintiff. The court found that all the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint were true, excepting those with reference to nonpayment of the purchase price of the apparatus, and also found that the acts of the agents of plaintiff in collecting the amount of plaintiff's demand from the city were thereafter fully and completely ratified by the plaintiff, and constituted full payment by the defendant of plaintiff's claim. As conclusions of law, the trial court found that plaintiff was estopped from the right to recover against the defendant and that the acts of the agents of plaintiff in collecting the amount of plaintiff's demand from the city were thereafter fully and completely ratified and confirmed by the plaintiff, and constituted full payment of the claim.

The facts of the case are that in May, 1913, plaintiff's agents, the Vance-Canavan Motor Company, procured from the city of Glendale a contract for the purchase of certain fire apparatus from the Knox Automobile Company. Thereafter the latter company was adjudged bankrupt, and the plaintiff was appointed trustee of its estate. The apparatus was constructed according to specifications under his direction, and on September 19, 1913, he addressed to the city of Glendale a letter, stating that he was shipping the apparatus to his agents for delivery to the city, and requested that the payment be made directly to him, and not to his agents. Four days later plaintiff shipped the apparatus to his agents, and at the same time addressed them a letter inclosing an invoice which read in part as follows:

"Sold to Vance-Canavan Motor Car Co., Los Angeles, Cal., 1 Model M 3 Combination #5240 $6,250.00 Less 20%, $1,250.00, $5,000.00. Less 5%, $250.00, $4,750.00. For Glendale Fire Dept."

The apparatus was received by the agents in Los Angeles, who paid the freight thereon. When delivery was tendered to the city authorities they exhibited to the agents plaintiff's letter of September 19th, directing that payment be made to the receiver, whereupon the agents declined to make delivery. The time for delivery specified in the original contract having long since expired, the city authorities demanded that immediate delivery be made, and, in order to secure delivery, they took from the agents an agreement to indemnify the city against any claim which the trustee might make against it, and thereupon made payment to the agents of the full sum of $6,250, and accepted the apparatus. Some time thereafter the plaintiff wrote to the city authorities, inquiring when payment would be made to him, and in reply thereto the city clerk notified him that payment in full had been made through his agents, and that the city had taken security to satisfy any claims which the plaintiff might make against it. On February 27, 1914, plaintiff wrote to the city authorities that he had not received the warrant from his agents, and that he, therefore, made demand upon the city for a duplicate warrant. In March of the same year plaintiff came to Los Angeles, and conferred with the city authorities and his agents, at which time he was informed by the city authorities that unless an adjustment was made the city would commence suit against him and his agents to have the controversy legally determined. A few days thereafter plaintiff notified the city authorities that some settlement had been made with his agents, but the details of the settlement were not made known to defendant until after this proceeding was instituted. The trial court found that, as a result of his visit in March, 1914, the plaintiff received from his agents the sum of $2,202, which he then agreed should be applied on the money collected by his agents from the city of Glendale, and that at the same time he gave to his agents credit for the sum of $1,500 as commissions due them on account of the sale of the apparatus to the city. The court also found that in March, 1914, one of plaintiff's agents was the owner of certain property and property interests, both real and personal, and that defendant's attorney was aware of those facts at the time, and forbore to sue by reason of the statement of plaintiff made at that time regarding the settlement which he had made with his agents; that since said time said agent had disposed of or lost his property, and was, at the time of the filing of this action, insolvent. Upon these facts the trial court found that the defendant had made full payment of the purchase price of the apparatus to plaintiff's agents, that the receipt of the purchase price was ratified and confirmed by plaintiff, and that plaintiff was estopped from any right to prosecute the action against the defendant.

If any one of these special defenses is sound, the judgment in favor of the defendant must be affirmed. That the act of the agents in collecting the purchase price of the apparatus was fully ratified by their principal cannot be doubted. The sale was actually made by the agents with the approval of the principal; and thereafter, and before delivery, the principal notified respondent that it should make payment directly to him; but four days later he shipped the goods to the agents and billed them to him for $4,750, rather than $6,250, the agreed purchase price. He did not bill the apparatus at any time to the city of Glendale, but required the agents to pay the freight on arrival, and left it to the agents to make delivery and receive payment without any notice to the agents of the previous instructions to the city authorities that payment should be made directly to him. It was not until after the agents failed to remit to the receiver that he complained of the transaction, or made any demand upon the city for the purchase price. Then, without notice to the city authorities, other than to say that some settlement had been made with the agents, he received from them $2,202 in cash, and allowed them $1,500 on account of their commissions due from this sale.

[1, 2] If a principal ratifies any portion of an unauthorized transaction of his agent, he must be deemed to have ratified the whole of it. A principal may not receive the benefits and at the same time disclaim responsibility for the methods adopted by his agent. The acceptance of the benefits of the transaction by the principal constitutes the ratification of the acts of his agent. The Supreme Court aptly stated the rule in Gribble v. Columbus Brewing Co., 100 Cal. 67, 71, 34 Pac. 527, 529, as follows:

"And where, with full knowledge of all the facts involved, a principal reaps the fruits of the unauthorized contract of his agent, and for some time yields acquiescence to its provisions, he will be deemed to have ratified it, and will be estopped, as against one who has fully performed the contract on his part, from repudiating it to the injury of the latter."

[3] The facts of this case are controlled by the rule stated, and further discussion of the points raised is unnecessary.

The judgment is affirmed.

HACKETT v. MORSE, Public Health and Safety Com'r, et al. (Civ. 3218.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 63(1)—WISDOM OF CIVIL SERVICE PROVISION IS NOT COURT QUESTION.

The wisdom of provision in a city charter authorizing appeals from orders discharging civil service employes is not a question which the courts can consider.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 218(9)—CIVIL SERVICE BOARD ON APPEAL OF DISCHARGED EMPLOYE CAN REVISE THE PUNISHMENT; "MATTER UNDER INVESTIGATION."

The power given the civil service board by Oakland Charter, $\S$ 81, 82, to determine the "matter under investigation" on appeal by a discharged employe includes the power to determine not only the guilt of employe, but also the punishment he should properly receive, and the board could reinstate the employe with loss only of pay for the time since his discharge.

3. EVIDENCE $\S$ 83(2)—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 218(9)—POSSIBLE ABUSE OF POWER DOES NOT DISPROVE POWER, SINCE OFFICERS WILL PRESUMABLY DO THEIR DUTY.

That civil service board may abuse its power on appeal from orders discharging employes does not show that the power was not granted by the charter, since the presumption that public officials will do their duty applies to the board.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; A. F. St. Sure, Judge.

Case submitted to trial court on agreed statement by Thomas Hackett against F. F. Morse, as Commissioner of Public Health and Safety of the City of Oakland. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant and the City of Oakland appeal. Affirmed.

H. L. Hagan, City Atty., and John J. Earle, Asst. City Atty., both of Oakland, for appellants.

Wm. B. Smith, of Oakland, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,764.78 against the appellant city of Oakland, which judgment also directed the issuance of a writ of mandate commanding appellant F. F. Morse, as commissioner of public health and safety of the city of Oakland, to reinstate plaintiff and respondent to his position in the fire department of the city of Oakland. The case was submitted to the trial court upon an agreed statement of material facts, from which it appears that on May 27, 1918, the plaintiff was a member of the fire department of the city of Oakland; that the said position of the plaintiff was at all times mentioned herein, and now is, in the classified civil service of said city of Oakland; that on May 27, 1918, plaintiff was suspended by the chief of the fire department for refusal to obey an order of the said chief of the fire department; that on June 3, 1918, without having had a hearing or trial, and without having been served with a copy of any charge or charges against him, plaintiff was informed by the commissioner of public health and safety that he was discharged from the fire department on the ground of insubordination. Plaintiff filed a notice of appeal from the order of said commissioner with the civil service board within the time prescribed by the city charter. The matter was heard by the civil service board; the commissioner of public health and safety and the plaintiff both being represented by counsel. Thereafter the civil service board rendered its decision by which the plaintiff was found not guilty of insubordination that would warrant his discharge from his position, and that such penalty would be unjust, and it was ordered that he be retained in his said position, and that he report for duty and resume his work in said position upon August 1, 1918. The board further stated in its decision:

"That it is the opinion of the board that for making any objection to being transferred to Engine Company No. 6 that said Thomas Hackett should not be entitled to or receive any compensation from the city from June 3, 1918, to August 1, 1918."

A certified copy of the findings and decision of the civil service board were served upon the commissioner of public health and safety, as provided for in the city charter. The plaintiff reported to the said commissioner several times and requested to be assigned to his position in said fire department, and was refused. The amount of salary that would have been earned by the plaintiff in his said position from August 1, 1918, to September 30, 1919, as prescribed by the city charter, is $1,764.78, the amount for which the plaintiff secured judgment against the city.

[1] The defendants concede the plaintiff's right to appeal to the civil service board, and their only contention is that said board has no power to revise the punishment imposed upon an employé by the commissioner; that the civil service board merely has the power to inquire whether or not the employé is guilty of the offense charged, and if it be found that he is guilty of such offense, then the civil service board has no power to change the punishment inflicted by the commissioner. Many arguments are made upon both sides of this controversy based upon governmental efficiency and political expediency. There is much to be said upon both sides of this question; but the arguments are not pertinent here and will not be discussed by us, because the city charter of Oakland expresses the will of the people with relation to this matter, and it is not within the power of the courts to reconsider and weigh the considerations which should have actuated the people in placing certain power with the civil service board. Section 81 of the city charter of Oakland provides:

"All persons holding positions in the classified civil service shall be subject to suspension, fine, and also to removal from office or employment by the commissioner in whose department they are employed, * * * but subject to the appeal of the aggrieved party to the civil service board as herein provided."

Section 82 provides:

"Any person suspended, fined or discharged * * * may within five days from the making by a commissioner of the order suspending, fining or discharging him * * * appeal therefrom to the civil service board, which shall fully hear and determine the matter. The accused shall be entitled to appear personally, and to have counsel and a public hearing. The finding and decision of the board shall be certified to the official from whose order the appeal is taken, and shall forthwith be enforced and followed by him."

[2] The civil service board has acted under the authority of the above-quoted sections. It has fully heard and determined the matter of the discharge of the plaintiff. It has found that he should not have been discharged; that for his failure to obey the order of his chief he should forfeit two months' salary and be reinstated at the expiration of that time. It is our opinion that, since the board shall fully hear and determine the matter, it must hear and pass upon all questions involved in the controversy. The question of what is a reasonable punishment for an offense is as important as the question of whether or not an employé committed an offense, and it is as necessary for the accomplishment of the purposes of the civil service system that the board have power to investigate the one as the other. There being no restriction upon the civil service board, we must hold that power fully to "hear and determine the matter" means power fully to hear and determine all parts of the "matter." The "matter" under investigation is the discharge of the plaintiff by the commissioners; the offense leading to his discharge, the surrounding or extenuating circumstances, the need of discipline in the department in which the plaintiff was employed, and the effect of the example of the plaintiff's conduct upon other employés, are all parts of the larger question to be investigated by the board.

[3] It is not an answer to the views expressed herein that the civil service board may at some time abuse its power and render unjust decisions. The presumption that public officials will do their duty applies to the civil service board. Furthermore, the delegation of any power carries with it a possibility of abuse if the power is exercised by unscrupulous persons, but it is also true that an abuse of power carries within itself the seed of its own destruction. The people have seen fit to intrust a civil service board with power to hear and determine fully disputes of this character between employés and the commissioners, and when they find this method unsatisfactory in its results, they will doubtless be wise and ingenious enough to supplant it with a better one.

It is argued by the appellants that the people could not have intended to confer upon the civil service board power to alter the judgment of the commissioner, because it is asserted by appellants that the exercise of such power would be followed by a long train of evils, disrupting the internal government of the various departments of the city government. While it has no bearing upon the decision of this case, yet it may not be inappropriate to remark here that this argument is not persuasive in view of the fact that under the charter of the city and county of San Francisco the civil service commission is given express power to affirm, "reverse or alter" the findings of the appointing officer upon an appeal from his decision discharging an employé. Section 12, art. XIII, Charter City and County of San Francisco. The results of the exercise of such power by the civil service commission have not been such, apparently, as to call for an amendment of the charter in this particular.

The commissioner of public health and safety should have obeyed the order of the civil service board.

The judgment is affirmed.

McKEY v. MacINTOSH et al. (Civ. 2480.)

1. EVIDENCE $\S$ 178(9)—COPY OF LOST ASSIGNMENT ADMISSIBLE.

A copy of a deed of assignment, whereby the payee of the note sued on transferred all its assets to plaintiff, is admissible; loss of the original, shown to have been duly executed by officers of the payee with its seal affixed pursuant to resolution of its board of directors, being fully established.

2. BILLS AND NOTES $\S$ 524—POSSESSION OF NOTE UNINDORSED PRIMA FACIE SHOWING OF OWNERSHIP.

Plaintiff's possession of note sued on, even if not indorsed, is sufficient as a prima facie showing of his ownership.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1050(1)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE HARMLESS IN VIEW OF OTHER EVIDENCE.

Any error in admitting, in action on note, a copy of transfer to plaintiff of all the payee's assets is harmless, the note being indorsed by the payee, and plaintiff's possession of it, even if it were unindorsed, being sufficient as a prima facie showing of his ownership.

4. SALES $\S$ 347(2)—EVIDENCE NOT SHOWING FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION.

That after an auto company sold a machine to defendants for the note sued on, with agreement to sell them more, it transferred to plaintiff its good will, plant and assets does not tend to show failure or want of consideration.

5. WITNESSES $\S$ 236(1)—QUESTIONS NECESSARILY CALLING FOR IMMATERIAL EVIDENCE PROPERLY REFUSED.

Sustaining objection to questions asked to show failure of consideration of note sued on is not error; they not being calculated to elicit evidence tending to making such showing, whatever the answer might be.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Frank M. McKey against E. D. MacIntosh and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Perry F. Backus, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank W. Wheeler, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment in favor of plaintiff upon a promissory note executed by E. D. and R. B. MacIntosh, payment of which was guaranteed by defendant Duffet.

The court found that plaintiff was the legal owner and holder of the note, which by its terms was made payable to the Chicago Electric Motor Car Company.

[1-3] Error is predicated upon the fact that the court, in support of this finding, admitted in evidence a copy of a deed of assignment whereby the Chicago Electric Motor Car Company duly transferred to plaintiff all its assets, including the note herein sued upon. The loss of the original deed, shown to have been duly executed by officers of the corporation and the seal affixed there-to pursuant to a resolution adopted by the board of directors, was fully established, and hence it was not error to admit the copy thereof. Moreover, not only was the note indorsed by the payee named therein (Meyer v. Foster, 147 Cal. 166, 81 Pac. 402), but plaintiff's possession of the note, though not indorsed, was sufficient as a prima facie showing of his ownership (Berri v. Minturn, 1 Cal. Unrep. 50); hence defendants could not have been prejudiced by the evidence complained of, even were it deemed incompetent.

[4, 5] Another alleged error is based upon the rulings of the court in refusing to admit evidence offered by defendants for the purpose of showing want of consideration for the note, which was given as the purchase price of a Chicago electric motor car sold and delivered by the company to the makers of the note. While appellants at all times retained possession of the car, they, nevertheless, insist that they should not be required to pay for the same, for the reason that on June 17, 1914, they, subject to cancellation at its pleasure, entered into a contract with the Chicago Electric Motor Car Company, whereby it agreed to sell and they agreed, on or before June 17, 1915, to buy from said motor company "as many * * * of the electric pleasure cars manufactured by the Chicago Electric Motor Car Company," at the prices therein specified, which said contract further provided that the MacIntoshes should at all times keep on hand for demonstrating purposes one model of the motor car so manufactured by said company, and pursuant to which provision it is claimed the car in question was purchased. It is further alleged in the answer that shortly after the purchase of said car the motor company made an assignment of its good will, franchise, plant, and all its assets to the plaintiff herein, by reason of which fact it was unable to furnish defendants with cars. It is not alleged nor claimed, however, that defendants, under and pursuant to the terms of said contract, ever at any time tendered the payment or made the deposit required as a condition of their right to demand delivery of cars, or sought to purchase any cars from the motor company or its assignee, or that either of them committed any breach whatsoever of the terms of the contract. From aught that appears to the contrary, the assignee, as successor in interest to the contract, was prepared to and would have complied with the terms thereof had demand therefor been made by defendants.

The fact that the motor company transferred its good will, plant, and assets to another constituted no defense to the payment of the note so given in the purchase of the electric car which defendants received and retained for their own use and benefit. The questions asked by defendants, so far as pertinent to the issues, and whatever the answers might have been, were not calculated to elicit evidence tending to show the failure or want of consideration for the note; hence the court did not err in sustaining the objections.

The judgment is affirmed.

W. J. SOMERS CO. v. SMITH. (Civ. 3284.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 801(4)—MERITS NOT CONSIDERED ON MOTION TO DISMISS APPEAL.

On motion to dismiss appeal from an order denying appellant's motion for an order to set aside a prior order by which settlement of appellant's proposed transcript of the record on appeal from judgment was denied, the appellate court cannot consider the merits of the appeal or controverted questions of fact, but only the right of the appellant to prosecute the appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 10 — NO APPEAL FROM ORDER REFUSING TO APPROVE RECORD UNLESS DISCRETION INVOLVED.

If the condition of the record on appeal from a judgment was such that it should have been certified by the trial judge, the appellant had no right of appeal from an order refusing to approve the record, the only remedy in such event being by mandamus to compel the settlement; but where it appeared that the respondent contended that the record was not complete and that appellant had not strictly complied with the requirements of the statute in preparing the same, mandamus would have been a wholly inadequate remedy, as the discretion of the court was involved, and its order denying settlement could be reviewed on appeal.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 801(1)—PRESUMPTION OF REGULARITY HAD NO BEARING ON MOTION TO DISMISS APPEAL.

Although a motion under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 473, for an order to set aside a prior order by which settlement of appellant's proposed transcript of the record on appeal from the judgment was denied, based on contradicting affidavits, was presented to the discretion of the trial judge, and every presumption would be in favor of the action of the trial judge, if the court were dealing with the merits of the appeal, such presumption has no bearing on a motion to dismiss the appeal which has for its purpose the review of the propriety of the exercise of discretion by the trial judge.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨82(1)—ORDER DENYING MOTION TO SET ASIDE PREVIOUS ORDER RELATING TO TRANSCRIPT APPEALABLE AS "SPECIAL ORDER AFTER JUDGMENT."

An order denying a motion made under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, for an order to set aside a prior order by which settlement of appellant's proposed transcript of the record on appeal from the judgment was denied, based on conflicting affidavits as to strict compliance by appellant with the statute, a matter addressed to the discretion of the trial court, was, under the circumstances, a special order made after judgment, from which appeal could be prosecuted, under section 963, subd. 2.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Special Order.]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨801(1) — APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT LEFT PENDING ON REFUSAL TO DISMISS APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING SETTLEMENT OF TRANSCRIPT.

Where a motion was made to dismiss an appeal from a judgment and an appeal from an order denying appellant's motion for an order to set aside a prior order by which settlement of the appellant's proposed transcript of the record on appeal from the judgment was denied, denial of the motion to dismiss the appeal from the order left the appeal from the judgment, with proceedings to establish the record, still pending, and the motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment, on the ground that the transcript was not filed in time, must be denied.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by the W. J. Somers Company against J. L. Smith, as trustee for the creditors of the Force-Hewitt Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying defendant's motion for an order to set aside a prior order by which settlement of defendant's proposed transcript of the record was denied, defendant appealed. On motion to dismiss appeals. Motions denied.

J. L. Smith, of San Francisco, for appellant.

McNair & Stoker, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1] The respondent moved to dismiss the appeal from a judgment entered against the appellant, and also to dismiss a second appeal from an order denying the appellant's motion for an order to set aside a prior order by which settlement of the appellant's proposed transcript of the record on the appeal from the judgment was denied.

Logically, the second motion should be first determined. Voluminous affidavits have been filed in connection with the motion to dismiss the second appeal, upon which the respondent, in effect, seeks to have determined on this motion the merits of the appeal from the order rather than the right of the appellant to prosecute the appeal. On such a motion the court will not consider the controverted questions of fact. Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 265, 33 Pac. 1103; Woodbury v. Nevada, etc., Ry. Co., 120 Cal. 367, 52 Pac. 650; Coonan v. Loewenthal, 122 Cal. 72, 54 Pac. 388.

[2] The appellant sought to have the record on appeal made up under the alternative method, and there was delay on the part of the court reporter in the preparation of the record. The record was finally presented to the court for settlement, which was resisted by the respondent, and the trial court refused to settle and approve the record. The appellant contended that he had done everything required of him under the statute and the rules of court, and that the delay in filing the record was the fault of the official reporter. If the condition of the record was such that it should have been certified by the trial judge, the statute gave the appellant no right of appeal from the order refusing to approve the record. The appellant's only remedy in that event would have been by mandamus to compel the settlement. Brode v. Goslin, 158 Cal. 699, 112 Pac. 280; Murphy v. Stelling, 138 Cal. 641, 72 Pac. 176.

It appears from the respondent's showing on the motion that when the record was presented for settlement the respondent contended that the record was not complete, and that the appellant himself had not strictly and fully complied with the requirements of the statute in preparing and presenting the record. In such a case mandamus would have been a wholly inadequate remedy, because the discretion of the court may not be coerced. Stonesifer v. Armstrong, 86 Cal. 594, 25 Pac. 50. If the court erred in the exercise of its discretion on the application for settlement, its order denying settlement might have been reviewed on appeal. Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 94 Cal. 33, 29 Pac. 332; Banta v. Siller, 121 Cal. 414, 53 Pac. 935.

[3, 4] After the refusal of the trial court to approve the record, the appellant moved for relief from that order, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon affidavits setting forth facts which, if uncontroverted, would have, or at least might have, supported an order setting aside the order refusing to certify the record. The respondent made a counter showing, and the trial judge, upon controverted facts, made the order refusing to set aside the former order. Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in terms, provides for the relief sought by the appellant. While it is true the matter was presented to the discretion of the trial judge, and if the court were dealing with the merits of the appeal every presumption would be in favor of the action of the trial judge, that presumption has no bearing on the motion to dismiss an appeal which has for its purpose the review of the propriety of the exercise of discretion by the trial judge. On the motion to settle the record the appellant claimed he was not negligent, and there was no order then in existence from which he could be relieved under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Banta v. Siller, 121 Cal. 414, 53 Pac. 935. Under the circumstances, the order refusing relief was a special order made after judgment from which an appeal may be prosecuted. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2; Mitchell v. California, etc., S. S. Co., 156 Cal. 576, 105 Pac. 590. The motion to dismiss the appeal from the order refusing to vacate the former order is denied.

[5] The motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment rests solely on the ground that the transcript was not filed in time. In support of the motion it is urged that the order refusing to settle the record has made it impossible to file the transcript. The denial of the motion to dismiss the second appeal leaves the appeal from the judgment, with proceedings to establish the record, pending.

Under these circumstances, the motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment must be denied.

SCHWARTZ v. ARATA et al. (Civ. 2070.)

1. INJUNCTION ⚡173—AFFIDAVIT TO DISOLVE NEED NOT SHOW SOURCE OF TITLE.

Affidavit in support of motion to dissolve an order restraining defendant from working mines need not show the source of defendant's title if it shows to the court's satisfaction his right to possession and actual possession for some time.

2. INJUNCTION ⚡135—TEMPORARY ORDER RESTS IN COURT'S DISCRETION.

The granting or refusal of a restraining order or an injunction pendente lite rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.

3. INJUNCTION ⚡136(3)—TEMPORARY ORDER EXTRAORDINARY REMEDY.

The granting of an injunction pendente lite is an extraordinary remedy, to be exercised always with great caution, and only where it fairly appears to be necessary to prevent irreparable injury or to preserve the estates of the parties.

4. INJUNCTION ⚡137(2)—DENIAL OF TEMPORARY ORDER AGAINST WORKING MINE HELD PROPER IN VIEW OF LOSS TO DEFENDANT.

Where defendant had been in possession of property claimed by plaintiff for some time and had made extensive improvements thereon to enable him to extract the ore therefrom, the value of which would be lost if the ore could not be taken while the war demand for it existed, and defendant was able to respond in any damages plaintiff might suffer, the denial of an injunction pendente lite was proper.

5. INJUNCTION ⚡147—VERIFIED ANSWER UNNECESSARY TO DENIAL OF TEMPORARY ORDER IF PROPER AFFIDAVIT BY DEFENDANT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527, authorizing an injunction pendente lite on a verified complaint or affidavit, and authorizing defendant to present affidavits relating thereto, affidavits by defendant are sufficient basis for a denial of the temporary injunction asked for by verified complaint, though no verified answer was filed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by Samuel L. Schwartz against P. A. H. Arata and another. From an order dissolving a restraining order previously issued, and denying a motion for an injunction pendente lite, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Ricketts, of San Francisco, and M. R. Van Wormer, of San Luis Obispo, for appellant.

C. P. Kaetzel, of San Luis Obispo, for respondents.

HART, J. The appeal is by the plaintiff from an order dissolving a restraining order and denying a motion for an injunction pendente lite.

This complaint is verified and is in two counts. In the first thereof it is stated that one Charles Margaroli is the owner of certain land in the county of San Luis Obispo; that, on August 14, 1917, said Margaroli "let the said premises to plaintiff for ten years from said day; that the defendants withhold possession thereof from the plaintiff, to the great damage of the plaintiff in the sum of $5,000."

In the second count, the allegations of the ownership and letting of said premises are repeated, and it is then alleged that the sole value of the land is for the mineral deposits therein contained; that the defendants withhold the possession thereof from plaintiff; that they had invaded and were invading the mining excavations made therein by the plaintiff's predecessors in interest; that they threatened to continue to invade said excavations, to extend the same and make other excavations in said land for the purpose of mining the said premises; and that they had converted and were converting and threatening to continue to convert the mineral deposits therein to their own use against the will and consent of plaintiff and to his irreparable injury.

Upon the filing of the complaint an order was granted restraining the defendants from mining upon the premises described in the complaint and an order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not issue was made.

In opposition to the motion there was filed an affidavit of defendant Arata. It was therein denied that Charles Margaroli was the owner in fee simple of the premises in question, and it was stated that defendants are the owners of all minerals in said lands and are entitled to the possession of said lands for the purpose of extracting ore therefrom and have been so entitled to possession for more than 15 months last past, at which time they commenced mining operations which have been continuously prosecuted; that they have expended in the improvement and development of said mine large sums of money, and that the same has been made a valuable producing mining property by their said work and expenditures; that for several months last past plaintiff and said Margaroli had actual knowledge of said mining operations, and made no objections thereto; that the continuance of said mining operations would not impair the value of said mining ground, but would enhance the value of the same and would not destroy the value and substance of said mining ground; that unless defendants are permitted to continue their work and care for said mine it will, by the caving of tunnels and the falling of earth, become impossible to work and—

"defendants' work and improvements thereon will be ruined and lost, said mine will become unworkable, and they will suffer damage to the extent of $25,000 or $50,000.

"That the market price of the ore (chromate of iron) produced from said mine is at present high, but that the present price thereof is due to war conditions and may at any time drop, and that said mine cannot be operated at a profit should said price fall to the point it was before the commencement of the present European war. That it is greatly to the advantage of the owners of said mine that as much as possible of said ores be extracted and sold while the price is high; that great loss will be sustained by defendants and their entire investment doubtless be lost if they are prevented from operating said mine during the present period of high prices. That defendants are solvent and able to respond in damages should judgment be had against them."

A hearing was had, at which the restraining order was dissolved and the application for a temporary injunction denied.

[1] The defendants do not assert that they claim ownership of the lands in dispute, nor is it made to appear from the affidavit filed by them in support of their application to dissolve the restraining order and of their opposition to the motion for an injunction pendente lite in what way or from what source they obtained the right to the possession of the property in controversy for the purpose of extracting therefrom the minerals deposited in said lands or how they acquired ownership of the said minerals. But we deem this immaterial, as we can conceive of no reason why the source of a party's title to property should be shown on an application for a restraining order or an application to dissolve such an order, where previously made, affecting the right of the party in possession to use such property pending the determination of the question of ownership or the right to the possession of the same as between litigants in an action brought for that purpose. As to this feature of a showing for or against the issuance of a restraining order or the granting of an injunction pendente lite, it is sufficient, if the court before which the application is made accepts it, if it be made to appear therefrom that the party making the application denies the adversary party's ownership of or right to the possession of the property as to which the application for a preliminary injunction or the dissolution of a restraining order is made, and it further is likewise made satisfactorily to appear that the applicant for or against the temporary relief sought has some claim of right to the property involved or the possession thereof. Hence, we repeat, it is not indispensably essential that in an application for such preliminary relief the party making it should disclose the source of his title to the fee in the property, if he has such title, or how his right to the possession thereof arose. The affidavit of the defendants in the present case, upon which the court below manifestly predicated its order dissolving the restraining order previously made and refused to grant a preliminary injunction, unequivocally states that the defendants have for a long period of time prior to the institution of this action had rightful possession and still have such possession of the lands in controversy and the right to extract mineral ores therefrom. It is further shown by said affidavit other facts, of which a fair synopsis is given above, and which, therefore, need not be specifically repeated here, which not only tend to show that irreparable injury to the physical properties of the mine, but to the defendants in a financial way, would inevitably ensue from an order stopping the operation of the mine by the defendants. It is likewise further shown, it will be noted, that the plaintiff, for several months prior to the filing of the affidavit by defendants, had actual knowledge of the working of the mine by the defendants and the large expenditures of money made by the latter in making improvements and furnishing mechanical and other equipments essential to the proper and profitable operation of the mine.

To hold that the court below erred in its action dissolving the restraining order in this case and refusing to order a preliminary injunction, it would be necessary for us to declare that the court abused its discretion in that regard. Upon the showing made by the defendants, we cannot say that the order dissolving the restraining order and refusing further to tie the hands of the defendants involved an abuse of the discretion committed to trial court in such a proceeding.

[2] It is as firmly settled as is any rule of law that whether in a particular case a restraining order or an injunction pendente lite should be granted or refused is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the trial court before which the application is made and heard. See Raub v. Los Angeles T. Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 473, 37 Pac. 374; Rogers v. Tennant, 45 Cal. 184; Patterson v. Board of Supervisors, 50 Cal. 344; Parrott v. Floyd, 54 Cal. 534; White v. Nunan, 60 Cal. 406; Porters Bar Dredging Co. v. Beaudry, 15 Cal. App. 751, 754, 115 Pac. 951. The rule as thus stated results from the extraordinary nature of the power to grant temporary or provisional relief to litigants by way of a preliminary injunction and the consequences following from the exercise of such power.

[3] It is an extraordinary power, and is to be exercised always with great caution and in those cases only where it fairly appears "upon all the papers presented, before such injunction is granted, that the plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury if it be not issued, or that it is necessary to preserve the estates of the parties, or some sufficient cause showing that need of hasty action exists." Joyce on Injunctions, § 109. The power, therefore, should rarely, if ever, be exercised in a doubtful case. "The right must be clear, the injury impending and threatened, so as to be averted only by the protective preventive process of injunction." St. Louis S. F. M. Co. v. Sanitary S. F. Co., 161 Fed. 725, 88 C. C. A. 585; Willis v. Lauridson, 161 Cal. 106, 117, 118 Pac. 530.

[4] The court below was within its rights in concluding that it was at least very doubtful whether the power should be exercised in behalf of the plaintiff here. The court could also well conclude from the showing that there was no need for hasty action, and that, since it was made to appear that the defendants are solvent and able to respond in damages for any injury which the plaintiff might suffer, the element of "irreparable injury" was wanting as the basis for the provisional injunctive relief prayed for.

The very early case of Real Del Monte M. Co. v. Pond M. Co., 23 Cal. 83, closely resembles this in its facts. Therein the main ultimate question involved was as to the ownership of a certain quartz ledge which the defendants were working. A temporary injunction had been granted on the complaint, and upon the filing of their answer, denying the averments and therefore all the equities of the complaint, the defendants moved for an order dissolving the preliminary injunction, which motion the trial court disallowed. On an appeal from the order denying the motion, the Supreme Court, by its opinion, by Crock-er, J., reversed the order, saying:

"It appears that the defendants have been in possession of the quartz ledge in question for several months, have expended large sums of money in developing and working the same, and were, at the time of the granting of the injunction, and had, for some time previously, been working the mine as their own. In such case it requires a very clear and strong showing to induce a court of equity to grant or sustain an injunction to stop the work. There must be an urgent necessity, and, as a general rule, the title and right of the plaintiffs should be shown to be clear, well-established and not in dispute. The application should also be made promptly, and not delayed until large expenditures have been made by the defendants. Clavering v. Clavering, 2 Pierre Wm. 388; Anonymous, Ambler, 209; 18 Vesey, 515; Norway v. Rowe, 19 Vesey, 144; Field v. Beaumont, 1 Swanston, 203; Hilton v. Granville, 1 Craig & Phillips, 283."

The similarity between the above and the present case is manifest. Here, as there, the restraining order was based entirely on the complaint. Here, as there, the ownership of the plaintiff of the property and his claimed right to possession are disputed, and therefore cannot be said to be clear and well established. Here, as there, the plaintiff, although for several months in possession of actual knowledge of the operation of the mine by the defendants, did not proceed against the latter until they had expended large sums in the improvement of the property for the purpose of facilitating the proper operation of the mine. In other words, the plaintiff delayed asking for the provisional relief involved in the temporary restraining order and in an injunction pendente lite until large sums had been, with his knowledge, expended by the defendants in the equipment of the mine for its proper operation as such.

[5] But it is intimated by counsel for the appellant that resistance to a motion for a preliminary injunction pending the determination of the litigation must be supported by a verified answer, and cannot be supported by affidavits only. We see no merit in the point and nothing in the cases cited by the appellant which supports it.

Section 527 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that an injunction may be granted at any time before judgment upon a verified complaint, or upon affidavits, if the complaint in the one case, or the affidavits in the other, show satisfactorily that sufficient grounds exist therefor. Thus it will be observed that an application by a plaintiff for a preliminary injunction may be made either upon his verified complaint or upon affidavits, and upon principle, since the matter is one merely of evidence, we can see no reason for holding that the section does not contemplate that the defendant is entitled to resist the application by either means; that is, either by a verified answer or by affidavits. But the same section goes further, and expressly declares that "the defendant may, in response to such order to show cause [the order requiring cause to be shown why the preliminary injunction should not be granted], present affidavits relating to the granting of the preliminary injunction."

This identical point was touched upon in Gagliardo v. Crippen, 22 Cal. 362, which was an appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction. The injunction there was granted on the verified complaint, to which reply was made by defendants in the form of an affidavit. The court, in reversing the order, said:

"So far as the merits are concerned, we think the injunction was improvidently granted. The allegations of the complaint are fully and specifically controverted by the affidavit. It is claimed that the complaint itself is insufficient; but as the equities, whatever they may be, are denied, it is unnecessary to pass upon the objections to the complaint."

The subsequent cases generally, so far as we are advised, have regarded it competent to support resistance to a motion for an injunction pendente lite by affidavits only. Indeed, we are of the opinion that, so far as proof of facts relating to the question is concerned, affidavits would be more satisfactory than the averments and denials of the pleadings, inasmuch as the facts stated in a complaint are the ultimate and not the probative facts, and the answer merely is a denial of those facts, whereas, the facts stated in an affidavit are required to be probative. It has always been the rule that where a preliminary injunction is granted on a complaint unsupported by affidavits or an affidavit and an answer is filed denying all the equities of the complaint, a motion based upon the pleadings in such case to dissolve the injunction will be granted (Real Del Monte M. Co. v. Pond M. Co., supra; Willis v. Lauridson, supra); and this must follow from the fact that the court granting such injunction is then without sufficient proof before it to justify the exercise of so extraordinary a power.

The appellant, in his somewhat elaborate brief, cites a large number of cases and other authorities as supporting his position that the court erred or abused its discretion in refusing to grant a preliminary injunction and in dissolving the temporary restraining order. But the facts in the cases referred to will be found, upon examination, radically at variance with those of the case at bar. We may refer specifically to two of the cases only so cited—the principal ones relied upon by appellant—as illustrative of the distinction between this and all the cases mentioned in counsel's brief. In Hunt v. Steese, 75 Cal. 620, 17 Pac. 920, the plaintiff acquired title to the lands in controversy by deed from the Central Pacific Railroad Company on June 5, 1883, the said lands being portions of a grant from the government to said company and held by said company under a patent from the government to the company, dated February, 1875. The plaintiff went into possession of the land in the year 1877, and remained in peaceable, undisputed, and uninterrupted possession thereof, and used the same for grazing purposes until the fall of 1884, when the defendants, claiming the lands to be mineral, and filing a notice of location of the same for mining purposes, began digging up and washing away good soil on the lands without authority from plaintiff. The title of plaintiff to the lands was shown by documentary evidence and his possession and use thereof for grazing purposes by his own testimony. The complaint disclosed the nature and the extent of the injury which the defendants had done and threatened to continue to do to the lands by digging the same up, building reservoirs and digging ditches thereon, and plowing up the soil. It was alleged that the defendants were insolvent; that the lands are valuable for agricultural and grazing purposes, and thus it was clearly shown that the plaintiff had suffered irreparable injury by the trespasses of the defendants, and would continue to suffer such injury if the trespasses were not restrained. The defendants did not answer the complaint, but by affidavits and oral testimony were permitted to show the mineral character of the lands. They did not deny that they were washing away the soil for gold, or that they were insolvent, or that they intended to continue their mining operations, or that the injury was and would be irreparable. The attack upon the patent in that case was clearly collateral, but the court said it was unnecessary for it to determine therein whether "we shall adhere to the rule of decision that a patent may be collaterally attacked under such circumstances." It was held, however, that the injunction should have been issued in that case, and that the court below, upon the showing presented, had abused its discretion by refusing plaintiff a preliminary injunction. It is to be noted that in that case the vital question upon the merits was as to the character of the lands in dispute—whether they were mineral or nonmineral. Upon the determination of that issue rested the rights of the parties. If mineral in character—that is, if more valuable for mining than for agricultural or grazing purposes—then, so the defendants claimed, the lands were not within the patented grant to the railroad company. That issue called for a much fuller trial or investigation than could be expected in an ancillary or interlocutory proceeding looking to provisional relief. The patent or deed to the plaintiff constituted prima facie evidence of title, and the most that was shown by the defendants in impeachment of said title was that the lands, at the time of the application for the injunction and prior to the issuance of the patent, "were valuable for mining purposes when water could be had to work it," and "it was shown that after 1864 there was no water there to work with, except from rains," and that "it took very heavy rains to accumulate water sufficient to amount to anything." Under all these circumstances, it was clearly the duty of the court to protect the prima facie title or right of plaintiff to the lands through the preventive power of injunction pending the determination of the ultimate question whether the lands were mineral or agricultural in character, and the burden was upon the defendants to show that the prima facie title of plaintiff was in fact an insufficient title. In the case at bar, the defendants were and are, not only in possession, but declared under oath that they had the right of possession, and reinforced their sworn declaration to that effect by the statement, undenied, that, with the actual knowledge of plaintiff for several months prior to the hearing of the application for the preliminary injunction they (defendants) had expended large sums of money in equipping the property with machinery and other works so that the mineral ore therein deposited could be properly and profitably extracted therefrom.

The other case referred to—Marks v. Weinstock, Lubin & Co., 121 Cal. 53, 53 Pac. 362—merely holds that the affidavit of the secretary of the corporation defendant, which was filed before an answer to the complaint was interposed, and which consisted entirely of admissions and denials and statements of ultimate facts or conclusions, was not an answer and was, as an affidavit, wholly insufficient to controvert the allegations of the complaint, upon which a preliminary injunction was granted. The Supreme Court, inter alia, said:

"Clearly, the affiant had no power to admit, deny, or allege any fact, and until an answer was filed, how could he know what defendant [the corporation] admitted, denied, or alleged? An affidavit is simply and only written proof, taken ex parte, of the facts stated in it; and, as in giving oral testimony, the facts stated should be probative, and not ultimate facts or conclusions. We think it must be held, therefore, that the said affidavit was not sufficient to prove the facts attempted to be proved thereby, or to sustain the defendant's motion"

—which was a motion to dissolve a preliminary injunction.

In this case, as has been shown, the affidavit was made by one of the defendants, and, while the statement therein as to the right of the defendants to the possession of the property may in a measure involve an ultimate fact or conclusion, said statement is aided and supported by the statement in the affidavit that the defendants "more than fifteen months last past commenced mining operations thereon [said property], having continuously prosecuted the same thereafter up to the commencement of this action, and have extensively improved the same so as to make it capable of production," etc.

Thus it will readily be perceived that there is a pronounced distinction between the case of Marks v. Weinstock, Lubin & Co. and the instant case as to the facts.

We conclude, as declared above, that, upon the record before us, we cannot justly say that the court, by dissolving the temporary restraining order and refusing to grant an injunction pendente lite, abused its discretion.

The order appealed from is, accordingly, affirmed.

SHANNON v. AAGAARD et al. (Civ. 3049.)

1. DEEDS $\S$ 208(1) — PERSON DELIVERING DEED PRESUMED TO INTEND THAT IT BECOME OPERATIVE.

An owner of land, who signed and delivered a deed, held not entitled to recover the land from a subsequent innocent purchaser, although such owner testified that he never knowingly executed the deed, and did not acknowledge the same, since, in the absence of a showing that the third person obtained the deed by trick or device, there was a legal presumption that it was delivered with the intent that it should become operative as such, and hence, by force of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1948, was prima facie evidence of complete execution.

2. DEEDS $\S$ 56(2) — DELIVERY MUST BE ACCOMPANIED WITH INTENT THAT DEED BECOME OPERATIVE.

It is a legal prerequisite that the delivery of a deed must be accompanied with the intent that it shall become operative as such.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by Eliza Shannon against J. Herman Aagaard and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Maebelle D. Traylor appeals. Reversed.

Benjamin E. Page and Arthur C. Hurt, both of Los Angeles (Arthur F. Coe, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

E. S. Janes, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action to quiet title. Defendants Aagaard and Talcott defaulted. Defendant Traylor appeared and answered, denying plaintiff's claim of title, and alleging ownership in herself, in fee simple, of the property in controversy, and, as such owner, asking that title be quieted in her as against any claims of plaintiff. After trial, the court having considered all the evidence introduced, findings were entered in favor of plaintiff on all the issues. Among other things, the court found:

" * * * That plaintiff is the owner in fee simple and entitled to the immediate possession of" the property in controversy; "that on or about the 15th day of December, 1915, and while plaintiff * * * was the owner of the premises described in her complaint herein, she signed her name to and delivered to the defendant Aagaard a paper purporting to be a grant deed of said premises * * * to defendant Talcott; that thereafter, on or about December 21, 1915, defendant Talcott sold said premises to defendant Traylor for the sum of $450.00, and thereupon executed and delivered her grant deed to said premises to defendant Traylor; that defendant Traylor is an innocent purchaser of said premises for value; that the signature of the plaintiff to the said paper * * * was obtained thereto by trick and device of the defendant Aagaard, and without any knowledge on the part of the plaintiff that she was signing a deed or any instrument affecting her real property, and without any intention on her part to convey said real property, or in any way to affect it; that she never appeared before the notary, Parmelee, and acknowledged it, and never acknowledged it at all; and, as said defendant Myrtle Talcott had no title to said premises which she could convey, said defendant Maebelle D. Traylor took nothing by said deed." (Italics ours.)

A decree quieting title to said property in plaintiff was entered accordingly. This finding is challenged as not supported by the evidence, thus raising the only point to be considered on this appeal.

The plaintiff, in part, testified as follows:

"I never signed a deed at all—never signed a deed for that lot at all. All that I have signed was my investment company certificates, and I did sign those, and that is all I ever signed. * * * I don't know what I did sign. I supposed it was for the investment company. He asked me twice, I think, to sign papers for him, and I signed them, but I supposed that they were for the investment company. * * * If I did sign that deed, it must have been one of those that he gave me for that stock. I never saw Mr. Parmelee before yesterday at all. I am positive of that."

Defendant Aagaard testified, in part, as follows:

"I made out a deed and brought Mr. Parmelee to her [plaintiff's] house to sign it, and she signed it and turned it over to me."

The witness Parmelee, the notary public, testified that—

"The plaintiff, Mrs. Shannon, acknowledged the execution of the deed at the time the certificate was affixed. She signed the deed in my presence. She was at her home at the time. She gave the document to defendant Aagaard after signing it."

We have italicized certain portions of the finding referred to above. The record has been carefully read by every member of this court. We have looked in vain for any testimony which might support a finding, even by inference from the other evidence given in the case, that the defendant Aagaard, or any one else, had obtained plaintiff's signature "to a paper purporting to be a grant deed of the said premises * * * by trick or device."

[1, 2] Under these conditions, coupled with the fact that the court expressly finds that the plaintiff signed and delivered the instrument identified in the record as the deed to this property, we are confronted with the query: Is the plaintiff estopped to set up her title as against an innocent purchaser of the property, such as the defendant Traylor is conceded to be? We think she is. The principle of equity that, "where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he who has enabled such third person to cause the loss must bear it." in the absence of any showing whatever that trick or device or trick and device has been practiced by the defendants, or any of them, we think is applicable to the case at bar. We are not unmindful of the fact that it is a legal prerequisite that the delivery of a deed by plaintiff must be "accompanied with the intent that the deed shall become operative as such." Kenney v. Parks, 137 Cal. 527, 70 Pac. 556; Donahue v. Sweeney, 171 Cal. 388, 153 Pac. 708; Cox v. Schnerr, 172 Cal. 371, 156 Pac. 509; Hefner v. Sealey, 175 Cal. 18, 164 Pac. 898; Burkett v. Doty, 176 Cal. 94, 167 Pac. 518. But, we think, in the absence of a showing, as hereinbefore intimated, the legal presumption that it was so delivered has not been overcome here, and hence is, by force of section 1948 of the Code of Civil Procedure, prima facie evidence of complete execution; that is, of delivery with intent to make it operative immediately as a transfer of title. Burkett v. Doty, supra.

BRADY et ux. v. FOWLER et al.

1. EVIDENCE $\S$ 462—CIRCUMSTANCES ADMISSIBLE TO SHOW NATURE OF AMBIGUOUS INSTRUMENT.

Where the provisions of an original instrument and of the supplemental instrument, expressly intended to clarify the former, were so ambiguous that it could not be determined whether they gave simply an option or were a lease with option to purchase, the trial court properly admitted evidence of the circumstances under which they were made to aid their construction, under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1860.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 548(1)—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO CONSTRUCE AMBIGUOUS INSTRUMENT IS NOT REVIEWABLE ON JUDGMENT ROLL.

The sufficiency of the evidence admitted to aid in the construction of ambiguous instruments cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment roll alone.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER $\S$ 198 — OPTION HELD TO IMPOSE LIABILITY FOR TAXES ONLY DURING EXISTENCE.

An option for the purchase of land which required the purchaser to pay monthly interest on the purchase price, and to pay all taxes assessed on the property, requires the purchasers to pay only taxes accrued before the termination of the option, not those accrued between such termination and the entry of vendor into full possession of the premises.

4. TRIAL $\S$ 396(3)—FINDINGS NECESSARY TO CONSTRUCE INSTRUMENT HELD WITHIN ISSUES.

Where the pleadings raised the issue as to the correct construction of writings set out in the complaint, and the court properly admitted evidence of circumstances to aid in construing the instrument, its findings of fact as to such circumstances are within the issues.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by J. L. Brady and wife against R. A. Fowler and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs for part of the amount claimed, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, of Los Angeles, for respondent Fowler.

RICHARDS, J. Appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment in their favor for the sum of $1,306.94. The appeal is taken upon the judgment roll alone; and from the facts found by the court it appears that the plaintiffs, husband and wife, on October 1, 1912, entered into a written agreement with the defendant R. A. Fowler, by which they granted to Fowler an option to purchase certain real property situate in the city of Los Angeles for the sum of $110,000, the latter agreeing, until the exercise by him of said option, during the term of the agreement, to pay to the plaintiffs on the 1st day of every month the sum of $550, these payments aggregating annually the sum of $6,600, and being 6 per cent. upon the said purchase price. Said agreement, or option, also provided that Fowler should pay all taxes assessed upon the property during the term of the option. This writing was variously referred to therein as a "lease and option" and a "lease or option," and much of its verbiage was evidently taken from the form of a lease pure and simple. In the month of July, 1913, the defendant Goudge desiring to succeed to the interest of Fowler under said agreement, but not being willing to do so if it should be claimed by the plaintiffs that it created as between the parties to it the relation of lessors and lessee, the plaintiff J. L. Brady, and defendant Fowler, on July 12, 1913, entered into what is termed in the complaint and findings a "memorandum of auxiliary agreement," the terms of which, however, are just as, if not more, ambiguous than those of the instrument that it purported to clarify. Said plaintiff received from Fowler the sum of $1,000 for entering into this auxiliary agreement, and the court finds that it was entered into for the purpose of satisfying Goudge that the original agreement of October 1, 1912, was an "option to purchase and not a lease," and that it was mutually understood between plaintiff J. L. Brady and the defendants, at the time said auxiliary agreement was executed, that the original agreement and the auxiliary agreement together constituted an option to purchase and not a lease, and that the monthly installments of payments of $550 were intended to be paid as interest on an option purchase price of $110,000 while the option was in force. In this connection the court also found that these two writings were ambiguous and uncertain, but that when construed in the light of the circumstances surrounding their making they constitute an option to purchase said real property, and not a lease and option, as contended by the plaintiffs.

The court further found that defendant Goudge never personally entered into possession of the real property forming the subject of said option, but that at all times mentioned in the amended and supplemental complaints it was occupied by one Jennie Boyd, as a tenant from month to month, at a rental of less than $80 per month, and that its rental value did not exceed said sum. The court also found as facts that between July 17, 1913, and November 30, 1914, the defendant Goudge paid to the plaintiff J. L. Brady the monthly sum of $550 as interest on said option purchase price; that no payments were made by either of said defendants after November 30, 1914; that between October 1, 1912, and July 17, 1913, defendant Fowler received the benefit of the rentals collected from the occupant of said real property, and that between said last-mentioned date and September 1, 1915, the defendant Goudge received such benefit; and that said option terminated on November 30, 1914. The court concluded as matter of law that each of said defendants was liable to the plaintiffs for unpaid taxes up to the time of the termination of said option, the amount of which it found to be the sum of $1,306.94, and for which the plaintiffs recovered judgment.

[1, 2] The appellants' first contention in support of their appeal is that the court erred in finding that the written agreements above referred to constitute an option to purchase said real property and not a lease thereof with option to purchase, and they refer to certain provisions of the instruments as bearing out this contention. It is very plain, however, that, in view of the ambiguity appearing upon the face of the agreement of October 1, 1912, which was in no wise removed by that of July 12, 1913, ostensibly prepared and executed for that purpose, the trial court was justified in resorting to evidence of the circumstances under which these instruments were made, "including the situation of the subject of the instrument, and of the parties to it." Code Civ. Proc. § 1860. Having admitted evidence upon these points, it has found upon such evidence that the instruments do not constitute a lease. As we have said, the appeal is here upon the judgment roll alone. This appellate court therefore must assume that the evidence thus admitted fully supports the findings of the court (Horton v. Dominguez, 68 Cal. 642, 10 Pac. 186; Peck v. Noe, 154 Cal. 351, 97 Pac. 865); so that the appellants are in no position here to argue that the writings in question bear the dual character of lease and option.

[3] It is next urged by the appellants that the court erred in restricting plaintiffs' recovery of unpaid taxes to those due up to December 1, 1914, contending that all taxes payable to the 15th of April, 1916, ought to have been allowed; the latter being the date when, according to the court's finding, the plaintiffs resumed control and dominion over the real property. But the trial court having, upon consideration of the evidence received, construed the written agreements which created the rights and obligations of the parties hereto to be an option merely, concluded—and we think correctly—that only those taxes which became due during the life of the option were payable by defendants. They having had the full benefit of said option up to the 1st day of December, 1914, they could not avoid payment of such taxes as were then due; their interest in the option then terminating, there was no further obligation resting upon them to discharge taxes thereafter accruing against the property. Gordon v. Swan, 43 Cal. 564; Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, 104 Pac. 689.

[4] It is finally contended by the appellants that there were no issues in the case supporting certain of the findings of the court. The findings thus attacked are those which the court made as to the circumstances surrounding the transaction. But since there was an issue as to the correct interpretation to be given to the writings set out in the complaint, and upon which the plaintiffs based their alleged right of recovery, and the court properly admitted evidence of facts relevant to this issue, its findings touching those circumstances cannot be said to be outside of the issues made by the pleadings.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

BRADY et ux. v. FOWLER et al. (Civ. 3181.)
(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 28, 1920.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇄198—HOLDER OF OPTION HELD LIABLE UNDER CONTRACT FOR TAXES PAYABLE AT DATE OF FORFEITURE.

A holder of an option under an agreement to pay taxes payable during existence of option was liable to seller for taxes which became payable during the existence of the option, although not required by law to be paid until the day on which the option was forfeited for failure to pay an installment due.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇄214(6)—No EXPRESS ASSUMPTION BY ASSIGNEE OF OPTION NECESSARY WHERE MADE BINDING UPON ASSIGNS.

Where an option to purchase land by its terms expressly made the obligations thereof binding upon the successors and assigns of the parties, no express assumption of such obligations by an assignee of the option was necessary to bind him and render him liable thereof to the seller of the option, especially where assignee enjoyed the use of the premises.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇄207—HOLDER OF OPTION UNDER AGREEMENT TO PAY TAXES LIABLE TO SELLER FOR TAXES FALLING DUE AFTER ASSIGNMENT TO THIRD PERSON.

A holder of an option to purchase land, part of consideration for which was the payment of taxes that would fall due during the existence of the option, was liable to the seller of the option for taxes falling due on the property after assignment of the option to a third person, in the absence of a showing that the seller of the option released the purchaser of the option from such obligation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by J. L. Brady and Mary J. Brady, his wife, against R. A. Fowler and Herbert J. Goudge. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 188 Pac. 319.

J. Wiseman Macdonald, of Los Angeles, for appellant R. A. Fowler.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, of Los Angeles, for appellant Herbert J. Goudge.

E. L. Brady and De Witt J. Brady, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiffs brought suit against the defendants to recover from them an amount alleged to be due under the terms of a written instrument claimed by plaintiffs to be a lease with option to purchase, and relating to certain real property in the city of Los Angeles. The defendants denied any liability, claiming in their answers that the writing in question was not a lease with option to purchase, but an option merely, which, by its lapse, had terminated any further liability on their part. The immediate parties to said instrument were the plaintiffs and defendant R. A. Fowler, and the latter, after complying for some time with the terms of the instrument, assigned it to his codefendant Herbert J. Goudge. In its findings of fact the court established the character of this instrument in accordance with the contention of the defendants, and found that it terminated on December 1, 1914, through the nonpayment of a certain sum due to the plaintiffs on that date, and being one of a series of monthly payments required to keep the option in force. The court further found that the writing also imposed upon the holder of the option thereunder an obligation to pay city, county, and state taxes upon the property concerned, and that up to and including the time when the option terminated by the nonpayment of the monthly installment called for there was due as such taxes the sum of $1,306.94, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs and against each of the defendants for this amount.

[1] Each of the defendants has appealed from the judgment. The record before this court consists of the judgment roll alone, and the court's findings are set out more at length in the opinion of this court filed this day in the plaintiff's appeal from the same judgment and being numbered Civil 3177. For the purpose of the appeals now being considered, however, the brief reference to the findings already made is sufficient.

The first contention in support of the appeal, and which is made by each of the appellants, is that, inasmuch as the court found that said option lapsed on December 1, 1914, there was no obligation upon them to pay taxes due upon that date, citing authorities to the effect that the person to whom an option is given is under no obligation to avail himself of it, and if he permits it to lapse by the nonfulfillment of its conditions it is at an end and fully discharged, and they argue that it is illogical to hold that the option was terminated by the failure of its holder to pay the monthly sum due on December 1, 1914, and at the same time to hold him responsible for the payment of taxes due on that date. This argument derives whatever force it has from the appellants' assumption that the finding of the court is that the taxes in question became due upon said date, but the language of the court in its finding relating to these taxes indicates clearly that they were payable before the day when the option terminated. Moreover, the court found, in effect, that defendant Goudge was in possession of the property by virtue of said option and received the benefit of the rents arising therefrom up to a date ulterior to the termination of the option. There was no obligation upon the part of the defendant Goudge to pay these taxes immediately they became due. He could, if he chose, wait until the last day allowed for their timely payment, but said defendant having, since he took an assignment of the option, made all monthly payments necessary to keep it in force until December 1, 1914, and consequently having enjoyed its benefits until that time, his continuing interest therein having been recognized by the plaintiffs up to said 1st day of December, he cannot be allowed to treat his obligation to pay taxes as if it only arose upon said date, and be heard to say that his neglect to pay them should be given the same legal effect as his failure to make further monthly payments. The court having found that the taxes for which it rendered judgment against him were payable during the life of the option, the payment of these taxes was part of the consideration for that portion of the term of the option which defendant Goudge had already enjoyed when he allowed it to lapse.

This defendant further urges in support of his appeal that there was no express assumption by him of any obligation to pay taxes, or, indeed, to pay the plaintiffs any sum whatever.

[2] The written instrument which the court declared to constitute an option is set out in full in the plaintiffs' complaint, and by its terms the obligations thereof are expressly made binding upon the successors and assigns of the parties thereto. No express assumption of those obligations by an assignee thereof was therefore necessary. Moreover, as we have said, this appellant having enjoyed the rights arising from his making of the monthly payments therein provided, he cannot escape the burdens coincidentally imposed during such period of enjoyment.

[3] The defendant Fowler in his appeal makes the additional point that as the taxes in question became due after his assignment of the option to Goudge, and during the time that Goudge received the benefit of the rents derived from the property, he ought not to be held liable for them. But there is no finding that the plaintiffs released this defendant from his obligations arising from the option, and it is elementary that his mere assignment of it did not have such effect. So far as the plaintiffs are concerned, both Fowler and his assignee were bound by the conditions of the option. "The obligations of an assignor of a contract continue to rest upon him, and he will be required to respond to the other party to the contract in the event of a default on the part of the assignee." 5 Corpus Juris, 977; Anderson v. De Urioste, 96 Cal. 404, 31 Pac. 266; Civ. Code, § 1457.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte HARTMAN et al. (Cr. 2300.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13,
1920.)CONSTITUTIONAL LAW 682—ORDINANCE, PROHIBITING DISPLAY OF FLAG OF ORGANI-ZATION ANTAGONISTIC TO FORM OF GOVERN-MENT, UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

An ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, making it unlawful for any person to display, or to cause, or to permit to be displayed, publicly or privately, any flag or device of any nature representative of any nation, sovereignty, society, association, etc., which in its purposes, practices, official declarations, or by its constitution, by-laws, or regulations, espouses for the government of the people of the United States of America principles or theories of government antagonistic to the Constitution and laws of the United States of America, or to the form of government thereof as now constituted, is invalid and unconstitutional in so far as it prohibits inhabitants of the United States from individually and collectively advocating peaceable changes in our Constitution, laws, or form of government, although such changes may be based upon theories or principles of government antagonistic to those which now serve as their basis.

In the matter of the application of Anna Hartman and Dave Welfman for a writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed against the sheriff of Los Angeles county to secure release after conviction of violating an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles. Petitioners discharged.

J. H. Ryckman, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Erwin W. Widney, City Prosecutor, and J. D. Taggart, Deputy City Prosecutor, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, Judge pro tem. Petition for writ of habeas corpus. The petitioners are serving a term of 120 days imprisonment for violating the provisions of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles which enacts:

"Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person * * * to display, or to cause or permit to be displayed, publicly or privately, or to have in possession, within the city of Los Angeles any flag, insignia, emblem or device of any nature whatsoever representative of any nation, sovereignty, society, association or organized or unorganized effort of any nature whatsoever which in its purposes, practices, official declarations, or by its constitution, by-laws or regulations, espouses for the government of the people of the United States of America * * * principles or theories of government antagonistic to the Constitution and laws of the United States of America, or to the form of the government thereof as now constituted. * * *"

The ordinance provides that any violation of its provisions above quoted is a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment or both.

In the month of May, 1919, under this ordinance these petitioners were charged and convicted of unlawfully displaying and having in possession a flag, insignia, emblem, and device representative of an organized effort antagonistic to the Constitution of the United States of America and the form of government thereof. In passing it may be said that the ordinance was passed prior to the enactment of the statute of 1919, defining criminal syndicalism and sabotage, and the latter differs essentially from the former in providing that unlawful acts of force or unlawful methods of terrorism as a means of accomplishing industrial or political changes shall constitute a felony, while the former attaches the quality of criminality to acts which under the federal Constitution are, it is quite apparent, permissible and within the law. Under this ordinance a person would be guilty of the crime defined therein who should have in his possession a flag or emblem representative of an organization which advocated or espoused any change of principle or theory of government, merely because such principle or theory is antagonistic to our present Constitution and form of government. The language of the ordinance is so broad and comprehensive as to render criminal the display or possession of the flag or emblem of a peaceful organization or society which espoused or advocated amendment of the federal Constitution or of our form of government, national or state, in respects admittedly proper from a legal point of view, although giving rise to differences of opinion as to such amendment or change, as, for example, an amendment providing for the recall of members of Congress, or for the introduction into the national legislative machinery of the initiative and recall, or an amendment providing for the extension or restriction of the powers of the president, such as conferring upon him exclusive authority in our relations with foreign countries, or, on the other hand, conferring that exclusive authority upon the United States Senate; or a similar extension or restriction of the authority of the judicial branch of the government. Such proposals would be more or less antagonistic to our present theory and form of government, and yet under our present Constitution their advocacy is not and cannot be made criminal; equally so the display or possession of the flag or emblem of an organization peaceably engaged in such propaganda. Nothing would seem to be more certain than that the inhabitants of the United States have both individually and collectively the right to advocate peaceable changes in our Constitution, laws or form of government, although such changes may be based upon theories or principles of government antagonistic to those which now serve as their basis. And it seems equally certain that an organization peaceably advocating such changes may adopt a flag or emblem signifying its purpose, and that the display or possession of such flag or emblem cannot be made an unlawful act.

It follows that the ordinance under consideration, so far as it attempts to make the acts enumerated criminal, is invalid, and that the imprisonment of the petitioners for having engaged in one or more of those acts is in violation of the rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution of this country.

The petitioners should be discharged from custody; and it is so ordered.

COLLINS v. RAMISH. (L. A. 4674.)

1. CONTRACTS $\hookrightarrow$ 290—REQUIREMENT OF ARCHITECT'S CERTIFICATE MAY BE WAIVED BY OWNER.

A building contract provision as to architect's certificate evidencing completion of the work as prerequisite to contractor's right to recover balance on his contract was a provision for the owner's benefit which might be waived by him.

2. CONTRACTS $\hookrightarrow$ 322(3)—EVIDENCE HELD TO SHOW WAIVER OF ARCHITECT'S CERTIFICATE.

In contractor's action for balance due, evidence held to support finding that defendant owner waived contract requirement of architect's certificate.

3. CONTRACTS $\hookrightarrow$ 290—WAIVER OF ARCHITECT'S CERTIFICATE NOT NULLIFIED BY SUBSEQUENTLY SEEKING CERTIFICATE.

That long after owner had waived contract requirement of architect's certificate of completion of the work the contractor, the objection being then raised for the first time, sought such certificate to cure the alleged defect, and it was refused him, did not nullify the prior waiver.

4. CONTRACTS $\hookrightarrow$ 295(1)—LACK OF SUBSTANTIAL PERFORMANCE OF \$3,130 CONTRACT NOT SHOWN BY DEFECTS REMEDIABLE FOR \$300.

Where marble and tile work in a theater building was contracted for at the price of $3,130, a finding that the owner should be allowed $300 for imperfections in the work did not require a conclusion that the contract was not substantially performed by the contractor.

5. CONTRACTS $\hookrightarrow$ 294—QUESTION OF SUBSTANTIAL PERFORMANCE DEPENDS ON FACTS OF EACH CASE.

The question of substantial performance is one to be determined in each case with reference to existing facts and circumstances.

6. TRIAL $\hookrightarrow$ 404(2)—FINDING OF ABANDONMENT OF ACTION ONE OF FACT AND NOT LAW.

A finding that former action between the parties involving the same subject-matter had been abandoned and was not pending in abatement of the instant action was a finding of fact and not a conclusion of law.

7. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL $\hookrightarrow$ 16—PRIOR ACTION HELD "PENDING" UNTIL DECISION ON APPEAL.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1049, providing that an action is pending until determination upon appeal, an action was pending where, after judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appealed and the appeal had not been decided; it being immaterial that appellant was not in fact diligently prosecuting the appeal, or had practically abandoned it, and that the judgment appealed from was one of nonsuit merely, which could not operate as a bar to another action.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Pending.]

8. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL $\hookrightarrow$ 15—ON DISMISSAL OF PRIOR PENDING ACTION PLEA OF PRIOR ACTION FAILS.

A dismissal of the action pending at the time of the commencement of the instant action, made at any time before the trial of the instant action, or even before the conclusion of such trial, completely disposes of the plea of prior action pending.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1178(6)—ON REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT FOR ERROR IN OVERRULING PLEA OF PRIOR ACTION CASE WILL NOT BE DISMISSED BUT NEW TRIAL WILL BE ORDERED.

Where a finding of former action not pending was erroneous, in that the former action was pending on appeal when such finding was made, but the defense of former action pending was very technical, in that the prior appeal had been practically abandoned, and it appeared probable that since such finding such appeal had been dismissed by formal order of court, the instant case will not be ordered to be dismissed on reversal on appeal, but a new trial will be ordered upon the issue of prior action pending.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by B. V. Collins against Adolph Ramish. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and a new trial ordered on one issue alone.

Alfred H. McAdoo and James E. Mahon, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This action was brought by plaintiff, a contractor, to recover certain money alleged to be due from defendant on account of certain marble and tile work done in a theater building in Los Angeles belonging to defendant, which was then being constructed for said owner. The complaint was in three counts, of which it is necessary to consider only one—the second—that being the count on which the action was tried and determined. The action was tried by the court without a jury and judgment was given for plaintiff in the aggregate sum of $1,830, with interest. This is an appeal by defendant from said judgment.

The claim of plaintiff was based upon a written contract of date July 21, 1911, by which he agreed to furnish the labor and materials necessary to complete the marble and tile work in accord with the specifications therefor, under the direction and subject to the approval of the architect, for $3,130, payable in installments. There was a provision that when any payment or installment became due, and at the final completion of the work, a certificate in writing shall be obtained from the architect stating the amount due. It was further provided that progress payments shall not be construed as an absolute acceptance of the work up to the time of payment, "but the entire work is to be subject to inspection and approval of the architect at the time when it shall be claimed by the contractor that the contract and works are complete." The complaint (filed May 28, 1915), alleged that plaintiff fully completed said contract about January 10, 1912, all in accord with the plans and specifications. It did not allege the issuance of any certificate by the architect, and did allege substantially that said certificate was wilfully and without just cause refused by the architect and under the direction of and in collusion with the owner. It further alleged that defendant, who took possession of the premises shortly after January 10, 1912, based his refusal to pay the balance of the contract price on the ground that there was a series of slight depressions in the tile floor and on the further ground that some of the marble slabs did not match, and never objected on account of any failure of plaintiff to secure a certificate from the architect, but based his refusal solely on other grounds, and that defendant waived the production of any such certificate. No question was presented in the trial court as to the sufficiency of the allegation to present the issue of waiver, and the trial court found in accord with the allegations of the complaint in regard thereto. Defendant claimed that the contract was not substantially performed, in that the tile flooring in the lobby was not properly laid and that the marble work did not comply with the specifications. The trial court found that the plaintiff did substantially perform and complete all of the terms and conditions imposed on him by the contract; that the marble work as furnished by plaintiff complied completely with the requirements of the contract; that there are certain "depressions" in the tile floor, but that the tile floor as constructed substantially complies with the conditions of the contract and is a substantial performance thereof; and that "said tile floor is damaged by said trivial defects in the sum of $300, and that said defects can be remedied, and the reasonable cost of remedying said defects is $300." (The judgment was for the sum remaining unpaid on the contract, less said $300.) The trial court further found in accord with the allegations of the complaint in regard to the architect's certificate and the waiver of the same by defendant. In his answer defendant set up the plea of a former action pending, and the finding of the trial court was substantially that, although there had been a previous action, such action was no longer pending. The judgment of the trial court was for the sum remaining unpaid on the contract price, less the $300 allowed defendant as the cost of remedying the defects in the work.

[1-3] With relation to the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding of substantial performance of the contract, appellant's principal reliance, as evidenced by his briefs, appears to be based on the failure of plaintiff to obtain the architect's certificate evidencing completion of the work; the theory being that, in view of the provisions of the contract relative to approval of the work by the architect and the issuance of a certificate to that effect, such certificate constitutes a necessary prerequisite to the right to recover. The provision of the contract as to an architect's certificate was, of course, a provision for the benefit of defendant which might be waived by him. See Knarston v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 140 Cal. 57, 63, 73 Pac. 740; Valley Lumber Co. v. Struck et al., 146 Cal. 266, 270, 80 Pac. 405; Kling v. Bucher, 32 Cal. App. 679, 163 Pac. 871. There was ample evidence to sustain a conclusion that the want of an architect's certificate was never suggested by defendant as a ground for refusing payment until upon a trial of a previous action, brought by plaintiff against defendant long after defendant had taken possession of the premises, he raised the objection on motion for a nonsuit, and that he had not based his refusal to pay, prior to such action, wholly or in part upon any such ground. There was also evidence tending in some degree to show that the defendant had assumed to act throughout the matter without regard to this provision of the contract, and that the one progress payment that had been made was made by the owner without any certificate or request therefor. We think that upon the record it must be held that there was sufficient evidence to support the finding that defendant waived the requirement. It appears to be generally held in other jurisdictions that the necessary waiver may be inferred from such acts and conduct or declarations of the employer as are inconsistent with the purpose of exacting performance, and that where the refusal of the owner to pay is based wholly upon other grounds than the failure to produce a written certificate of the architect a waiver of that requirement may be inferred. Especially is this true where there is added a course of conduct during the progress of the work indicating that the owner ignores such a requirement, and there is shown a substantial performance by the contractor. See Steelman v. Ludy, 77 N. J. Law, 446, 72 Atl. 423; Lohr, etc., v. Ferguson, 223 Ill. 88, 93, 79 N. E. 35; Tilden v. Buffalo Building Co., 27 App. Div. 510, 50 N. Y. Supp. 511, 515; Quast v. Guetzkow, 164 Wis. 197, 199, 159 N. W. 810; Ashland Lime, etc., Co. v. Shores, 103 Wis. 122, 131, 81 N. W. 136; Masek v. Chmelik, 169 Ill. App. 589. The principle is fully recognized in American-Hawaiian Eng., etc., Co. v. Butler, 165 Cal. 497, 515, 133 Pac. 280, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 44. That subsequent to the first trial, after this objection had been raised on the trial thereof, plaintiff did seek a certificate of completion of the architect in order to cure the alleged defect, and was refused such certificate, does not preclude the conclusion of waiver. The waiver, if any, had occurred long prior thereto. We see no force in the additional points on this question made for the first time in appellant's supplemental brief filed in this court.

[4, 5] Upon the question of substantial performance in fact we see no reason to doubt that the evidence was sufficient to support the findings. As to what is meant by the term "substantial performance" in such matters as this, the law of this state is clearly set forth in Connell v. Higgins, 170 Cal. 541, 556, 150 Pac. 769. See, also, Harlan v. Stufflebeem, 87 Cal. 508, 25 Pac. 686. The situation was such in this case as to warrant the conclusion of the trial court. The mere fact that defendant should be allowed $300 (the contract price being $3,130) on account of imperfections in the work, if that be the fact, cannot be held to necessarily require a different conclusion. There is no doubt of the sufficiency of the evidence in regard to the tile floor matter to warrant the conclusion that there was no willful departure by the contractor from the provisions of the contract, that he had acted in good faith throughout, and that the owner, who had received and was enjoying the fruits of the work, could be fully compensated by a recoupment for damages in so far as any defects were concerned. The alleged defects were wholly in relation to the manner in which the tiling had been laid; the claim being that the workmen had not laid it in such a way that it was entirely smooth and level, in that there were certain depressions. According to the contractor, these depressions were very slight and not at all serious in their effect. The trial judge had examined the premises and no objection has been reserved to his having so done. The question of substantial performance is one to be determined in each case with reference to the existing facts and circumstances. Connell v. Higgins, supra. Under all the circumstances we cannot say that there was error in the trial judge's conclusion.

The District Court of Appeal in deciding this case was of the opinion that there was not sufficient evidence on which to found a conclusion as to the reasonable cost of remedying the defects in the tile flooring; the court finding, as already noted, that while the tile floor was constructed substantially in accord with the conditions of the contract, "said tile floor is damaged by said trivial defects in the sum of $300, and that said defects can be remedied, and the reasonable cost of remedying said defects is $300." No useful purpose can be subserved by a discussion of the fragmentary evidence elicited by the trial court on this question. Suffice it to say that we find therein no evidence furnishing a sufficient basis for the conclusion as to the amount that should be deducted from the contract price on account of the defects. This, as we have noted, was the conclusion of the District Court of Appeal.

[6, 7] The briefs are largely devoted to the question of the defense of pendency of a former action. The court found that there was a former action between these parties involving the same subject-matter, in which a judgment of nonsuit was entered, and, further, that said action had been abandoned and was not pending in abatement of this action. We think the latter finding, while placed among the conclusions of law, must be deemed a misplaced finding of fact. It seems entirely clear that this finding cannot be held to find support in the evidence. The record must be held to show without conflict that, the judgment of nonsuit having been entered, plaintiff took an appeal therefrom to this court, and that such appeal was pending herein at the time of the trial of this action. We see no force in any of the claims to the contrary made by plaintiff.

"An action is deemed to be pending from the time of its commencement until its final determination upon appeal, or until the time for appeal has passed, unless the judgment is sooner satisfied." See section 1049, Code Civ. Proc.

The appeal having been taken, it necessarily was a pending appeal until decided or dismissed by the appellate court. That the appellant was not in fact diligently prosecuting the appeal or had practically abandoned it is altogether immaterial. Until it was decided or dismissed there was no final determination of the action upon the appeal, and the action was therefore still pending. This being the situation, the finding of the trial court should have been to the effect that the former action was still pending, and such a finding would have required that this action abate. Plaintiff seeks to exclude this case from the effect of the general rule by reason of the fact that the judgment in the former action was one of nonsuit only, which could not operate as a bar to a second action. This fact is altogether immaterial. Notwithstanding it, the action was still pending by reason of the appeal, which had not been finally determined. The only question is whether the former action was still pending, and the nature of the judgment given from which the pending appeal was taken is altogether beside the question. Plaintiff relies in this contention upon Pyle v. Piercy, 122 Cal. 383, 55 Pac. 141. Some of the language in that opinion may, upon a cursory reading, be misleading. The court there was not discussing a plea of former action pending, but a case of a former judgment pleaded in bar. After very properly concluding that a judgment of dismissal for failure of plaintiff to appear on the trial could not be held to operate as a bar to another action, the court said, in reply to some contention of appellant, that it necessarily followed that such a judgment cannot be pleaded in abatement and avoidance, that if the "judgment" is such that it cannot be pleaded in bar it cannot be pleaded in abatement, and that a "judgment" which has not the elements to constitute a bar has not the elements to support a plea in abatement. What the case really holds, and all that it has ever been cited for, is that a judgment of dismissal of action for want of prosecution for nonappearance of plaintiff at the time set for trial is not an adjudication of the cause on the merits and is in no way a bar to a subsequent action. Carr v. Howell, 154 Cal. 383, 97 Pac. 885; Hershey v. Bristol, 162 Cal. 110, 121 Pac. 371; Estate of Bump, 152 Cal. 279, 92 Pac. 643. If it could fairly be construed as holding that the character of the judgment in the former action, where judgment has been given in such action, as to its being capable of constituting a bar to another action, is at all material in determining an issue of pendency of former action, it would clearly be wrong and should not be followed.

[8, 9] Defendant insists that, in view of the situation with relation to this matter, the judgment of the superior court should be reversed, with directions to dismiss the action. This was the course followed in Fisk v. Atkinson, 71 Cal. 452, 10 Pac. 374, 12 Pac. 498. There were no findings of fact in that case. Here, as we have seen, we have a finding of fact to the effect that the former action is not pending, and the authorities seem to preclude our ordering a judgment that would not find support in the existing findings. See Kellogg v. King, 114 Cal. 378, 389, 46 Pac. 166, 55 Am. St. Rep. 74; Gwin v. Calegaris, 139 Cal. 384, 391, 73 Pac. 851. But regardless of this we would not be warranted in giving a direction for dismissal or abatement of the action where it is clearly made to appear that the effect thereof would be to accomplish injustice. The record on appeal shows that in this case the defense of former action pending was very technical, inasmuch as the appeal in the former action had practically been abandoned by the plaintiff. All that was lacking to finally determine the former action was an order of this court dismissing the appeal, which formal order counsel for plaintiff apparently deemed unnecessary. It is asserted by counsel for respondent in his brief and admitted by appellant that on January 21, 1919, an order was made by this court, on the application of the plaintiff (appellant), that his appeal in the former action be dismissed. This court had the power to so dismiss the appeal on the appellant's application, and there would not be error in its so doing. The effect of such an order would be to finally end the former action. It is thoroughly settled in this jurisdiction that a dismissal of the former action pending at the time of the commencement of the subsequent action made at any time before the trial of the subsequent action, or even before the conclusion of such trial, completely disposes of the plea of former action pending. See Moore v. Hopkins, 83 Cal. 270, 23 Pac. 318, 17 Am. St. Rep. 248; McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 154, 161, 64 Pac. 278; Balfour, etc., v. Woodworth, 124 Cal. 169, 56 Pac. 891; Dyer v. Scalmanini, 69 Cal. 637, 11 Pac. 327. It thus appears that plaintiff now probably has a complete answer to the defendant's plea of former action pending available on the new trial, which would naturally be ordered where a judgment is reversed for insufficiency of evidence to sustain a finding. We think we are fully warranted in considering all this, for the purpose of determining whether in addition to reversing the judgment we should order the superior court to abate the action, assuming, of course, that we have the power to make any such order, in view of the findings, and that in view of the circumstances we would not be warranted in ordering a dismissal, even had we power to do so.

We find no other claim of material error that, in view of our conclusion on the points already noticed, merits discussion.

No good reason appears why the new trial that must be had should not be limited to to the matters in regard to which error has been shown. Learned counsel for defendant appears to think that injustice would be done by adopting any such course, in that he relied so confidently on his plea of former action pending that he did not fully develop his other defenses. He had no right to rely to any such extent on this technical plea, and in so far as we can see he did not lack in presenting fully to the court below such defenses as he had. It is a plain duty of appellate courts to facilitate to the extent of their capacity as speedy a disposition of litigation as is consistent with the doing of complete justice between the parties.

The judgment is reversed and a new trial ordered solely upon the issue of a former action pending, and upon the issue respecting the amount, if any, that should be allowed defendant by reason of defects in the tile work, the findings already made upon all other issues to stand as the findings upon such issues in so far as the new judgment to be given is concerned.

SAN GABRIEL VALLEY COUNTRY CLUB
v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (L. A. 4534.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 12, 1920.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES —38—LONG EXISTING CHANNEL MADE BY WATER ARTI-FICIALLY CONCENTRATED HELD NATURAL COURSE.

Where a channel, formed by water which previously spread over the land and disappeared into the ground, but which was artificially concentrated, has continued to exist for more than 30 years, it may be considered as a water course wholly natural in origin.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES —38—IN-TERMEDIATE FLOW DOES NOT DISPROVE "WA-TER COURSE."

A channel with defined bed and banks and habitually used by water passing down as a collected body or stream in seasons during which streams in the region are accustomed to flow is a water course in the legal sense, although dry, except in the winter and spring, and at intervals during those seasons.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Water Course.]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES —176—COUNTY'S LIABILITY FOR DAMAGE FROM DRAINS HELD NOT AFFECTED BY CITY DRAIN ENTERING INTO IT.

A drain constructed by a city which merely carried into a county drain water which otherwise would have flowed into the wash into which the county drain emptied cannot affect the right to recover in an action against the county for damages resulting from the construction of its drain.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES —115—WA-TER IN DEFINED CHANNEL IS NOT "SUR-FACE WATERS."

"Surface waters" are those which fall on the land from the skies or arise in springs and spread over the surface of the ground without being collected into a definite body and do not include waters already gathered into a definite body flowing as a stream in a water course.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Surface Water.]

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES —168—
COUNTY MAY CONSTRUCT DRAIN IN WATER
COURSE INCREASING VOLUME AND VELOCITY.

A county can, as against a lower riparian owner, construct for the reasonable protection of its inhabitants a concrete drain following the general direction of a water course and emptying into it which merely provides a better channel for the water thereby increasing the volume and velocity of the flow below the drain, but does not discharge into the water course any water which naturally would not have entered it.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES —171(1)—
IMPROVEMENT OF CHANNEL TO PROTECT LAND NOT ACTIONABLE THOUGH CAUSING OVER-FLOW.

A reasonable improvement of the channel of a water course which gives no right of action to a lower riparian owner for damages by erosion is not actionable, though it causes an overflow of the lower channel.

7. EMINENT DOMAIN —2(1) — DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA NEED NOT BE COMPENSATED.

Const. art. 1, § 14, providing that private property shall not be damaged for public use without just compensation, does not make a county liable for an injury inflicted by it which would have been damnum absque injuria if inflicted by a private person.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by the San Gabriel Valley Country Club against the County of Los Angeles for damages and an injunction. From a judgment awarding damages to plaintiff, but denying the injunction, both parties appeal. Reversed, with directions to enter judgment for defendant.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, Roy V. Reppy, Asst. Co. Counsel, and Salisbury & North, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hickcox & Crenshaw, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. This is an action by the plaintiff, the San Gabriel Valley Country Club, against the county of Los Angeles to recover damages for injury alleged to have been done the plaintiff's land by the construction of certain storm drains by the defendant county and to enjoin the further use of those drains. The trial court found that the plaintiff's land had, in fact, been damaged by the construction and the use of the drains and awarded the plaintiff damages, but refused an injunction. From this result both sides appeal. The trial court made detailed findings of facts, the correctness of which neither side disputes, the contention of the plaintiff being that upon the findings it is entitled to the injunction sought, as well as to damages, and the contention of the defendant being that upon the findings the injury done the plaintiff's land was damnum absque injuria and the plaintiff is entitled to neither damages nor injunction.

The material facts as they appear from the findings are not particularly complicated. The plaintiff's land is situate about six miles south of the base of the Sierra Madre Mountains. From the land to the base of the mountains the country rises on a gradual slope and is occupied in large part by the city of Pasadena. Back of the city there debouch from the mountains with their mouths close together two cañons known as Las Flores and Rubio. From the mouths of these cañons there extends fanlike over the plain for two or three miles a debris cone made up of material washed down by the cañon streams. These streams are dry except during and immediately after the rainy season—that is, except during the winter and spring. During the rainy season, however, they at times of storm discharge onto the plain a very large volume of water. Prior to the building up of the locality these waters on emerging from the cañons spread out over the débris cone mentioned and were dissipated without reaching the plaintiff's land.

Between 1870 and 1880 the locality became somewhat settled, and the waters coming from the two cañons were confined and together formed a channel known as the Rubio Cañon wash, in which they flowed from 1881 until the construction in 1913 of the storm drains here complained of. This channel as it proceeds down joins other washes and ultimately passes through the plaintiff's land. The channels run through a porous and sandy soil, and much of the water passing down them was absorbed prior to 1913 before reaching the plaintiff's land. In times of heavy storm also the channels would overflow and a portion of their waters be lost in that manner without reaching the plaintiff's land.

In 1913 the defendant county through the instrumentality of two so-called protection districts constructed the drains, two in number, in question here. They really are but a single drain, since the second is but a continuation of the first. They, or rather it, is a concrete box of a capacity to carry all the waters of the Rubio wash, which it picks up by means of an intake dam near the head of the wash and empties into it again about a mile above the plaintiff's land. It follows the general direction of the wash, and for some of the distance is laid in it, but for some of the distance departs from it.

In the same year the city of Pasadena constructed a drain which apparently, although the findings are not entirely clear upon the point, picked up in similar fashion the waters of East Pasadena wash, one of the tributaries, so to speak, of the wash passing through the plaintiff's land, and emptied such waters into the county drain at or near the point of junction of the Rubio and East Pasadena washes, with the result that from there on the county drain carried the water of both washes, just as the wash below that point had previously done.

Following the construction of these drains, in January and February, 1914, extraordinary and unusual rains occurred in the region, and a great volume of water was passed through the drain and emptied into the wash below, and, continuing down it, very substantially damaged the plaintiff's land. The plaintiff thereupon brought this action because of the injury so done it and the danger of similar injury being done again.

The court further finds, in effect, that the action of the county drains is solely upon the water in the washes; in other words, the drains are substitute conduits for the washes. It follows at once, and the court so finds, that so far as augmenting the volume of the stream in the wash below and passing the plaintiff's land, the action of the drains is twofold, and twofold only: First, they prevent any water escaping from the channel above in time of flood and overflowing the surrounding country and thereby being in large measure dissipated and lost; second, they act as an impervious, and direct, smooth, and unobstructed, and therefore speedier conduit in place of the washes with their pervious bottoms and sides, and indirect, broken, and obstructed, and therefore slower channels. The amount of absorption by the porous bottoms and sides of the washes must have been considerable, and the court so finds, and it is plain that to the full extent of this the volume of water in the stream below the drains is increased. The speedier passage of the water through the drains would also of itself augment the volume below in times of storm, at least to the extent to which it brings more nearly together at one time in the channel the storm waters from the mountains and those from the plain immediately about. But the whole effect of the drains, so far as increasing the volume in the stream is concerned, may be summed up by saying that they add no water to that already in the channel and that which would come to it on the way, but merely serve to pass such waters more completely and more speedily from one point in the channel to another, all entirely above the plaintiff's land.

So far as the velocity of the water in the wash as it passes the plaintiff's land is concerned, it is apparent that the drains do not affect it otherwise than to the extent to which the velocity is increased by an increased volume of water. The plaintiff's land is a mile or more below the lower end of the drains, and any impetus the water may have as it emerges from the drains must be lost long before reaching the plaintiff's land. There is no increase in velocity, in other words, except such as is a necessary incident of an increased volume.

The case presented by the findings is therefore simply one where a public authority has constructed an artificial conduit which, to the extent of its length, but no further, acts as, and only as, a substitute for a natural channel which continues on down to and through the plaintiff's land a mile or so below. It should also be noted that there is no finding and there is nothing to indicate that this artificial conduit was not a reasonable improvement for the benefit and protection of the territory through which the natural channel for which it was a substitute ran, or that it was constructed in a manner more burdensome to the plaintiff.

than was required for the purpose for which it was constructed. The question presented may be thus stated: Has the owner of land through which a natural water channel runs a right to complain of an improvement of that channel above his land (for the substitute conduit is but that) and has no other effect, when the improvement is a reasonable one for the benefit of the upper land through which the channel runs and is not constructed in an unreasonable manner?

[1] Before discussing this question, there are certain matters which should be disposed of preliminarily. We have referred to the Rubio Cañon wash and the continuation of it through the plaintiff's land as a natural water channel. In one sense it is not that. It did not exist as a definite water course, at least as far as the plaintiff's land, before the region was settled up, but was created as the result of settlement. Nevertheless it is natural in the sense that it was originally made by the waters themselves, and not by man, although it is possible that except for the acts of man the waters would not have been kept together so as to make a channel. In any event it has now existed for such a length of time as the channel for the natural drainage of the watershed tributary to it that the manner of its creation is not material, and it has all the attributes of a water channel wholly natural in origin. City of Reading v. Althouse, 93 Pa. 400.

[2] Likewise it is a water course in the legal sense, although dry except in the winter and spring and very possibly at intervals even in these seasons. It is a channel with defined bed and banks made and habitually used by water passing down as a collected body or stream in those seasons of the year and at those times when the streams in the region are accustomed to flow. It is wholly different from a swale, hollow, or depression through which may pass surface waters in time of storm not collected into a defined stream. Conniff v. San Francisco, 67 Cal. 45, 7 Pac. 41; Spangler v. San Francisco, 84 Cal. 12, 23 Pac. 1091, 18 Am. St. Rep. 158; Los Angeles, etc., Ass'n v. Los Angeles, 103 Cal. 461, 37 Pac. 375.

[3] Mention should also be made of the East Pasadena drain constructed by the city of Pasadena. Apparently from the findings it is of the same character as the drains constructed by the county; that is, it serves only to carry waters already collected in the East Pasadena wash and does not serve to collect other waters and add them to those already there. But, however this may be, the drain was not constructed by the county, and no relief in regard to it can be given in this action, which is against the county alone. While it discharges into the county drains, this fact is not material, since, if the latter were not there, it would discharge into the wash, and its waters would then, as now, pass down the wash to the plaintiff's land.

[4] It should also be observed at the outset that the present case is not concerned with surface waters. Such waters in the legal sense are those which fall on the land by precipitation from the skies or arise in springs and spread over the surface of the ground without being collected into a definite body. McDaniel v. Cummings, 83 Cal. 515, 23 Pac. 795, 8 L. R. A. 575; 3 Farnham on Waters, § 278. As to such waters the rule has been established by numerous decisions in this state that a landowner may not gather them together on his land by artificial means and discharge them onto lower lying land in greater volume or in a different manner than they would naturally be discharged. Of this character are the following decisions cited on behalf of the plaintiff: Conniff v. San Francisco, supra; Stanford v. San Francisco, 111 Cal. 198, 43 Pac. 605; Cushing v. Pires, 124 Cal. 663, 57 Pac. 572; Galbreath v. Hopkins, 159 Cal. 297, 113 Pac. 174; Shaw v. Sebastopol, 159 Cal. 623, 115 Pac. 213; Heier v. Krull, 160 Cal. 441, 117 Pac. 530; Cox v. Odell, 1 Cal. App. 682, 82 Pac. 1086; Peck v. Peterson, 15 Cal. App. 543, 115 Pac. 327; and Stanford University v. Rodley (App.) 177 Pac. 175. But the present case is not concerned with surface waters, and the foregoing decisions are not in point. The waters upon which the drains here in question act have lost their character as surface waters before they reach the drains and have already been gathered into a definite body flowing as a stream in a water course. The difference between surface waters and those collected and flowing in a water course is well recognized, and the same rules by no means apply to one as to the other.

Likewise the distinction should be observed at the outset between the present case and such decisions as Rudel v. Los Angeles County, 118 Cal. 281, 50 Pac. 400, Larrabee v. Cloverdale, 131 Cal. 96, 63 Pac. 143, Wood v. Moulton, 146 Cal. 317, 80 Pac. 92, and Humphreys v. Moulton, 1 Cal. App. 257, 81 Pac. 1085, which are also cited on behalf of the plaintiff. These cases were all concerned with water in water courses and with improvements or changes in drainage. So far they resemble the case at bar. But in all of them, unlike the present case, the improvement or change did not have the effect merely of passing down the water in a stream more completely and speedily from one point in its channel to another, but of diverting it entirely from its channel and discharging it either into a different channel in which it did not naturally flow or upon neighboring land where there was no channel.

Of these cases Rudel v. Los Angeles County is particularly relied upon, and we are referred so strongly to it as determinative here that a statement of it may not be amiss. It involved an earlier attempt by the county to dispose of the same waters as those which are now disposed of by the present drains. Instead, however, of passing these waters down to a lower point in their channel as it is now attempted to do, it was planned to divert them entirely and to discharge them into another water course to the east in which they did not normally flow. So to do was to impose upon such other channel the burden of carrying the drainage of a watershed not tributary to it. Upon this ground the carrying out of the improvement was enjoined at the instance of a landowner through whose property the second channel ran. The question so presented and determined is manifestly different from the question here, where the channel involved is the natural drainage outlet for the water involved and the improvement complained of is one which, as we have said, merely passes the water more completely and more speedily from one point in the channel to another; both points being entirely above the plaintiff's land.

[5] Passing now to this question, the ultimate one in the case, it cannot be said that there is any decision in this state dealing with just such facts or which seems on a first reading to be directly in point. But when the plaintiff's position is analyzed, and the rule is ascertained upon which the plaintiff must depend as the law in order to have a cause of action, it appears clearly that such rule is opposed to previous decisions by this court and is not the law. The plaintiff's complaint is solely that the drains increased the volume and speed of the water in passing its land. No complaint is made of the manner in which the drains are constructed, or that they are not reasonable improvements for the district they are designed to protect, or that they are unnecessarily injurious to the plaintiff, or that they bring into the channel water for which it is not the natural drainage outlet, or, in a word, that there has been any wrong committed into which there enters any factor other than simply an increase in the volume of the stream and consequent increase of speed and height produced by artificial means. The plaintiff's position is, and must necessarily be, that the owner of land through which a water course passes has the right to have the stream flow by exactly as it would naturally flow and may complain of any increase of volume, no matter how caused, providing only it be caused by artificial means. But this position is directly opposed to the decisions of this court that a riparian owner may construct embankments or levees along the bank of the stream to prevent the overflow and erosion of his land. Barnes v. Marshall, 68 Cal. 569, 10 Pac. 115; Lamb v. Reclamation District, 73 Cal. 125, 14 Pac.

625, 2 Am. St. Rep. 775; De Baker v. Railway Co., 106 Cal. 257, 39 Pac. 610, 46 Am. St. Rep. 237.

The inevitable effect of such an embankment which holds the waters of the stream within its channel and prevents them from widening the channel by erosion is to increase the volume and speed of the stream at times of high water both in front of and below the embankment. Such increased volume and speed may damage lands below and yet the decisions mentioned hold that such damage is damnum absque injuria. There is no essential difference between these cases and the present. Under them the county, without any liability to the plaintiff, could unquestionably have constructed dikes along the banks of the Rubio wash, which would have held within it all overflow waters and prevented seepage through the banks. Such dikes would have increased the volume of water below and consequently its rate of flow and would also have passed the water along more rapidly from one point in the channel to another. But the drains here complained of serve exactly the same purpose, that of protecting the lands on each side of the stream, and have identically the same effect and no other. The only difference between the drains and such embankments is that the former accomplish their purpose somewhat more completely and effectively than the latter would. But the purpose is the same, the manner of accomplishing it, that of restraining the waters, is the same, and the results are the same except for some difference in degree. Nor is this difference in degree material, since, to repeat, there is no contention that the drains are an unreasonable means of accomplishing the purpose for which they were built. The complaint is not against the means adopted, but against the necessary incidents of the purpose itself. But the purpose is a lawful one, and the decisions mentioned determine that no cause of action arises merely because of what is a necessary incident of the accomplishment of this purpose.

The plaintiff's position is based on the much-quoted maxim, "Aqua currit et debere currere ut currere solebat." But there are many departures from this rule, of which the right to a reasonable use of the water in the stream by an upper riparian owner is perhaps the most familiar. The exercise of this right in most cases diminishes the flow. But there are uses which at times increase it, as, for example, where dams are put in for the use of mills and the water is allowed to escape at times in greater volume than the stream would then otherwise carry. In such a case no right of action by a landowner below exists because of the increase of volume and consequent acceleration of flow, provided the use is a reasonable one and exercised in a reasonable manner. The reason for permitting such departure from the maxim quoted is that not to do so would be largely to destroy the usefulness of the stream. 2 Farnham on Waters, §§ 475, 476.

The present case is not wholly analogous to those just mentioned, but the reason for it is much the same and is indeed stronger. Not to permit an upper landowner to protect his land against the stream would be in many instances to destroy the possibility of making the land available for improvement or settlement and condemn it to sterility and vacancy. Such a rule would seriously interfere with the development of the country. Because of this and because of the necessity of permitting the utilization for drainage of the means afforded by nature for the purpose, a very great preponderance of the decisions in other states go further than it is necessary to go in this case and hold that a riparian owner has no right to complain because the volume of water in the stream is increased by artificially draining surface waters into it above, provided only the stream is the natural drainage channel for the lands so drained. Furthermore, this rule is adopted regardless of whether the so-called common-law rule concerning surface waters prevails in the particular jurisdiction or, as here, the civil law rule, which forbids the gathering together of surface waters and discharging them as a stream upon adjoining lands. If the surface waters are gathered and discharged into the stream which is their natural means of drainage, so that they come to the land below only as a part of the stream, it is held that no action lies because of their being added. Kauffman v. Griesemer, 26 Pa. 407, 67 Am. Dec. 437; Ludeling v. Stubbs, 34 La. Ann. 935; Hughes v. Anderson, 68 Ala. 280, 44 Am. Rep. 147; Shaw v. Ward, 131 Wis. 646, 111 N. W. 671, 11 Ann. Cas. 1139; Peck v. Herrington, 109 Ill. 611, 50 Am. Rep. 627; Vannest v. Fleming, 79 Iowa, 638, 44 N. W. 906, 8 L. R. A. 227, 18 Am. St. Rep. 387; Thompson v. Andrews, 39 S. D. 477, 165 N. W. 9; Mizzell v. McGowan, 125 N. C. 439, 34 S. E. 538; Id., 129 N. C. 93, 39 S. E. 729, 85 Am. St. Rep. 705; Waffle v. N. Y. Central R. R., 53 N. Y. 11, 13 Am. Rep. 467. Mr. Freeman in his note in 85 Am. St. Rep. 727, reviews very thoroughly the authorities dealing with the right to accelerate or diminish the flow of water, and upon the particular point under discussion says (page 733):

"We have just noticed the difference between merely draining onto another's land, and draining into a natural channel or water course, which flows across such land. So far as streams or natural water courses are concerned, there can be no doubt that one may drain into them, and thereby increase their volume without subjecting himself to liability for any damage suffered by a lower owner."

If a riparian owner cannot complain if surface waters be actually added by artificial drainage above to the volume of the stream, it must certainly be that he cannot complain of a drainage improvement which adds no water to the stream, but merely protects the adjoining lands against the water already in it. The cases in which this exact question is presented are not many, but so far as we have been cited to them they all, with one possible exception, so hold. Daum v. Cooper, 103 Ill. App. 4; Fenton, etc., Railroad v. Adams, 221 Ill. 201, 77 N. E. 531, 112 Am. St. Rep. 171; Dorr v. Simmerson, 127 Iowa, 551, 103 N. W. 806; Manteufel v. Wetzel, 133 Wis. 619, 114 N. W. 91, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 167; Steiner v. Steiner, 97 Neb. 449, 150 N. W. 205.

Of these cases Fenton, etc., Railroad v. Adams is perhaps the strongest. There a stream came onto the land of the defendants and spread out into a marsh, where its waters were delayed and the debris they carried in time of storm deposited, and thence continued on down to the plaintiff's railroad tracks beneath which it passed by a culvert. The defendants constructed a ditch which diverted the stream from its channel above the marsh and conveyed it by a more direct route with a higher gradient, avoiding the marsh, to a point in the channel below the marsh, but still upon the defendant's land. The railroad company sought to enjoin the maintenance of the ditch on the ground that it would largely increase the amount of water coming to its culvert in time of storm and would also bring to the culvert a large amount of debris which would otherwise be deposited above. It was held, however, that the defendants had the right to improve the course of the stream through their land; that the ditch, although it diverted the stream from its channel for a portion of its distance on the defendants' land, was nothing more than such an improvement, and that the railroad company had no cause of action. There is no material difference whatever between such facts and those of the case at bar.

The possible exception mentioned to these decisions is Grant v. Kuglar, 81 Ga. 637, 8 S. E. 878, 3 L. R. A. 606, 12 Am. St. Rep. 348. It is, however, not possible to ascertain just what the facts of this case were, and certainly the statement of Judge Freeman concerning it in 85 Am. St. Rep. 725, that the broad proposition it lays down is not universally true, is correct. If it is to be considered as in point here, it is opposed to the whole drift of the decisions generally and to the weight of authority upon the particular point.

When we say that the decisions upon the exact question here presented are not many, we are not unaware of the fact that there are a very large number of decisions in which a change in natural conditions increasing the volume or accelerating the flow of a stream has been enjoined. But in these cases there entered factors other than those merely of a change reasonably made for the protection of land above and having the effect only of increasing the volume and to that extent the speed and height of the water in the channel when it reached the plaintiff's land. There was an unlawful encroachment upon the channel, or a diverting of the course or direction of the current, or a pollution of the stream, as where the drainage was of sewage as well as of water, or some other factor which imposed upon the plaintiff a burden other than merely that the channel should serve in an increased degree as the drainage outlet for the waters which would naturally drain to and through it. Our conclusion is that an improvement for the purposes of drainage of lands above does not give a lower riparian owner on the stream a cause of action merely because the improvement increases the volume of water coming to his land in the stream with the incidents necessarily accompanying such increase of volume, but without affecting the stream in any other manner. Such is the present case.

[6] There remains, however, one point which should be discussed. It is frequently stated, and some decisions perhaps hold, that the rule that no action lies simply because of an increase in the volume of a stream caused by improvements for drainage above is subject to the limitation that thereby the natural capacity of the channel be not exceeded; that is, that the lands below be not flooded. It does not appear from the findings in the present case whether the plaintiff's land was flooded or not. What does appear is that a considerable portion of it was washed away. This may well have happened without the land being actually overflowed. But, however this may be, we are of the opinion that no such limitation should be adopted. On the one hand, the authority for it consists largely of dicta and casual statements, and, on the other hand, it is wholly impracticable and in many cases destructive of the rule on which it is supposed to be only a limitation. This is very clearly pointed out and the limitation rejected in Mizell v. McGowan, 129 N. C. 93, 39 S. E. 729, 85 Am. St. Rep. 705. As is there said:

"Suppose the natural capacity of the water course was made the test of the rule; it would be so extremely difficult of application as practically to destroy its value. What is the natural capacity of a stream? Is it measured at low water or at high water? Almost any stream can carry off whatever water may be made to flow into it in dry weather, or perhaps even in ordinary times. On the contrary, the clearing up of our lands is having the double effect of greatly accelerating the flow of water and at the same time filling up our streams with sand, so that very few of them can now carry the water naturally flowing into them after heavy rains.

"Again, suppose the upper tenant were compelled to regard the natural capacity of the stream; how far down would this limitation extend? Naturally many others would drain into the same stream, so that the landowner near its mouth would get the accumulated waters of all those above him. In case of injury how would he apportion his damages, and where would the liability of each tort-feasor begin and end? These questions, it seems to us, would severely tax the utmost ingenuity of the courts, and leave the jury in such a state of perplexity as to seriously endanger their intelligent determination of the issues."

The reasons so stated may be multiplied many fold. To them also may be added the query: Why should there be any difference between injury done by flooding and injury done in any other manner by an increase in the volume of the stream. If it be the injury alone which constitutes the wrong, why should a recovery not be permitted whatever form the injury takes. On the other hand, if it be not the injury alone which constitutes the wrong, why permit a recovery because of it when it takes the form of flooding. The injury done by erosion, for example, is frequently much more serious than that done by flooding. It was undoubtedly so in the present case. No reason can be seen why, if injury by flooding is actionable in such a case as the present, injury by erosion should not be so likewise. Yet, if the rule stated, established by the great weight of authority and based on strong considerations of public good, be subject to the limitation that the increased volume of the stream caused by drainage improvements above, otherwise lawful, do not cause injury by erosion, the rule does not in reality exist, since there can be no increase in the volume of the stream without increasing its speed, and consequently its erosive effect, and the doing of a theoretical injury, at least, to the banks past which it flows.

Summing up the discussion, our conclusion, as we have stated, is that an improvement for the purposes of the drainage and protection of lands above does not give a lower riparian owner on the stream a cause of action merely because such improvement increases the volume of water in the stream as it comes to his land, even though the burden he is necessarily under of protecting his land against the stream is thereby increased and his land is injured because of his failure to meet such increased burden, and further that the rule is not subject to the limitation that the increased volume must not be such as to make the stream exceed the capacity of its channel. The injury to the plaintiff's land comes directly within this rule, and is therefore not actionable.

[7] It is apparently contended on behalf of the plaintiff that, even if the injury be damnum absque injuria as between private parties, yet, when the injury is inflicted by an improvement made by public authority, it must be compensated for under the provision of our Constitution (article 1, § 14) that private property shall not be taken or damaged for a public use without just compensation. But the contrary has been directly decided since the filing of the original briefs in this case in Gray v. Reclamation District, 174 Cal. 622, 163 Pac. 1024.

It follows that the plaintiff was not entitled upon the findings either to an injunction or to damages.

Judgment reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment for the defendant with costs.

In re ELIZALDE'S ESTATE. (L. A. 5687.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1920.
Rehearing Denied April 7, 1920.)

1. SUBROGATION §7(1)—CODE PROVISION IS DECLARATORY OF COMMON LAW, AND NOT COMPLETE STATEMENT OF LAW OF SUBROGATION.

Civ. Code, § 2848, providing that a surety on satisfying the obligation of the principal is entitled to enforce every remedy which the creditor has against the principal is declaratory of the common law, and, though controlling so far as it goes, does not embrace the whole law on the subject of subrogation.

2. COMMON LAW §11—STILL IN FORCE EXCEPT WHEN INAPPLICABLE OR MODIFIED BY STATUTE.

Under Pol. Code, § 4468, the common law, except so far as it is inapplicable to existing conditions or has been modified by statute, still remains in force.

3. STATUTES §222—CIVIL CODE DOES NOT EMBODY WHOLE LAW ON MATTERS COVERED.

The Civil Code was not designed to embody the whole law of private and civil relations, rights, and duties, but is incomplete and partial.

4. STATUTES §222—CIVIL CODE TO BE CONSTRUED IN LIGHT OF COMMON-LAW DECISIONS.

Except in those instances where its language clearly and unequivocally discloses an intention to depart from, alter, or abrogate the common-law rule concerning a particular subject-matter, a section of the Civil Code, purporting to embody such doctrine or rule, will be construed in the light of common-law decisions on the same subject.

5. SUBROGATION §8 — SURETY SUBROGATED TO PRINCIPAL'S RIGHTS AGAINST SURETY.

By the common law the surety upon satisfying his principal's obligation is subrogated, not only to the rights and remedies of the creditor against the principal connected with the debt, but also to the similar rights and remedies of the principal against the creditor.

6. SUBROGATION §8 — ADMINISTRATOR'S SURETIES SUBROGATED TO HIS RIGHTS FOR ADVANCES TO DISTRIBUTEE.

Sureties of a deceased administrator who were required to pay the amount due from him to the estate were subrogated to his right to reimbursement on final distribution for amounts advanced by him to a distributee.

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §501—NO PRESUMPTION THAT SERVICES ARE RENDERED GRATUITOUSLY.

There is no presumption that an administrator's services are rendered gratuitously.

8. SUBROGATION §35 — SURETIES DID NOT LOSE RIGHT BY CONTESTING LIABILITY.

Sureties of a deceased administrator by contesting in court his liability for moneys misappropriated by him did not lose their right to be subrogated to his claim for commissions on final distribution of the estate.

9. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §117—LIABILITY FOR MISAPPROPRIATION LIMITED TO AMOUNT APPROPRIATED WITH COMPOUND INTEREST.

The limit of liability for an administrator's failure to account for assets of the estate whether the misappropriation is willful or careless, in the absence of a showing that a larger profit was realized therefrom, is the return of the principal sum with legal interest, compounded annually.

10. JUDGMENT §744 — JUDGMENT AGAINST ADMINISTRATOR'S SURETIES PREVENTS DEDUCTION OF ATTORNEY'S FEES FROM COMMISSIONS.

A judgment in favor of an estate against a deceased administrator's sureties was res adjudicata as to the extent of their liability, and prevented deduction of the amount paid an attorney for services in recovering such judgment from commissions due the administrator on final distribution.

11. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §301, 479—ADMINISTRATOR MAKING ADVANCES ENTITLED TO CREDIT ON DISTRIBUTIVE SHARE.

Where an administrator, in anticipation of distribution, makes payment to distributees on account of their distributive shares, such payments are not a proper subject of final account, and his only right is, when distribution is ordered, to have the payment on account retired from the shares of such distributees.

12. SUBROGATION §41(1)—RIGHT OF SUBROGATION OF ADMINISTRATOR'S SURETIES WORKED OUT ON FINAL DISTRIBUTION.

The right of subrogation of sureties on a deceased administrator's bond to the administrator's rights against distributees to whom he made advancements in anticipation of distribution can only be worked out upon final decree of distribution.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Proceedings to settle the final account of Elisa P. Curletti, administratrix of Marcos A. Elizalde, deceased. From an order settling the account and directing distribution, the administratrix and the widow, Victoria C. Elizalde, appeal, and Gaspar O. Marre, as administrator of Luigi Marre, deceased, and A. McAlister also appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 163 Cal. 681, 126 Pac. 978.

B. F. Thomas, of Santa Barbara, for appellants.

Wm. Shipsey and S. V. Wright, both of San Luis Obispo, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a decree settling the final account of Elisa P. Curletti, administratrix of the estate of Marcos A. Elizalde, deceased, and ordering distribution of the estate.

Upon this appeal, taken by Victoria C. Elizalde, the widow of the deceased, and by the said administratrix, Elisa P. Curletti (née Elizalde), a daughter of the said decedent, they seek to have reviewed that part of the decree wherein the court ordered paid to the respondents, Gaspar O. Marre, as administrator of the estate of Luigi Marre, deceased, and A. McAlister, certain sums, representing advances and interest thereon made to said Victoria C. Elizalde, on account of her distributive share of said estate, by one Ernest Graves, a former administrator now deceased, and the amount of commission due Graves as such administrator, said respondents being respectively a surety and administrator of the estate of a surety upon the bond of said Graves as administrator of said estate, who had appeared and contested the settlement of said final account of said administratrix.

Growing out of different phases of the controversy four appeals have been taken and decided by the appellate courts of this state. Elizalde v. Murphy, 146 Cal. 168, 79 Pac. 866; 4 Cal. App. 114, 87 Pac. 245; 11 Cal. App. 32, 103 Pac. 904; and 163 Cal. 681, 126 Pac. 978.

So far as may be necessary for an understanding of the questions involved in the present appeal the facts giving rise to the differences between the parties may be summarized as follows: Marcos A. Elizalde died intestate on December 1, 1891, leaving as sole surviving heirs the appellants Victoria C. Elizalde, his widow, and Elisa P. Curletti, née Elizalde, his daughter. Ernest Graves, an attorney at law, was at different times special and general administrator of the estate of said deceased, being such general administrator from February 28, 1894, until July 15, 1900, on which day he died without having rendered a final account and leaving the administration of said estate unfinished. During his administration he had filed four separate accounts. In the last of these, which was filed on July 9, 1898, it appears that he had in his possession funds of the estate to the amount of $5,133. Thereafter, on April 8, 1901, Elisa P. Curletti was appointed administratrix of said estate, and during the course of her administration she commenced an action against the sureties on the bond given by Graves as administrator, to which suit the latter's administrator was subsequently made a party defendant. Final judgment in that action was entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the sureties (who at that time were Gaspar O. Marre, administrator of the estate of Luigi Marre, and A. McAlister) in the sum of $12,131.14, which was made up, according to the findings in this proceeding, of the sum of $5,133, balance in the hands of Graves, according to his last account, together with other moneys collected by him after filing that account, less certain credits to which he was entitled, making finally due from him to the estate the sum of $4,342.15, to which was added interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from July 15, 1900, to January 20, 1911, compounded annually. That judgment was paid by said sureties in fulfillment of the obligation of their bond, and it amounted, with costs and interest, at the time it was paid to $14,168.03. At the trial of that case said sureties sought to be credited with the amount of certain advances made by Graves to the widow of Marcos Elizalde, deceased, and with the amount of his administrator's commissions, but it was finally held upon appeal (Elizalde v. Murphy, 4 Cal. App. 114, 87 Pac. 245) that such credits, if proper, could only be allowed upon the settlement of the final account and decree of distribution.

On September 17, 1913, Elisa P. Curletti filed her final account as administratrix, and petitioned for distribution. To this account and petition said sureties filed their written contest, in which they alleged, in part, that Graves, as administrator, had advanced to Victoria C. Elizalde, who was entitled to have distributed to her a certain share of the estate, $930 out of the funds of the estate, which had not been repaid and for which no credit had ever been allowed to him. They also alleged that Graves, as administrator, was entitled to commissions, which also had not been credited or paid to him. The court found these allegations of the contestants to be true, and also that—

"In the accounting had between said administratrix and said contestants, Marre and McAlister as bondsmen aforesaid, in said equitable action of Elizalde v. Murphy et al., the court charged said contestants with said sum of $930, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from July 15, 1900, to January 20, 1911, compounded annually, making $1,214.73 interest, and making a total of $2,144.73 for principal and interest, and said sum of $2,144.73 became and formed a part of said judgment of January 20, 1911, for $12,-131.14 which was paid by said contestants to said administratrix as aforesaid."

The court further found that the aggregate of the commission for which the estate was liable to the former administrator, Graves, and the present administratrix, Elisa P. Curletti, was the sum of $2,358.68, of which sum the former was entitled to $1,-604.95. The court also found that Graves rendered to the estate extraordinary services, as alleged in the amended contest, but that he was not entitled to any additional compensation. Continuing its findings, the court proceeds:

"By reason of the facts herein found, said contestants have become and are subrogated to the rights of said administrator to recover from and have paid to them out of said estate the aforesaid part of said commissions to which said administrator was entitled, namely, the sum of $1,604.95.

"By reason of the facts herein found said contestants have become and are subrogated to the rights of said administrator to recover from said Victoria C. Elizalde the aforesaid sum of $930 advanced to her by said administrator as aforesaid, with interest thereon from July 15, 1900, to January 20, 1911, amounting to $1,214.73, making a total of $2,144.73, and said contestants have become subrogated to the rights of said administrator to have said sum of $2,144.73 paid to them by said administratrix out of the distributive share of the money of said estate belonging to said Victoria, and if such distributive share of money be insufficient, then to have a lien for the balance of said $2,144.73 upon the distributive share of said Victoria of the real property of said estate."

It is earnestly urged by the appellants in support of their appeal that the court committed error in concluding that the contestants were entitled to be subrogated to the rights of their principal to a set-off against the estate for the amount of his earned commission, and to have distributed to him out of the distributive share of Victoria C. Elizalde the amount of his advances to her. In passing it should be noticed that while the court in Elizalde v. Murphy, 4 Cal. App. 114, 87 Pac. 245, said that whatever rights to subrogation the sureties might have should be adjudicated upon the hearing of the petition for settlement of the final account and for distribution, still it did not decide that they were in fact entitled to subrogation. The denial by appellants of this right of subrogation on the part of the respondents is based on the theory that section 2848 of the Civil Code defines and limits the right of subrogation of sureties in this state, and that as so defined and limited it will not permit these respondents to claim the benefit of any rights which their principal might have had against the estate of Marcos A. Elizalde or a distributee thereof to whom said principal had made advances. That section reads:

"A surety, upon satisfying the obligation of the principal, is entitled to enforce every remedy which the creditor then has against the principal to the extent of reimbursing what he has expended, and also to require all his cosureties to contribute thereto, without regard to the order of time in which they became such."

[1, 2] The appellants argue that the contestants, by virtue of their suretyship and the doctrine of subrogation, upon payment by them of the judgment obtained against them as sureties, became subrogated to only the remedies which Elisa P. Curletti, as administratrix, had against Graves or his estate, and not to any rights of Graves against the estate of Marcos Elizalde or against Victoria C. Elizalde. This, perhaps, would be true if, as asserted by appellants (section 2848, Civil Code) comprehensively and exclusively measures the rights of sureties to subrogation. This, however, we think is not the case. That section is merely declaratory of the common law on the subject, and controlling only so far as it goes. It does not appear to us that by it the Legislature intended to announce all the law on the subject. In this state the common law, except so far as it is inapplicable to our conditions, or has been modified by statute, still remains in force. This principle is referred to in the Estate of Apple, 66 Cal. 434, 6 Pac. 7, where the court said:

"The Code establishes the law of this state respecting the subjects to which it relates; but this, of course, does not mean that there is no law with respect to such subjects except that embodied in the Code. When the Code speaks, its provisions are controlling, and they are to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects and promote justice—the rule of the common law that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed having been * * * abolished here; but where the Code is silent, the common law governs."

[3, 4] The common law of England is declared to be the rule of decision in all the courts of this state so far as not repugnant to or inconsistent with our Constitution and statutes. Pol. Code, § 4468. The Civil Code was not designed to embody the whole law of private and civil relations, rights and duties; it is incomplete and partial; and, except in those instances where its language clearly and unequivocally discloses an intention to depart from, alter, or abrogate the common-law rule concerning a particular subject-matter, a section of the Code purporting to embody such doctrine or rule will be construed in the light of common-law decisions on the same subject. Siminoff v. Goodman & Co. Bank, 18 Cal. App. 5, 11, 121 Pac. 939.

[5] By the common law a surety, upon satisfying his principal's obligation, is entitled to be subrogated, not only to the rights and remedies of the creditor against the principal connected with the debt, but is also entitled to be subrogated to the similar rights and remedies of the principal against the creditor. In Sheldon on Subrogation, at section 1, it is said:

"Subrogation is a doctrine of equity jurisprudence although its principles are often applied in courts of common law; especially in those states in which equitable remedies are administered through the forms of law. It is a substitution ordinarily of another person in the place of a creditor. * * * More broadly, it is the substitution of one person in the place of another, whether as a creditor or as the possessor of any other rightful claim. * * * In this country its principles have been more widely developed and its doctrine more generally applied than in England. * * * It is so administered [here] as to secure real and essential justice without regard to form. * * *"

[6] A surety on an insolvent administrator's bond who has paid his principal's debt is entitled to be subrogated, not only to the rights of the creditor, but also to those of his principal. 37 Cyc. 434. See, also, Sheldon on Subrogation, § 100; Harris on Subrogation, § 551; Commonwealth v. Gould, 118 Mass. 300; Putney v. Fletcher, 140 Mass. 597, 5 N. E. 640.

It follows, therefore, we think, that the construction advocated by the appellants, which would confine the surety's rights of subrogation to those derivable from the creditor, is not the true rule, and that the court below correctly apprehended it in its adjudication in this proceeding.

[7] As to the commission due to Graves as administrator, the evidence in our view sustains the finding that Graves did not waive such commission. According to the terms of the last account rendered by him, he withdrew from consideration in that account the question of his compensation, and reserved it for settlement upon the final account. Indeed, there is no evidence in the case to sustain the view that Graves waived his commission, and, as there is no presumption that an administrator's services are rendered gratuitously, it is clear that appellants' contention that the trial court should have found Graves waived his commission as administrator cannot be successfully maintained.

Equally without merit, we think, is the assertion by appellants that the evidence fails to sustain finding No. 25. This finding correctly computes the total amount due as commissions upon the administration of the estate, makes a fair and just apportionment thereof between the two administrators, and also decrees that Graves was not entitled to an extra allowance for extraordinary services rendered as an attorney at law.

[8-10] Upon this subject there remains to be considered the appellants' contention that the contestants are entitled to no credit for commission earned by Graves for two reasons: First, because of his dereliction of duty; and, second, that there should be deducted therefrom the sum paid out of the funds of the estate as an attorney's fee for services in recovering from said contestants as sureties the amount of Graves' defalcation, and which fee amounted to more than the earned commissions. We think there can be no serious doubt that these contestants had a perfect right to their day in court for an adjudication of their rights and obligations under the bond, without thereby losing their equitable right of subrogation in respect of payments made as the result of the judgment obtained against them in that action, or of commissions to become due to their principal. And as to the failure of the administrator to account for assets of the estate, assuming that the misappropriation thereof was willful instead of careless, still the limit of his liability where, as here, it was not shown that a larger profit was realized therefrom, is the return of the principal sum with legal interest thereon compounded annually (Estate of Cousins, 111 Cal. 441, 445, 44 Pac. 182; Estate of Carver, 123 Cal. 102, 104, 55 Pac. 770), which, as we have seen, was recovered by the estate. But aside from all this, the claim of the estate of Marcos Elizalde, deceased, arising from the dereliction of its administrator, was heard and determined in the action against the sureties, and is hence res adjudicata.

We are also satisfied that the evidence supports the finding that the $930 advanced to Victoria C. Elizalde was out of the funds of the estate, and was not a personal loan by Graves. It is true that the latter did not, in any of his accounts, credit himself with the advances going to make up this sum, but the trial court was justified in inferring that this omission was due to the fact that the sums so advanced were not, strictly speaking, disbursements made in the course of administration, and hence, not to be credited in his accounts, but could properly be reserved until distribution of the estate was ordered. Moreover, Mrs. Elizalde in her testimony, taken upon this and previous trials, stated that she received the amount in question from Graves, and that it was not a personal loan.

[11, 12] It is also clear that this sum of $930 was included in the amount which the court in the previous trial had found that Graves had misapplied, and which his sureties were required to refund to the estate. As they were compelled to pay this sum, with interest compounded annually, they are entitled to be reimbursed therefor out of the distributive share of Victoria C. Elizalde, to whom the advances were made.

"Where an administrator, in anticipation of distribution, makes payments to the widow or other heirs on account of their distributive shares, such payments are not a proper subject of final account, and his only rights are, when distribution is ordered, to have the payments retired therefrom, and to receive a credit on account thereof from the distributive share to be charged. Whatever rights of subrogation the sureties on the bond of a deceased administrator may have to his rights against distributees, the same can only be worked out upon the final decree of distribution." Elizalde v. Murphy, 4 Cal. App. 114, syllabus, 87 Pac. 245.

The court below appears to have followed the rule laid down in the case cited; and, sitting as a probate court with exclusive jurisdiction in the matter of the settlement of the accounts of the administrator and the distribution of the estate, has allowed the sureties on the administrator's bond to receive from the estate upon such distribution sums advanced by their principal to a prospective distributee of the estate, or due to him as administrator's commissions, and the former of which by a prior judgment against them upon the bond on which they were sureties they had been compelled to restore to the assets of the estate.

Gaspar O. Marre, administrator of the estate of Luigi Marre, deceased, and A. McAlister, whom we have at times designated in this opinion as the respondents, have also appealed from the order settling the final account of the administratrix and ordering distribution of the estate. They question the court's action in the division of the commissions between the two administrators in its disallowance of extra compensation for extraordinary services by administrator Graves, and in refusing to allow their demand for interest upon the judgment paid by them in favor of the estate of Marcos A. Elizalde, deceased. The correctness of the decision of the first two mentioned of these questions depended upon the evidence presented to the trial court, and its decision thereon will not be disturbed upon appeal. As to the remaining point, no argument or authority is presented in its support, and it appears to be without merit.

For the reasons given the order appealed from is affirmed.

ROSSINI v. ST. PAUL FIRE & MARINE INS. CO. OF ST. PAUL, MINN.
(L. A. 6275.)

1920.)

1. TRIAL ⚡398—FINDINGS AS TO CAUSE OF DESTRUCTION OF INSURED PROPERTY HELD INCONSISTENT.

A finding that all of the property described in an insurance policy was destroyed by an explosion is inconsistent with a finding that a material part of the building fell as the result of a fire, and will not support a judgment exempting a fire insurer from liability on the ground that the damage was the result of the explosion.

2. INSURANCE ⚡421—INSURER LIABLE FOR DAMAGE FROM FIRE THOUGH EXPLOSION CAUSED BUILDING TO FALL.

Where a fire policy exempts an insurer from liability for loss caused by explosion, unless fire ensues, the insurer, despite a further clause that, if the building shall fall as result of fire, all insurance shall immediately cease, is liable for damage resulting from a fire ensuing upon an explosion, though the explosion caused the building to fall.

3. INSURANCE ⚡421—INSURER LIABLE FOR DAMAGE CAUSED BY EXPLOSION RESULTING FROM FIRE.

Though a policy exempted an insurer from liability for loss from explosion, the insurer is liable for the whole loss where the explosion occurred after the commencement of the fire and was a resulting incident thereof.

4. INSURANCE ⚡646(6)—INSURER HAS BUR-DEN OF SHOWING THAT LOSS FELL WITHIN EXEMPTION OF POLICY.

Where a fire policy exempted from liability for explosion, the insurer has the burden, fire and loss having been shown, to prove that the loss falls within the exemption, but, if such burden is sustained, and it is shown that an explosion occurred prior to the fire, the insured is called upon to show the damage suffered from the resulting fire.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡996—ULTIMATE FACTS NOT NECESSARILY FOLLOWING FROM FACTS FOUND CANNOT BE INFERRED FROM FINDINGS.

While findings of the trial court should be construed so as to uphold rather than defeat the judgment, and from facts found ultimate facts may be inferred in support thereof, it is not within the province of the appellate court to infer from the findings ultimate facts which would support the judgment when such facts do not necessarily follow from the facts found.

6. INSURANCE ⚡670—FINDINGS THAT PROP-ERTY WAS DESTROYED BY EXPLOSION HELD NOT TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT FOR INSURER IN VIEW OF OTHER FINDINGS.

In an action on a fire policy exempting from liability for loss from explosion, a finding that all the property described in the policy was destroyed by an explosion will not support a judgment for the insurer, where the court also found that a material part of the building fell as the result of the fire, and there was no finding as to the sequence in which the explosion and fire occurred.

7. INSURANCE ⚡665 (4) — FINDING THAT PROPERTY WAS DESTROYED BY EXPLOSION NOT WARRANTED.

In an action on a fire policy exempting from liability for explosion a finding that all the property described was destroyed as a result of explosion held not warranted.

8. INSURANCE ⚡326 (3) — "PREMISES" IN GASOLINE CLAUSE INCLUDED ONLY BUILDING OR BUILDING CONTAINING INSURED PROP-ERTY.

The word "premises," as used in a fire policy declaring that the company shall not be liable for loss while there be used or allowed on the premises gasoline exceeding one quart, means only the insured building or building in which the insured property is situated, and cannot be construed as coextensive with the lot upon which the building is constructed; hence the fact that 150 gallons of gasoline was kept in an underground tank on an adjacent lot is not a violation of the provision, and the insurer cannot escape liability on that ground.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Premises.]

9. INSURANCE ⚡326(3)—INSURER CANNOT ESCAPE FOR "INCREASED HAZARD" UNLESS HAZARD WAS INCREASED.

A fire insurer cannot escape liability on the ground of increased hazard resulting from the keeping of 150 gallons of gasoline in an underground tank on an adjacent lot, where the hazard was not increased over and above that which existed at the time of the issuance of the policy; the term "increased hazard" denoting an alteration or change in conditions.

10. INSURANCE ⚡333(1)—CONTINUING EXISTING RISKS NOT AN INCREASED HAZARD.

A fire policy protects the insured against existing risks, and in the absence of fraud or concealment the hazard in respect to the risk assumed cannot be enhanced or enlarged by the mere continuation of the conditions and uses existing at the time the policy was issued.

11. INSURANCE ⚡646(2)—INSURER HAS BURDEN OF SHOWING INCREASE IN THE HAZARD.

The burden is on the fire insurer to show that the hazard was increased so as to avoid the policy.

12. INSURANCE ⚡326(3)—TO ESCAPE LIABILITY UNDER INCREASED HAZARD FROM GASOLINE, INCREASE MUST HAVE BEEN WITHIN CONTROL OF INSURED.

Where a fire policy exempted the insurer while the hazard shall be materially increased by means within the control of the insured, the insurer cannot escape liability on the ground of keeping a large quantity of gasoline on adjacent premises where such premises were not under the control of the insured.

13. INSURANCE ⚡624(1)—ASSIGNMENT HELD NOT TO PRECLUDE INSURED FROM SUING.

Where an insured assigned sums due under a policy, empowering the assignee to adjust the claim and apply the proceeds in settlement of debts owing by the insured, the assignee secured no personal interest, and the insured remained the real party in interest and entitled to sue on the policy.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Edward Rossini against the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company of St. Paul, Minn. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

Carter & Torchia, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. W. Hindman, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. The plaintiff in this action sought to recover a loss alleged to have been occasioned by fire under a policy of insurance, standard in form, issued to him by the defendant, and which covered and carried insurance in the sum of $1,000 on a stock of general merchandise and $400 on household furniture. The policy declared that the insured property was contained in a frame building described as being situated at 2104 East Ninth street in the city of Los Angeles, and the complaint averred that the insured property was all contained in the same building at the time of the fire. The defendant denied liability upon the ground that it was exempted therefrom pursuant to the provisions of the policy because: (1) The property insured was destroyed by the explosion of a bomb or other explosive substance, the exact nature of which was unknown to defendant; (2) the building in which the insured property was located fell at the time of the explosion, and the falling was not the result of fire. As a further defense to the action defendant pleaded that the plaintiff, in violation of the terms and conditions of the policy, prior to the fire and at the time of the fire, kept, used, and allowed on the "premises" described in plaintiff's complaint and in the policy of insurance gasoline in excess of one quart, to wit, 100 or 150 gallons thereof, and that, by reason thereof, "the hazard in respect of said fire was thereby materially increased within the control of said insured." Upon the issues thus framed the trial court, save as to the claim that a material part of the building did not fall as the result of fire, found in favor of the defendant, entering its judgment accordingly, and plaintiff appeals.

The clauses of the contract of insurance upon which the defense of the defendant is dependent are these:

(1) "This company will not be liable for loss * * * unless fire ensues (and in that event for damage by fire only), by explosion or any kind of lightning."

(2) "Unless otherwise prescribed by agreement, * * * if the building or any material part thereof fall, except as a result of fire, all insurance by this policy on such building, or its contents, shall immediately cease."

(3) "Unless otherwise provided by agreement, * * * this company shall not be liable for loss or damage occurring (a) while the hazard be materially increased by any means within the control of the insured; * * * (e) while there be kept, used or allowed on the described premises * * * gasoline * * * exceeding one quart."

[1] The trial court, among other things, found as a fact that:

"All of the property described in said insurance policy was destroyed by a bomb or other explosion and that a material part of the building wherein said property was kept fell at the time of said explosion."

Among the conclusions of law purporting to have been deduced from the foregoing findings of fact is the misplaced finding of fact:

"That a material part of said building fell as the result of said fire."

It is manifest that the latter finding is in conflict with the preceding and properly placed finding that a material part of the building fell "at the time of the explosion." While a material part of the building might have fallen from the combined effects of the explosion and the fire, it does not necessarily follow that the explosion and the fire occurred simultaneously, or that both did in fact contribute simultaneously to the falling of a material part of the building. If they did, then the findings should have clearly and unequivocally shown that fact. On the other hand, if it was the purpose of the trial court, as counsel for respondent suggests, to find, as might have been consistently done, that a material part of the building fell at the time of the explosion, and not as the result of fire, the fact remains that the trial court did not so find, and, of course, not being permitted to make or unmake findings, our consideration of the case must be controlled by the findings actually made. Accentuating the inconsistency in the findings under discussion is the fact that the finding that a material part of the building fell as the result of fire is directly opposed to the exemption claimed under the "fallen building" clause of the contract of insurance, and consequently cannot be rightly resorted to in support of the judgment in favor of the defendant.

[2] Even if these findings were capable of reconciliation, nevertheless they will not suffice to warrant and support a judgment for the defendant grounded upon either the "explosion" or "fallen building" clauses of the contract of insurance. Where the contract of insurance contains a "fallen building" clause, and also a clause exempting the company from liability for loss caused by an explosion of any kind unless fire ensues, and in that event limiting the liability to the damage caused by the fire only, it is the settled rule that the company is liable for the damage resulting from a fire ensuing upon an explosion, even though the explosion cause the building to fall. Leonard v. Orient Ins. Co., 109 Fed. 286, 48 C. C. A. 369, 54 L. R. A. 706; Dows v. Faneuil Hall Ins. Co., 127 Mass. 346, 34 Am. Rep. 384; Davis v. Ins. Co., 115 Mich. 382, 73 N. W. 393; Clement on Fire Insurance, vol. 1, p. 129.

[3-6] Under the "explosion exemption" clause of the policy, if the explosion preceded the fire, plaintiff would be entitled to recover for the damage resulting from the fire alone; on the other hand, notwithstanding the destructive effect of the explosion, the whole loss would be a loss by fire within the meaning and protective purpose of the policy if the explosion occurred after the commencement of the fire and was a resulting incident of the fire. German-American Ins. Co. v. Hyman, 42 Colo. 156, 94 Pac. 27, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 77; 14 R. C. L. p. 1218; Clement on Fire Insurance, vol. 1, p. 123, and cases cited. The burden of proof under the "explosion exemption" clause of contracts of insurance devolves as follows: There having been shown the execution of a contract, the occurrence of a fire with a resulting loss, and notice to the insurer, if the insurance company claims exemption by reason of the breach of a proviso or condition subsequent, the burden rests upon the company to prove that a loss, or part thereof, falls within one of the prohibitive clauses of the policy. In other words, the company must plead and prove the exception or breach which it sets up as defeating plaintiff's prima facie right of recovery. If such burden is sustained, and the case proved, for example, to be within the explosion exemption clause by a showing that the explosion occurred first in point of time, plaintiff is then called upon to prove the extent of damage, if any, suffered from the subsequent and resulting fire. German-American Ins. Co. v. Hyman, supra; Western Assurance Co. v. J. H. Mohlman Co., 83 Fed. 811, 28 C. C. A. 157, 40 L. R. A. 561. Under the facts of this case it thus became the duty of defendant to show that the explosion preceded the fire. For this reason, the mere finding that all of the insured property was destroyed by an explosion is not, in and of itself, sufficient to support the judgment upon the theory that the loss came within the explosion exemption clause of the contract of insurance. It is an undisputed fact in the case that an explosion did occur, and consequently the pivotal point of the controversy is involved in the question whether the explosion preceded or followed the fire; for upon the determination of that question must depend the determination of the correlated question of segregating the loss suffered by fire from that resulting from the explosion alone. Therefore the findings as made are vitally defective in not disclosing the sequence in which the fire and explosion occurred. This is so because, as we have seen, the plaintiff's right to recover and the defendant's obligation to indemnify plaintiff for any loss resulting from fire is materially affected by the determination as to whether the explosion which destroyed the goods occurred prior to or subsequent to the fire, and consequently a specific finding on this phase of the case should have been made.

found ultimate facts may be inferred in support of the judgment. Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 77, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257. Nevertheless it is not within the province of this court to infer from the findings ultimate facts which would support the judgment when such facts do not necessarily follow from the facts actually found. Emmal v. Webb, 36 Cal. 197; Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal. 286, 26 Pac. 873, 13 L. R. A. 576; Estate of Benton, 131 Cal. 472, 63 Pac. 775; Holzheier v. Hayes, 5 Cal. Unrep. 965, 52 Pac. 838; Ellis v. Bonebreak, 179 Pac. 893. The finding that the goods were destroyed by an explosion and that a material part of the building fell at the time of the explosion does not necessitate the inference that the explosion preceded the fire. Non constat, but that the explosion may have followed the fire, and, if that be so, the explosion, even though it were the direct cause of the entire destruction of the insured property, would itself have resulted from the fire, and would therefore be an incident of the fire, which fire, in such case, must in the last analysis be held to be the agency which destroyed the insured property.

[7] Furthermore, the finding that all of the insured property was destroyed by an explosion is not supported by any evidence, directly or inferentially. The evidence shows that there were no witnesses to the inception of the fire, and that the witnesses who first discovered that the building was on fire were roused from their sleep by the noise of an explosion. They immediately looked out of the windows of their apartments and saw the building on fire. The fire seemed to them to be burning from the front of the building toward the rear thereof. One witness stated that when she first saw the fire there "didn't seem to be any frame standing." The following morning portions of the front of the building were found, unburned, scattered about the street, intermingled with some merchandise which was partially burned. By the time that the witnesses were able to secure an unobstructed view of the fire, about three minutes after the noise of the explosion, the entire structure was burning rapidly. None of the witnesses knew whether the building took fire prior or subsequent to the explosion. While, as stated, there was some testimony that a comparatively small portion of the merchandise was found in the street subsequent to the fire, partially burned, on the other hand, plaintiff testified that the merchandise (save that found in the street) and the household furniture located in the living rooms in the rear of the store were all destroyed by fire. This testimony of the plaintiff stands practically uncontradicted. In this situation of the evidence the trial court might have been justified in finding that a portion of the merchandise was destroyed by the explosion, but certainly there was no justification for the finding that all of the insured property was destroyed by the explosion.

[8] Upon the issue of defendant's exemption from liability because of the alleged violation of the clauses of the policy concerning the keeping of gasoline and the increase of hazard, the trial court found:

"That at the time of the destruction of said property as above mentioned and for some days prior thereto there was kept, used, and allowed upon the premises described in plaintiff's complaint and said policy of insurance gasoline in excess of one quart, to wit, 150 gallons thereof, and that no agreement consenting thereto was indorsed on or added to said policy of insurance."

From this finding the trial court deduced the conclusion of law that plaintiff violated the conditions of the policy of insurance, and that "the hazard in respect to said risk was thereby materially increased."

In considering the scope and effect of these findings and conclusions, reference must be had to the terms of the policy and the allegations of the complaint. The only "premises" there described are "the story frame building, with roof, now and while occupied as general merchandise and situated No. 2104 East Ninth street in Los Angeles, Cal." Admittedly the insured property was situated exclusively in these premises at the time of the issuance of the policy and at the time of the fire. The word "premises," as employed in fire insurance policies, means no more than the insured building or the building which contains the insured property, and cannot be held to be coextensive with the lot upon which the building is constructed or a lot contiguous thereto. Rau v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co., 36 App. Div. 179, 55 N. Y. Supp. 459; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Shearman, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 343, 50 S. W. 599; Clement on Fire Insurance, vol. 2, p. 334.

Upon this phase of the case the record shows that the evidence was all to the effect that the tank which contained the gasoline was situated on a separate lot 6 feet from the building described in the complaint and in the policy of insurance, 14 feet below the surface of the ground, and in no way connected with the said building. This being so, there is no escape from the conclusion that the finding that there was kept upon the premises which contained the insured property gasoline in excess of the quantity permitted by the policy is not supported by the evidence, and, as a consequence, this finding will not support the conclusion of law deduced therefrom that there was a violation of the provision of the policy concerning the keeping of gasoline on the "premises."

[9-12] This brings us to a consideration of the finding—misplaced in the conclusions of law—to the effect that the plaintiff materially increased the hazard of the risk insured against by the keeping of gasoline on the premises. This finding is not sustained by the evidence, even though it be assumed in aid of the finding, as counsel for the defendant would have us do, that the court employed the word "premises" with the purpose of designating and including property of the plaintiff other than the building which contained the insured property, and that therefore the finding in question must be interpreted as meaning that the keeping of a large quantity of gasoline upon the contiguous premises violated the "increased hazard" clause of the contract. The answer to this is that the keeping of gasoline upon the contiguous premises cannot be held to have effected a forfeiture under the "increased hazard" clause of the policy unless it was in fact an "increase" of hazard over and above that which existed at the time of the issuance of the policy. "The term 'increase of hazard' denotes an alteration or change in the situation or condition of the property insured which tends to increase the risk" (italics are ours), and ordinarily refers only to such hazard as results from physical changes in the insured property after the issuance of the policy. Angier v. Western Assurance Co., 10 S. D. 82, 71 N. W. 761, 66 Am. St. Rep. 685; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorroh, 63 Tex. Civ. App. 560, 133 S. W. 465; 4 Joyce on Insurance, § 2207. The policy is issued to protect the insured against existing risks, which are contemplated and covered by the premiums, and, in the absence of fraud or concealment, the hazard in respect to the risk assumed cannot be enhanced or enlarged by a mere continuation of the conditions and uses existing at the time the policy was issued. Williams v. People's Ins. Co., 57 N. Y. 274; Whitney v. Ins. Co., 72 N. Y. 117, 28 Am. Rep. 116; Straker v. Ins. Co., 101 Wis. 413, 77 N. W. 752; 14 R. C. L. p. 1145. The burden is on the insurer to plead and prove affirmatively that there has been a violation of the provision against increasing the hazard. Ritter v. Sun, etc., Co., 40 Mo. 40; Tischler v. Cal., etc., Ins. Co., 66 Cal. 178, 4 Pac. 1169; Renshaw v. Ins. Co., 103 Mo. 595, 15 S. W. 945, 23 Am. St. Rep. 904; Greenlee v. Ins. Co., 102 Iowa, 427, 71 N. W. 534, 63 Am. St. Rep. 455; Merrill v. Ins. Co. (C. C.) 23 Fed. 245; Transatlantic Fire Ins. Co. v. Bamberger (Ky.) 11 S. W. 595; 5 Joyce on Insurance, § 3777; 7 Encyc. of Evidence, 522. Upon this phase of the case the evidence briefly stated, is as follows: The policy of insurance was issued December 28, 1915. In July, 1915, plaintiff and one Lo Bue engaged in the automobile repairing business, which business was conducted in the building adjoining plaintiff's general merchandise store which contained the insured property. In August, 1915, for the purpose of operating a gasoline station, plaintiff and Lo Bue installed a gasoline tank in the alley between the two buildings, and the board of fire underwriters were notified thereof. Some time in August or September, 1915, plaintiff and Lo Bue decided to discontinue their joint enterprise, and plaintiff assigned all his interest in the automobile and gasoline business to Lo Bue, including his interest in the gasoline tank. Gasoline was continually kept in the tank from the time of its installation up to and including the time of the fire, and at the time of the fire it contained between 100 and 150 gallons, having been filled two days before. It was stipulated at the trial that the gasoline was not the cause of the explosion and did not explode. The agent who negotiated the policy knew of the existence of the tank and its purpose prior to the issuance of the policy, and the plaintiff "was charged accordingly." In short, the uncontradicted evidence in the present case clearly shows that the use of the contiguous property as a gasoline supply station was not a new condition, but merely the continuation of a condition which, as an element of hazard, was contemplated and covered by the policy at the time of its issuance. It is a conclusive answer to the finding of the trial court upon this phase of the case that the "increased hazard" clause merely prohibits a new and different use of the property, by which the risk is materially increased, from that to which it was applied when the policy was issued, and that the continuance of an existing use, in the absence of warranty against such use or fraudulent representations or concealment, neither of which is alleged in the answer, is not a violation of the contract. Whitney v. Ins. Co., supra.

It further appears from the evidence that plaintiff was not the owner of, nor in control of the use of, the tank at the time the policy was issued nor at any time thereafter. Soon after the tank was installed, and several months before the fire, as previously noted, plaintiff transferred all interest therein to one Lo Bue. The gasoline was owned by Lo Bue, who ordered it placed in the tank, and, even if it could be said that the continued use of the tank was an increase of hazard, there is no evidence that its use by Lo Bue was within the control of the plaintiff. Defendant thus failed to sustain the burden of proof under this defense in another important particular; for, according to the wording of the policy, the increase of hazard is only material in giving rise to a forfeiture when the increase is due to "any means within the control of insured." Breuner v. Ins. Co., 51 Cal. 101, 21 Am. Rep. 703.

The view which we have taken as to the insufficiency of the evidence and findings to warrant a judgment for the defendant under the provisions of the "gasoline" and "increased hazard" clauses of the contract makes it unnecessary for us to discuss and decide the question of whether or not the "increase of hazard" clause of the California standard form fire insurance policy is limited in its operation by section 2755 of the Civil Code, which provides that a contract of fire insurance is not affected by an act even though it increases the risk, unless the act violates the provisions of the policy.

[13] Prior to the institution of the action plaintiff made an assignment of the sums due under the policy in question to a third party, and it is urged that he thereby parted with his right to sue on the contract. The assignment, however, only purports to create an agency under which the assignee was empowered to adjust the claim and apply the proceeds in part settlement of debts owing by plaintiff. The assignee secured no personal interest in the benefits to be derived by collection of the insurance money; all authorized action being on behalf of plaintiff. Plaintiff, therefore, is still the real party at interest and has not lost his right to sue.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(L. A. 5993.)

1. COUNTIES $\S$ 113(5)—BOARD MAY EMPLOY ATTORNEY TO PROSECUTE OR DEFEND ACTION.

Under Pol. Code, $\S$ 4041, subd. 16, authorizing boards of supervisors to direct and control the prosecution and defense of suits to which the county is a party, and to employ counsel to assist the district attorney, the board may employ an attorney other than the district attorney to prosecute or defend an action to which the county is a party.

2. COUNTIES $\S$ 113(5)—EMPLOYMENT OF ATTORNEY BY BOARD NOT REVIEWABLE.

The employment of an attorney other than the district attorney by a board of supervisors to prosecute or defend an action is a matter of discretion, and not open to review by the courts, except possibly for fraud.

3. MANDAMUS $\S$ 22—SUBSTITUTION OF ATTORNEYS CANNOT BE COMPELLED WHERE NEITHER ATTORNEY NOR CLIENT SEEKS SUCH SUBSTITUTION.

Under the provision of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 284, authorizing the court to make an order changing the attorney of record for a party in certain cases, the court cannot be required by mandamus to substitute the district attorney for the county counsel in actions by and against the county, where neither the county nor the county counsel has asked or consented to such change, whether or not the provision of the county charter for a county counsel is valid.

Original application by Thomas Lee Woolwine for a writ of mandate directed to the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and another. Writ denied.

Thomas Lee Woolwine, Dist. Atty., F. W. Stafford, Deputy Dist. Atty., and Geo. E. Cryer, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, Robert B. Murphy, Asst. Co. Counsel, and Paul Vallee, Deputy Co. Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an original proceeding in this court for a writ of mandate.

The petition prays for a writ to compel the superior court of Los Angeles county to make and enter an order in each of three certain actions pending in said court, to which the county of Los Angeles is a party, in one of them as a party plaintiff and in the others as defendant, substituting the petitioner, as district attorney of said county, as attorney for the county in said actions, respectively, in place and stead of A. J. Hill, Esq., who is now the attorney of record for the county in each of said actions.

The plaintiff seeks by this method to obtain an adjudication of the question whether or not the provision of section 7½ of article 11 of the Constitution, relating to county charters, declaring that "the provisions of such charters relating to the powers and duties of boards of supervisors and all other county officers shall be subject to and controlled by general laws" is controlling upon county charters to such an extent that any provisions of such charters purporting to prescribe the duties of the several officers of such county are invalid whenever they are in conflict with the general county government law on that subject. He contends that under this provision it is not competent in any county charter to take from any county officer the duties prescribed for him in the county government law and give the same to some other officer provided for in such charter. He also claims that the amendment of section 4153 of the Political Code, enacted by the Legislature of 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 794), exempting from the operation of general laws the district attorneys of counties having charters creating the office of county counsel, is a special law, and therefore void. The matter is important; for, if the contentions of the district attorney are correct, all the provisions of the Los Angeles county charter prescribing the duties of the county officers would be annulled, so far as they conflict with the general laws.

[1, 2] Notwithstanding the importance of the question, we have reached the conclusion that it cannot be raised in this proceeding. The claim of the district attorney is that, under the general law prescribing the duties of district attorneys, that officer, and no one else, is authorized to appear in the courts to prosecute or defend actions on behalf of the county, and consequently that it is the legal duty of the court to substitute him as district attorney for any other person who, by any means, has been entered as attorney of record for the county in any such action. Section 4041 of the Political Code, relating to the powers of supervisors, declares that they shall have jurisdiction and power, under such limitations and restrictions as are prescribed by law, "to direct and control the prosecution and defense of all suits to which the county is a party, and, by a two-thirds vote of all the members, may employ counsel to assist the district attorney in conducting the same." Subdivision 16. Under this provision it has become the settled law of the state that the board of supervisors has power to employ an attorney, other than the district attorney, to prosecute or defend an action to which the county is a party. "Not only are they empowered to employ counsel to assist the district attorney, but they may also employ counsel for the purpose of directing and controlling the prosecution and defense of any suit to which the county is a party. Whether, in any particular case, such employment shall be made is addressed to the discretion which they are to exercise in behalf of the public interests. If, in their opinions, the interests of the county require such employment, it is their duty to secure the services of a competent attorney therefor." Lamberson v. Jefferds, 118 Cal. 365, 50 Pac. 404. "This is rested upon the ground that the district attorney may be incompetent, or sick, or absent from the county, or engaged in any other business, so that he cannot attend to it, or the business to be transacted may be outside of the county." Lassen County v. Shinn, 88 Cal. 512, 26 Pac. 366. Other cases to the same effect are Hornblower v. Duden, 35 Cal. 670; Merriam v. Barnum, 116 Cal. 623, 48 Pac. 727; Merced Co. v. Cook, 120 Cal. 276, 52 Pac. 721. A distinction is made in Merriam v. Barnum between the power to employ other attorneys "to defend or prosecute a suit," which power is conceded to the board, and the power to employ an attorney to advise the supervisors concerning their duties in matters coming before them, which power, the case decides, does not exist. But all the cases hold that the exercise of the power is a matter of discretion and is not open to review by the courts, except perhaps for fraud. It is conceded that in the cases mentioned in the complaint herein the supervisors had authorized A. J. Hill to appear as the attorney for the county of Los Angeles and to conduct the prosecution and defense of said cases, and that he had so appeared.

[3] The mandamus is sought to control and direct the action of the superior court in the conduct of the cases pending before it. That court is, of course, bound by the provisions of law on the subject. Code Civil Procedure, § 284, provides that the court may make an order changing the attorney of record for a party in an action:

"1. Upon consent of both client and attorney, filed with the clerk, or entered upon the minutes; 2. Upon the order of the court, upon the application of either client or attorney, after notice from one to the other."

The county of Los Angeles is the client concerned in this matter in each of said actions. It has not consented to any change of attorney therein, but, on the contrary, it appears that it is insisting that Mr. Hill be continued as such attorney of record for the county. Neither Mr. Hill nor the county has made any application for an order to substitute any other person as attorney of record in said cases. Under these circumstances, and in this condition of the law, if the superior court is not bound to deny the application of the district attorney to be substituted as attorney of record in said cases, it is at least true that it cannot be compelled to do so by means of a writ of mandate from the supreme court. Inasmuch as the board of supervisors has discretion to refuse to make any application to apply for a change of attorneys in the cases, or to consent thereto, and as its action therein is not open to review by the courts, it would seem that the matter is foreclosed so far as this court and the superior court are concerned. The plaintiff, if he wishes to present the question first above mentioned, must resort to some other method of bringing it before the court.

The petition for a writ is denied.

45 Cal. App. 645

SHEPHERD v. CHAPIN, Superintendent of Streets, et al. (Civ. 3199.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 29, 1920.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨293(2)—RESOLUTION OF INTENTION HELD NOT INDEFINITE AS TO PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS.

Resolution of intention to improve M street to D street "according to plans and specifications heretofore adopted and now on file" held not indefinite as to plans and specifications, though several years before, when D. street was S. street, plans and specifications for improvement to S. street were filed; those filed on the same day as the resolution alone corresponding with the resolution as to surface of improvement.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨293(2)—SPECIFICATIONS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT NOT INVALID BECAUSE OF CALL FOR IRON OR STEEL.

Specifications for street improvement in resolution of intention are not invalid because calling for culverts of corrugated iron "or" steel, it not being shown what, if any, difference there is in the cost, or that it will injuriously affect the property owner, or that the condition of the industries may not make the alternative necessary to prevent unreasonable delay.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨293(2)—SPECIFICATIONS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT NOT INDEFINITE AS TO QUALITY OF GRAVEL.

Specifications for street improvement in resolution of intention are not indefinite as to character of gravel, required to be "of sound trap rock or granite composition equal to the gravel found in the S. J. river," but it must be of sound trap rock or sound granite formation, though gravel of other quality be found in the river.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨293(1)—SPECIFICATIONS HELD NOT TO REQUIRE CONTRACTOR TO OBSERVE INSTRUCTIONS OF ANY PERSON.

Specifications for street improvement, providing "contractor shall be held liable for faithful observance of any instructions * * * delivered to him * * * on the work," do not require his observance of instructions given by "any person," the words being part of an entire paragraph, and preceded by: "The contractor shall be constantly on the work * * * or represented by a foreman competent to receive and carry out any instructions * * * given by * * * the street superintendent."

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨293(1)—RESOLUTION OF INTENTION HELD NOT UNCERTAIN AS TO STATUTE UNDER WHICH BONDS SHALL BE ISSUED.

Resolution of intention to improve street held to sufficiently indicate that bonds for assessments are to be issued under the Improvement Act of 1911, and not under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915, especially as there can be no issuance of bonds under the bonding act unless such intention is declared in the resolution.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨293(1)—RESOLUTION OF INTENTION NOT REQUIRED TO STATE SPECIFIC TIME BONDS ARE TO RUN.

Improvement Act of 1911, § 61, does not require the resolution of intention to improve street to state specific time the bonds are to run, but it is enough that it states, in the language of the statute, that they "shall extend over a period not to exceed nine years from the second day of January next succeeding their date."

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨318—DEFECTS IN PROCEEDINGS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT WAIVED IN ABSENCE OF TIMELY OBJECTION.

By provision of the Improvement Act of 1911, § 26, no proceedings for street improvement prior to assessment are to be held invalid for defect after publication and posting of resolution of intention, and by section 16 defects are waived in absence of objection to the council in ten days after notice of award of contract.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨297 (1)—RIGHT OF PROPERTY OWNERS TO STOP IMPROVEMENTS BY PROTEST ONLY SUCH AS STATUTE GIVES.

Right of property owner to protest against and avert further proceedings for street improvement is purely the creature of statute; and the privilege under Improvement Act of 1911 is a conditional one only, requiring, to be effective, the approval of more than a fifth of the board's members.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨323(1)—DEFECTS IN AMENDMENT OF STATUTE AS TO COLLECTION ON BONDS IMMATERIAL IN SUIT TO ENJOIN STREET IMPROVEMENT CONTRACT.

Defects in Act 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1464), in so far as attempting to amend Improvement Act of 1911, §§ 68, 70, 72, relating to proceedings to be taken for collection of the money due on a bond after a payment becomes delinquent, are immaterial in a property owner's suit to enjoin contracting for street improvement; they in no way affecting any proceedings to date.

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨408(1)—DEFECTS IN AMENDMENT OF STATUTE AS TO COLLECTION ON BONDS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT DECLARED REMEDIED.

Defects in Act 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1464), attempting to amend Improvement Act of 1911, §§ 68, 70, 72, as to proceedings to be taken for collection of the money due on a bond after a payment becomes delinquent, have been remedied by St. 1919, p. 554.

11. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨269 (3)—GRADE MAP CONSTRUED AS TO LOCATION OF POINTS.

The four points within circles at intersections of streets with Mariposa street, indicated on grade map adopted by ordinance of Fresno City, from which the grades are to be determined, are to be considered as at the four curb corners, under the rule as to avoiding absurdities in construction.

12. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨294(3)—NOTICE OF IMPROVEMENT HELD NOT INVALID.

Posted notice of proposed street improvement is not invalid because of hairbreadth variation from prescribed size of letters.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; M. F. McCormick, Judge.

Action by A. P. Shepherd against E. H. Chapin, Superintendent of Streets of the City of Fresno, and another. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lewis H. Smith, of Fresno, for appellant. Everts & Ewing and E. S. Van Meter, all of Fresno, for respondents.

WOOD, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff is the owner of certain property situate on Mariposa street in the city of Fresno. He brought this action to enjoin the superintendent of streets from entering into a contract with the improvement company pursuant to an award for the doing of certain work upon the street, and has appealed from a judgment entered after a demurrer was sustained to his complaint.

[1] On February 3, 1919, the board of trustees of the city passed its resolution of intention of ordering certain work on the street from the northeast line of M to the south line of Devisadero streets, which recited that it was to be done "in accordance with the plans and specifications heretofore adopted for doing said work and now on file in the office of the city clerk." The same day complete plans and specifications for the work were filed. On January 5, 1915, and some 15 months before the enactment of an ordinance changing the name of Silvia street to Devisadero, the board adopted plans and specifications for work on said Mariposa street between the northeast line of M street and the south line of Silvia street, which have never been specifically rescinded, altered, or abandoned. It is the contention of the appellant that, as the two sets of plans and specifications on file call for work materially and substantially different, the property owner is not informed of the character and nature of the contemplated work by the mere recital in the notice of intention that it is to be done in accordance with those on file. He does not question that the rule as to repeals by implication is applicable to municipal affairs, but claims that it applies to, what he terms, legislative acts only, and not to those of an administrative character such as are required in the improvement of streets. The distinction is unimportant here, as we are satisfied that in any event the contention of appellant cannot be sustained.

He does not suggest that any person was in fact misled by the reference. Strictly speaking, the plans and specifications filed with the resolution were the only ones for the doing of the work between the lines there mentioned, for, as we have seen, the earlier ones provided for work between M and Silvia street, and not between M and Devisadero. Aside from the very remote probability that any one would have ignored the complete and detailed plans and specifications filed immediately preceding the adoption of the resolution and resurrected those filed more than four years previously, there is further this significant circumstance to be considered: Appellant lays much stress upon the radical difference in the two sets of plans as to the type of pavement and the wearing surface. Specifically the earlier ones called for "a cement concrete base four inches thick, an asphaltic concrete binder course one inch thick, and an asphaltic wearing surface two inches thick." Now the resolution of intention provides that the street is to be paved with a pavement consisting of a cement concrete base 4 inches thick, and a bitulithic wearing surface 1½ inches thick. In the plans and specifications last filed the description and character of materials required for the wearing surface alone and the directions for mixing and laying the same fill seven pages of typewritten matter in the transcript. This work forms quite a substantial part of that contemplated in the resolution. Under all the circumstances it is incredible that there could exist any misunderstanding as to which plans and specifications furnished the description of the work to be done.

[2] The next objection is that the plans and specifications of February 3, 1919, call for culverts of corrugated iron or steel, and it is alleged that the cost or price of steel is materially and substantially less than corrugated iron. This allegation is a mere opinion. It does not show what the difference in cost is, or how it may injuriously affect the property owner. In Thoits v. Byxbee, 34 Cal. App. 226, 167 Pac. 166, it was held by this court that the specifications there considered were not invalidated by a provision authorizing the street superintendent to change the proportions of sand and rock in the concrete, for the reason that it appeared that it would not affect the cost of the work so far as these ingredients were concerned.

In Burnham v. Abrahamson, 21 Cal. App. 248, 131 Pac. 338, where the specifications provided that the cement should be composed in part of hard sandstone, granite, basalt, or other close-grained rock, it was said:

"One or the other kinds of material may be found when the work is commenced, not to be as available as the other. Indeed, many contingencies may arise in work of this character which cannot be foreseen, and which could not be met or overcome in the absence of some discretion committed to the superintendent of streets."

So, too, it may be that the conditions in the industries made it necessary here to provide in the alternative for the use of iron or steel in order to assure a completion of the work within a reasonable time, and, as we have said, it does not appear that it will injuriously affect the property owners.

[3] The next proposition advanced is that the specification as to the character of the gravel required is indefinite and uncertain, in that it is provided that such gravel shall be "of sound trap rock or granite composition equal to the gravel found in the San Joaquin river." It is alleged in the complaint that in the San Joaquin river there is found gravel of great and substantial variations and differences in hardness, composition, durability, and tensile strength. The specifications, however, require that no work shall be accepted which may be defective in its construction or deficient in any of the requirements therein provided. The complaint does not aver that in the locality near Fresno gravel is found that is not of sound trap rock or sound granite formation; and we fail to see how the specifications can be complied with by the furnishing of any other quality of gravel merely because it may be equal to that, or be in fact found, in the San Joaquin river at some remote distance from Fresno.

[4] The next objection raised is that the specifications require that "the contractor shall be held liable for the faithful observance of any instructions which may be delivered to him or to his representatives on the work," and that the contractor is therefore made liable for the instructions given him by any person, as they do not specify for whose instructions he shall be held liable. As pointed out by respondent, a sufficient answer to this is that the words last quoted are a part only of an entire paragraph, and are preceded by the following:

"The contractor shall be constantly on the work during its progress, or shall be represented by a foreman who is competent to receive and carry out any instructions that may be given him by representatives of the street superintendent."

[5] It is claimed that the resolution of intention is defective in that it cannot be ascertained whether the bonds are to be issued under the Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730) or the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1441). The resolution of intention in substance recites that all of the proposed work shall be done under the former act; that serial bonds shall be issued to represent each assessment of $25 or more; that they shall extend over a period not to exceed nine years from the 2d day of January next succeeding their date, payable in equal annual installments on the 2d day of January each year thereafter. While there might have been a more definite reference to the act, yet this was sufficient, as there can be no issuance of bonds under the bonding act, unless such intention is declared in the resolution of intention. See section 4. Furthermore, under the latter act installments of principal are payable on the 2d day of July each year, and there is no limitation there as to the amount for which the bond may issue.

[6] It is insisted that a proper interpretation of section 61 of the Improvement Act requires that the resolution of intention shall distinctly specify a definite time in which the bonds are to run, and that it is not sufficient, as was done here, to state, in the language of the statute, that the bonds "shall extend over a period not to exceed nine years from the second day of January next succeeding their date."

This section is almost identical with section 3 of the Bond Act (St. 1885, p. 148) under consideration in Cohn v. Federal Construction Co., 171 Cal. 547, 153 Pac. 916, except that in section 61 there is no express requirement that the notice included in the warrant shall describe the bonds, as is made mandatory by section 3 of that act. In each act, however, the form of bond to be issued is set out at length, with a blank space provided to fill in the term that the bond is to run. In that case the court held that it was sufficient for the council to fix the term of the bond at any time before the warrant was issued, that being the earliest date at which the property owner was required to elect whether he would pay in cash or suffer bonds to issue. It also held that the language, "the like description of said bonds shall be inserted in the resolution ordering the work," etc., was not to be construed as requiring the resolution of intention to state the period the bonds are to run. The case was decided more than three years before the adoption of the resolution in the instant case, and may have been relied upon, not only by the Fresno board of trustees, but, perhaps, by other municipalities, as authority that the board can, at any time before the issuance of the warrant, fix the definite period for which the bonds are to run. Of course, as to what matters should be stated in the warrant, in order to comply with the statute, does not arise here.

[7] In passing, it may be further noted that section 26 of the act provides that no proceedings prior to the assessment shall be held invalid by any court for any error, informality or other defect in the same, after the actual publication and posting of the resolution of intention, and by section 16 all such errors, informalities, defects, and irregularities are waived unless objection be made to the council within ten days after the notice of the award of the contract.

[8] The point is made by the appellant that, inasmuch as the owners of 88 per cent. of the property liable to assessment protested against the doing of the work the board had no power thereafter, by a four-fifths vote or otherwise, to take any further proceedings for the improvement. The courts have repeatedly held, in substance, that no constitutional rights are invaded in the enactment of statutes for special taxes for local improvements if, at some stage of the proceeding, the property owner has the right to a hearing upon the question as to what portion of the tax shall be assessed upon his land. The latest expression to this effect, to which our attention has been directed, is found in St. Louis Land Co. v. Kansas City, 241 U. S. 430, 36 Sup. Ct. 647, 60 L. Ed. 1072. This declaration, as to the constitutional right of the property holder to a hearing, implies that there is a power invested in some tribunal to decide against him. No case has been cited where it has ever been held that the property owner, or any number of the property owners affected, had the right, by protest or otherwise, to arrest further proceedings unless such right was conferred by statute. The case of Field v. Barber Asphalt Co., 194 U. S. 618, 24 Sup. Ct. 784, 48 L. Ed. 1142, involved a provision of a law of Missouri giving to a majority of the resident owners of property liable to assessment a right to stop the proceedings, but afforded no opportunity to any nonresident owner to protest; and yet, the Supreme Court of the United States reached the conclusion that the law violated no constitutional rights of the latter. The effect of the decision is that cases may there arise in which none of the property owners have a right to stop the proceedings or to protest. It follows from what has been said that the right to protest and avert further proceedings is purely the creature of the statute, and that this privilege afforded to the landowner by the "Improvement Act of 1911" is a conditional one only, and in order to be effective requires the approval of more than one-fifth of the members of the board.

[9,10] It is urged that the Act of 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 1464), in so far as it attempts to amend sections 68, 70, and 72 of the Improvement Act of 1911, is unconstitutional and void. These sections relate to proceedings to be taken for the collection of the moneys due upon a bond after a payment becomes delinquent, and, as suggested by respondent, are in no way affected by any of the proceedings to this date. Moreover, we may add that the defects indicated have been remedied by the Legislature of California. Stats. 1919, p. 554.

[11] It is claimed that the ordinance of the city of Fresno, passed some years ago, adopting all grades by the adoption of a grade map, does not sufficiently indicate the points on Mariposa street from which the grades are to be determined. There is an ordinance relating to curbs, which is referred to but not inserted in the record, and it is not clear what bearing it may have upon the question. The copy of the portion of the grade map relating to Mariposa street, which is attached to the transcript, shows that at every street intersection there is a circle touching each corner, within which is placed a number purporting to denote in feet the elevation of the curbs at the points indicated, measured vertically from an established bench mark as a basis. From these points the ordinance provides that the grades are to be determined. The points indicated appear to be the four curb corners. The general rule is that, if reasonably practicable, an interpretation is to be avoided which results in an absurdity. Thus, any attempt to locate the points at any other places than at these corners would leave a portion of the curbs with no provision as to their elevations, and might result in a completion of the work without providing for an adequate drainage; while, in contrast, by assuming that the points are at the four curb corners, there is embraced a complete and harmonious system for all curb elevations, with a uniform drainage for this street and the intersecting ones.

[12] It is insisted that the NOTICE OF IMPROVEMENT posted by the superintendent of streets is fatally defective in that the length of each of said letters comprising said words is from one twenty-fifth to one sixty-fourth less than the one-inch required by statute. One of these notices, a copy of which is attached to the complaint, appears in the record, and has received our careful attention. Conceding, as claimed by appellant, that the case of Coleman v. Spring Construction Co., 182 Pac. 473, is not an authority to the point, we are of the opinion that the printed notice is in substantial accord with the law. While the letters "O" and "C" apparently are of less length than the others, it is more than likely that it is an optical illusion caused by their elliptical form. Persons of normal vision may honestly differ as to whether the letters in the notice are the full length required; but certainly it is not the intent of the act to invalidate a notice because a microscopic examination may demonstrate that they are a hairbreadth or two less.

This disposes of all the objections.
Judgment affirmed.

SOUTHWEST LAND CO. OF LOS ANGELES v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY.
(Civ. 3149.)

1. TAXATION ⇨438—ASSESSOR'S PENCIL ENTRY NOT SUFFICIENT TO AUTHORIZE CORRECTION OF VALUATION.

Under Pol. Code, § 3881, providing for correction of clerical omissions or errors in descriptions or in assessments when it can be ascertained from the assessment book or from the assessor's maps or block books what was intended to be assessed, where it appeared that the assessor made a new map of certain property on page 55 of the map book and on page 25 containing the old maps, made a reference to such new map and a pencil entry of the figures 100,280, not in a place for regular assessment, which figures were transferred by the clerk to page 55 as $10,280, such pencil entry did not justify correction of assessment so as to make the valuation $100,280.

2. TAXATION ⇨543(7) — PREVIOUS ASSESSMENTS INADMISSIBLE TO SHOW CLERICAL ERROR IN CORRECTING ASSESSMENT.

In a proceeding to recover taxes paid under protest where it appears that the assessor has corrected the assessed valuation, the valuation shown by the books against the property assessed for previous years is not receivable as evidence that the assessor committed a clerical error in assessing the property at a different amount in the subsequent year, the record for each year being in legal intent separate and complete.

3. TAXATION ⇨543(8)—INTEREST TO ENTRY OF JUDGMENT NOT RECOVERABLE ON TAXES ERRONEOUSLY ASSESSED AND PAID.

In a proceeding to recover taxes paid under protest under a corrected and increased assessment, a judgment awarding to plaintiff interest thereon from date of payment of the tax to date of entry of the judgment was erroneous.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by the Southwest Land Company of Los Angeles, a corporation, against the County of Los Angeles, to recover taxes paid under protest. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, of Los Angeles, and Robert B. Murphey, Hugh Gordon and Gordon Boller, Deputies Co. Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fredericks & Hanna, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover the sum of $1,467 paid under protest to satisfy a purported tax levy for the year 1915 against real property of the plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff, from which the defendant appeals.

On the original tax roll, duly verified by the assessor, the property was valued at $10,280, the tax thereon being a stated amount, which was paid and is not included in the amount sued for in this action. On the 22d day of September, 1915, which was about two months after adjournment of the board of equalization, the county assessor of Los Angeles county filed an application with the board of supervisors requesting permission to make an addition to or change in the assessment roll so as to change the assessment of said property, exclusive of improvements, from $10,280 to $100,280. This application was in writing, approved by the district attorney, and recited that the reason for making said change was because of a clerical error occurring in entering the assessed value of the property in the assessor's map book. Pursuant to a hearing upon that application, the board of supervisors made an order purporting to authorize the assessor to make the proposed change in the assessment. Thereafter, pursuant to such order, the assessor added the sum of $90,000 valuation to the assessment roll against said property, which authorization was filed in the office of the auditor of Los Angeles county. The additional tax thereafter paid by the plaintiff under protest is the amount sought to be recovered herein.

Section 3658 of the Political Code provides for maps and plat books to be kept by the assessor, which are required to show the private lands owned or claimed in the county, and are required to be in forms prescribed by the state board of equalization. These books are in form such that the right-hand page of the map book shows a map of the land within certain arbitrary districts. The left-hand page contains data descriptive of the lands shown on the opposite page. This information is written in by the assessor and is the basis of the assessment roll. In practice the valuations and descriptions of the assessment roll are copied from the descriptive pages of the assessor's map book. In the assessor's map book, volume 205, while the same was in course of preparation for the year 1915, on pages 23, 24, and 25, there was placed a map according to a subdivision of the property which had been used in previous years, together with the appropriate descriptive matter. Thereafter the assessor's attention was called to the fact that a new map of the land had been filed, showing it entirely as acreage. Thereupon the assessor made a new map on page 55 of the same book and noted on the page of the old map a reference to page 55 as follows: "For 1915 see pg. 55, Tr. No. 2783"—which was the number of the tract. The assessment as actually made is shown on page 55, where, under the head, "Value, 1915," the valuation entry of $10,280 was placed by the assessor's clerk and the assessment so made was included in the assessment roll as verified by the assessor and approved by the board of equalization.

At the trial of this action it was shown by the testimony of the assessor that before the entry of $10,280 had been made he had decided to value the property at $100,280 and as indicating that fact had placed in pencil on page 25 (but not under any column or place for regular assessment) the figures "100,280." He said:

"I made the figures for him to place on the page where the new tract is as the valuation of that new tract. Q. For whom to place? A. For the clerk who called my attention to this matter."

Thereafter the clerk made the valuation entry $10,280 in the proper column and page, and this was the apparent assessment down to the time when the purported change was made by order of the board of supervisors pursuant to the application filed on the 22d day of September, 1915.

The validity of this assessment depends upon the construction to be given to section 3881 of the Political Code. That section is contained in chapter 11 of title 9 of part 3 of that Code. Title 9 contains the provisions governing assessments, levies, and collections of taxes; chapter 11 being entitled, "Miscellaneous Provisions." Section 3881 carries the subhead "Clerical Errors in Assessment Books; Corrections." It is provided therein that "clerical omissions or errors or defects in descriptions or defects in form in any assessment book, when it can be ascertained from the assessment book or from the assessor's maps or block books, or from the list furnished by the property owner, what was intended to be assessed, or what should have been assessed, may, with the written consent of the district attorney, be supplied or corrected by the assessor at any time after the assessment was made, prior to the sale for delinquent taxes," with provisos relating to notice, etc.

Appellant contends that the trial court was in error in overruling defendant's objection to the taking of testimony on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and also in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit; that for the same reason the decision should be reversed on the ground that the findings do not support the judgment, and that the evidence clearly shows that there was a "clerical error" in the assessment, the correction of which was authorized by section 3881 of the Political Code, and for that reason the findings are not supported by the evidence. Counsel for appellant say that the effect of section 3881 is to extend the time for assessment; that the powers given thereunder are necessarily broad, and extend over all cases where the identity of the property to be assessed is definitely shown in the assessment book or in the assessor's maps or block books, or list furnished by the property owner; that, since in this case the property was correctly described in the books, it follows that any error in fact made in entering the valuation as the assessor intended to state such valuation may be corrected by proceedings under section 3881. They refer us to County of San Luis Obispo v. White, 91 Cal. 432, 24 Pac. 864, 27 Pac. 756, where the Supreme Court sustained the validity of a change in assessment made pursuant to section 3881, Political Code, which at that time provided that—

"Omissions, errors or defects in form in any original or duplicate assessment book, when it can be determined therefrom what was intended, may, with the written consent of the district attorney, be supplied or corrected by the assessor at any time prior to the sale for delinquent taxes, and after the original assessment was made. * * *

In that case it was shown that the total tax, which included a special road tax, appeared on the assessment roll in column headed "Road Tax," but did not appear in the column headed "Total Tax." It was held that, since on the roll "It was clear what the omitted total tax was," the omission to enter that amount under the heading "Total Tax" might be supplied, by proceeding in the manner provided by section 3881.

[1] In the case at bar the fact that the assessor had intended to value plaintiff's property at any sum other than $10,280 did not appear from the assessment book or from the assessor's maps or block books, and no contention is made that such fact appeared from the list furnished by the property owner. The figures "100,280" in pencil on one side of the page 25 are no part of the tax record, and are not evidence of the alleged error sought to be corrected in the proceeding attempting to change the valuation stated in that record. The validity of that change cannot be upheld unless the act of the clerk was a clerical error, nor unless the board was authorized to go beyond the data which appeared on the books, and take direct testimony proving that the assessor instructed his clerk to make an entry showing a valuation different from the valuation as actually entered. But this would be an assumption of authority in excess of the limitation prescribed by section 3881. The power of assessment in matters involving discretion as to the amount thereof was exhausted when the board of equalization finally adjourned. The extension of authority over the making of the assessment, after that date, was given by section 3881 for narrowly defined purposes, and was expressly limited. Appellant insists that, since "what was intended to be assessed, or what should have been assessed," appeared on the books, by correct description of the property, therefore the board of supervisors had power to ascertain other facts establishing error, by taking evidence outside the books, and so proving that the assessment as made on the books did not conform to the true intention of the assessor as verbally expressed by him to his clerk before the entry was made. Prior to 1901 the terms of section 3881 were as found in the foregoing quotation from County of San Luis Obispo v. White. Ever since 1901 (until the amendment found in Stats. 1917, p. 968, not applicable to this case) the corresponding terms of the section were as first stated herein; that is, instead of "omissions, errors, or defects in form in any original or duplicate assessment book, when it can be ascertained therefrom what was intended," the section as in force in the year 1915 covered only "clerical omissions or errors or defects in description or defects in form in any assessment book, when it can be ascertained from the assessment book or from the assessor's maps or block books * * * what was intended to be assessed," etc., to be supplied or corrected in the manner stated. As expressed by the amendment, the manifest intention of the Legislature was to more narrowly define the terms of the grant of power, so that after equalization no changes might be made except those of a purely clerical or formal nature, relating to matters of description or form, and then not unless the fact that there was an error could be ascertained from the sources named. If this was not the legislative intention, it is difficult to see that the amendment had any intelligible purpose.

[2] Counsel for appellant in their brief admit that—

"Perhaps the true measure of the authority to make changes in the assessment under Political Code, § 3881, is found in the plain records of the map book as they appeared to the deputy assessor, unaided by oral statements or informal pencil memoranda."

On this assumption they then rely upon the map book and the assessment of the same property, whereby it was indicated that the property was valued and assessed in 1914 for more than ten times the amount placed against it in 1915. We are convinced, however, that the valuation shown by the books as against property for the year 1914 or for any previous year is not receivable as evidence that the assessor committed a clerical error in assessing that property at a different amount in the year 1915. The assessment for each year is separately made, and the record thereof is, in legal intent, likewise separate and complete.

[3] In addition to the sum of $1,467, the judgment awarded to plaintiff interest thereon from date of payment of the tax to date of entry of the judgment. This was erroneously allowed. Spencer v. City of Los Angeles (Sup.) 179 Pac. 163, 168. It is ordered that the judgment be modified by striking therefrom said allowance of interest. As thus modified, the judgment is affirmed.

BOND v. HOLLOWAY et al. (Civ. 3048.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 29, 1920.)

1. INSURANCE $\S$ 646(1)—COURT MAY ASSUME, IN ACTION ON CASUALTY POLICY THAT DEVIATION FROM ROUTE BY MOTORBUS WAS AUTHORIZED BY ORDINANCE.

In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it may properly be assumed that deviation from its authorized route in the city of Los Angeles by a motorbus whose operator had taken out a casualty insurance policy sued on by an injured person was authorized by one or more of the clauses of the ordinance under which it was operated, permitting deviation to transport passengers to or from any public attraction or demonstration, etc.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS $\S$ 703(1)—MOTORBUS OPERATOR WHO CHANGES STATE SERIAL NUMBER NOT REQUIRED TO SECURE NEW CITY PERMIT.

It was not necessary for new permit for operation of a motorbus to issue from the police commissioners of the city of Los Angeles every time a change was made by the operator in the state serial number of the machine.

3. INSURANCE $\S$ 145(1)—FILING WITH CITY CLERK OF RENEWAL OF MOTORBUS CASUALTY POLICY NOT ESSENTIAL.

Failure to have on file with clerk of city of Los Angeles various indorsements and extensions of casualty insurance policy issued to motorbus operator held not such a violation of the conditions of the city's motorbus ordinance as the casualty company could take advantage of to avoid its contract, when sued by a person injured by the operator's bus; filing with the city clerk after the accident of agreement of renewal entered into before the accident being sufficient.

4. INSURANCE $\S$ 146(3)—CASUALTY INSURER CANNOT INVOKE RULES FOR PROTECTION OF GRATUITOUS SURETIES.

Like a surety on a statutory bond, a casualty insurer cannot invoke the strict rules which courts and statutes devised for the protection of gratuitous sureties.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas Monroe, Judge.

Action by Miles H. Bond against Joseph C. Holloway and the Pacific Coast Casualty Company of California, a corporation, resulting in judgment for plaintiff. From an order denying defendant company's motion to vacate the judgment, it appeals. Affirmed.

Bowen & Bailie, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Raymond E. Hoyt and George H. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. Appellant, Pacific Coast Casualty Company of California, was sued by the respondent to recover damages suffered by collision with a motor jitney bus owned and driven by the defendant Holloway. The latter was insured against liability under a casualty insurance policy issued by the appellant, which policy, by its terms, insured to the benefit of any one having a cause of action arising out of the negligent operation of the defendant Holloway's motorbus. On the trial before a jury verdict and judgment were for the plaintiff in the sum of $2,290 and costs. Special findings were also returned by the jury; and this appeal is taken from the order of the trial court denying appealing defendant's motion to vacate the judgment on alleged grounds of inconsistency of the judgment with the special verdict of the jury, under sections 663, 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Appellant relies, in its contention, upon an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, where the cause of action arose, which makes it unlawful for any person to operate a motorbus without having first obtained a permit in writing from the board of police commissioners, and requiring certain formalities as a condition of such permit. Under the permit the person holding it is entitled to obtain a license from the city clerk to operate his car over a given route, to be designated in the permit. One of the conditions for the permit is that the applicant shall procure and, at all times while operating under such permit, maintain, in full force and effect, on file in the office of the city clerk, a good and sufficient bond or policy of insurance for the protection of any one who may suffer injury or damage through the negligent operation of such motorbus, such bond or policy in its terms to insure to and be for the benefit and protection of such injured persons, and to be made payable directly to the injured or damaged person.

The defendant Holloway applied for and obtained such permit from the board of police commissioners, secured and filed with the city clerk, in due form, as required, the insurance policy issued by the appellant company, obtained a city license and entered upon the operation of his motorbus line, which, by the terms of his permit, extending from the Plaza, by way of Main street and Moneta avenue, to Fifty-Eighth street. The accident sued upon occurred thereafter on the 28th day of January, 1916. The special verdict, which appellant contends is inconsistent with and fails to support the judgment, finds, in so far as material to the points presented in appellant's argument, substantially as follows: The policy of insurance was executed August 31, 1915, for a period beginning August 20, 1915, and ending November 20, 1915. By special indorsement dated October 1, 1915, and filed in the office of the city clerk on October 4, 1915, this policy was extended and continued in force from noon of the 1st day of October, 1915, to midnight of the 31st day of December, 1915; and by a second indorsement dated December 31, 1915, said policy was extended and continued in force from midnight of the 31st day of December, 1915, to midnight of the 31st day of March, 1916. Such latter extension was not filed in the office of the city clerk until February 3, 1916. The accident on which this suit was based occurred on the 28th day of January, 1916, at the junction of Slauson avenue and Moneta avenue, and some 200 feet beyond and outside the route described in defendant Holloway's permit. A permit dated August 30, 1915, was issued by the board of police commissioners to defendant Holloway, whereby he was granted permission to use his Ford car No. 150653 in carrying passengers over the designated route, and, on filing the permit in the city clerk's office, said clerk was authorized to issue the defendant Holloway a license. On December 31, 1915, a new state license, No. 89377, was issued for defendant Holloway's car, and the new number plate substituted for the old. By permit issued by the board of police commissioners, of date February 1, 1916, defendant Holloway was granted permission to use Ford auto No. 89377 in the business of carrying passengers for hire over the route as previously granted, and, in accordance with said permit, a license was issued therefor by the city clerk for a term of three months from the 1st of January, 1916, to the 1st of April, 1916. At the time of the accident said Holloway had no other permit or license for the operation of motorbus bearing state license No. 89377 than as last above described. By special indorsement on its policy hereinbefore described, and dated January 3, 1916, the appellant company agreed that the automobile designated in the policy bore the new state license No. 89377. Such agreement was filed in the office of the city clerk February 3, 1916.

The particulars in which it is claimed that these special findings fail to support and are inconsistent with the general verdict and the judgment are: (1) That the accident occurred 200 feet beyond the prescribed terminus of the motorbus route; (2) that at the date of the accident the original permit and license to defendant Holloway on his car bearing state license No. 150653 had expired, and the renewal under the new state number, 89377, dating back to January 1, 1916, and covering the date of the accident, was not made until February 3, 1916, after the accident; and (3) that at the time of the accident the agreement of extension of the insurance policy and its application to the new state number of defendant Holloway's machine, which was entered into before the accident, was not filed with the city clerk. It is therefore argued that the defendant Holloway was, at the time of the injuries complained of, operating in violation of the ordinances of the city, as an outlaw on the public streets, and that, the insurance policy having been given under the ordinance to cover the operation of a motorbus under and in conformity to the law, no liability existed under the policy.

As a matter of fact, the policy, in its terms, is not conditioned upon and makes no reference to the operation of the insured automobile business under or in pursuance to any ordinance, permit, or license, or over any prescribed route. But, conceding appellant's claim that it executed this insurance policy as a statutory bond, and that it is therefore entitled to all the privileges of a surety upon a statutory bond, we find very flimsy legal support for its defense, and even less equity.

[1] In the first place, the ordinance under which the defendant Holloway was operating substantially covers the deviation by the autobus, on the occasion of the accident, from the prescribed route by the following section:

"It shall be unlawful for the driver of any motorbus to deviate more than three blocks from the route set forth in the permit granted by said board of police commissioners, except as in this section set forth. In case the motorbus is so deviated it must return to the point of deviation and proceed in the direction it was headed before such deviation. The driver of any motorbus may, without special permit, deviate from the route set forth in said permit for the purpose of transporting passengers to or from any public attraction or demonstration. If any route over which any motorbus is operated lies within five blocks of any church or public school, such motorbus may be diverted from such route and be operated to such church or public school and return to the point of diversion from such route and proceed in the direction in which such motorbus was headed before being diverted to such church or school. If any route over which any motorbus is operated extends into or passes through the business district of said city as said district is defined by the ordinances thereof, such motorbus may be diverted from such route while within said business district to any point within said district; provided, however, that such motorbus is driven to the terminal of said route before the return trip is made."

In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, it may be properly assumed that the deviation shown in this case comes under one or the other of these permissive clauses.

[2] Again, there is not a word of evidence, nor any finding of the jury, that this motorbus was operating at the time of the accident in violation of law. The ordinance says that it shall be unlawful for any person to engage in the business of transporting passengers by motorbus without complying with certain conditions and obtaining a permit. The defendant Holloway met these requirements and obtained his permit. So far as appears from the portion of the ordinance printed in the record, no requirement is made for renewing the permit, or making it unlawful to carry on the business without a license, or indicating how often a license must be renewed. It is provided that the police commissioners may suspend or revoke the permit for failure or neglect to observe the requirements of the ordinance; but in this case there seems to have been no such suspension or revocation. There is no finding of the jury, as appellant claims, that Holloway was running his autobus line without a permit at the date of the accident. The finding of the jury was that at the time of the accident "he did not have any other permit or license from the city of Los Angeles for the operation of Motorbus No. 89377." This was the new state serial number for the same machine covered by the original permit under state number 150653. We find nothing in the record, and our attention is called to no general law, which made it necessary for a new permit to issue from the police commissioners every time a change was made in the serial state number of the machine.

[3] There is no merit in the contention that there was any lapse in the policy of insurance merely because the agreement of renewal covering the period in which the accident occurred was not filed with the city clerk until after the accident, though duly entered into before the accident. The ordinance does not provide that it shall be unlawful to conduct any such motorbus business unless there shall be executed and remain in full force and effect at all times, and on file in the office of the city clerk, the required indemnity policy. But such policy was executed and filed with the city clerk and kept in full force and effect, and, so far as appears, continued on file with the city clerk up to and after the accident. It is not a fact that the policy at any time expired. The finding of the jury is that there was "an extension and continuation" of the policy by special indorsement attached to the policy and dated December 31, 1915, continuing it in force from midnight of the 31st of December, 1915, to midnight of the 31st of March, 1916, covering the date of the accident. It was the execution of this extension by the insurance company, not the filing thereof with the city clerk, that continued the policy in force. And the jury does not find that the policy was not on file with the clerk at the date in question. It finds that the extension or continuation was filed with the clerk on February 3d, after the accident. It was executed the 31st day of December. It was not necessary to its validity that it be attached to the policy at any given time to render it effective. In any event, the failure to have the various indorsements and extensions of this policy on file with the city clerk is not such a violation of the conditions of the ordinance as the appellant could take advantage of to avoid its contract.

There is nothing in the findings of the jury to justify the conclusion that the defendant was not engaged in the lawful conduct of his motorbus business, under the protection of a valid indemnity insurance policy, at the time of the injuries complained of.

[4] If the argument of the court in this decision seems narrow and technical, it is at least no more so than the contentions of appellant. Even as a surety on a statutory bond, appellant cannot invoke the strict rules which the courts and statutes devised for the protection of gratuitous sureties. The trend of modern decisions is to place persons or corporations executing indemnity bonds as a commercial venture upon the same footing as the makers of ordinary contracts.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

FREDENHALL et al. v. SHRADER et al.
(BURRELL et al., Interveners).
(Civ. 2068.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 2, 1920.)

1. REFERENCE ⇨86—REPORT AND FINDINGS AUTHORIZED BY PARTIES' AGREEMENT THAT THEY MIGHT BE GONE INTO AND REPORTED.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 638, the court may order referee appointed upon agreement of parties to try any or all issues of law or fact, and report findings and judgment thereon, thus definitely disposing of the issues and action subject to rejection or confirmation, and under section 639 the court may appoint a referee on its own motion for the limited purpose of an examination of a long account, and where the order of reference was based partly on each section, a finding not strictly involved in the account may be made where the parties agreed that it should be gone into and reported by the referee.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨924—REFERENCE ⇨26—INTERLOCUTORY DECREE NOT ESSENTIAL TO JURISDICTION TO ORDER REFERENCE.

A court is not without jurisdiction to order a reference because it had not previously found interveners entitled to an accounting and entered an interlocutory decree adjudicating that fact, and the decision to make reference under Code Civ. Proc. § 639, is practically sufficient as an adjudication that an accounting is justified, and, where the record shows that evidence thereon had been heard prior to the order, it will be presumed that such testimony justifies the court's conclusion that an accounting is necessary.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1170(1)—FAILURE TO DECREE RIGHT TO ACCOUNTING BEFORE ORDERING REFERENCE NOT PREJUDICIAL.

If it was error for the trial court to order a reference of an account before expressly finding and decreeing that the parties were entitled to an accounting, such error involved a mere irregularity in procedure from which defendants could not have suffered any prejudice, and could not justify the conclusion that a miscarriage of justice resulted from the error so as to warrant reversal (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

4. CORPORATIONS ⇨182, 189(13) — STOCKHOLDERS FRAUDULENTLY OBTAINING PROPERTY BECAME INVOLUNTARY TRUSTEES.

In a stockholders' action, where defendants, also stockholders, wrongfully took control under a fraudulently obtained contract of oil belonging to the corporation which oil they sold, defendants thereby became involuntary trustees for the other stockholders and were in analogy to the case of conversion chargeable with the market price of the oil at the time sold, and it was not necessary that the referee determine to support the court's finding that defendants actually received the money.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨173(11)—PARTIES FAILING TO PRESENT OFFSETS MAY NOT COMPLAIN OF FAILURE TO FIND THEREON.

In an action between stockholders of a corporation, where defendants had full and complete information of any offsets or credits to which they were entitled before the reference, and did not appear and claim such offsets, they cannot later complain that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment because the referee made no finding with respect to offsets.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by T. B. Fredenhall and others against John Shrader and others, in which S. A. Burrell and others intervened, and prior to trial the action was dismissed as far as plaintiffs were concerned, and from a judgment in favor of the interveners, the defendants other than the El Dora Oil Company and E. S. Good appeal. Judgment affirmed.

E. L. Foster, of Bakersfield, and Davis, Kemp & Post, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

George E. Whitaker, of Bakersfield, and John A. Powell and Hunsaker & Britt, all of Los Angeles, for plaintiffs respondents.

George L. Greer, Frank F. Oster, and Alfred H. McAdoo, of Los Angeles, for other respondents.

HART, J. Plaintiffs, stockholders in the defendant corporation, El Dora Oil Company brought the action for the purpose of having canceled certain deeds of trust and chattel mortgages given by said corporation to secure the payment of certain promissory notes, aggregating $85,000, in favor of defendants John Shrader and the Ohio Valley Construction Company, a copartnership, consisting of John Shrader, Henry M. Jackson, and J. L. Campbell, for the purpose of having delivered up and canceled 75,000 shares of the capital stock of said El Dora Oil Company issued to the defendants Campbell, Jackson, and Shrader, for the purpose of having declared null and void a certain contract of sale of oil by the oil company to said last-named defendants, for an accounting by defendants of the money received by them for the sale of oil, and for certain other relief.

After the filing of the amended and supplemental complaint, S. A. Burrell, C. A. Bailey, W. H. Ballard, P. E. Stodley, Thomas Nestor, D. K. Cheever, John Glendening, Ida Otey, and Harry Clark, other stockholders of said oil company, by leave of court filed complaints in intervention, in which they adopted the amended and supplemental complaint of plaintiffs as their complaint in intervention.

The trial occupied five days, ending on May 22, 1915. Prior to the commencement of the trial upon the issues involved in the case an order was made, on motion by plaintiffs, dismissing the action so far as they were concerned, and the issues were tried between the interveners and the defendants. On June 8, 1915, an order of reference was made to Leo Longley, Esq., referee, to ascertain and report on certain things enumerated in said order of reference. On May 23, 1916, the referee filed a report, which was confirmed on May 24, 1916. On January 2, 1917, the court made findings, and judgment was entered in favor of interveners, granting them the relief asked for in the amended complaint, the allegations as to which are above set forth, and giving them a judgment against the defendants Shrader, Campbell, and Jackson, individually and as copartners under the firm name of Ohio Construction Company, in the sum of $105,406.25.

The court found that the trust deeds and the chattel mortgage referred to in the complaint were given without a consideration, and that the contract, by the terms of which the El Dora Oil Company sold to the appellants all the oil produced by it on property under lease by it, was fraudulently obtained by the appellants, with the design to cheat and defraud the other stockholders of said company.

The appeal is by the defendants, other than El Dora Oil Company and E. S. Good, from said judgment. It is supported by a transcript containing the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions. The only evidence brought up by means of the bill of exceptions is the order appointing the referee and the referee's report. The objections made by defendants to said order and report, together with a few recitals of proceedings at the trial, are also contained in the bill of exceptions.

[1] The first contention of appellants is that the court had no jurisdiction to appoint a referee to make an accounting without making findings showing that the interveners were entitled to an accounting and making an interlocutory judgment.

The order of reference reads as follows:

"This cause coming on to be tried, and it appearing that the taking of an account is necessary for the information of the court before judgment thereupon, on hearing counsel for the respective parties, it is ordered that it be referred to Leo Longley, Esq., as sole referee, to ascertain and report:

"(a) The amount of money or credits received by defendants John Shrader, Henry M. Jackson, J. L. Campbell, Ohio Valley Construction Company, a copartnership, and Ohio Valley Construction Company, a corporation, or either of them, from the sale or disposition of oil produced from the property of defendant El Dora Oil Company.

"(b) The amount of money expended and paid out and to whom by defendant John Shrader in payment of just claims against and legal liabilities of defendant El Dora Oil Company.

"(c) The amount of the just debts and liabilities of defendant El Dora Oil Company guaranteed by, but not yet paid by, defendant John Shrader.

"(d) The amount of the just debts and liabilities of defendant El Dora Oil Company guaranteed by, but not yet paid by, defendant John Shrader, wherein creditors have released and discharged from liability said defendant El Dora Oil Company.

"Pursuant to the stipulation entered into in open court during the trial of this cause by and between the interveners and defendants it is further ordered that the referee herein named ascertain and report:

"(e) What shares of stock of El Dora Oil Company have been issued since February 12, 1912.

"(f) To whom said shares were issued and by what certificates evidenced.

"(g) For what consideration such shares were issued.

"(h) By what authority and pursuant to what resolution or resolutions of the board of directors such shares issued.

"And, upon such report being confirmed according to the practice of this court, either party may bring on the cause for final judgment."

1. Section 638 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"A reference may be ordered upon the agreement of the parties filed with the clerk, or entered in the minutes:

"2. * * *

Section 639 of the same Code provides:

"When the parties do not consent, the court may, upon the application of either, or of its own motion, direct a reference in the following cases: 1. When the trial of an issue of fact requires the examination of a long account on either side; in which case the referees may be directed to hear and decide the whole issue, or report upon any specific question of fact involved therein; 2. * * *; 3. * * *; 4. * * *."

It will be observed that under the section first above referred to the court is authorized thereby to order the referee to try any and all issues, whether of law or of fact, in the action or proceeding in which the order of reference is made, and to report findings and judgment thereon. Thus the referee is practically vested with power to make a definitive disposition of the issues and the action, subject, of course, to the power of the court to reject or confirm his report, and this plenary power vested in the referee proceeds, of course, from the proposition, enunciated in the section, that the order of reference is made upon the agreement of the parties to the action or proceeding.

By section 639 the power of the referee under the order of reference, in cases arising under the first subdivision of said section, is limited to the examination of a "long account," as to which the referee may, according as he may be by the court directed to do, either hear and decide (make findings on) the whole matter or issue, or report upon any specific question of fact involved therein. The whole matter or "issue" refers to or means the account, and does not include other issues in the case or issues having no direct or immediate connection with the account. Williams v. Benton, 24 Cal. 424.

There is, then, an important distinction between the power which may be exercised by a referee to whom a reference is made by agreement of the parties (section 638) and the power of the referee to whom a reference is made under section 639, in this, that, while under the first-mentioned section the referee may be directed and so authorized to report findings and judgment upon all the issues in the case, in the last-named section his power is restricted to the hearing and decision (or the finding) of the facts as to the account ordered by him to be examined.

The order of reference in this case appears to have been based partly on section 638 and partly on section 639. Those portions of the order embraced within paragraphs (a), (b), (c), and (d) of the order refer, it will be noted, to the account, and authorizes an examination by the referee of the account, while those embraced within paragraphs (e), (f), (g), and (h) were incorporated into the order by agreement or stipulation of the parties, so that, if it might be said that the matters referred to in said last-mentioned paragraphs are not strictly involved in the account which the court upon its own motion ordered to be examined and reported on by the referee, the authority in the referee to examine those matters and make a report thereon nevertheless existed by virtue of the agreement between the parties that they might be gone into and reported on by that officer.

[2] Referring now, however, to the point urged by the appellants that the court was without jurisdiction to order a reference because it had not previously to the making of said order found that the interveners were entitled to an accounting and entered an interlocutory decree adjudicating that fact, the answer thereto is that the statute provides for no such preliminary formality. Moreover, the procedure adopted in this case with respect to the order of reference appears to be in accord with the customary practice which has in that particular prevailed in California for many years, and which has received the approval of the Supreme Court. We need not examine specifically herein the cases which seem to confirm this statement. It will suffice merely to name some of them here, viz.: Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 45, 48; Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 6; Grim v. Norris, 19 Cal. 140, 79 Am. Dec. 206; Williams v. Benton, 24 Cal. 425; Jones v. Gardner, 57 Cal. 641; More v. Calkins, 85 Cal. 177, 190, 24 Pac. 729.

Counsel for appellants cite Fox v. Hall, 164 Cal. 287, 128 Pac. 749, as an authority sustaining their position that it is an essential prerequisite to the proper exercise of the jurisdiction of the superior court to order a reference for the purpose of examining a long account and obtaining a report of the referee thereon to make and enter a preliminary or interlocutory adjudication that the plaintiff is entitled to an accounting. In that case the court said:

"The facts alleged and proved showed the existence of a fiduciary relation sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction of a court of equity to compel an accounting, which, as the evidence shows, had been demanded of the defendant L. J. Hall. [Citing cases.] Upon such accounting, the burden would probably be upon the said defendant to establish any expenditures or credits upon which he might rely as offsets to the gross income shown to have been received by him. [Citing cases.] But be that as it may, the plaintiffs were entitled to an accounting, and if the case had been submitted without further evidence, an interlocutory judgment directing such accounting would have been proper. [Italics ours.] * * * The accounting might have been ordered through a reference, or the court might, with or without a preliminary interlocutory order [italics ours] have proceeded to take and state the account itself [citing cases], rendering such final judgment thereon as might appear to be proper."

Those portions of the above language italicized constitute the entire predicate of the contention of the appellants that the case from which the language is taken supports the view that an interlocutory judgment adjudicating the right of plaintiff to an accounting is an essential prerequisite to an order of reference. But, while it is true that the court there says that upon the evidence therein an interlocutory judgment to that effect would have been proper, it does not say, nor is it necessarily to be implied from the language of the court, that an order of reference without a previous express adjudication that the plaintiff is entitled to an accounting will render the act of ordering the reference void. The opinion does say, it will be noted, that the court might, in the absence of such an interlocutory order, itself have proceeded to take and state the account, and it seems to us that, where an order of reference is made either on the court's own motion or upon the application of the plaintiff in the absence of the consent of the other party, the order of reference itself must necessarily be construed as involving nothing less than an adjudication that the plaintiff is entitled to an accounting. If, in other words, when the court itself proceeds to take the account, that act, under the decision in the case above named and quoted from, is itself deemed tantamount to or practically sufficient as an adjudication that the plaintiff is entitled to an accounting, then a fortiori an order of reference, made after some testimony addressed to the issues has been taken, as the record shows was the case here, either by the court sua sponte or upon motion of the plaintiffs should be deemed such an adjudication or one to all intents and purposes. None of the evidence, save that involved in the report of the referee, has been certified up to this court—that is, the record here contains no other evidence than that of the report of the referee—and we are therefore authorized to assume, and indeed presume, that the testimony taken before and heard by the court prior to the making of the order of reference was sufficient to justify the court in concluding that an accounting was necessary to a just adjudication of the rights of the parties, and that therefore it was proper and necessary to order the account to be referred to a referee for examination and a report by that officer of the result of such examination.

[3] But, after all, if it be conceded that error was committed by the trial court in ordering a reference of the account before expressly finding and decreeing that the interveners were entitled to an accounting, such error involved a mere irregularity in procedure from which the appellants could not have suffered any prejudice. As above stated, the order of reference amounted substantially to a finding that justly to decide and determine the rights of the parties an accounting and for that purpose an examination of the account would be necessary; so it follows that in any event an examination of the account and a decision thereon would be required. Under these circumstances, the appellants cannot show or justly claim that they were in any way prejudiced by the action of the court in prematurely ordering a reference, assuming, for present purposes only, that such order was, according to the fair import of the statute, prematurely made. As to the report of the referee itself, it was subject to objection by appellants when the matter of its confirmation came up before the court. Considering, therefore, the error, if error it be, involved in the act of making the order here attacked with reference to and in view of the whole record before us, we thus find that there is no ground justifying the conclusion that a miscarriage of justice resulted from the error, and there is, therefore, no authority in this court to order a reversal for such error. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

[4] 2. It is next contended that there is no evidence to support a judgment against the appellants for any sum of money. This contention is based upon the fact that, while the referee found and reported the quantity of oil coming from the defendant El Dora Oil Company which had gone into the hands of appellants Shrader and those associated with him, and the times at which they received the oil, and also the market value of the oil at the time it was received by said appellants, the referee did not find and report upon the proposition whether said Shrader and his associates received in money the market price for said oil at the place of production. The reply to this proposition is that the court found upon what we are required to presume, under the state of the record here, was sufficient evidence, that the contract whereby the El Dora Oil Company sold to Shrader, Campbell, and Jackson all the oil produced from the property leased by said company at the rate of 25 cents per barrel was fraudulently obtained by said Shrader and others and with the purpose and intent of cheating and defrauding the stockholders of said company. It is further found that Shrader and his associates, subsequently to the execution of said contract, sold a large quantity of the oil so purchased from the El Dora Company. It is thus clear that, having wrongfully taken control of and sold the oil of the company, the appellants thereby became, as to said oil, involuntary trustees of the other stockholders, and were, in analogy to the case of a conversion, chargeable with the market price of the oil at the time they sold the same.

[5] But it is further contended that the evidence is insufficient to support a judgment for any money against the appellants for the reason that there is no finding by the referee with respect to any offsets which they might have had against the money so received by them. The answer to this contention is that, if the appellants had any expenditures or claims which they could have legitimately set up in abatement of the amount for which the referee found that they had sold the oil, the burden, upon the accounting, was upon them to prove such expenditures or credits. Fox v. Hall, 164 Cal. 287, 291, 128 Pac. 749. This rule follows from the proposition that a party claiming offsets to a claim against him is supposed to have full and complete information as to any offsets or credits he may be entitled to upon such an accounting, while, perhaps, the adversary party is without any knowledge whatever of such offsets. In this case it is manifest, from the situation as it is disclosed by the record, that the matter of offsets, if any existed, was one wholly within the knowledge of the appellants, and that the interveners were entirely ignorant thereof. The report of the referee shows that, although the appellants were duly notified on all occasions of the place and times of the hearing of the account, they at no time made an appearance before the referee or at the hearings, and in no way aided the referee in his work of investigating and making a report on the account. Thus it is obvious that, if they could have shown offsets, and desired to avail themselves of the benefit thereof, it was their duty to have appeared at the investigations by the referee and presented such offsets. Not having done so, it does not now lie in their mouths to complain of a failure of the referee to find as to that matter, or of any disadvantage they may have suffered from such failure.

3. It is lastly contended that the judgment, in so far as it decrees null and void for want of a consideration the trust deeds and the chattel mortgage mentioned in the complaint in intervention, is not supported by the findings. An examination of the findings as a whole will show, as thus we have been convinced, that the point is without merit.

The court found (finding 3) that the trust deed executed and delivered to one M. S. Platz by the El Dora Oil Company, in pursuance of a resolution passed on the 29th day of February, 1912, by the said company's board of directors, of which board the defendant Shrader was then a member, was so executed and delivered for the purpose only of securing said Shrader for any indebtedness then due or that might become due and owing to him from said company; that, contemporaneously with the execution and delivery of said deed, promissory notes amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $35,000 were executed by the El Dora Company to and in favor of said Shrader, and that said deed of trust purported on its face to be security for the payment of said notes; that said notes did not at that time represent an existing indebtedness due from said company to said Shrader in the aggregate sum thereof; and that said notes and said deed of trust were intended as security for the repayment to said Shrader "of what indebtedness there might then be due said defendant John Shrader, or that might in the future become so due and owing." The court also found that, after the above-mentioned transaction, in pursuance of a resolution adopted by its board of directors, the El Dora Company, through its president, one E. S. Good, and its secretary, the defendant Shrader, executed a trust deed to one McGrath to secure repayment of a "pretended indebtedness of $50,000" due from said company to the defendants Campbell, Jackson, and Shrader, and at the same time the said company, under the authority of the resolution referred to, and through said Good and said Shrader, president and secretary, respectively, of its board of directors, executed to and in favor of said Campbell, Jackson, and Shrader its promissory notes aggregating the sum of $50,000, to repay which the said deed of trust was given. The court found that there was no consideration whatever for said last-mentioned deed of trust or for the promissory notes the payment of which said deed was given to secure. The court then found, by finding 23, as follows:

"That the defendants John Shrader, Henry M. Jackson, and J. L. Campbell, and Ohio Construction Company have received from the sale or disposition of oil produced from the property of defendant El Dora Oil Company up to December 31, 1913, money or credits to the extent and sum of $94,188.85, for which said defendants have made no accounting and against which said defendants have no claim, credit, or offset, except in the sum of $7,076.24."

Thus this situation is presented by the findings above considered: (1) That, as to the trust deed and the promissory notes representing the purported $35,000 indebtedness, the court finds that that transaction or the notes did not represent an existing indebtedness, but any indebtedness to accrue only in the future. As to this finding we may here pause to observe that there is no express finding that a "future indebtedness" did not accrue before the commencement of this action against the company in favor of Shrader, and that, if taken alone, or without reference to finding 23, said finding 3 would not be sufficient to support the judgment as to that particular transaction. (2) That the court finds that there was no consideration whatever to support the transaction involving the giving of the notes for the aggregate sum of $50,000 and the trust deed executed for the purpose of securing payment of said notes. (3) That, instead of the El Dora Company being indebted to John Shrader in any sum whatever, John Shrader and his associates, Campbell, Jackson, and the Ohio Construction Company, under which name the said three appellants, as copartners, conducted and carried on business, were indebted to the El Dora Oil Company in the sum of $94,188.85, less a credit of $7,076.24, and the interest on said indebtedness up to December 31, 1913, bringing the total indebtedness at the time of judgment up to the sum of $105,406.25.

We must assume that, if there was evidence showing that anything was due John Shrader and his associates, or either of them, from the El Dora Company by reason of any of the transactions referred to in the findings above considered, the court would have made a finding thereon and due and proper allowance of the amount as a credit or offset against the amount of money found to have come into their hands from the sale of the company's oil. Indeed, on the record before us, the presumption is that all the findings derive sufficient support from the evidence adduced at the trial, and, considering the findings by the light of each other, or as a whole, they amply support the conclusion of law by the court that the $35,000 transaction, involving the execution of the promissory notes aggregating that sum by the El Dora Company to Shrader, and the deed of trust and the chattel mortgage given as security for said notes, "should be decreed to be null and void and of no effect."

It follows, of course, that the judgment, in so far as it decrees said notes, trust deed, and mortgage null and void, is buttressed by sufficiently supported findings and conclusions of law.

There are no other points presented here for our consideration.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

MITCHELL v. MITCHELL. (Civ. 2700.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 6, 1920.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇨221(6)
—EVIDENCE HELD TO SUSTAIN FINDING THAT LOAN FROM DECEDENT HAD BEEN PAID.

In an action to recover money loaned by a decedent to her son, evidence by the son, his wife, and another that he had repaid the amount held sufficient to sustain a judgment for defendant.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1048(6)—LIMITING CROSS-EXAMINATION TO AFFECT CREDIBILITY NOT REVERSIBLE.

Though the court in an action to collect money loaned by decedent to her son should allow broad scope in cross-examination of defendant's witnesses, who testified to payment to better determine their credibility, his limiting such cross-examination is not sufficient to warrant a reversal of judgment for defendant.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇨221(3)
—EVIDENCE OF DECEDENT'S ATTEMPT TO BORROW INCOMPETENT TO CONTRADICT PAYMENT TO HER.

In an action to recover money loaned by decedent to her son, evidence that at the time the son claimed to have repaid the money decedent had to borrow money from another is incompetent to contradict the payment.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇨221(3)
—EVIDENCE OF SOURCE OF DECEDENT'S FUND INCOMPETENT TO CONTRADICT PAYMENT TO HER.

In an action to recover amount loaned by decedent to her son, evidence that at the time the son claimed to have repaid the amount the only funds in decedent's bank account were the proceeds of the sale of real estate was incompetent to contradict testimony of payment.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1071(5)—STATEMENT IN FINDINGS THAT ACTION WAS WITHOUT JUST CAUSE IMMATERIAL.

In an action to recover money loaned by decedent to her son, a statement by the trial court at the end of its findings that the action was prosecuted without just cause was surplusage and immaterial.

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇨84—DUTY TO BEGIN SUITS.

The administrator's duty to collect all the assets of the estate requires him to bring suit where he has reason to believe that there is money owing to the estate which has not been paid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by William Mitchell, as administrator of the estate of Elizabeth S. Mitchell, deceased, against Robert Mitchell. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jensen & Jensen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George H. Moore and Raymond E. Hoyt, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment entered in favor of defendant. The action was brought to recover the principal sum of $750, which was alleged in the complaint to have been loaned by decedent, Elizabeth S. Mitchell, to the defendant. The answer admitted the making of the loan, and affirmatively alleged the repayment thereof.

[1] At the trial defendant testified that at the time of receiving the money from decedent, who was his mother, he gave her his promissory note for $750, payable two years after date, and payable in installments of $20 per month; that in September, 1915, there then being due about the sum of $300 of the principal, his mother, stating that she then needed the money, requested him to discharge the debt, offering to waive certain interest amounts if payment was made;

that not having the money at hand he (defendant) borrowed from Lena R. Brackett the $300, which was delivered to his wife for the purpose of paying the debt. The wife testified that she delivered the money to decedent, and that decedent returned to her the promissory note, and directed her to burn it. Lena Brackett testified that she made the loan to defendant as narrated by him, and that she was present when the money was delivered to the mother, and saw the note handed by the mother to defendant's wife, and heard the direction by decedent to destroy the same, and saw the note destroyed. The testimony offered by the plaintiff was not directly contradictory of the fact of repayment, as asserted by the defendant. There was some testimony to the effect that at about the time defendant, claimed to have repaid the loan his mother had stated to others that she was in need of money, and that near the time of her death she stated to another witness that the interest had not been paid on her note, apparently referring to the note given by the defendant. It must appear from this statement of the testimony that there was ample evidence to sustain the judgment of the court.

[2] Counsel for appellant complain that the court erred in limiting the cross-examination of the witness Brackett; also the cross-examination of the wife of defendant. Conceding that the court should have adopted a very liberal policy toward the plaintiff in allowing broader scope to the cross-examination in order to better determine the credibility of the witnesses, we are not prepared to hold that the error in that regard would be sufficient to warrant a reversal of the judgment.

[3] We do not think the court erred in its ruling refusing to allow another witness to answer a question as to whether decedent had borrowed any money from him within six months prior to her decease. It would have been, no doubt, competent for the plaintiff to have shown, if he could, that at the time it was claimed the payment of $300 was made to decedent by the defendant she in fact had no money; but we do not believe that the offered testimony of her desire to borrow money from others at the same time would be sufficient or competent proof in support of such a claim. We do find that one of these witnesses was allowed to testify that decedent was at about that time without funds, and that she had on many occasions stated that she was without money. The fact that she had requested a loan from the witness could add nothing to the weight of those statements.

[4] Neither do we think that the court erred in refusing to allow to be shown by another witness that the bank deposit which the decedent had late in September was composed only of funds received from the sale of certain real property.

[5, 6] Counsel for appellant complain because the court concluded its findings with the statement, "that this action was commenced and prosecuted without just cause." Of course, this statement had no relevancy to the issues presented, and was in no particular a determination of any of the rights of the parties. The chief cause of complaint as to this matter seems to be that appellant resents the imputation that he prosecuted his action without ground therefor. It is the duty of an administrator of an estate to collect all of the assets thereof, and if such administrator has reason to believe that there is money owing which has not been paid, it is his duty to sue therefor. As we have noted, however, the phrase objected to in the findings is surplusage and immaterial.

The judgment is affirmed.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA HOME BUILDERS v. YOUNG et al. (Civ. 3133.)

1. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 319(5)—COMPANY CAN SUE DIRECTORS TO RECOVER DIVIDENDS IMPROPERLY PAID.

Under Civ. Code, $\S$ 309, prohibiting dividends except from surplus profits, and rendering directors personally liable for improper dividends, a corporation can maintain an action against directors to enforce their liability though suing on its own behalf and not for creditors.

2. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 319(1/2) — DAMAGE TO COMPANY FROM DIRECTORS' IMPROPER DECLARATION OF DIVIDENDS IS AMOUNT THEREOF.

The actual damage to a corporation from its directors' improper declaration of dividends other than from surplus profits in violation of Civ. Code, $\S$ 309, is the amount by which its capital is depleted by the unlawful dividends, the liability of the directors to the company being direct, not secondary only because of inability to pay creditors.

3. CORPORATIONS $\S$ 310(4)—RIGHT OF COMPANY TO RECOVER ILLEGAL DIVIDENDS HELD NOT TO AFFECT STATUTORY LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS.

Right of corporation to recover from those to whom corporate assets may have been unlawfully transferred by way of dividends not declared from surplus profits does not affect liability, under Civ. Code, $\S$ 309, of directors who made unlawful distribution, unless corporation causes replacement in whole or part of what was taken from it, in which event liability of directors is diminished proportionately or expunged.

4. CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 310(4)—RIGHT OF COMPANY TO RECoup FOR ILLEGAL DIVIDENDS BY ASSESSMENT DOES NOT AFFECT LIABILITY OF DIRECTORS.

If a corporation may lawfully recoup itself for loss through dividends improperly declared other than from surplus profits, by assessment on the stock while remaining in the hands of those who received the unlawful distribution, such right does not affect the liability, under Civ. Code, § 309, of the directors who made the distributions, unless thereby the company causes replacement of what has been taken from it.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 931(1)—EVERY REASONABLE INFERENCE MUST BE DRAWN IN SUPPORT OF TRIAL COURT.

Every reasonable inference must be drawn on appeal in support of the action of the trial court.

6. CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 310(4)—DIRECTORS RIGHT OF RECOURSE AGAINST STOCKHOLDERS RECEIVING IMPROPER DIVIDENDS IMMATERIAL TO DIRECTORS' LIABILITY TO CORPORATION.

If plaintiff corporation is entitled to judgment in its suit against directors to enforce their liability, under Civ. Code, § 309, for having paid dividends other than from surplus profits, neither corporation nor court is concerned with question of any subsequent rights which defendant directors may assert against stockholders who received illegal dividends, persons who are neither necessary nor proper parties.

7. CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 310(4)—SILENCE OF STOCKHOLDERS WHEN IMPROPER DIVIDENDS DECLARED IS NOT RATIFICATION OR ESTOPPEL IN COMPANY'S ACTION AGAINST DIRECTORS.

Mere consent or silence on the part of corporate stockholders, unaccompanied by any other fact which might entail equitable considerations, will neither operate as a ratification of illegal acts of directors, as in declaring dividends other than from surplus profits, nor as an estoppel of the company, as to assert the liability of the directors under Civ. Code, § 309.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1170(7)—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE TENDING TO PROVE DEFENSE A "MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE" CALLING FOR REVERSAL.

The refusal of the trial court to permit defendants to present evidence which, if true, would exonerate them constitutes a "miscarriage of justice" of such a character as to be outside the operation of Const. art. 6, § 4½.

9. CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 151—DEFINITION OF "SURPLUS PROFITS" FROM WHICH DIVIDENDS PROPERLY MAY BE PAID.

"Surplus profits," as used in Civ. Code, § 309, prohibiting the declaration of corporate dividends other than from such profits, means the excess of receipts over expenditures, or net earnings or receipts, or gross receipts, less expenses of operation; mere advance in value of property prior to sale, or estimated profits, not constituting surplus profits.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Surplus Profits.]

10. CORPORATIONS $\hookrightarrow$ 310(4)—DIRECTORS DECLARING IMPROPER DIVIDENDS LIABLE, THOUGH ACCEPTING BALANCE SHEET PREPARED BY EMPLOYEES.

Corporate directors who improperly declared dividends other than from surplus profits, in violation of Civ. Code, § 309, the first of which left the corporation with a deficit of $50,000, the second with one of $117,000, and the third with one of $142,000, at time of declaration of which the company had realty known to be of the value of $327,000, so that there must have been liabilities of about $470,000, held liable to the company, though they were led to believe there were surplus profits available for dividends by accepting the figures of a balance sheet prepared by corporate employes, and though they relied on appraisals by competent persons, and had legal advice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by the Southern California Home Builders against R. O. Young and others. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry K. Norton, Wilbur Bassett, and Roy V. Rhodes, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Hickcox & Crenshaw, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. Five former directors of the plaintiff, a going corporation, appeal from a judgment for something over $30,000, the aggregate of three dividends paid during their administration, the trial court having found that none of the dividends was paid from surplus profits.

Under two broad contentions, that section 309 of the Civil Code does not permit the maintenance of such an action as this by a corporation except for the benefit of creditors, and that good faith on the part of the directors is a complete defense to such an action, numerous questions are presented. Except in one particular, to which further reference is made, counsel for respondent assumes, and, after serious consideration, the court is of the opinion the questions are properly before it upon a sufficient record.

The facts necessary to be considered are undisputed, and, without following the details of the trial procedure, may be summarized as follows: On the demand of the defendants a jury was called to establish the value of the corporation's realty at the dates of the respective dividends. By stipulation these figures were modified, and, as so changed, were adopted by the court as a part of its findings. The court also found that at the date of each dividend the liabilities of the corporation exceeded its assets. For the sake of brevity the figures are tabulated, each dividend having been for 2½ per cent. of the par value of outstanding stock, declared and paid respectively at the dates indicated, as follows:

	Apr. 15, 1913.	Oct. 15, 1913.	Jan. 15, 1914.
Realty value ..	$311,091.00	$334,394.00	$327,222.00
Deficit	50,099.19	117,534.35	142,312.40
Dividend	8,958.99	9,635.14	11,492.61

The court further found that the defendants, at the date when each dividend was declared, had before them as directors a statement, inventory, and balance sheet, furnished by the employes of the corporation in charge of its books in the ordinary course of its business, purporting to show undistributed in the treasury and accumulated between the dates of the organization of the corporation and the particular dividend surplus profits sufficient to pay the dividend, but that the statement, balance sheet, and inventory were not true, full, or correct statements of the financial condition of the corporation, for the reason that the property was shown at a fictitious value largely in excess of its actual value, and also because many items carried as assets should have been carried as losses, and many carried as profits should have been carried as liabilities, and that if the statement, balance sheet, and inventory had been true and correct, they would have shown the corporation had not made surplus profits, but that there was a deficit. These findings were based on evidence taken during 58 days of trial, 10 of which were devoted to the determination of the value of the real property. The evidence introduced is not before the court, it being recited in the bill of exceptions that sufficient evidence was introduced to support the findings, except those not heretofore mentioned, that the corporation was damaged to the amount of the respective dividends, upon which no evidence was introduced other than the fact of their payment.

[1] Eliminating those clauses not involved in this appeal, section 309 of the Civil Code is as follows:

"The directors of corporations must not make dividends, except from the surplus profits arising from the business thereof; * * * nor must they divide, withdraw, or pay to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock. * * * For a violation of the provisions of this section, the directors under whose administration the same may have happened * * * are, in their individual or private capacity, jointly and severally liable to the corporation, and to the creditors thereof, to the full amount of the capital stock so divided, withdrawn, paid out, or reduced. * * *"

The appellants contend that an action cannot be maintained by the corporation to recover upon the liability defined in the section, except on behalf of creditors. The language of the statute at first glance would appear to be too clear to permit an interpretation limiting the right of the corporation to recover property taken from it. A forceful argument is presented to show that such a first impression cannot be supported upon sound reason.

A similar statute was adopted in New York in 1825, in New Jersey in 1846, and in this state in 1850. It is unnecessary to consider the changes in these statutes by amendments affecting either their language or punctuation. It is contended they are but codifications of a common-law rule that the capital of a corporation is a trust fund, first for the creditors and then for the stockholders, for the misapplication of which the directors were liable as trustees. This view seems to have been held, in 1902, by Vice Chancellor Pitney, of the Court of Chancery of New Jersey. In a very learned and illuminating opinion he reviewed a great number of English and American cases, and reached a conclusion upon which he sustained a demurrer to bills in consolidated suits by certain stockholders against directors of two corporations, saying, among other things:

"It would be unjust and inequitable for the stockholders directly or indirectly to recover from the directors the very moneys which they have already received." Siegmán v. Maloney, 63 N. J. Eq. 422, 51 Atl. 1003.

An appeal having been taken under another name from the order made on demurrer, the Court of Errors and Appeals reversed the ruling. In the course of the opinion, written by Mr. Chief Justice Gummere, he said:

"The apparent object of the provision is to afford protection equally to the corporation and to its creditors against loss by reason of the illegal act. But the creditors can suffer no injury from it unless the capital is so impaired as to render the company insolvent. Not so with the corporation. Any impairment of its capital is harmful to it in some degree; the seriousness of the injury depending upon the extent of the impairment. For the full protection of the company, the liability of the directors must be absolute. * * * In our judgment, the Legislature intended by this provision to afford the full measure of protection which the words provide."

Concerning the statement that it would be inequitable to permit stockholders to recover from directors money they had themselves received as dividends, it was said:

"The argument assumes there will be no transfer of the stock of the company during the period of the liability of the directors. The assumption is unwarranted. The very declaration of the dividend, evidencing, as it does, the apparent prosperity of the company, creates a desire on the part of outsiders to become holders of the stock. It at the same time decreases the actual, while increasing the apparent, value of the stock. The result is to afford unscrupulous directors, and stockholders who are cognizant of the illegal action of the board, an opportunity to unload their holdings upon innocent purchasers at fraudulently inflated prices. * * * Nor is it inequitable that stockholders who have innocently participated in the distribution of the illegal dividends should have their stock restored to its normal value by contribution from the directors who have impaired the capital without being first required to pay back the dividend so paid to them. The ordinary purchaser of corporate stock holds it as an investment. He rightly considers and treats the dividends paid upon it as income. In many instances the income is required to meet the expenses of living, and is entirely expended for that purpose. To say that a person who has been unwittingly induced to exhaust his principal by the mistaken or fraudulent representation of those to whom he has entrusted it, that what has been paid to him as income suffers no injury, is absurd. To refuse him redress except upon the condition that he return the moneys which he has expended in the belief that his capital was intact, notwithstanding that by such expenditure he is rendered penniless, is to put a premium upon fraud in corporate management." Appleton v. American Malting Co., 65 N. J. Eq. 375, 54 Atl. 454.

The same question coming before the court after Mr. Justice Pitney became a member of it, he wrote the opinion expressly adopting the reasoning and conclusions of the decision in Appleton v. American Malting Co. Siegmán v. Electric Vehicle Co., 72 N. J. Eq. 403, 65 Atl. 910. The rule has been adopted by the United States Circuit Court in New Jersey, and by the courts of New York. Siegmán v. Electric Vehicle Co. (C. C.) 140 Fed. 117; Hutchinson v. Stadler, 85 App. Div. 424, 83 N. Y. Supp. 509; Hutchinson v. Curtis, 45 Misc. Rep. 484, 92 N. Y. Supp. 70; De Ralmses v. U. S. Lithograph Co., 161 App. Div. 781, 146 N. Y. Supp. 813. While, in all the cases cited except the latest, the suit was brought by the stockholder instead of the corporation, neither the reason nor the rule is different when the suit is by the corporation. In this state, at least, when such a suit is brought by the stockholder it is entertained only on behalf of a corporation the officers of which fail or refuse to act, and then the corporation must be made a party. Cogswell v. Bull, 39 Cal. 320; Waymire v. San Francisco, etc., Co., 112 Cal. 646, 44 Pac. 1086; Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 17, 28 Pac. 788.

Under numerous subheadings it is argued, in effect, either that the overruled decision first written by Mr. Justice Pitney when he was Vice Chancellor was correct or that the rule finally adopted by him does not apply in this case. These contentions do not appear to be well founded. They have received careful consideration, but do not require lengthy comment here. Although one of the purposes of the statute was to protect creditors, that was not its sole purpose. There is nothing in People v. Savings Union, 72 Cal. 199, 13 Pac. 498, Moore v. Lent, 81 Cal. 502, 22 Pac. 875, or Baldwin v. Miller & Lux, 152 Cal. 454, 92 Pac. 1030, which in the least degree militates against the rule, nor are the cases from other states, cited by appellants upon this subject, at variance with the rule. The statute affords protection in proper cases to the corporation, regardless of whether or not there are creditors. It would be nothing short of absurd, therefore, to hold that no suit could be maintained to enforce the liability, except one on behalf of stockholders. Kohl v. Lillenthal, 81 Cal. 387, 20 Pac. 401, 22 Pac. 689, 6 L. R. A. 520. The cases of Winchester v. Mabury, 122 Cal. 522, 55 Pac. 393, and Moss v. Smith, 171 Cal. 777, 155 Pac. 90, when read in connection with the facts upon which they were based, lend no support to the contentions of the appellants.

[2] The appellants argue that, while the statute is highly penal in its effect upon directors, and is therefore to be strictly construed, its purpose is not punitive, but remedial, and that in such cases as this actual damage must be shown. For the present purpose both of these propositions may be accepted, but unless the seemingly unanswerable logic of Mr. Chief Justice Gummere, in Appleton v. American Malting Co., supra, is set at naught, the actual damage to the corporation is the amount by which its capital is depleted by the unlawful dividends. The liability to the corporation is direct, not secondary only because of its inability to pay creditors. The decision of Winchester v. Howard, 136 Cal. 432, 64 Pac. 692, 69 Pac. 77, 89 Am. St. Rep. 153, does not support any other view of the meaning of the unambiguous language of the statute.

[3, 4] The right of the corporation to recover from those to whom corporate assets may have been unlawfully transferred does not affect the statutory liability of the directors who made the unlawful distribution, unless the corporation, in the exercise of the first right, causes the replacement, in whole or in part, of what was taken from the corporation. In that event the liability of the directors would be diminished proportionately or expunged, since the corporation would be entitled to what was taken and no more. The same reasoning would apply to recoupment by assessment upon the stock while it remained in the hands of those who had received the unlawful distribution, and if other equities, suggested in the opinion in Appleton v. American Malting Co., supra, had not intervened, if, indeed, an assessment for such restoration could lawfully be levied. One purpose of section 309 of the Civil Code was to assure existing and incoming stockholders of the corporation that its capital should not be wrongly depleted. If, in violation of the statute, directors should make a dividend from capital instead of from profits, and, before suit, should themselves replace an equivalent sum in the treasury, or should, by an appeal to those who had received the money, cause them to replace it, the corporation, of course, could not, by such a suit as this, exact double payment. If the stockholders or some of them resisted such an appeal, and an assessment, assuming such an assessment to be otherwise legally unobjectionable, were levied and paid, the result would be the same as if the same stockholders voluntarily had returned the money they had received.

[5] It is stipulated in the present case that after the dividends in question were paid, the corporation received from its stockholders in payment of assessments levied by its board of directors a sum of money greater than the aggregate of the dividends. To say the least, it is extremely doubtful whether an assessment levied for the purpose of replacing assets wrongfully diverted could be upheld under the provisions of the Code prescribing that assessments may be levied for the purposes of paying expenses, conducting business or paying debts. Civ. Code, § 331. If it were levied in terms for any other purpose than recoupment, it would be evasive and fraudulent, if that were its real purpose. In this case the stipulation furnishes no aid to the appellants. It does not show when nor for what purposes the assessments were levied. The trial occupied 58 days, all but 10 of which were devoted to the examination of the financial affairs of the corporation. The evidence adduced is not before the court. Under the rule that every reasonable inference must be drawn in support of the action of the trial court, it may be assumed that the evidence showed the assessments were levied, not for the purpose of recoupment, but for other specific purposes to which the money, when paid, was properly applied.

[6] Argument upon the proposition that such a suit cannot be maintained on behalf of the stockholders is answered by the fact that this suit was brought by the corporation on its own behalf to recover for injury sustained by it. Equally immaterial is the argument concerning the right of the directors to pursue stockholders to whom payments were made in the event of a final judgment in this suit against the directors. If the corporation is entitled to a judgment in this statutory suit, neither the corporation nor the court is concerned with the question of any subsequent rights which the defendants may assert against persons who are neither necessary nor proper parties to the present litigation.

[7] In their fourth special defense the defendants attempted to plead an estoppel against both the corporation and the stockholders who participated in the dividends in question. No special facts were alleged, except that the stockholders had accepted dividends and had not complained. Mere consent or silence on the part of stockholders, unaccompanied by any other fact which might present equitable considerations, will neither operate as a ratification nor as an estoppel. Kohl v. Lillienthal, 81 Cal. 385, 20 Pac. 401, 22 Pac. 689, 6 L. R. A. 520; Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 Pac. 735; Tapscott v. Mexican Colorado, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 667, 96 Pac. 271; Burne v. Lee, 156 Cal. 228, 104 Pac. 438; Hedges v. Frink, 174 Cal. 553, 163 Pac. 884. The general demurrer was properly sustained to the special defense as pleaded, and the record does not show that the appellants sought to amend, either when the ruling was made or after the evidence was before the court. In the absence of the evidence which was introduced, this court cannot assume that it supported the appellants' claims of estoppel. Neither in the present state of the pleadings would any part of the excluded evidence have been admissible upon an issue of estoppel not before the court.

That there is nothing inherently inequitable in such a suit appears both from the sound reasoning upon which the decision in Appleton v. American Malting Co., supra, is based, and from the express provisions of section 309 of the Civil Code, establishing the directors' liability. If the facts of the particular case showed it would be inequitable to enforce the liability, those facts should have been presented in the record filed in this court. As a matter of law, upon the appellants' first broad contention, it is concluded that the liability of directors for the amount of unlawful dividends distributed by them is a direct one to the corporation, and not dependent upon the existence of corporation creditors.

The appellants' other main contention is that:

"No recovery can be had against directors who after due care and investigation, and in the bona fide belief that the corporation had sufficient surplus for the purpose, paid dividends ratably among the stockholders."

In their second separate defense the appellants alleged that at the time of declaring each dividend as directors they had before them a statement, inventory, and balance sheet, furnished them by employes of the corporation in charge of its books and accounts in the ordinary course of business, showing that between the date of the organization of the corporation and the date of the dividend there had been accumulated and undistributed in the treasury sufficient surplus profits out of which to pay the dividends, respectively, and that the defendants relied upon the entries appearing in the statement, inventory, and balance sheet, and believed the same to be true, and, upon information and belief, they alleged that the same were true and accurate statements of the financial condition of the corporation. General demurrer to this defense was overruled, but a similar demurrer to the third separate defense was sustained, in which defense it was alleged the appellants, in good faith and in the honest belief that the corporation had surplus profits arising from its business from which the dividends respectively could properly and lawfully be made, voted therefor; that each dividend was paid without intent to delay, hinder, or defraud any creditor; that the defendants exercised due diligence to ascertain the financial situation of the corporation and to determine whether there were sufficient surplus profits arising from the business from which to pay the dividend, and each dividend was paid in the honest belief that the financial situation of the corporation was such that the amount of surplus profits arising from the business then belonging to the corporation was greater than the amount of the dividend. While no direct attack is made by the appellants upon the demurrer ruling, there appears in the respondent's brief a statement made by the trial judge in sustaining the demurrer to this defense, in which, after stating the reasons for the conclusion, the trial judge said:

"All the foregoing considerations lead me to the conclusion that the defense of good faith, attempted to be alleged in the third separate defense, is not a defense; for these reasons the demurrer thereto will be sustained."

While neither the second nor the third defense was pleaded with the particularity of statement which might have been required by special demurrer, it appears from what has been said that the question of good faith was presented by the second defense, although not so strongly as by the third defense. In relation to the second defense the court found that the directors had before them the statement, inventory, and balance sheet, as alleged in the second defense, further finding that the same were false, and that the assets were shown therein to be of a value very largely in excess of their actual value, with items carried as assets which should have been carried as losses, and items carried as profits which should have been carried as liabilities. There was no direct finding on the question of good faith, no doubt because of the demurrer ruling.

In support of the issue of good faith each of the defendants offered to testify that as directors they had relied upon the entries appearing on the statements, inventories, and balance sheets, and believed them to be true, accurate, and correct statements of the financial condition of the corporation, and that when declaring the dividends they acted in good faith and in the honest belief that the corporation had sufficient surplus profits to pay the dividends; that they had exercised reasonable care and diligence to ascertain the financial condition of the corporation. They further offered to prove that they had caused the books of the corporation to be audited by a certified public accountant, that said audit showed a net undivided surplus sufficient to pay at least one of the dividends, and the report of the audit was offered. They further offered to prove by an attorney that they had consulted him in regard to the payment of the dividends, and had been advised by him that they were lawful and proper. They offered to prove that they had caused the real property to be appraised by certain bank officials, bank appraisers, railroad land agents and residents in the neighborhood of the properties; that the defendants believed that the persons named as appraisers were the best-qualified persons then available for the purpose of making appraisal, and that in good faith they had believed in and relied upon the rectitude of the appraisements, which were also offered in evidence. All this evidence was rejected upon the general objection that it was immaterial, as, indeed, it was if the ruling of the trial judge that good faith is not a defense to such an action was correct. The question presented in the first instance, therefore, is one of law as to whether or not under the circumstances the defense of good faith may be interposed to defeat the liability declared by the statute, although that question is brought here upon the rulings of the court in refusing to admit the proffered evidence.

[8] It is apparent this is not a case within the purview of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution. That section was adopted to prevent reversal of just judgments for technical errors of procedure. People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 64, 130 Pac. 1042. It did not modify or lessen the substantial guaranties of life, liberty, or property, without which any government must be despotic. Those guaranties depend on what has been said to be the right controlling all rights—the right of every person to be heard in ordinary forms of law in his own defense. The appellants contend that by the action of the trial court they were deprived of their right to present evidence which, if true, would have exonerated them. If the defense was permissible in the particular case, the refusal to receive evidence in its support constituted a miscarriage of justice of such a character as to be outside of the operation of the constitutional provision.

[9, 10] Although the provisions embodied in section 309 of the Civil Code have been in force in this state since 1850, it is remarkable that this exact question does not appear to have been judicially determined by the Supreme Court. It has always been presumed that directors have knowledge of the business of corporations it is their duty to manage and control. Before the adoption of any of the statutes in terms making directors liable, among other things, for declaring dividends out of capital, it was recognized both in the courts of common law and in the courts of equity that directors as trustees were liable for acts of malfeasance or misfeasance by which the capital of the corporation might be improperly depleted. Directors may still be liable under the old rules in cases other than those provided for in section 309 of the Civil Code, if they have been grossly negligent in the employment of the corporation servants, or in their oversight of them in the management of the corporate business. In such cases the questions of good faith, care, and diligence are the essential ones to be determined.

The appellants argue that section 309 of the Civil Code is only a codification of the old rules. The court has been unable to accept this view. The adoption of the statute was not intended as an idle act. It does not appear reasonable to suppose that if the Legislature merely intended to codify the pre-existing common law, it would have passed the statute apparently limiting the liability of the directors to three particular acts for which they might be held liable as trustees. In the growth of corporate intervention in ordinary business affairs, it is inconceivable that by the adoption of these statutes the Legislatures of a number of states intended to lessen the responsibility of directors by declaring them liable for specific breaches of trust, which by their mention in the statute might have the effect of relieving the directors from civil liability for other breaches not mentioned. In discussing the first general contention of the appellants, decisions of the Supreme Court of this state have been cited from which, generally speaking, it appears that the prohibition of section 309 of the Civil Code against withdrawing capital or declaring dividends from capital has been denounced as contrary to the policy of the law, and ultra vires.

The appellants rely strongly upon a decision in a case arising under a similar statute of Illinois. The opinion was written by Judge Grosscup of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. The opinion shows that in the particular case the corporation was under the control of a group of men who perpetrated upon it, its directors, stockholders, and creditors, a series of grossly fraudulent and actively dishonest practices. In the course of the opinion Judge Grosscup said:

"The whole question of liability in these respects seems to center around the inquiry, Should the appellees, in the exercise of the diligence required of them by law, have known, at the time of the transactions, the true state of the company's affairs?"

In that case he applied the reasoning and the rules of the common law to the statute. Chick v. Fuller, 114 Fed. 22, 28, 51 C. C. A. 648. This case stands practically alone, and the significant feature of it is the showing of direct fraud practiced, not by, but on, the directors.

Under the first contention of the appellants they relied upon the reasoning of Mr. Justice Pitney in a case in which his decision was reversed by the Court of Errors and Appeals of New Jersey. It has been stated that when Mr. Justice Pitney became a member of that court in a subsequent case he adopted the reasoning of the overruling opinion. Upon the present contention probably no stronger statement can be found than that of Mr. Justice Pitney in the later case. He said:

"Under the statutory scheme it is manifest that while it is a function of the directors of a corporation to determine whether net earnings or surplus exist applicable to the payment of dividends, they cannot, by an erroneous determination of this point, confer either upon themselves or upon the corporation powers that by the corporation act are withheld, nor make lawful that which the act has prohibited. If this were permissible, then by the same logic a court that is called upon to pass on the question of its jurisdiction over a given subject-matter might, by an erroneous determination, enlarge its jurisdiction. Some matters that are ultra vires the directors may be intra vires the corporation; some matters that are ultra vires the corporation may be so, simply because they are unauthorized; other matters may be ultra vires the corporation because prohibited by law. The matter we are dealing with comes within the latter category. Not only is it not within the express or implied powers of a corporation to distribute its capital among the stockholders in the guise of dividends as from profits, but the doing of this is expressly and with emphasis prohibited. In Appleton v. American Malting Co., 65 N. J. Eq. 375, 381, 54 Atl. 454, this court pointed out that the impairment of capital resulting from unlawful payment of dividends not only renders the corporation less able to conduct its business and to meet its obligations, but tends to the injury of innocent investors by decreasing the actual, while increasing the apparent, value of the stock, and likewise to the injury of the very stockholders who innocently participate in the distribution, because they are led to treat dividends as income and expend them as such, while in truth they are unwittingly exhausting their principal." Siegmán v. Electric Vehicle Co., 72 N. J. Eq. 408, 65 Atl. 912.

The question of the same dividends came before the United States Circuit Court. In the course of the opinion it was said:

"A board of directors have no legal power to declare dividends and direct their payment when they know, or ought to know, that the payment will result in impairing the capital fund of their corporation." Siegmán v. Electric Vehicle Co. (C. C.) 140 Fed. 117, 119.

Under a similar statute considered by the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court it said:

"Whether the director knows the exact condition of the corporation is unimportant. It is his duty to ascertain whether the earnings authorize the withdrawal of the corporate assets to pay a dividend. If he can be excused because he did not know the condition of the corporation, the effect of the statute would be nullified. * * * Whenever a dividend was declared, the secretary gave to each director a statement purporting to be taken from the books of the company and showing its financial standing. * * * They had abundant opportunity to examine the statement each time and ascertain whether a dividend was proper. The estimation of values they assented to or did not investigate. They may have relied upon the secretary, but it was their affirmative duty to know whether a dividend was justified before authorizing its payment." Wesp v. Muckle, 136 App. Div. 241, 244, 245, 120 N. Y. Supp. 976, 979, 980, affirmed in Wesp v. Strassenburgh, 201 N. Y. 527, 94 N. E. 1100.

"Surplus profits" has been defined as:

"The excess of receipts over expenditures; that is, net earnings" (Connolly v. Davidson, 15 Minn. 519 [Gil. 428], 2 Am. Rep. 154); "the receipts of a business, deducting current expenses; it is equivalent to net receipts" (Eyster v. Centennial Board of Finance, 94 U. S. 500, 24 L. Ed. 188). "Net earnings are, properly, the gross receipts, less the expenses of operating the road to earn such receipts. * * * When all liabilities are paid, either out of the gross receipts or * * * net earnings, the remainder is the profit of the shareholders." St. John v. Erie R. R. Co., 10 Blatchf. 271, Fed. Cas. No. 12,226. "Under these definitions, it is not easy to comprehend how profits or surplus profits can consist of earnings never yet received. The term imports an excess of receipts over expenditures, and without receipts there cannot properly be said to be profits. Money earned as interest, however well secured, or certain to be eventually paid, cannot in fact be distributed as dividends to stockholders, and does not constitute surplus profits within the meaning of the statute. To hold the contrary would, we think, tend to open the door to a practice under which the assets of corporations would be liable to distribution as dividends, upon no surer basis than the judgment of their directors as to the value of their bills receivable. Such is not, and should not be, the policy of the law." People v. Savings Union, 72 Cal. 203, 13 Pac. 498.

Mere advance in value of property prior to its sale, or estimated profits on partially executed contracts, do not constitute profits, because the fluctuations of the market and the uncertainty of the completion of such contracts may bring about a condition such as was found to exist in the present case, where the estimated profits were in fact liabilities or direct losses. Gray v. Darlington, 15 Wall. 63-65, 21 L. Ed. 45; Jennery v. Olmstead, 36 Hun, 536-538.

The admitted facts shown by the record now before the court that the deficit between the liabilities and the assets of the corporation grew from $50,000 at the time of the first dividend to $117,000 at the time of the second dividend and to over $142,000 at the time of the third dividend, and that at the time of the third dividend the corporation had realty known to have been of the value of $327,000, or, in other words, that at the time of the third dividend there must have been liabilities of about $470,000 at least, render it almost inconceivable that the directors of the corporation could have been deceived by a mere statement and balance sheet. It is equally inconceivable that they could have relied upon any mere appraisal that the realty of the corporation was worth practically half a million dollars over its real value. It will be noted that there was no offer to show there had been any sales of property at values largely in excess of the cost of the property to the corporation; there was no offer to show that the corporation had received from actual business carried on excessively large sums of money from many transactions, the nature of which the directors could not in the exercise of ordinary care have known all about. Mere estimates of increased value of property known do not constitute profits. Upon the record presented to this court none of the exceptional circumstances shown in Chick v. Fuller, supra, appear.

To hold that in every suit to recover the statutory liability, directors may be exonerated by merely testifying they were mistaken and they believed that there were surplus profits, because they had accepted the figures of a balance sheet prepared by the corporate employes, would open the door to the grossest frauds in corporate management. This court can reach no conclusion other than that reached by the highest courts of New York and New Jersey. As a general rule, good faith on the part of the directors in declaring dividends from capital instead of from surplus profits is not a defense in a suit to recover the statutory liability. If the defense could ever be considered, it would only be where the pleadings clearly and in detail show the facts of fraud and dishonesty practiced upon the directors, and further show facts from which the conclusion would follow irresistibly that the directors could not have guarded against such fraud. No such exceptional circumstances appear in the present case. The conceded facts found from the evidence taken during the 58 (trial) days are of such a character that in the absence of the evidence from the record, and on the meager pleadings and offers of evidence, this court is of the opinion that the rejection of the evidence relied on by the appellants was not erroneous.

CAVASSO v. DOWNEY. (Civ. 3228.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ⇨269—TERMINATED BY INCORPORATION OF PARTNERSHIP BUSINESS.

Where partners incorporated a partnership business, transferred the partnership assets to the corporation, issued additional stock to secure capital and paid the partners' salaries as officers of the corporation, and where there was no evidence of an agreement whereby their relations as copartners should continue in conjunction with their relation as stockholders, the partnership was in fact terminated and merged into the corporation.

2. MONOPOLIES ⇨12(4)—AGREEMENT NOT TO ENGAGE IN SAME BUSINESS AS CORPORATION, AS A CONDITION OF SALE OF STOCK, VOID.

Where partners incorporated their partnership business, transferred the partnership assets to the new corporation, issued additional stock to secure capital, and voted themselves salaries as officers of the corporation, an agreement by one not to engage in the same business within the city, as a condition of the sale of his interest in the corporation to the other, was void, under Civ. Code, §§ 1673, 1674.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by I. L. Cavasso against J. C. Downey. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 180 Pac. 950.

M. J. Rutherford of Oakland (Jesse Robinson, of Oakland of counsel), for appellant.

Edward R. Eliassen, of Oakland (Henry G. Tardy, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action seeking to recover upon three promissory notes for $1,000 each. Judgment was entered for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals.

The defendant, by failure to deny, admitted the execution of the notes, denied that they have not been paid, and averred a failure of consideration therefor. He further alleged that the notes were procured by plaintiff through fraud and deceit. In this connection defendant averred, and the lower court found, that for some time prior to the making of the notes plaintiff and defendant were engaged in the manufacture, buying, and selling paints, glass, oils, and other merchandise, as copartners, under the firm name and designation, Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company, with a place of business in the city of Oakland, and that they continued to engage in and conduct said business under that name, and as such copartners, until October 31, 1914, the date of the notes sued upon; that on that date the plaintiff sold to defendant all his right, title, and interest in the business, and the good will thereof, to defendant, and that defendant purchased the same from the plaintiff, relying upon the representation and distinct promise of plaintiff, and upon the consideration that plaintiff would not engage in any business in competition with the defendant in the city of Oakland for five years, and that as part consideration for the purchase of the rights of plaintiff in and to the business, as aforesaid, defendant executed a promissory note for $3,000 which was afterward divided into three notes of $1,000 each, the notes sued upon in this action; that after obtaining the said promissory notes from defendant, and in violation of defendant's rights, and of the express agreement on his part, plaintiff did open a store and place of business in the city of Oakland, where plaintiff is now engaged in competition with defendant, under the name of Cavasso Paint Company, in the same line of business as that carried on by defendant.

In addition to the foregoing facts, which were alleged and found, the trial court also found: That the copartnership between plaintiff and defendant "continued in name as such until January, 1913, when they (plaintiff and defendant) formed a corporation under the same trade-name as before. That all of the shares of stock in the corporation that were issued were issued to themselves equally, excepting 1 share which was issued and delivered to the bookkeeper in order to qualify him as a director. That thereafter said plaintiff and defendant continued to conduct the said business as before, in all essential and substantial ways. * * * That on or about the 31st day of October, 1914, the plaintiff sold 'all his interest in and to the said business' to the defendant on the following terms: One (1) Mack automobile truck valued at about $2,000, $4,000 in two promissory notes of $1,000 and $3,000 each. Later the $3,000 note was divided into three notes of $1,000 each, which are the notes involved in the above entitled action and on which the present action is brought. That at or about said time, the said plaintiff transferred 380 shares of stock in the said corporation to the defendant, together with all of his interest in and to said business, and covenanted as follows: 'It is further agreed * * * that the said party of the second part (Cavasso) will not engage in any business in competition with the Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company for a period of five (5) years from the date hereof.' That despite the incorporation of the aforesaid business of the Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company, the said plaintiff and defendant were copartners, as between themselves, owning the entire issued capital stock * * * when the plaintiff sold out to the defendant, and that the said sale by Cavasso to Downey of his one-half (or 380) shares of the capital stock of the corporation was made by said Cavasso as a copartner of said Downey upon, or in anticipation of, the dissolution of the said copartnership." The lower court also found that the defendant continued the business of the Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company after the purchase of plaintiff's alleged interest therein.

From the foregoing facts the court legally concluded that there was an entire want of consideration for the promissory notes, and that plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Judgment for the defendant was entered accordingly; hence this appeal.

This is the third time the parties to the foregoing transaction have been before this court. In the first instance the defendant here, as plaintiff, sought damages, and prayed for injunctive relief against this plaintiff, for alleged violation of the agreement not to again engage in business. In affirming the judgment of the lower court, entered after an order sustaining a demurrer to the amended complaint, the court said:

"If it had unequivocally appeared from the allegations of the complaint that the plaintiff and defendant had, by agreement, express or implied, continued their relations as copartners in conjunction with their relation as stockholders of the corporation, the law would take cognizance of such dual relationship and deal with 'the parties in the light of their agreement, independently of their incorporation' (Shorb v. Beaudry, 56 Cal. 446), and if, in fact, such had been the relationship of the parties, to plead it with perspicuity would, it seems to us, have been a very simple matter." Downey v. Cavasso, 36 Cal. App. 316-318, 171 Pac. 1077.

The next controversy arising out of this transaction to engage the attention of this court was an appeal, by the defendant here, from a judgment in favor of this same plaintiff, for the sum of $1,000 with interest, and costs of suit, in an action to recover on the promissory note for that amount, given by the defendant here as part of the purchase price for the interest of the plaintiff in the Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company, which note is referred to in the findings in this action, before quoted. In that case the trial court decided, upon the whole evidence presented, that the copartnership which had previously existed between the parties had been merged in the corporation formed in the month of January, 1913, and that the relation of copartners in respect to the business then taken over by such corporation did not continue thereafter, and that the transaction between the partners in October, 1914, was one in which the defendant purchased the stock of the plaintiff in said corporation, giving, among other things, the note there sued upon as a part of the consideration therefor. The lower court further found, in that case, that the plaintiff did embark in business in the city of Oakland in competition with the corporation, but not in competition with the defendant, who, after the organization of the corporation, had not engaged in such business on his own account. We were satisfied, from a reading of the record, that the evidence fully justified the findings of the court in that regard, and affirmed the judgment. Cavasso v. Downey, 180 Pac. 950. In doing so, we followed the decisions holding that where one sells his stock in a corporation, and enters into an agreement with the purchaser not to again engage in business, such contract is void under the provisions of sections 1673 and 1674 of the Civil Code, and cannot be enforced. Dodge Stationery Co. v. Dodge, 145 Cal. 380, 386, 78 Pac. 879; Merchants' Ad-Sign Co. v. Sterling, 124 Cal. 429, 432, 57 Pac. 468, 46 L. R. A. 142, 71 Am. St. Rep. 94; Chamberlain v. Augustine, 172 Cal. 285, 156 Pac. 479.

It is apparent that the appellant has now attempted, by pleading and proofs, to make his actions conform to the decision on the first appeal, and has sought, in like manner, to escape from the results which must follow, if the facts subject his case to the application of the law followed by us in the second instance.

We will first consider appellant's contention that the evidence is not sufficient to support the finding that the partnership between Cavasso and Downey continued to exist, after the formation of the corporation, and that the sale of Cavasso's interest in the business to Downey was, in reality, a sale of a partnership interest, made in contemplation of a dissolution of the copartnership. The conclusion reached on this point practically amounts to the decision of the whole case.

Respondent relies upon the showing that the copartnership and the corporation bore the same name; that plaintiff and defendant owned all the issued shares of stock, except one; that, after incorporation, according to defendant's testimony, business was conducted in the same manner as before; the plaintiff and the defendant still considering themselves partners in the business. On the part of plaintiff, it appears that immediately after the incorporation of the Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company, a stockholders' meeting was held, directors elected, a code of by-laws adopted and ordered engrossed. The directors thereupon duly organized by the election of Downey as president, Cavasso as vice president, and Schuler (the bookkeeper) as secretary. The by-laws were approved and subscribed. The place of business of the corporation was fixed. A corporate seal was procured. Certificates of stock were prepared. The president, or vice president, and secretary were, by proper resolution, authorized to sign and indorse checks and drafts on behalf of the corporation. The firm of J. C. Downey and I. L. Cavasso, copartners, doing business under the firm name and style of Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company, executed a bill of sale transferring to the corporation everything appertaining to the business, theretofore carried on by it, in consideration for which transfer the corporation issued to Downey and to Cavasso each 380 shares of its capital stock, certificates for which were delivered. At the same time the corporation, by action of the directors, directed the sale of 200 shares of its stock, at the par value of $100, in order to secure "capital to enlarge its capacity and liquidate some of its outstanding indebtedness." This stock Downey attempted to sell. The minutes of a number of directors' meetings appear in the record, from which it appears that the borrowing of money, approval of contracts, election of directors, and secretaries, and other matters were acted upon in corporate capacity. The corporation gave its notes for the payment of money obtained from banks. Downey and Cavasso each received a salary from the corporation after its organization, which was fixed, according to plaintiff's testimony, by Downey and himself, acting "as a majority of the board of directors."

[1] From a careful scrutiny of the entire record, from which the foregoing recital of the evidence is drawn, we are unable to discover the "conflict in the testimony" relied upon by respondent, to support the finding of the court that the partnership between appellant and respondent continued after the formation of the corporation. Respondent's conclusion in the matter as testified to by him, is not sufficient to offset the positive showing to the contrary, and is incompetent to raise an issue, or present a conflict in the testimony. There was no other evidence which has that effect. Neither does the evidence lend weight to the contention of respondent that "as between themselves" appellant and he were partners, nor does it bring the facts within the rule referred to in Downey v. Cavasso, supra, to the effect that if the appellant and respondent had, by agreement, continued their relations as copartners, in conjunction with their relation as stockholders of the corporation, the law would take cognizance of such dual relation, and deal with the parties independently of their incorporation. If such an agreement ever existed it was not alleged or proved.

In the absence of such an agreement, we find nothing in the actions or relations of the parties bringing the case within the rule of the authorities cited by respondent, to the effect that the copartnership should be regarded as continuing. A number of the cases cited deal with the rights of third parties under such circumstances, and have no bearing in the instant case. The other authorities can be differentiated. In Shorb v. Beaudry, 56 Cal. 446, 450, the corporation incurred no liability, did not participate in the profits of the business, no certificates of stock were issued, nor was it contemplated that any ever should be. A similar state of facts existed in Watkins v. Delahanty, 133 App. Div. (N. Y.) 422, 117 N. Y. Supp. 885, where it was held that the previously existing partnership was not terminated by the organization of the corporation, and the transfer to it of the partnership assets, in view of the fact that the stocks and bonds of the corporation were not distributed to the respective parties, as their interests appeared; the corporation being formed merely for the purpose of financing certain partnership affairs.

What we have already said, in our judgment, determines the effect of the contract between the parties. In confirmation of our conclusion in that regard we are of the opinion that the parties themselves, by the language used in the written agreement, made nearly two years after the formation of the corporation, concluded argument concerning the exact nature of that transaction. The consideration passing from the defendant to plaintiff is recited to be "In full payment of all the interest of the said party of the second part (Cavasso) in the said corporation and business known as Downey-Cavasso Glass & Paint Company, a corporation, the said interest being represented by 380 shares of the capital stock of the said corporation, and being represented by one certificate, No. 5." In fact, the conduct of the parties throughout is inconsistent with the continuance of the copartnership, and reconcilable with appellant's claim that it was, in fact, terminated and merged into the corporation. The trial court's finding to the contrary is unsupported by the evidence.

[2] The sale not being one in anticipation of the dissolution of the copartnership, but being merely the sale by one stockholder to another of his interest in the corporation, accomplished by the transfer of his shares of stock, the agreement not again to engage in business was void for the reasons given in the authorities already cited. Cavasso v. Downey, supra; Chamberlain v. Augustine, supra; Dodge Stationery Co. v. Dodge, supra; Merchants Ad-Sign Co. v. Sterling, supra.

In view of these conclusions the other points suggested by the appeal do not require consideration.

The judgment is reversed.

HOFFMAN v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC CO.
(Civ. 3187.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 3, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1064(2)—INSTRUCTION ON FACTS NOT REVERSIBLE UNLESS PREJUDICIAL.

The giving of instruction as to question of fact, forbidden by Const. art. 6, § 19, does not require a reversal, unless from an examination of entire record it appears that appellant has been prejudicially affected thereby, and that the error has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1064(2)—INSTRUCTION AS FACT THAT PLAINTIFF WAS PASSENGER HELD BENEFICIAL TO APPELLANT.

Where the only contradiction of plaintiff's evidence that he was a passenger on a certain car was the testimony of defendant's employés, who also testified that the car did not stop where plaintiff alighted, an instruction that there was no question that plaintiff was a passenger on that car was beneficial to the carrier, since if he were not on that car there was no evidence to contradict his testimony that the car he was on stopped, and then started while he was alighting.

3. TRIAL ⇨243—INSTRUCTION AS TO THE STOPPING OF STREET CAR HELD NOT CONTRADICTORY.

An instruction that, if defendant car stopped to enable plaintiff to get off or for any other reason, and started while he was alighting, he could recover is not contradicted by a later statement in the same instruction, authorizing recovery if the car stopped to enable him to get off and started while he was alighting.

4. CARRIERS ⇨303(5)—STREET CAR MUST NOT START WHILE PASSENGER IS ALIGHTING, THOUGH NOT STOPPED FOR THAT PURPOSE.

The high degree of care owed by a carrier to its passengers requires that the conductor in charge of a street car which has stopped for a purpose other than to permit a passenger to alight shall not start the car without first ascertaining whether any passenger is attempting to alight.

5. TRIAL ⇨260(8)—REQUESTED INSTRUCTION ON CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE IN ALIGHTING FROM STREET CAR HELD COVERED.

In an action to recover damages for injuries received by a street car passenger while alighting, it was not error to refuse requested instructions, correctly stating the doctrine of contributory negligence, where the court had stated that plaintiff could not recover if he tried to get off while the car was in motion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Ben F. Hoffman against the Pacific Electric Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and E. E. Morris, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Crail & Crail, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action for damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been suffered by the plaintiff while a passenger on one of the defendant's cars in the city of Long Beach, on the evening of January 16, 1917, the plaintiff averring that the said car had stopped to enable him to alight, but had suddenly started while he was in the act of alighting, whereby he was thrown to the pavement and injured.

The defendant's answer denied that the plaintiff was a passenger on any of its cars, and denied that the car came to a stop for the purpose of allowing plaintiff to alight, and denied that he attempted to alight at the time and place mentioned in the complaint, or that the car started while he was in the act of so alighting, and denied any negligence on the part of the defendant whereby plaintiff was injured; and, as a further and separate defense, pleaded contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff.

Upon the trial of the cause a verdict was returned for plaintiff in the sum of $2,125, and, after a motion for a new trial had been made and denied, this appeal was taken.

The points raised by the appellant upon this appeal relate entirely to errors of the trial court in the giving or refusing to give certain instructions. In order to deal with the appellant's several points clearly and at the same time concisely, we deem it best to give in full that portion of the instructions of the trial court at which the appellant aims its several objections. After certain preliminary instructions, relative to the credibility or interest of witnesses and the like, the court proceeded as follows:

"Now then, gentlemen, this case is in a very small compass. As I have already stated to you, there is no question but that plaintiff was a passenger on the car that Mr. Wilson and Mr. Shepherd were on. There is no question about that. He was a passenger on that car. He wanted to get off at Atlantic avenue. The burden is upon the plaintiff to prove his acts by a preponderance of the testimony, that is, the burden is upon him to prove that the defendant was negligent, in order to entitle him to recover, and he must prove that by a preponderance of the evidence, that is, such evidence as, when weighed with that opposed to it, has more convincing force and from which it results that the greater probability is in favor of the party upon whom the burden rests.

"Now, then, all there is to the case is this: If the car stopped, whether it stopped to enable the plaintiff to get off, or whether it stopped for any other reason, if it stopped and the plaintiff started to get off, and while he was getting off it started up again and threw him, then he is entitled to recover. But, it was his business to know whether the car had stopped or not; he had no right to attempt to get off before it had stopped—he must know that. If, on the other hand, the car did not stop but slowed down, and he attempted to get off while the car was in motion, then he cannot recover. If, however, the car stopped—it does not make any difference whether it was at a street where it was a regular stopping place—if it stopped anywhere else he had a right to get off, and it was the conductor's business before the car started up again to know whether there was anybody getting off, and whether the car was in a situation so that it could start up again.

"Now, that is all there is to the case, gentlemen. I will say it again: If the car stopped to enable him to get off, and started up again while he was getting off, then he is entitled to recover. If, on the other hand, the car did not stop, but simply slowed down, and while it was actually in motion he tried to get off and was injured, he cannot recover. That is all there is to the case."

[1] The appellant objects to the opening clause in the above-quoted instructions, reading:

"Now then, gentlemen, this case is in a very small compass. As I have already stated to you, there is no question but that the plaintiff was a passenger on the car that Mr. Wilson and Mr. Shepherd were on. There is no question about that. He was a passenger on that car. He wanted to get off at Atlantic avenue"

—as constituting an instruction upon a question of fact forbidden by article 6, section 15, of the state Constitution. That the clause in the court's instruction last above quoted is an instruction as to a matter of fact there can be no question; but that is not sufficient of itself to require a reversal of the case, since it must also appear from an examination of the entire record that the defendant has been prejudicially affected thereby, and that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

[2] A careful scrutiny of this record convinces us that the appellant has suffered no such prejudice from this misdirection of the jury as would justify a reversal of the judgment upon appeal. It is true that the defendant, in its answer, denied that the plaintiff was a passenger upon any of its cars at the time of the accident in question. Upon the trial the plaintiff produced two witnesses besides himself who testified positively that he boarded one of the defendant's cars at the corner of Pine and Broadway streets in Long Beach at about 6:25 or 6:30 o'clock on the evening of his injuries; and also produced two other witnesses besides himself, who were at or near the scene of his injuries, and whose testimony tended strongly to show that he received his said injuries while in the act of alighting from one of the defendant's cars. The defendant introduced the testimony of two of its employés—the conductor and motorman—whose names are those mentioned in the foregoing instructions. These two witnesses testified that the car of which they were in charge left the corner of Pine and Broadway streets, in said city of Long Beach, at 6:23 o'clock on the night in question; the motorman gave no evidence as to whether or not the plaintiff was upon said car, but did testify that his car did not stop at the alley where the plaintiff's injuries were received. The conductor gave similar testimony, and in addition stated that:

"I have no recollection of seeing the plaintiff, Mr. Hoffman, on my car that evening. I don't remember having any one on my car who wanted to get off at Third and Atlantic avenue."

Other than the evidence of these two witnesses the defendant offered no evidence upon the issue as to whether the plaintiff was a passenger upon one of its cars at and immediately prior to the time of his injuries.

In this state of the record we are unable to see how the defendant could have been prejudicially affected by the court's misdirection to the jury as to a question of fact. The plaintiff's evidence that he was a passenger upon some car of the defendant, is uncontradicted. If he was not such passenger upon the car under the control of the motorman and conductor referred to by the court, then their testimony that their car did not stop at the alley in question goes for nothing. Their testimony, therefore, became material to the case only upon the theory adopted by the court in its said instruction that the plaintiff was a passenger upon their car. The court's determination of this question, while an invasion of the right of the jury, was one which operated for the defendant's benefit rather than to its injury, since it rendered important the testimony of its said two witnesses upon the only vital matter to which they testified, viz. whether the car upon which the plaintiff was riding as a passenger did or did not stop at the place where his injuries occurred. We are therefore of the opinion that the misdirection of the trial court as to a question of fact did not amount to such prejudicial error as to entitle the appellant to a reversal of the case.

[3] The appellant's next contention is that the instructions of the trial court above quoted are contradictory to an extent which misled the jury as to the law of the case. The portions of the instructions thus assailed are these: In the earlier part of its instructions the court said:

"If the car stopped, whether it stopped to enable the plaintiff to get off or whether it stopped for any other reason, if it stopped and the plaintiff started to get off and while he was getting off it started up again and threw him, then he is entitled to recover."

In a later portion of the same instruction the court said: "If the car stopped to enable him to get off and started up again while he was getting off, he is entitled to recover." While this latter statement is not as full as the former one, we can see no contradiction between them by which the defendant could have suffered any injury. There was in fact no evidence whatever that the car, if it stopped at all, at the alley in question, stopped for any other reason or purpose than that of enabling the plaintiff to alight. The truth of the matter is, as disclosed by the entire record, that the only vital issue in the case, aside from the extent of the plaintiff's injuries, was as to whether the car upon which the plaintiff was riding did or did not stop at the point where he sought to alight; and upon this issue the trial court very clearly and succinctly stated what it deemed to be the law of the case stripped of all technical verbiage, and dealing concretely with whichever view the jury might take as to the main fact in issue.

[4] The appellant claims, however, as to its third ground of error, that the trial court in its foregoing brief and concrete instructions has failed to state correctly the law of the case. The contention of the appellant in that regard is this: That the evidence practically without contradiction showed that the alley where defendant's car stopped, if it did stop, was not a regular stopping place for the purpose of taking on or discharging passengers, and that, this being so, the carrier was not bound to look out for passengers intending or attempting to get off at such a place, and hence, in order to establish negligence on the part of the carrier, the attention of its agents in charge of the car must have been called to the intent of the passenger to alight before they can be charged with negligence in starting the car while such passenger was, without their knowledge, in the act of alighting. We are unable to agree with the foregoing statement urged by the appellant as the law applicable to the instant case. It is the law in this state that carriers of passengers upon railways owe to such passengers the highest degree of care, and this degree of care would require of such carriers, especially upon street cars operated in cities, that whenever such cars come to a stop, whether at regular stopping places or not, if such points of stoppage are such that passengers might properly and conveniently alight, it would become the duty of those in charge of the car to advise themselves that such passengers were not attempting to alight from their said car at such point of stoppage before again starting the car, and a neglect of this duty would render their principal liable. The following authorities fully support this view: Carr v. Eel River, etc., R. R. Co., 98 Cal. 366, 33 Pac. 213, 21 L. R. A. 354; Raub v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 103 Cal. 473, 37 Pac. 374; West Chicago St. R. R. Co. v. Manning, 170 Ill. 417, 48 N. E. 958.

In the case last cited the court quite clearly stated what we deem to be the law of this case, as follows:

"Carriers of passengers are held to the exercise of the utmost or highest degree of care, skill, and diligence for the safety of the passenger that is consistent with the mode of conveyance employed. The car or train was in control of the conductor, and he was required to know, if by the exercise of due care, caution, and diligence in the discharge of his duties he could know, whether any person was attempting to get on or off his train or car, before permitting the same to start in such manner as would be liable or likely to injure a person so getting on or off the same."

The following cases further support this view: West Chicago St. R. R. v. Luka, 72 Ill. App. 60; Citizens' Ry. Co. v. Hall (Tex. Civ. App.) 138 S. W. 434; Hufford v. Met. St. Ry. Co., 130 Mo. App. 638, 109 S. W. 1062.

The instructions of the trial court herein are in harmony with the foregoing statement of the law, and hence are in our opinion correct.

The appellant finally contends that the trial court was in error in its refusal to give to the jury certain instructions requested by it. As to most of these instructions, they simply present in various forms the appellant's foregoing contention as applied to the instructions which the trial court gave, and hence it is not necessary to further discuss that portion of the appellant's requested instructions.

[5] The appellant, however, also requested certain specific instructions upon its plea of contributory negligence on the plaintiff's part. These requested instructions are general in terms and, it may be conceded, correctly set forth the doctrine of contributory negligence as applicable to cases of this character, and hence might well have been given by the trial court; but upon an inspection of the instructions which the trial court actually gave as above quoted, it will be seen that as to the only state of facts upon which the appellant's claim of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff could be predicated the trial court said to the jury:

"If, on the other hand, the car did not stop, but simply slowed down, and while it was actually in motion he tried to get off and was injured, he cannot recover."

Thus, briefly, the trial court gave to the jury the entire meat of the defendant's claim and instruction respecting the plaintiff's alleged contributory negligence, and, having thus done this, it was not incumbent upon it to complicate the situation in the minds of the jury by giving the defendant's expanded generality, even conceding it to correctly state the law.

No other errors being complained of, the judgment is affirmed.

PACIFIC HEATER MFG. CO. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (Civ. 2564.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 3, 1920.)

1. CARRIERS ⇐124—CONSIGNEE REQUIRED TO ACCEPT DAMAGED GOODS UNLESS ENTIRE VALUE IS DESTROYED.

That goods are injured through causes for which the carrier is responsible does not of itself justify consignee in refusing to receive them, but he must accept the goods and hold carrier responsible for the injury, unless the entire value of the goods is destroyed, in which case the consignee may refuse to receive the goods and sue carrier for their value.

2. CARRIERS ⇐134—EVIDENCE HELD TO PROVE TOTAL DESTRUCTION OF VALUE OF GOODS.

In shipper's action against carrier for damage to goods which consignee had refused to accept because of damaged condition, where defendant claimed that goods should have been received and the damage minimized, evidence held to warrant conclusion that the value of the property was totally destroyed.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐171(1)—THEORY OF CASE NOT TO BE CHANGED ON APPEAL.

Where action against carrier was tried on the theory that carrier was bound by its ordinary liability as a common carrier, and where no special contract relieving carrier from such liability was set forth in answer, judgment for shipper will not be reversed on ground that case should have been tried on theory that the measure of damages was controlled and limited by provisions of bill of lading.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Heater Manufacturing Company against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry T. Gage and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles (J. W. McKinley, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover the sum of $927.50 for alleged damages to a shipment of 53 gas furnaces or heaters which were transported over the lines of the defendant company from the city of Los Angeles, Cal., to Portland, Or., consigned to the Portland Gas & Coke Company at Portland, and there tendered to the consignee. The consignee refused to accept them, it being claimed by the consignee, and now claimed by the plaintiff, that by reason of damages to the property during transportation its value was totally destroyed. Pursuant to the verdict of a jury, plaintiff recovered judgment for the entire amount of the demand. From that judgment the defendant appeals.

[1] Appellant contends that it was the duty of the consignee, and upon failure of the consignee, then the duty of the plaintiff to have received said furnaces upon tender of delivery by the defendant, in order that the damage to the furnaces might be minimized and not unnecessarily enhanced; and that the damages awarded are excessive. The rule governing the duty of a shipper or consignee, where goods are injured in course of shipment, is stated as follows:

"As a general rule, the doctrine that where goods are injured the owner may abandon them as for a total loss and sue for their value does not apply to contracts of affreightment. The fact, therefore, that the goods are injured upon the journey, through causes for which the carrier is responsible, does not of itself justify the consignee in refusing to receive them, but he must accept them and hold the carrier responsible for the injury. Where, however, the damage is such that the entire value of the goods is destroyed, the consignee may refuse to receive them and sue the carrier for their value." Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 1365.

[2] The consignee having refused to receive these goods, defendant tendered them to the plaintiff and also made an effort to induce the plaintiff to repair the furnaces to put them in shape for the market. This the plaintiff declined to do. There is evidence tending to show that repairs might have been made which would have resulted in reducing the amount of the damages incurred. On the other hand, according to the testimony of a competent witness, the furnaces, in their condition as received at Portland, had no market value whatever; the repairs necessary to put them in condition to be sold would not have restored more than 50 per cent. of their market value, and the cost of the repairs would have been more than that 50 per cent. If the jury believed this evidence, as it was entitled to do, the conclusion must have resulted that the value of the property was totally destroyed; and, since the amount of the judgment does not exceed the original market value of the property, appellant's claim that the damages awarded are excessive should not be sustained.

In the brief filed for appellant a general reference is made to various claimed errors of the court, but we will notice only that one concerning which a definite argument has been presented. On the question of measure of damages, the court gave to the jury the following instruction:

"The measure of damages is the difference between the market value of the heaters at Portland, Or., at the time of their arrival in that city in the damaged condition in which they arrived and the market value which they would have had at such time and place if they had arrived uninjured."

Appellant now contends that the measure of damages in this case was controlled and limited by the provisions contained in the bill of lading, which provided for a measurement of loss or damages on the basis of the value of the property tested by the bona fide invoice price, if any, to the consignee, including freight charges, if prepaid, unless, etc. In this connection it should be noted that the court further instructed the jury that—

"The measure of damages for injury to personal property is the difference in value of the property immediately before and after the injury, provided, however, that if the injury be capable of repair, so as to restore the full value of the property at an expense less than the diminution in value of the property as injured, the damage is limited to the cost of making such repair."

[3] It further appears that at the trial the defendant did not request the court to give any instructions referring to a basis of value of the property as controlled or limited by the invoice price or by any special contract or representation; on the contrary, the instructions requested by the defendant stated rules having reference to the market value of the property. The case was tried on the theory that defendant was to be bound by its ordinary liability as a common carrier. No special contract relieving defendant from that liability was set forth in the answer. This should have been done if that defense was to be relied upon. Michalitschke v. Wells Fargo & Co., 118 Cal. 683, 50 Pac. 847. The judgment should not now be reversed upon the ground that the case should have been tried upon a different theory than that which was presented to the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. M. York, Judge.

Action by A. Colkins against Mary E. Doolittle and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

D. P. Hatch and James Brunken, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James R. Jaffray and Chas. J. Conner, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action to quiet title to certain lots in the city of Los Angeles. Defendants recovered judgment in their favor, and plaintiff appeals.

Appellant's claim of title to each lot rests upon a deed thereto, made under a certain street improvement act, and executed by the proper city officer. Each respondent answered and likewise filed a cross-complaint, alleging that he is the owner of some one or more of the lots, or of an undivided part thereof, and prayed that his title thereto be quieted. The court found against plaintiff on the issues of title tendered by his complaint; on the issues tendered by each cross-complaint the findings were in favor of the cross-complainant; and, save as to defendants against whom the action had been dismissed, a decree was entered adjudging each defendant to be the owner of the land as claimed in his cross-complaint. At the trial it was stipulated, in substance, that the title to each lot is in the defendant or defendants claiming the same, save in so far as it may have been divested by the deeds under which plaintiff claims or affected by the street improvement proceedings pursuant to which those deeds were executed.

The deed under which plaintiff claims title to one of the lots was executed by the city tax and license collector pursuant to proceedings had under the Street Improvement Act of April 21, 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 1042). Section 17 of that act provides that any deed executed thereunder by the tax collector shall "be prima facie evidence of the truth of all matters recited therein, and of the regularity of all proceedings prior to the execution thereof and of title in the grantee." The deeds under which plaintiff claims title to the remaining lots were executed by the board of public works of the city pursuant to proceedings had, respectively, under the Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 1066), and the Street Opening Act of 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 376). Each of these last-mentioned acts contains a provision to the effect that a deed executed pursuant thereto shall "be prima facie evidence of the truth of all matters recited therein, and of the regularity of all proceedings prior to the execution thereof, and of title in the grantee." Section 25 of the Park and Playground Act (Stats. 1909, p. 1073), and section 29 of the Street Opening Act of 1903 (Stats. 1903, p. 384).

[1] Plaintiff rested his case after introducing in evidence the four deeds under which he claims title to the lots. Unless respondents' evidence has successfully impeached these deeds, or some of them, or the regularity of the street opening or street improvement proceedings, pursuant to which the deeds were executed, it must be held that appellant is entitled to a decree in his favor; for the deeds he put in evidence made out a prima facie case of title to the lots. Tilton v. Russek, 171 Cal. 731, 154 Pac. 860.

Respondents' brief, though a model of brevity, is lamentably lacking in comprehensiveness. It does not attempt to point out any irregularity in the proceedings pursuant to which deeds were executed, or call to our attention the omission of any act made necessary to the execution of a valid deed. The evidence, brought up under the alternative method, covers 133 typewritten pages. It certainly is not incumbent upon the members of this court, whose time is occupied continuously with the consideration of questions called to their attention by diligent and assiduous counsel, to perform the labor that properly devolved upon the attorneys in this case. We should not be expected, unaided by counsel, to thread our way laboriously through this long and somewhat complex record on a still hunt for possible defects in the proceedings upon which the validity of these deeds depends. We have done so, nevertheless, but have done it at the loss of much valuable time—time that could have been saved for work on other cases had counsel for the respondents here devoted but half a page to pointing out the defect to which we shall presently refer and the pages in the transcript whereon the evidence thereof appears. As a result of this time-consuming labor, unnecessarily imposed upon us by counsel's neglect, we have discovered at least one defect that is fatal to the deeds upon which plaintiff relies to establish title. How many other defects might be found, were our attention called thereto, we do not pretend to say.

[2] Each of the notices to redeem that was given by plaintiff, or by the person or persons under whom he claims, includes in the sum necessary to effect a redemption at the time of giving the notice the $3 that the statute requires to be paid by the redemptioner for serving the notice and making affidavit thereof. The three street improvement acts under which the deeds that plaintiff relies upon were executed are substantially alike in this, that the applicant for a deed thereunder must serve upon the owner, or the occupant of the property, a 30-day notice to redeem, specifying the amount for which the property was sold "and the amount necessary to redeem at the time of giving notice." The applicant for the deed is also required to file an affidavit showing that such notice was given. If redemption is made after such affidavit is filed, the person making the redemption "must pay, in addition to the other amounts required, three dollars for the service of the notice and the making of such affidavit." This $3 is no part of the amount due at the time when the notice is given; and, if the notice includes it in the amount necessary to effect a redemption at that time, the notice is ineffective, and the deed given thereunder conveys no title. Reed v. Lyon, 96 Cal. 501, 31 Pac. 619.

[3] For this reason, we must hold that the legal title to none of the lots passed to appellant by virtue of any of the deeds under which he claims. It does not follow, however, that the judgment must be affirmed. Though plaintiff did not acquire the legal title to any lot, and cannot therefore, maintain a suit to quiet title against the owner or owners of the legal title, none of the latter is entitled, by cross-action to have his title quieted as against plaintiff's claim until such owner shall have redeemed his lot from the lien created by the street improvement or street opening proceeding. Until then each respondent holds his title subject to the lien created by the street improvement or street opening proceeding—a lien that passed to appellant, or to his grantor or grantors, upon the sale of the lot to satisfy the delinquent assessment thereon. Each of the statutes under which the deeds to plaintiff or to his predecessor or predecessors, were executed, provides that the lien of the assessment shall vest in the purchaser of the property, "and is only divested by a redemption of the property as in this act provided." To entitle any of these respondents to affirmative equitable relief, he must do equity. Warden v. Bittleston, etc., Agency, 181 Pac. 834; Chapman v. Hicks, 182 Pac. 336. For this reason the case must be sent back for a new trial.

Judgment reversed.

PEOPLE v. GIBSON. (Cr. 851.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 4, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1920.)

CRIMINAL LAW —261(2), 1002; —193½, New, vol. 19 Key-No. Series—HABEAS CORPUS —109—PERSON IMPROPERLY GIVEN INDETERMINATE SENTENCE HELD PROPERLY REMANDED FOR RESENTENCE.

On habeas corpus by a person given an indeterminate sentence for an offense committed before the statute authorizing such sentences had become effective, he was properly remanded for resentence, and the new judgment was not void as putting defendant twice in jeopardy for the same offense, as not passed within a reasonable time after the first sentence, or as illegal because pronounced without proper arraignment proceedings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Charles E. Gibson was convicted of rape, and from a judgment resentencing him after the first sentence had been set aside on habeas corpus, he appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 178 Pac. 338.

John W. Stetson and Henry A. Davie, both of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John H. Rioridan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

LANGDON, P. J. In this case the defendant was convicted of the crime of rape. He appealed from this judgment, urging several grounds for reversal, all of which were decided adversely to him by division 1 of this court. A rehearing was thereafter denied by said court, and later a petition for hearing by the Supreme Court of this state was denied. Thereafter the defendant sought a writ of habeas corpus from the court in which the case had been tried. The writ was granted, and upon the hearing thereof it was urged by the attorneys for the petitioner that the sentence theretofore imposed by the trial court under the Indeterminate Sentence Act (St. 1917, p. 665), was void because the crime was committed before the provision of the Code authorizing such a sentence had become effective. This matter had not been urged upon appeal, nor considered by the court upon the determination of the appeal from the judgment. The trial court remanded the petitioner to the custody of the sheriff to be resentenced by the court upon the ground that the former sentence was void. The petitioner was thereupon sentenced to a definite term of 20 years in the penitentiary. The present appeal is from this judgment, and it is urged, among other matters, that the same is void, for the reason that the defendant has been put twice in jeopardy for the same offense, that the sentence is void because not passed within a reasonable time after the first sentence, and that it is illegal because it was pronounced without proper arraignment proceedings.

In view of recent decisions by our Supreme Court, it is not necessary for us to discuss these contentions at length. They have been decided in the cases of Ex parte Fritz (Sup.) 177 Pac. 157, and Ex parte McCready (Sup.) 177 Pac. 459. The procedure followed by the trial court was the exact procedure advised, under such circumstances, by our Supreme Court in the case of In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 696, 171 Pac. 958; and this procedure was again expressly approved in the Fritz and McCready Cases, supra.

45 Cal. App. 772

O'NEILL v. O'NEILL. (Civ. 3170.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 4, 1920.)

1. EVIDENCE —376(8)—SUFFICIENT FOUNDATION FOR INTRODUCTION OF DECEASED'S BOOK TO PROVE CLAIM AGAINST ESTATE.

In a proceeding upon a claim against deceased's estate, testimony introducing a book of entries and memoranda that witness had never seen the inside of the book before and that he had no knowledge of what accounts were kept in it, but he knew the handwriting in the book to be deceased's, and that deceased kept his books correctly, constituted sufficient foundation for its introduction as an exhibit.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS —54(2)—ACCOUNT HELD NOT TO BE "OPEN, MUTUAL, AND CURRENT BOOK ACCOUNT."

In an action to enforce an account against a deceased's estate, evidence that the items were put down in a memorandum exhibit in order to arrive at how much was due to the deceased, that when they were called off by the deceased they were put down by plaintiff, and that the deceased signed the memorandum, does not show such entries to be "an open, mutual, and current book account."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Open Account.]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §142—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF DEBT MUST BE ADDRESSED TO CREDITOR.

A memorandum of deceased showing an indebtedness to his brother, even if not a mere memorandum of a debt of honor, would not take the debt out of operation of statute of limitations (Civ. Code § 337, subd. 2), if not addressed to the brother, notwithstanding it might contain a distinct and unconditional recognition of obligation.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §54(2)—ONE ITEM DOES NOT CONSTITUTE AN "OPEN, MUTUAL, AND CURRENT BOOK ACCOUNT"; "MUTUAL ACCOUNT."

To constitute an open mutual and current book account, there must be "reciprocal demands" (Code Civ. Proc. § 344), which words are synonymous with or the equivalent of "mutual account" as named in such section, and such accounts are made up of matters of set-off where there is a debt on one side constituting a credit on another or where there is express or implied understanding that mutual debts shall be satisfied or set off between the parties, and one item cannot be said to comply with these requirements.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Mutual Accounts.]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §221(8)—EVIDENCE IN ACTION ON CLAIM HELD TO SHOW PARTNERSHIP SO THAT ACTION SHOULD HAVE BEEN FOR ACCOUNTING.

In an action against the executor of an estate to enforce a claim against deceased on an alleged open book account, evidence held to show no relation of debtor and creditor, but that of copartnership, so that the action should have been for an accounting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Edward O'Neill against Josephine O'Neill, executrix of estate of John R. O'Neill, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Michael F. Shannon, C. M. Mooslin, and Ernest L. Kolb, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. Wiseman Macdonald and W. W. Wallace, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought against the defendant, as executrix of the estate of John R. O'Neill, deceased, upon a claim, which had been rejected, in the sum of $5,222.05.

The complaint is in the usual form, alleging indebtedness "upon and according to a mutual, open, and current book account for money had and received." The formal allegations of the complaint are admitted. By specific denial of the alleged indebtedness in said or any-sum, and, by way of separate defense, an allegation that the plaintiff's alleged cause of action was barred by subdivision 2 of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the issues were joined. The case was tried without a jury. Findings were in favor of the plaintiff on all the issues, and judgment was entered accordingly for the full amount asked. There was a motion for a new trial, which was denied. The appeal is from the judgment so entered.

The record before us consists only of the transcript and appellant's opening brief.

[1] The legal prerequisites for the bringing of an action on account, such as is stated in the complaint in this action, within the saving clause of the statute, are concretely set forth in the case of Norton v. Larco, 30 Cal. 126, 89 Am. Dec. 70, to which, without quoting therefrom, we refer. Here the plaintiff has no records of his own that he has offered in evidence. His entire documentary evidence is taken from among the records, if such they may be denominated, found among the effects of the decedent; and it would seem, therefore, that he is trying in this action to prove his claim by his interpretation of what the contents of the purported books are, and what they say.

It is urged that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff, over defendant's objection, to introduce in evidence the document referred to in the record before us as Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 4, and described as "a large book consisting of numerous and divers entries and memoranda, all of which, or at least a large portion, no doubt, being in the handwriting of the deceased." The only foundation laid for the introduction of this exhibit was the testimony of the witness Maier, who testified that he "had never seen inside that [book] before," and that he had no knowledge of what accounts were kept in it, but that he knew the handwriting in the exhibit to be the handwriting of the deceased, and that the deceased kept his books correctly. The objection made is entirely destitute of legal support; the foundation laid was sufficient. 17 Cyc. 395; McLellan v. Crofton, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 307.

[2] It is contended by appellant that the account—the basis of this action—is not in any sense a "mutual, open, and current account." With this contention we are in full accord. Plaintiff's own evidence shows that, so far as the item of $4,600.15, entered under date of May 1, 1905, is concerned, it is, and from the very nature of the case must be, an item that is no part of a "mutual, open, and current book account." This evidence is the stipulation of the parties themselves on the trial, by which it was agreed that "from some source" the items were called off by O'Neill and put down on this memorandum of $4,600.15 in order to arrive at how much was due from John O'Neill to Ed, and that, when they were called off by John and put down by Ed O'Neill, then John O'Neill signed the memorandum—Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 1. The entry of the amount set forth in the exhibit referred to, which is the amount so found to be due on May 1, 1905, at Calumet, Mich., would not, we think, by that action alone change its legal aspect so as to make it "an open, mutual, and current book account" in California.

[3] If, however, we are wrong in this conception of the matter, and it being held by this court that "Exhibit No. 4" was legally and properly received in evidence, then we are confronted with the query: Does the entry of one item, assumed to have been entered on January 27, 1913, by deceased, charging himself with $250 as being due from him on that date to plaintiff in addition to the other items already referred to, constitute such an account? We think not. Regardless of this fact, there is nothing in this record inconsistent with an assumption, and indeed we think it may be so inferred, that the deceased kept this "account" simply to keep in his memory the amount owing by him to his brother, if such were in fact the case, as a debt of honor. Still, however, it is also true that, unless this was addressed to the creditor—plaintiff here—notwithstanding it may contain a distinct and unconditional recognition of a certain obligation, it is not sufficient to take it out of the statute of limitations. Roper v. Smith, 187 Pac. 454.

[4] To constitute such an account as contended for here there must be "reciprocal demands" (section 344, Code Civ. Proc.; Fraylor v. Sonora Mining Co., 17 Cal. 594); and the "reciprocal demands" named in the Code section quoted are synonymous with or the equivalent of the "mutual account" named in the first part of that section. Mutual accounts are made up of matters of set-off, where there is debt on one side which constitutes credit on the other, or where there is express or implied understanding that mutual debts shall be satisfied or set off pro tanto between the parties. Millet v. Bradbury, 109 Cal. 170, 41 Pac. 865. Certainly one item cannot be said to comply with these requirements. Nor do we believe the evidence before us shows the account attempted to be the basis of this action to be such an account. There is, we think, nothing to bring it within the purview of the section referred to as "reciprocal demands" or "mutual account," because in every instance it is, if anything, a debit charge by deceased against himself and in favor of the plaintiff. If it is claimed that the shares of stock mentioned in the account were "held" by deceased for plaintiff, then clearly there was no mutual account between them, for the relation of trustee and beneficiary would exist, in which case the deceased would not become the debtor of the beneficiary as to the trust until after a demand by the latter and a refusal by the trustee. No such demand or refusal is here shown. We think that this action presents a case, if at all, on an account stated, rather than upon a "mutual, open, and current book account."

[5] After going through the entire record we are forced to the conviction of the accountant, who testified that he had examined each of these books with the idea of ascertaining, if he could, whether money was due from plaintiff to deceased, or vice versa, and that he could arrive at no conclusion because there was no record other than a memorandum record "here and there," and nothing was completed in any way. There is evidence of the plaintiff himself in this case which shows conclusively, we think, that instead of the relation of debtor and creditor existing between the plaintiff and deceased during the latter's lifetime, if any relation existed at all, it was that of a copartnership. In that event it would seem that the action should have been one for an accounting, before judgment could be entered. This, however, is merely to call attention to the very unsatisfactory condition of the record.

It may also be stated that we have failed utterly to find the, or any, evidence upon which the trial court arrived at the amount of the judgment entered.

Judgment reversed.

SIERRA PAPER CO. v. MESMER.
(Civ. 2708.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT —21, 121—AGENT MAY TESTIFY AS TO FACTS ESTABLISHING HIS AGENCY.

While the mere declarations of an agent are not admissible to prove his agency, nevertheless, when the question of his agency is involved, the agent's testimony is competent to establish the fact in issue, together with its extent and nature.

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF —158(4)—EVIDENCE HELD TO SHOW CONTRACT FOR PAYMENT OF ANOTHER'S OBLIGATION.

Evidence held to show that defendant, for valuable consideration, had contracted by new and original promise for the benefit of plaintiff to pay the debt of another whom defendant owed, and not to show any rescission of such agreement.

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §18(1)—AGREEMENT HELD ONE EXPRESSLY FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITOR, AND NOT ONE TO ANSWER FOR ANOTHER'S DEBT; "CONTRACT"; "AGREEMENT TO ANSWER FOR DEBT OR DEFAULT OF ANOTHER."

Defendant's agreement with debtor to pay the debt held a valid contract within the rule of Civ. Code, § 1559, as being "a contract made expressly for the benefit of a third person" enforceable by creditor before rescission, and not an agreement under section 2794 "to answer for the debt or default of another."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Agreement to Answer for Debt of Another; Contract.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dana R. Weller, Judge.

Action by the Sierra Paper Company against Joseph Mesmer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Stanley Visel, of Los Angeles (Arthur G. Fisk, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Hocker & Austin, of Los Angeles, and L. L. Burns, of San Jacinto, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff.

[1] The complaint contains two counts. In the first, it is alleged that plaintiff, at the special instance and request of defendant, sold and delivered to him goods and merchandise of the value of $111.08, which allegation the court found true. The finding is attacked for want of sufficient support in the evidence. It appears that the goods were bought through one Bowman, who testified to facts showing that in making the purchase he was acting for and as the agent of defendant, who authorized and instructed him to purchase the goods and have the same charged to defendant, which he accordingly did. Conceding that Mesmer contradicted the witness, it was the province of the trial court to determine the conflicting evidence, and, since it accepted Bowman's statement as true, it was sufficient to establish the fact so found by the court. While the mere declarations of an agent are not admissible to prove his agency, nevertheless, where the question of one's agency is involved, the testimony of the agent, sworn as a witness in the case, is competent to establish the fact in issue, together with its extent and nature. Kast v. Miller & Lux, 159 Cal. 723, 115 Pac. 932; Ford v. Lou Kum Shu, 26 Cal. App. 203, 146 Pac. 199.

[2, 3] In the second count it is alleged that plaintiff sold and delivered to Bowman certain goods and merchandise for which he agreed to pay the sum of $237.19; that thereafter, for a consideration beneficial to defendant, he promised and agreed to pay the said obligation of Bowman to plaintiff, which allegations the court found to be true. This finding is based upon evidence tending to show the existence of business transactions between Bowman and Mesmer, whereby the latter became indebted to Bowman; that thereupon a settlement was had wherein Mesmer agreed to pay certain debts of Bowman, among which was that due plaintiff. A copy of the agreement, which he testified Mesmer signed, was attached to the deposition of Bowman, and Mesmer on cross-examination admitted that he might have signed it, and also testified that, in order to sever his business relations with Bowman, he agreed to pay this bill of $237.19, together with other indebtedness of Bowman's, all of which other bills he paid. This, we think, brings the case within the rule declared in section 1559, Civil Code, that—

"A contract, made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it."

It is a "principle of law long recognized and clearly established that, where one person for a valuable consideration engages with another to do some act for the benefit of a third, the latter, who would enjoy the benefit of the act, may maintain an action for the breach of such engagement." Washer v. Independent, etc., Co., 142 Cal. 708, 76 Pac. 657. That, for a valuable consideration, a contract was made for the benefit of plaintiff, is admitted by Mesmer, and there is no evidence tending in the slightest degree to show a rescission of the agreement. It was a new and original promise, based upon sufficient consideration, for the benefit of plaintiff, and hence not an agreement within subdivision 1 of section 2794, Civil Code, to answer for the debt or default of another.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. FRANKLIN. (Cr. 868.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 5, 1920.)

1. ROBBERY $\hookrightarrow$ 24(6)—IDENTIFYING EVIDENCE HELD SUFFICIENT.

In a prosecution for assault to commit robbery, evidence held sufficient to identify defendant as the one who had committed the crime.

2. CRIMINAL LAW $\hookrightarrow$ 566, 741(2)—IDENTIFICATION OF DEFENDANT AS GUILTY PARTY NEED NOT BE BY SINGLE WITNESS AND IS A JURY QUESTION.

It is not necessary that the identification of defendant as the person who committed the crime be made positively by any one witness, but it is a matter for the jury to determine from all the circumstances and evidence on the subject.

3. CRIMINAL LAW $\hookrightarrow$ 1159(5)—QUESTION OF ALIBI FOR JURY.

In a prosecution for assault to commit robbery, whether defendant had not been in the city for two years, etc., held for the jury under the evidence; its determination not being open to interference by the appellate court.

4. ROBBERY $\hookrightarrow$ 24(6)—EVIDENCE SHOWING ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO COMMIT ROBBERY.

Character and circumstances of assault by defendant on aged grocery store keeper, with other evidence, held to justify finding that the assault was with intent to commit a robbery, and was interrupted only by the timely appearance of a third person.

5. CRIMINAL LAW $\hookrightarrow$ 568—INTENT WITH WHICH ASSAULT WAS MADE MAY BE ESTABLISHED BY INFERENCES.

A crime having been committed by defendant, the intent with which it was made may be established by proper inferences drawn from the evidence of surrounding circumstances.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; James G. Quinn, Judge.

F. H. Franklin was convicted of assault with intent to commit robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. H. Seccombe, of Oakland, and Chas. H. Brennan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John H. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., and R. L. Chamberlain, of San Francisco, for the People.

BRITTAİN, J. The appellant was convicted on the charge of assault with intent to commit robbery. He contends the evidence was insufficient to identify him with the man who committed the assault, or to show an intent to commit robbery. His chief reliance is upon the contention regarding the question of identity. No evidence was introduced on the part of the defendant. Motion for a new trial was made and denied.

[1, 2] It is conceded that a brutal and unprovoked attack was made on the complaining witness, Vickers, an old man, who at the time of the assault between 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning of November 28, 1918, was alone in his grocery store in Oakland. An entire stranger entered the store and inquired about butter. He walked with Vickers to the back part of the store, where the butter was kept in a refrigerator. While they were talking a second stranger, unnoticed by Vickers, entered, and, approaching Vickers from behind struck him a violent blow with some implement over the top of the head. As Vickers turned to face his assailant, the latter said something about his mother having been insulted, and, as Vickers denied that he had ever insulted any woman, he was struck a second and a third time, when he fell to the floor. He was stunned, but almost immediately regained consciousness and staggered to his feet. A neighbor who had approached the store, Mr. Llewellyn, entered at that moment, and the two strangers passed him going out as he went into the store. Seeing Vickers staggering towards him, Llewellyn first went to his aid, but, on learning something of what had happened, he went with Vickers to the door. No one was in sight except the two men who were identified by both Vickers and Llewellyn, and they were walking rapidly away. Llewellyn followed them at a distance of 100 to 150 feet. He called to them, and one, claimed to be the appellant, turned and looked back at Llewellyn. The two men entered a hotel in the neighborhood, and, instead of walking across the office to the elevator, they turned sharply to the left, walking up a stairway. To Llewellyn they were identified by the woman in charge of the office as those she had brought down from the sixth floor about half an hour before, and who had registered the day before, when she had assigned them a room on the sixth floor. They did not return to their room, from which the police subsequently took their personal effects, including a suit case, clothing, and a dirk, admittedly the property of the appellant, but for the presence of which in the room he attempted to account to the officers after his arrest. From the second floor of the hotel a window gave access to a roof, from which in turn, through another window, a person might enter an adjoining house. At about the time the two men went upstairs in the hotel and disappeared, a woman in the adjoining house saw and talked to a man she had never seen before. He was then in the hall and was seeking a way out. After the arrest of the appellant, Vickers, Llewellyn, the woman from the hotel, and the woman who saw the stranger in her house were taken separately to the prison. While none of them would positively swear that the appellant was the man they had seen on the morning of the assault, each of them picked him from among other prisoners, and on the trial each was positive in the statement that the appellant resembled the man they had seen at the time of the crime, each expressing the belief that he was the same. Standing alone, this evidence would have been sufficient on the subject of identification. It is not necessary that identification be made positively by any one witness. It is a matter for the jury to determine from all the circumstances in evidence on the subject. People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 540; People v. Fowler, 30 Cal. App. 183, 157 Pac. 540. In addition to the evidence already noticed, there was other evidence to which no objection was made, and some of that most damaging to the appellant was brought out on cross-examination of the state's witnesses. The appellant was a paroled prisoner, and, after the time of the assault involved in this case, he was arrested in Solano county on a charge of robbery in that county. When arrested he was wearing a dark-colored mackinaw coat. The man seen by the witnesses who have been mentioned was wearing such a coat at the time of the assault. While in jail in Fairfield the appellant sold the coat for a trifling sum to one of the officers. The coat was introduced in evidence, and, while it was shown that there were other coats of a similar general appearance, other witnesses testified it looked like that worn by the man they had seen on the morning of the assault.

[3] The other of the two men engaged in the crime was one Molin, who had been convicted on the charge of assault in connection with the attack on Vickers. While he was being taken from Fairfield to Oakland, the appellant told the officer who had him in charge that Molin was with him in Stockton on November 24th, that Molin came to Oakland by stage, after having been intrusted with the appellant's suit case and its contents, but that he, the appellant, had gone to Napa, and had not been in Oakland for two years. The appellant did not call any witnesses to establish any of the facts thus stated by him apparently for the purpose of showing his absence from the scene of the crime. The entire evidence was before the jury. The argument made on behalf of the appellant concerns its weight and credibility. These were questions for the jury to determine, and this court on appeal will not interfere with that determination. People v. Emerson, 130 Cal. 563, 62 Pac. 1069.

[4, 5] The two men, who left the store together no doubt entered in pursuance of a common purpose. Both were strangers and had appeared in the neighborhood only the day before. From the evidence the jury might reasonably have inferred that the inquiries of the first man concerning butter were made with the intention of drawing the old man, who was alone in the store, to the rear, out of sight of any one passing along the street. The hour was early and few people were about. The first blow was delivered from the back of the victim. The pretense of a prior insult to the mother of him who struck the blow is too trivial to receive serious consideration. Neither she nor any one else was called to show that any such insult had taken place, or that Vickers had ever seen or heard of her. The assault was of such a character and under such circumstances that a reasonable deduction, if not the only reasonable one, was that drawn by the jury, that the crime committed was with the intent to commit a robbery, which the insensibility of Vickers would have permitted but for the timely entrance of Llewellyn. A crime having been committed, the intent with which the assault was made may be established by proper inferences drawn from the evidence of surrounding circumstances. *People v. SIERRA PAPER CO. v. GREPPIN et al.

(Civ. 3162.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⇨271—DENIAL OF FORECLOSURE WHERE TRUSTEE HAD REFUSED TO SUE PROPER IF TRUSTEE HAD DISCRETION.

If, as found by the trial court, a chattel mortgage given by an embarrassed debtor to a trustee for creditors was given with the agreement and understanding that the trustee should have entire discretionary power as to the manner of handling the trust, a judgment, denying foreclosure at the suit of one creditor after the trustee had refused to sue, was proper.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⇨271 — TRUSTEE HELD TO HAVE DISCRETION TO REFUSE TO FORECLOSE ON APPLICATION OF CREDITOR.

Where the trust agreement under which a debtor gave a chattel mortgage to a trustee for creditors was hazy and nebulous, but it was customary to put such matters in the hands of a representative of the heaviest creditor for discretionary settlement, and plaintiff had been a party to such arrangements, the court held justified in finding that the trustee was vested with a discretion to refuse to foreclose on application of one creditor.

Action by the Sierra Paper Company against E. H. Greppin, trustee, and others.

From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. W. Hocker and Hocker & Austin, all of Los Angeles, and L. L. Burns, of San Jacinto, for appellant.

George Beebe and Horace S. Wilson, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SLOANE, J. The facts in this case, so far as material to the issues on this appeal, are that one H. A. Miller, engaged in the printing business, being indebted to a number of creditors, including the plaintiff, Sierra Paper Company, a corporation, in varying amounts aggregating several thousand dollars, executed a chattel mortgage upon his printing plant, securing his promissory note for the entire indebtedness, to the defendant E. H. Greppin as trustee for the benefit of the creditors. The note, dated July 29, 1915, was made payable, $176.77 on the 15th of September, 1915, and the balance in 51 installments of $150 each, the first to be paid on the 1st of September, 1915, and a like installment on the 15th of each and every month thereafter, with interest at 8 per cent. on each of the deferred payments. The note provided that the whole amount of principal and interest should become immediately due and payable upon the happening of any one of several contingencies, among which was the failure to pay any installment of principal or interest when due, "notwithstanding any other stipulation herein contained." The mortgage provided that on the happening of any of the contingencies named in the note, the whole sum should become due and payable at the option of the legal holder of the note, at once and without notice. The mortgage further empowered the mortgagee, at his option, upon any default on the part of the mortgagor, to foreclose the mortgage as provided by law. It was also made optional with the mortgagee, in case of default in any of the conditions, to take possession of the property without notice to the mortgagor, and to sell the same at public auction or private sale, with or without notice.

There was nothing in the terms of either the note or mortgage indicating the nature or conditions of the trust, or for whose benefit the instruments were executed or the trust created.

Miller defaulted in his payments from the outset, having made only one payment of $75 in over a year, up to the time this suit was commenced. Plaintiff made demand upon the trustee to enforce payment under the note and mortgage, and on his refusal to do so began this suit for a foreclosure of the mortgage in November, 1916, in its own name as one of the beneficiaries of the trust, making Miller, the mortgagor, Greppin, the mortgagee and trustee, and the other creditors and beneficiaries parties defendant. The judgment was for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

The only question raised is as to the discretion of the trustee regarding the time and manner of enforcing the claims of the creditors under this transaction.

As before stated, there is nothing in the writings indicating the powers or duties of the trustee, and the parol evidence on that point, as shown in the record, is meager, vague, and indefinite. In the absence of any agreement among the creditors giving the trustee discretionary power as to the time and conditions under which he should proceed to enforce payment under the terms of the note and mortgage, it may be conceded that the plaintiff, one of the principal creditors, would have the right to insist upon reasonably prompt action by the trustee. Estate of Heberle, 155 Cal. 723, 102 Pac. 935; Citizens' Bank v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 131 Cal. 187, 191, 63 Pac. 462, 82 Am. St. Rep. 341; Story's Eq. Jur. § 1275. The trial court, however, found on this point as follows:

"That it is true that at the time of the delivery of the note as alleged in paragraph 4 of plaintiff's complaint and at the time of the execution of the chattel mortgage as alleged in paragraph 5 of plaintiff's complaint, there was an agreement that E. H. Greppin should act as trustee for all of the creditors; that said agreement and understanding was with all of the creditors, and said agreement was oral, and provided that said E. H. Greppin should have entire discretionary power as to the manner of handling said trust, and that said E. H. Greppin was not to enforce the performance of the terms of said mortgage or note unless in his judgment said note should be collected and said mortgage foreclosed."

The evidence shows that the trustee acted in the premises to the best of his judgment, and on a condition of facts which, to all the other creditors, at least, made his indulgence and efforts to nurse this claim along appear wise and reasonable.

[1, 2] It is obvious that if the court's finding as to the discretionary powers given is sustained by the evidence, the judgment must be upheld. It appears by the mortgage itself that an extension of the mortgage debt, by renewal or otherwise, was within the contemplation of the parties. It was shown by parol evidence to have been customary with the business interests engaged in this line of trade to take over claims of this kind, as was done in the instant case, by putting the whole matter in the hands of a representative of the heaviest claimant for discretionary settlement for the mutual benefit of all; that plaintiff had been a party to such arrangements; and that, if there was no express conferring of discretionary power in this instance, it was implied by subsequent conduct and acquiescence. Mr. Greppin, the trustee in this case, was the personal representative of the defendant Blake, Moffit & Towne, the largest creditor, whose claim was for $3,374.40—nearly one-half the total sum. Plaintiff's claim was $1,879.68. There were 8 or 10 other creditors interested. The evidence disclosed that Blake, Moffit & Towne, who were engaged in selling printer's supplies, and others of the creditors in similar lines of business, continued, during the period covered by this mortgage, to enjoy the patronage of the business of the defendant Miller, with prompt cash payments on account. It may readily be conceived that they submitted to the procrastination in the payment of the original mortgage debt with more complacency than did the plaintiff, which was not enjoying a continuation of the mortgagor's trade on such cash basis. However, it does not seem to be seriously contended that these creditors, or the trustee, were governed by any unworthy motives in granting indulgence on this mortgage claim. It was testified in evidence that the times had been unpropitious for realizing satisfactory results on the security, but that an arrangement was pending which promised a favorable settlement in the course of time. In view of the fact that the plaintiff was party to a rather hazy and nebulous trust agreement, we are of the opinion that the trial court did about as well as could be done in fixing its terms.

The judgment is affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 2, 1920.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨478—QUESTION UNNECESSARY TO DETERMINE IN VIEW OF RETURN FILED BY RESPONDENT COURT.

Where the return filed in the appellate court by a superior court to petitions for supersedeas against it and the guardian of an incompetent shows that certain orders complained of by the incompetent have been vacated and set aside, it is unnecessary for the appellate court to determine whether or not it can issue its supersedeas to such superior court, stranger to an appeal before it.

Application for writ of supersedeas by William L. Bundy against M. P. Barnes, guardian of the person and estate of William L. Bundy, an incompetent, and the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles. Petitions dismissed.

A. J. Mitchell and Mattison B. Jones, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Benjamin E. Page, Arthur C. Hurt, and Arthur F. Coe, all of Los Angeles, and Thomas B. Leeper, of Sacramento, for respondents.

PREWETT, Judge pro tem. This proceeding, although entitled as a separate matter, is, in fact, ancillary to the matter of Estate of Bundy, Incompetent (Civil No. 2060) 186 Pac. 811, recently decided in this court.

The purpose of the petitioner was to secure a restraining order restraining said guardian and said superior court from proceeding further with an action, pending in said court, entitled "Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank v. Security Trust & Savings Bank," pending the hearing of above estate matter on appeal. The Supreme Court issued the temporary restraining order as prayed for and the matter was subsequently transferred to this court.

On December 13, 1919, the above-named guardian filed his cross-petition asking that said superior court be further restrained, and this court issued its additional restraining order in conformity with the prayer of said cross-petition. This court affirmed the order of the lower court in appointing a guardian for the person and estate of said incompetent (Estate of Bundy, supra), and this rendered unimportant all the questions involved in this auxiliary proceeding.

The return filed by the superior court of the county of Los Angeles shows that the orders complained of have been vacated and set aside; hence it is unnecessary to determine whether or not an appeal court can issue its supersedeas to a lower court that is a stranger to the appeal. Likewise, the action of this court in upholding the power of the guardian to represent the incompetent makes it profitless to determine to what extent, if any, he might have intervened in said Hellman suit.

The petitions herein are dismissed.

LANDLORD AND TENANT — 80(3) — SUBLESSEES' RIGHT TO PASTURE ENDED ON DATE THAT LEASE EXPIRED.

Where lessee, whose term expired on January 31st, by a written instrument sold and transferred to defendant, on December 9th preceding, all title to cornstalks on land and the right to run stock upon the land for pasture, the instrument providing that "the time of this pasture is not to exceed the day of the expiration of the lease now held by the party of the first part," defendant had no right to pasture his cattle upon the land after January 31st, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 819, 820.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Frank Hart against the C. H. & O. B. Fuller Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Freeman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

James W. Griffin, of Holtville, and J. S. Larew, of El Centro, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Upon the trial of this action the court found:

"That within one year last past, to wit, in the month of February, 1917, the defendant kept five hundred and eighty (580) head of cattle in a certain pasture belonging to plaintiff for a period of about nine (9) days, and that the pasture so received by defendant from plaintiff was of the reasonable value of four hundred and thirty-two ($432) dollars"

—and accordingly entered judgment for plaintiff, from which defendant appealed, claiming the finding in question is not supported by the evidence.

It appears therefrom that plaintiff, as the owner of certain land in Imperial county, leased the same to Kehar Singh for a term expiring on January 31, 1917; that during the year 1916 Singh, in farming the land, produced a crop of corn or maize, which, about December 9, 1916, was harvested and removed from the land, leaving the cornstalks standing thereon, which, together with wild oats and other growth, possessed some value for the pasturage of stock; that on said last-mentioned date, to wit, December 9th, Singh by a written instrument sold and transferred to defendant all his title to the cornstalks so standing and the right to run stock upon the land for pasture, in which instrument it was expressly provided that "the time of this pasture is not to exceed the day of the expiration of the lease now held by the party of the first part," who was said Kehar Singh. On the morning of January 31, 1917, defendant's foreman, knowing the lease terminated on that day, spoke to plaintiff about placing cattle on the pasture, and in reply to him plaintiff stated the lease expired on that day, following which he was entitled to possession. Notwithstanding this conversation, and the fact that defendant knew of the expiration of the lease on said date, it caused the cattle to be driven upon the land about 12 o'clock on January 31st, at which time the foreman stated to plaintiff that he would see him further about it. A day or two thereafter, and plaintiff not hearing from the foreman, he phoned to him that some agreement must be made as to the pasture. Thereupon the foreman went to see plaintiff, who told him that the cattle must be removed or defendant pay for the pasture, in reply to which the foreman stated he would have to see the manager about it, and kept the stock on the land.

Upon this showing, as to which there is no conflict in the testimony, it is impossible to perceive how the court could, under the law, have made a finding other than the one complained of. Conceding the cornstalks and other growth were valuable for feeding purposes, as claimed by appellant, defendant's right to the pasture and use thereof was in express terms by the sale limited to the expiration of Kehar Singh's lease of the premises, which terminated January 31st, and hence he could not have conveyed to defendant any greater right than he possessed.

Defendant's contention that it was entitled to enter upon the land and feed the same, not only prior to the expiration of the lease, but for a reasonable time thereafter, finds no support in the law. In Ellison v. Dolbey, 3 Pennewill (Del.) 45, 49 Atl. 178, it is said:

"It is a rule of law, applying generally to the case of landlord and tenant, that all the rights of the latter end absolutely with the tenancy."

Not only under the rule at common law did Kehar Singh's right to the pasture terminate with the expiration of the lease (24 Cyc. 1069), but such is the express provision of the Civil Code, where, by section 820, it is declared:

"A tenant for years or at will has no other rights to the property than such as are given to him by the agreement or instrument by which his tenancy is acquired, or by the last section," —which section (819) provides that:

"A tenant for years or at will, unless he is a wrongdoer by holding over, may occupy the buildings, take the annual products of the soil, work mines," etc.

To this rule there is an exception, where it cannot be known when the tenant's estate will terminate, as in case of a tenant for life, where the estate is terminated by the act of God. Defendant's right to pasture the land was not only ended by the expiration of Kehar Singh's lease, under whom it held, but by the express terms of the conveyance to it such right was so limited.

The judgment is affirmed.

OFFERDAHL v. BRYDGES. (Civ. 2711.)

1. EVIDENCE $\hookrightarrow$ 423(6)—EFFECT OF DUEBILL MUST BE DETERMINED IN ACCORDANCE WITH IMPORT OF LANGUAGE USED.

The effect of an instrument in the nature of a duebill, in the absence of facts showing it was procured by fraud, mistake, or duress, must, as in case of a promissory note or other writing, be determined in accordance with the plain import of the language used, and evidence to prove the general nature of the business between the parties, etc., is inadmissible in an action on the bill.

2. COSTS $\hookrightarrow$ 262—PENALTY CANNOT BE IMPOSED FOR FRIVOLOUS APPEAL IF DOUBT EXISTS.

Where the appellate court cannot say on the record that an appeal apparently without merit and frivolous was not taken in good faith or was for delay, it must decline to impose the penalty on affirmance asked by respondent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Hildur V. Offerdahl against Minnie L. Brydges. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John M. Bowen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Thomas A. Sanson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover upon a written instrument made and executed by defendant to George Mezutani (plaintiff's assignor), whereby she acknowledged that she was indebted to him in the sum of $805.43. Judgment went for plaintiff, from which defendant appeals.

Defendant's answer while admitting the execution and delivery of the writing, alleged that it was made and delivered as evidence of her indebtedness to Mezutani and others employed to assist him in the care and management of her nursery and upon condition that no action be had thereon, and that defendant could have all the time desired by her within which to pay the same, which facts she sought to establish by oral proof. As a second defense and by way of counterclaim, it was alleged that at the time of executing said instrument Mezutani had for months neglected and failed to properly care for and manage the nursery, which fact he concealed from her, and that as a result of such neglect she was damaged in a large sum.

As indicating the errors of which appellant complains, we quote from her brief as follows:

"Two points are raised by appellant in support of her contention that judgment thereon should be reversed: (1) That there was no account stated; (2) that the court erred in refusing permission to appellant to introduce evidence to prove the general nature of the business between the parties and to show the facts and circumstances to aid in deciding what occurred or to explain what occurred when the writing was given by appellant to said Mezutani."

[1] The action does not purport to be upon an account stated, but upon an instrument in the nature of a duebill, the effect of which, in the absence of facts showing that it was procured by fraud, mistake, or duress, must, as in the case of a promissory note or other writing, be construed in accordance with the plain import of the language used therein. The character of the written obligation was such that defendant was not entitled to introduce oral testimony varying its terms. No facts are alleged in either defense set forth in the answer under which evidence was admissible for the purpose of proving the general nature of the transaction had between the parties, or to show the surrounding circumstances under which the document was made and delivered. The action was upon the written instrument, and whether it be deemed an account stated, duebill, or note, it clearly and conclusively appears therefrom that it was an acknowledgment on the part of defendant of a present indebtedness due to plaintiff's assignor.

[2] While the appeal appears to be without merit and frivolous, we cannot upon the record say that it was not taken in good faith or that it was for delay; hence we must decline to impose the penalty asked for by respondent.

The judgment is affirmed.

WARREN NAT. BANK, WARREN, PA., v. SUERKEN. (Civ. 3156.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 2, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1920.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⇨87(6) — NOTE OF MARRIED WOMAN TO SECURE INDEBTEDNESS OF ESTATE OF WHICH SHE WAS HEIR NOT AN "ACCOMMODATION NOTE."

Where the heirs of a decedent carrying on a furniture business and indebted to a bank formed a corporation to carry on such business and executed notes as collateral security for the decedent's indebtedness to the bank, and the bank thereupon refrained from presenting any claim against the estate, which was solvent, the notes of the heirs were not without consideration and accommodation notes within the rule in Pennsylvania that a married woman cannot make an accommodation note.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accommodation Bill or Note.]

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨493(3)—BURDEN ON ONE DENYING LIABILITY TO ESTABLISH WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

Where notes on their faces imported a consideration, the burden was on one claiming want of consideration to establish that fact.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨49, 96—"ACCOMMODATION MAKER" DEFINED; "WITHOUT CONSIDERATION."

An "accommodation maker" is one who puts his name to a note without any consideration with the intention of lending his credit to the accommodated party, and in this connection "without consideration" means "without consideration to the accommodating party directly."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accommodation Maker; Consideration.]

4. BILLS AND NOTES ⇨92(3)—SUSPENSION OR FORBEARANCE CONSTITUTE SUFFICIENT CONSIDERATION; "GOOD CONSIDERATION."

Under Civ. Code, § 1605, as to what constitutes a good consideration for a promise, any suspension or forbearance of a legal right constitutes a sufficient consideration for a note or bill.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Good Consideration.]

5. CONTRACTS ⇨71(2)—RENEWAL OF INDEBTEDNESS OF ESTATE SUFFICIENT CONSIDERATION FOR HEIR'S PROMISE TO PAY.

Where heirs or assignees of the estate of deceased person, in order to protect the estate from claims enforceable against its property, obtain a renewal or extension of time on the original claim by agreeing to pay it, such renewal or extension is sufficient consideration for their promise.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by the Warren National Bank of Warren, Pa., against Lena M. Suerken. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Bennett, Turnbull & Thompson and Rupert B. Turnbull, all of Los Angeles, for appellant. Allen & Allen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. The defendant and her step-mother, Annetta R. Johnson, and her brothers, Everett F. Johnson and Charles B. Johnson, were the heirs at law of James P. Johnson, deceased. At the time of his death James P. Johnson was indebted to the plaintiff bank in a sum approximating $15,000, for which the bank held his unsecured promissory notes. The decedent had been in the furniture business in his lifetime, and the heirs, desiring to continue the business organized a corporation known as the Johnson Furniture Company, the sole incorporators of which were the said heirs. This corporation then took over, and thereafter operated, the furniture business. After the organization of such company the four heirs, including this defendant, executed to the Johnson Furniture Company their joint notes for a sum covering the amount of the notes of the decedent held by the bank, and the Johnson Furniture Company indorsed these notes over to the bank. This transaction was had at the request of the plaintiff bank.

The whole controversy in this case is as to whether the defendant, Lena M. Suerken, joined in the execution of these notes without consideration, as an accommodation maker, or was assuming and guaranteeing her father's indebtedness in her own behalf and for the protection of her own interest in his estate.

The notes were executed in the state of Pennsylvania. The defendant was at the time a married woman. It is stipulated that under the laws of that state, as a married woman, she was disqualified from becoming an accommodation indorser, maker, guarantor, or surety on any note or contract. The trial court found that defendant joined in the execution of said notes, "not for any debt of the defendant, but as collateral security to secure the payment of certain notes made by James P. Johnson, deceased, father of the defendant, which notes (the notes of James P. Johnson, deceased) are held by the plaintiff." It is upon the sufficiency of the evidence to support this finding that the appeal is taken.

No point is made as to the sufficiency of the finding to support the judgment. It will be noticed that the court does not expressly find that the defendant was an accommodation maker, or that she executed the notes without consideration, but that the notes were executed, "not for any debt of the defendant, but as collateral security to secure the debt of her father." It might readily be, under the relations and interests of the parties here, that the defendant, in her own interest and to protect her own rights as an heir, executed collateral security for the debts of her father, which debts existed as a claim against his estate, including the business which was taken over by the corporation, the Johnson Furniture Company, to whom the notes here sued on were primarily made payable. Under such circumstances she could hardly be classed as an accommodation maker. However, the point is not raised, and it, perhaps, may be reasonably inferred from the findings as a whole that the court intended to reach and express the conclusion that the defendant signed these notes without consideration. If the evidence is such as to support such an interpretation, we are disposed to so construe it. If the fact that the notes were given as collateral security for the father's indebtedness was conclusive on the point that they were without consideration we think the evidence is ample to uphold such a finding. A number of witnesses testified that such was the avowed and agreed purpose, and the circumstance that the bank continued to hold the original notes of the deceased father is corroborative of this conclusion, notwithstanding the attempted explanation by plaintiff that they were retained merely to show the nature of the transaction.

[1, 2] But was there no consideration for the collateral contract? It is true the evidence sufficiently shows that defendant was under no legal obligation to secure her father's liabilities to the bank. What her interest in the Johnson Furniture Company—the original payee named in the notes, and of which corporation she was a member—was, or whether she owed anything to it, does not appear, so far as we have been able to discover from the record. It was further testified that the defendant did not receive "any money personally, or anything of value, or any consideration of any kind, from the Warren National Bank." The facts, however, that do appear beyond dispute are: That the defendant was an heir at law of her deceased father's estate and a member of the corporation formed by the heirs to carry on his furniture business; that the plaintiff bank held the obligations of the decedent for some $15,000, which were claims against his estate; that the estate appears to have been solvent; that the bank insisted upon some sort of a settlement, and demanded the execution of the collateral notes as security for the father's indebtedness, "so that the records of the bank show up properly to the directors and bank examiners, and also that the notes of the decedent could be kept alive," and "they said that they would carry on the indebtedness if the notes were kept alive." It further appears that the bank refrained from pressing any claim against the estate. Whether the estate was probated and any claim presented or filed on the original notes does not appear. But at least there was an agreement, which was fulfilled by the bank, to extend and carry the estate's indebtedness in consideration for the collateral notes. Under this state of facts, does the testimony of the witnesses for defendant that defendant "received nothing of value or any consideration of any kind from the Warren National Bank"—statements which, in the light of the more specific testimony as to the facts, may be classed as conclusions or opinions, rather than probative facts—justify the finding of want of consideration, particularly in view of the doubtful expression of the court in its finding on that point? These collateral notes on their face import a consideration. The burden is clearly on the defendant to establish the fact of want of consideration. As an heir at law, entitled to succeed to an interest in decedent's property, and one of the organizers of the family corporation that was taking over the furniture business of the deceased, it would seem that she was beneficially interested in securing a settlement or a postponement of these claims, which were enforceable both against her general interests as an heir and against the property being taken over by the corporation of which she was a member.

[3-5] An accommodation maker is defined in Parsons on Notes & Bills, § 181, as "one who puts his name there without any consideration, with the intention of lending his credit to the accommodated party." As stated in Randolph on Commercial Paper (2d Ed.) § 472, the term "without consideration" must be considered as meaning simply "without consideration to the accommodating party directly." Accepting this definition, can it be doubted that when the defendant here became a party to these notes it was for the direct advantage to be gained by herself and her coheirs and associates in protecting their interest in decedent's estate from the immediate enforcement of this liability against it? It was not a liability enforceable against the defendant, but it was enforceable against the property to which she was about to succeed. Any suspension or forbearance of a legal right constitutes a sufficient consideration for a note or bill. Civ. Code, § 1605; Naglee v. Lyman, 14 Cal. 450. And where heirs or assignees of an estate of a deceased person, in order to protect that estate from claims against the decedent which are enforceable against the property of the estate, obtain a renewal or extension of time on the original claim by agreeing to pay it, such renewal or extension is sufficient consideration for their promise. Rohrbacher v. Aitken, 145 Cal. 485, 78 Pac. 1054; Whelan v. Swain, 132 Cal. 389, 64 Pac. 560; Humboldt

Sav., etc., Soc. v. Dowd, 137 Cal. 408, 70 Pac. 274. In the last-cited case, where the renewal note and mortgage were given by the heirs to secure extension of time on decedent's debt, the court says:

"The court found 'that the note and mortgage described in the complaint were executed for a valuable consideration,' and we think the evidence fully supported the finding. The old note and mortgage constituted a valid lien upon the lands to which the O'Connell children were heirs. It was created by their father in his lifetime. * * * The original indebtedness was never paid. By the act of the children in making the new note and mortgage they intended to renew the old ones and to get further time. This was the evident intent, and made plainer by the continued payments of interest. The mortgagors, after executing the note and mortgage, in extension of a debt which was a legal charge upon their property, will not now be heard to say that their act was without consideration."

We think the same reasoning applies to the respondent on this appeal. Although the plaintiff bank has no mortgage lien on the decedent's estate, the estate was solvent, and liable for the debt, and the collateral notes sued on were given to protect the interest of the respondent and other heirs from the charge of this debt.

Judgment reversed.

Action by the Michie Grocery Company against Albert G. Martin and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Leonard B. Slosson and George E. Farrand, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ben F. Gray, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. In this action recovery of damages is sought for defendants' alleged breach of a written contract to sell and deliver to plaintiff 500 bags of beans. Judgment went for defendants, from which plaintiff appeals, claiming the court erred in sustaining defendants' objection to the reception of the contract offered in evidence, upon the ground that, while signed by defendant as seller, it was not shown to have been executed by the plaintiff as buyer.

[1] The contract, without seal attached, was signed as follows:

"Buyer, Michie Grocy. Co.
"P."

In connection therewith, T. E. Powers, in substance, testified that he had been in plaintiff's employ for nine years; that on May 22, 1916, at the time of the execution of the contract in question, he was general manager of plaintiff corporation, in which capacity, and for and on behalf of plaintiff, and as its act, he signed the same; and that in the performance of his duties he had, prior to the execution of this contract, signed all contracts for plaintiff in the conduct of its business, which was that of wholesale grocer. In our opinion, this evidence was sufficient as a prima facie showing to entitle the contract to be admitted in evidence.

[2] The contention of respondents is that, in the absence of a resolution adopted by the board of directors authorizing Powers to execute the contract, his act could not be deemed that of the corporation, in support of which they cite authorities to the effect that the president of a corporation merely by virtue of his position has no power to bind the company by a contract. Conceding this, it is nevertheless true that where the general manager of a corporation, for and on its behalf, in its name and in the usual course of business conducted by it, executes a contract, his authority so to do, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, will be presumed. Powers' admitted relation to the corporation, and the fact that in conducting the business he had theretofore acted for the company in executing all contracts to which it was a party, warrants the inference that his act was in accordance with rules adopted by the board of directors for guidance in the transaction of its corporate affairs. Bank of Middlebury v. Rutland R. R. Co., 30 Vt. 159; Crowley v. Genesee Min. Co., 55 Cal. 273; Hoffman v. Guy M. Rush Co., 27 Cal. App. 167, 149 Pac. 177.

If the position of the parties were reversed, and the company attempt to repudiate the contract upon the ground that its execution was not authorized, it should not be heard upon the showing here made. Our view as to the ruling of the court in excluding the contract from evidence renders it unnecessary to discuss the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the court as to damages and defendants' right to an abatement of the action under section 410 of the Civil Code.

The judgment is reversed.

CASS v. OCEAN PARK BATH CO.
(Civ. 2729.)

1. PLEADING $\S$ 406(8) — RECOVERY UNDER COMPLAINT UNITING TORT AND CONTRACT ALLOWED IN ABSENCE OF ATTACK.

Where a complaint uniting in one count a cause of action for conversion and one under a contract for claim and delivery was not attacked under Code Civ. Proc. $\S\S$ 427, 430, plaintiff should be permitted a recovery upon either cause of action that he established by his evidence, as all objections to the complaint must be deemed waived, under section 434.

2. TROVER AND CONVERSION $\S$ 4 — CONVERSION DEFINED.

To constitute conversion it is necessary that defendant has by some act wrongfully assumed title in himself, or dominion over the property inconsistent with plaintiff's rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Conversion.]

3. TROVER AND CONVERSION $\S$ 9(4) — PROOF OF DEMAND AND REFUSAL WITHOUT SHOWING ABILITY TO DELIVER INSUFFICIENT.

Proof of mere demand and refusal to deliver property deposited by plaintiff with defendant in itself is insufficient to constitute conversion, for the reason that such refusal may be due to loss or destruction of the property by reason of which defendant is unable to deliver it.

4. JUDGMENT $\S$ 256(1)—FINDINGS FOR PLAINTIFF ON ONE THEORY REQUIRE JUDGMENT FOR HIM, THOUGH FINDINGS ARE ADVERSE ON OTHER THEORY.

Where a complaint presents two theories upon either of which recovery may be had, and the findings, though adverse as to one, are as to the other in favor of plaintiff, judgment thereon should be entered in his favor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Harry A. Cass against the Ocean Park Bath Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

Simms & Fulwider, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bradner W. Lee, Bradner W. Lee, Jr., and Kenyon F. Lee, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiff sought a judgment for the return and redelivery to him of certain personal property, alleged to have been deposited with the defendant as bailee and by the latter converted to its own use, or the value thereof, alleged to be $320.25, together with $150 for time and money expended in pursuit thereof. Judgment went for defendant, from which plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll.

While the complaint appears to have been based upon the theory of conversion, it, in addition to the allegations constituting such cause of action, set forth in detail facts showing the existence of a contract under which the goods were received by defendant as depository, to be redelivered upon demand, the making of such demand, and defendant's neglect and failure to so deliver them, as to all of which facts, put in issue by the answer and tried, the court found that defendant at the time in question conducted a bathhouse, the privileges of which it let for hire and undertook to safely keep and promptly return on demand valuables and pocket contents intrusted to it by patrons, among whom was plaintiff, from whom, on June 17, 1917, preparatory to his using the swimming pool in the bathhouse, defendant received, upon a promise to safely keep and return to plaintiff on demand, the articles in question, the actual value of which was $320.25; that upon plaintiff's return to defendant's office he demanded the articles, whereupon defendant informed him that they had been lost and could not be found; that, as alleged by defendant, it made every effort to find the articles, but was unable to do so. As to the alleged conversion, the court found that, while defendant refused to pay plaintiff the value of the property, it is not true that it unlawfully converted the same to its own use, "or has refused or does now refuse to redeliver the same or any part thereof to plaintiff"; and upon said findings the court, as a conclusion of law, found that plaintiff was entitled to take nothing.

[1] It is apparent that since, contrary to the provisions of section 427, Code Civil Procedure, several causes of action, one in the nature of a tort and one upon contract, were united, and further were not separately stated, the complaint was subject to attack by demurrer under the provisions of section 430, Code Civil Procedure. No such attack, however, was made, and in the absence thereof the objection upon such ground, as provided by section 434, Code Civil Procedure, must be deemed waived; and hence the case proceeded to trial upon all the issues joined by the complaint and answer.

[2-4] Conversion implies a tortious act on the part of the defendant. It must be made to appear that he has by some act wrongfully assumed title in himself or dominion over the property inconsistent with plaintiff's right thereto. Steele v. Marsicano, 102 Cal. 666, 36 Pac. 920; Daggett v. Gray, 110 Cal. 169, 42 Pac. 568. Proof of the mere demand and refusal to deliver the property in itself is insufficient to constitute conversion, for the reason that such refusal may be due to loss or destruction of the property by reason of which defendant is unable to deliver it (Hawkins v. Hoffman, 6 Hill [N. Y.] 586, 41 Am. Dec. 767; Hill v. Belasco, 17 Ill. App. 194); and the fact of the loss of the articles, as found by the court, is no doubt the ground upon which it held there was no conversion. Nevertheless other facts were alleged in the complaint and found to be true which, conceding there was no conversion, are sufficient to entitle plaintiff to judgment for the breach of defendant's contract in failing, on demand therefor, to redeliver the goods intrusted to its care. The allegations of the complaint, to which no demurrer was interposed, were such as to present two theories, upon either of which recovery might be had, and while the findings as to one are adverse, they are as to the other in favor of plaintiff, and hence judgment should follow thereon in his favor.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court instructed to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff for $320.25, together with interest thereon from June 17, 1917.

HARRIS v. CENTRAL UNION HIGH SCHOOL DIST. (Civ. 3145.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 30, 1920.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⇐80(1)—
AGREEMENT TO PAY FOR SCHOOL BUILDING
PLANS BINDING ON CONDITIONAL ACCEPTANCE.

Where board of trustees of school district published notice to architects calling for plans and specifications for a building; specified compensation to be paid to the architect whose plans were adopted, a contract to pay a certain architect for his plans was complete and binding on the board, where the plans were accepted with the condition or understanding that such modifications therein as should be directed by the board would be made by the architect; the board not thereafter indicating its desire to have any modifications made.

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⇐121—

In an action by an architect to recover compensation and premium agreed to be awarded by the board of trustees of school district to architect whose plans for a building should be adopted, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the board adopted plaintiff's plans subject only to the condition or understanding that plaintiff should make any modifications therein that the board might desire.

3. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⇐80(1)—
TRUSTEES MAY RESERVE RIGHT TO MAKE AL-TERATIONS IN ARCHITECT'S PLANS.

The board of trustees of a school district, having authority to contract for the construction of a school building, may in making its contract with the architect or with the contractor reserve the right to make alterations during the progress of the work, so long as the general plan of the building is not changed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by F. T. Harris against the Central Union High School District. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. R. Simon, of El Centro, for appellant.
Conkling & Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. On or about the 12th day of February, 1915, the board of trustees of the defendant published a notice to architects, calling for plans and specifications in detail for a proposed addition and extension to the high school building of the district. It was stated in the notice that "the said trustees will award to the architect whose plans and specifications in detail are adopted" a specified premium and compensation. At a meeting of the board held on the 14th day of March, 1915, the board, having considered several plans and specifications submitted under said notice, including those of the plaintiff, took action which was shown by the minutes of the meeting that it was "moved by Hamilton, seconded by Clark, that the plans and specifications of F. T. Harris be accepted. Motion carried." At a meeting of the board held on the 16th day of April, 1915, said minute entry was read, and, on direction of the members of the board, but without formal motion and order of the board, the secretary amended the minute entry by inserting after the word "accepted" the words "when modified and changed to the satisfaction of the board." After the amendment had been interlined by the secretary, a motion was made and carried "that the board rescind the action of March 14, 1915, with reference to accepting the plans and specifications of architects."

Upon the issue as to whether or not the plans and specifications were accepted as alleged in the complaint, the court found:

"That on the 15th day of March, 1915, the said board of trustees of the defendant, after duly considering all of the plans and specifications submitted under the said notice by resolution and order spread upon the minutes of said board adopted the said plans and specifications as submitted by plaintiff, subject to a condition subsequent, to wit, that the plaintiff should modify and change the plans and specifications to the satisfaction of the board," etc.

The court further found that, after so receiving and accepting the plans and specifications so prepared and submitted by plaintiff, the board of trustees, without requesting the plaintiff to make any modifications or changes in said plans and specifications, and without notifying the plaintiff what, if any, modifications or changes in said plans and specifications were desired by the board, and without affording the plaintiff an opportunity to make any desired modifications or changes in said plans and specifications, failed and refused to proceed further with the construction of said building, and repudiated and by order entered on their minutes on or about the 1st day of April, 1915, attempted to rescind and vacate their former action as to said plans and specifications so prepared by plaintiff, and have ever since refused, and do now refuse, to pay plaintiff the sum agreed to be paid for said plans and specifications or any sum or sums whatever, etc., by reason whereof plaintiff suffered damages in a stated sum for which judgment was awarded.

[1] Appellant contends that said findings are not sustained by the evidence in this, that there was no absolute acceptance of plaintiff's offer with a condition subsequent, but that there was only a conditional acceptance, and that therefore no contract resulted and would not result until there had been a compliance with the conditions of the acceptance by the plaintiff in making modifications and changes in his plans and specifications which would meet the approval of the board. By the use of the phrase, "subject to a condition subsequent," as we interpret the finding, the court decided that the board did in fact accept the "plans and specifications in detail," as presented by plaintiff, but with the condition or understanding that such modifications therein as should be directed by the board would be made by the plaintiff. Upon this finding, if sustained by the evidence, it must be held that the contract was complete; and since the board did not thereafter indicate its desire to have any modification or change made in the plans or specifications, and the plaintiff did not fail to comply with any such indicated desire or instructions, and since it was shown that the plaintiff filed the necessary bond and stood ready to comply with all the conditions of his contract, he became entitled to the compensation agreed to be paid.

[2, 3] We think that the evidence is sufficient to support the finding. The secretary of the board, who also was a member thereof, testified that the minutes as originally made by him correctly stated the motion as he remembered it to have been made; that he had taken notes during the meeting and wrote up the minutes according to those notes. Mr. Hamilton, the member of the board who made the motion, testified as follows:

"Q. Do you remember what the language of your motion was? A. As well as I remember, I moved to accept his plans and specifications. Q. And this matter of his making changes, as desired, was purely a matter of discussion? A. Yes, sir. * * * Q. Didn't you understand from Mr. Harris beforehand that that was satisfactory to him? A. I supposed it would be. We advertised, and I think there were five plans and specifications submitted to the board, and in all of our discussion that none of the plans would go without changing. We would not want to advertise for bids and let a contractor put up a building without some changes."

The testimony seems to show clearly that, as stated by Mr. Hamilton in his testimony, "It was the intention of the motion, we would accept his plans, but there would have to be some alterations made;" and this is the effect of the court's finding. Substantially the plaintiff's plans and specifications were accepted, but the acceptance was subject to the right of the board to have modifications and changes made therein. This was in fact in accordance with a custom based on common experience. The plaintiff testified that at the time he presented his bond to the board he stated to them, in response to a question, that it was possible to make changes, and that "it was always customary with the architect where his plans were adopted, any changes they wanted to incorporate, they could." W. F. Apple, another of the trustees, testified that when he voted on the motion with reference to the Harris plans he understood that he was voting for the absolute acceptance of those plans, "but the board would call for certain little changes in the plans." We do not doubt that the board of trustees of a school district, having authority to contract for the construction of a school building, may, in making its contract with the architect or with the contractor, reserve the right to make alterations during the progress of the work, so long as the general plan of the building is not changed. That appears to be the kind of reservation intended in the present case, and this was not inconsistent with a complete acceptance of the proposed plans and specifications.

The judgment is affirmed.

LILLIE v. WEYL, ZUCKERMAN & CO.
(Civ. 2689.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California. Jan. 29, 1920.)

1. SALES ⇐377—COMPLAINT HELD TO STATE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR BUYER'S BREACH.

The making of contract whereby defendant agreed to buy entire crop of potatoes grown by plaintiff, plaintiff's compliance with its terms, its breach by defendant, and the damage resulting to plaintiff therefrom, all alleged in the complaint, were sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of plaintiff, whose right to recover is, as provided by Civ. Code, § 3300, to be read in connection with section 3049, the amount which will compensate him for "all the detriment proximately caused" by such breach.

2. SALES ⇐377—COMPLAINT NOT DEMURRABLE FOR FAILURE TO ALLEGE DETAILS OF SELLER'S MITIGATION OF DAMAGES.

In action for breach of contract whereby defendant agreed to buy entire crop of potatoes grown by plaintiff, that complaint was uncertain as to what course was pursued by plaintiff in protecting himself from loss did not render it subject to general demurrer, where under the allegations and in the absence of any special objection plaintiff might introduce evidence showing that on defendant's breach he adopted any one of the three courses open to him.

3. SALES ⇐384(7) — MEASURE OF DAMAGES WHERE PROPERTY NOT RESOLD AFTER BUYER'S BREACH STATED.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3311 and 3353, the measure of damages where title is not vested in the purchaser and the property is not resold in the manner provided by section 3049, is the difference between that which the purchaser agreed to pay and the value of the property to the seller on resale thereof, which value is deemed to be the price obtainable therefor in the nearest market to the place at which it should have been accepted by the buyer.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐931(1)—FINDINGS CONSTRUED TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT.

Findings should be construed most strongly in support of the judgment.

5. SALES ⇐389—FINDINGS SHOW THAT RESALE AFTER BUYER'S BREACH WAS AT MARKET PRICE.

In action for breach of contract to buy entire crop of potatoes, findings, though inartificially drawn, held to show that the potatoes were sold by plaintiff at the market value thereof at the time when it was the duty of defendant to have accepted them.

6. SALES ⇐383—EVIDENCE HELD TO SUPPORT FINDING THAT RESALE WAS IN GOOD FAITH AT MARKET PRICE.

In action for breach of contract to buy plaintiff's entire crop of potatoes, held, that there was evidence to justify finding that plaintiff in good faith sold at the market price.

7. SALES ⇐389—FINDING AS TO WEIGHT OF POTATOES AND PRICE ON RESALE AFTER REFUSAL OF BUYER TO ACCEPT HELD WITHIN ISSUES.

In action for breach of contract whereby defendant agreed to buy entire crop of potatoes grown by plaintiff, finding as to total weight of potatoes and price at which plaintiff sold them held within the issues.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇐1071(5)—FINDINGS, THOUGH NOT WITHIN ISSUES, HELD WITHOUT PREJUDICE.

Where defendant buyer's refusal to accept and pay for potatoes according to contract price was not on account of the quality or condition of the potatoes, but because the market price had greatly decreased, defendant could not have been prejudiced by finding as to total weight of potatoes and the price at which plaintiff sold them, conceding such finding was not within the issues.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

Action by F. C. Lillie against Weyl, Zuckerman & Co., a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sidney J. Parsons, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Purington & Adair and A. Aird Adair, all of Riverside, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this case defendant appeals from a judgment rendered against it in the sum of $435.38 as damages for the breach of a contract.

The order of the court in overruling defendant's general demurrer to the complaint is assigned as error. The complaint alleged the making of the contract, set out in hæc verba, from which it appears that on June 12, 1917, plaintiff agreed to sell and defendant agreed to buy the entire crop of potatoes grown by the former, the quality of which were specified as being first-class, not less in weight than three ounces each, and to be delivered f. o. b. cars, Elsinore, or as buyer directs, at the price of $2.50 per hundred-weight. It is further alleged that about July 10, 1917, plaintiff notified defendant that he was ready to deliver the potatoes in accordance with his contract and that thereupon defendant sent an agent to inspect the same, who, after such inspection, refused to accept the potatoes or any part thereof or pay for the same pursuant to the agreement, as a result of which plaintiff alleged he was damaged in the sum of $439.45, which sum, upon demand, defendant refused to pay.

[1, 2] The making of the contract set out in the complaint, plaintiff's compliance with its terms, its breach by defendant and the damage resulting to plaintiff therefrom, all alleged in the complaint were sufficient to constitute a cause of action in favor of plaintiff (Sutherland, Code Pleading, § 4636), whose right to recover is as provided in section 3300, Civil Code, to be read in connection with section 3049, the amount which will compensate him for "all the detriment proximately caused" by such breach. Appellant insists, however, that, as held in Gay v. Dare, 103 Cal. 454, 37 Pac. 466, and Cuthill v. Peabody, 19 Cal. App. 304, 125 Pac. 926, it was optional with plaintiff in protecting himself from loss, to retain the property for the vendee and sue for the entire purchase price, sell the property for the benefit of the purchaser in which event the damage would be the difference between the price received and that agreed to be paid, or, lastly, keep the property as his own and recover the difference between the market price thereof at the time and place of delivery and the contract price; hence it is contended that, as the complaint was silent as to which method plaintiff adopted, it failed to state a cause of action. Conceding the complaint was uncertain in the respect named, nevertheless it was not obnoxious to the general demurrer for the reason that, under the allegations made and in the absence of any special objection to the complaint, plaintiff might introduce evidence tending to prove that upon defendant's breach he adopted, as he was entitled to do, any one of the three courses open to him. The question as to how or in what manner the damage arose, other than as appears from the general allegations, is the subject of evidence rather than of pleading.

The answer admitted the execution of the contract, and, in addition to denying that plaintiff had been damaged in any sum whatsoever, or that he had demanded payment therefor as stated in his complaint, alleged as a further defense that it was at all times anxious and willing to perform the contract on its part, but that the potatoes which plaintiff offered to deliver to defendant were not first-class, but were sunburnt and defective, as to all of which denials and allegations, and the fact that plaintiff was ready and willing to perform the contract on his part, the court upon ample evidence found in favor of plaintiff. The court further found that the total weight of the potatoes constituting the subject of the controversy was 39,580 pounds, "that the plaintiff sold said potatoes at $1.40 per hundredweight, that said sale was made in good faith, and that the said price was the best price that could then be obtained for said potatoes," and, as a conclusion of law, found that plaintiff, by reason of the breach of the contract on the part of defendant, had sustained damages in the sum of $435.38, for which he was entitled to judgment.

[3] It thus appears that plaintiff, pursuant to his right, as declared in Gay v. Dare, supra, acting as the agent of defendant, which refused to perform its part of the contract, resold the potatoes and brought this action to recover that part of the contract price which was in excess of the price obtained on the resale, which was the difference between $1.40 and $2.50 per hundred on the total weight of the potatoes. Under sections 3311 and 3353, Civil Code, the measure of damages, where title is not vested in the purchaser and the property not resold in the manner provided by section 3049—which is the case here—is the difference between that which the purchaser agreed to pay and the value of the property to the seller on the resale thereof, which value is deemed to be the price obtainable therefor in the nearest market to the place at which it should have been accepted by the buyer.

[4, 5] Applying the rule that findings should be construed most strongly in support of the judgment, we find no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the finding, though inartificially drawn, shows that the potatoes were sold at the market value thereof at the time when it was the duty of defendant to have accepted them. The sale was made in good faith, and the price was the best that could then be obtained therefor.

[6] It appears from the evidence that between the making of the contract and the date when plaintiff sold the potatoes the price thereof fluctuated greatly, dropping from $3 to $1.40 per hundredweight; that at the time when sold by plaintiff there was no demand for potatoes, and the $1.40 per hundred was all that he could obtain for them. Defendant's buyer testified that from the 12th to the 20th of July the market for potatoes went to pieces and there was absolutely no market for them. Charles O. Morgan, who bought the potatoes, stated that between July 10th and July 21st the price of potatoes varied greatly, going from $3 down to $1.40 per hundred; that he paid $1.40 per hundred for his potatoes, which at the time was the market price therefor. Conceding a conflict in the testimony on the question, nevertheless there was ample evidence to justify the finding that plaintiff in good faith sold at the market price.

[7, 8] Appellant complains that the finding as to the total weight of the potatoes and the price at which plaintiff sold them was not within the issue. As we view the case, there is no merit in this contention. The court also found, which fact is apparent from the testimony, that defendant's refusal to accept and pay for the potatoes according to the contract price was not on account of the quality or condition of the potatoes, but because the market price of potatoes had greatly decreased between the date of said contract and the date of such refusal to accept the same. Conceding this finding was not within the issues, since it was immaterial what motive prompted defendant to breach the contract, defendant could not have been prejudiced thereby.

That defendant executed the contract, and, without cause, refused to comply with its terms, to plaintiff's damage in the sum as found by the court, is apparent from the record, and no error complained of by appellant has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal by the defendant Eugene J. Sullivan from that portion of the judgment in this action which runs in favor of the plaintiff and against said defendant, and by which the plaintiff is awarded the sum of $11,215.81. The action was instituted by the plaintiff as the transferee from one Rudolph Spreckels of a lease of certain premises on Fillmore street in the city of San Francisco to the defendants herein,

L. A. Rea, E. Kehrlein and Eugene J. Sullivan, and by them assigned to the defendant Fillmore Arcade Company, a corporation. Certain stockholders of said corporation are also made parties defendant.

The complaint is in two counts, one to recover rent overdue and unpaid under the terms of said lease and of a later extension thereof; the other to recover damages in a large sum for an alleged breach of certain covenants in said lease relating to the duty of the lessees and their assigns to keep the buildings upon the premises in repair.

Upon a trial of the cause the court made its findings and rendered its judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants, said Rea, Kehrlein, Sullivan, and Fillmore Arcade Company, upon the first count in said complaint, but as to those defendants who were alleged and shown to be stockholders in the Fillmore Arcade Company the court gave its judgment in their favor upon their plea of the statute of limitations, and also gave its judgment in favor of all of the defendants upon the cause of action embraced in the second count of the complaint. Two appeals were taken from this judgment, this one by the defendant Eugene J. Sullivan from that portion of the judgment running against him as one of the original lessees for unpaid rent; the other by the plaintiff from that portion of the judgment denying it relief against the stockholders of the Fillmore Arcade Company upon the first count, and against all of the defendants upon the second count of its complaint. This appeal is upon the judgment roll alone, the only question presented being as to whether the findings support that portion of the judgment appealed from herein.

The facts out of which the case arose are briefly these: On June 1, 1906, Rudolph Spreckels entered into a written lease with the said defendants Rea, Kehrlein, and Sullivan, by which he leased and demised to them certain property on Fillmore street, of which he was then the owner, for the term of three years from said date and for the entire sum of $126,000 for said term, payable in monthly installments of $3,500 per month, monthly in advance. According to one of the provisions of said lease the said lessees agreed that within six months from and after July 1, 1916, they would erect upon the demised premises a frame building or buildings at a cost of about $150,000; by another provision in said lease it was agreed by the lessor that at the end of the said term of three years he would purchase the said buildings so to be erected by the lessees at one-half of their then to be appraised value, in which event the term of the lease should cease; provided, however, that the said lessees by giving notice at least 30 days before the expiration of said three-year term might elect to take a three-year extension of the lease at a monthly rental of $2,500, in which event the buildings erected upon the premises by the lessees should thereupon become and be the property of the lessor. The lease also contained clauses respecting the duty of the lessees to keep the buildings and structures upon the demised premises in good order and repair.

After the making of said lease, and on December 14, 1906, the lessees named therein assigned and transferred all of their right, title, and interest in said lease to the defendant herein, Fillmore Arcade Company, which immediately thereupon went into possession of said premises and continued exclusively therein thereafter as the tenant thereof. Thereafter, and on April 28, 1908, the said lessor, Rudolph Spreckels, conveyed the said premises to Realty & Rebuilding Company, the plaintiff herein. On May 28, 1909, the said Fillmore Arcade Company, by written notice to the Realty & Rebuilding Company, elected to take the three-year extension of said lease as provided therein and upon the terms and conditions therein stated, and thereupon continued to occupy the premises in question until some time in September, 1911. On the 29th day of May, 1911, the buildings upon the premises which had been erected by the Fillmore Arcade Company under the terms of said lease and which had replaced the buildings originally thereon, were, according to the averments of the plaintiff's complaint herein "destroyed by fire." For the next two or three months thereafter the Fillmore Arcade Company remained in possession of the premises, but failed to pay the stipulated rental thereof falling due during said period, and further failed to take any steps looking to the repair or rebuilding of the destroyed structures, whereupon the plaintiff, after demanding said rent from the Fillmore Arcade Company, and also from the original lessees of the property, and after demanding of each of these that the destroyed structure be rebuilt, and after noncompliance with both of these demands, commenced this action.

In respect to one of the stockholders of the Fillmore Arcade Company, Abraham Ruef, who was also made a defendant in said action, the following additional facts appear: That said Ruef was a stockholder in said Fillmore Arcade Company on the 14th day of December, 1906, the date when said corporation took the assignment of the lease in question from the original lessees, and he remained such stockholder until December, 1908, when he assigned and transferred all of his said stock in said corporation to other persons, delivering to them his only indorsed certificate therefor and demanding of the secretary of the corporation that the said shares of stock so assigned by said Ruef be transferred to the name of his assignee upon the books of the corporation. Said transfer upon the books of the corporation was not, however, made, for the reason apparently that the certificate of said shares of stock were not presented for surrender, and hence the name of said Ruef appeared upon the books of said corporation as the owner and holder of said stock down to the time of the institution of this action.

Upon the foregoing state of facts the contention of the appellant herein is this, that as one of the original lessees of said property going out of possession thereof on December 14, 1906, the date of the assignment of said lease to the Fillmore Arcade Company, and having had nothing to do thereafter with the possession of said property or with the giving of any notice extending the term of said lease, his only obligation was to pay the rent for the original three-year term, either as one of the original lessees or as a surety of the assignee of such lessees, and that his obligation in either capacity ended with said three-year term; that the privity of contract as well as privity of estate of said original lessees terminated with the exercise of their assignee's election to extend the term of the lease, and hence that the appellant cannot be held liable for any rent accruing and unpaid after the original but during the extended term.

We are unable to agree with this contention. When the original lessees obtained the lease in question they secured by its express terms the right to the possession and control of the property covered by it for the express term of three years and for the additional term of three years more at their election. Had they themselves exercised said right of election it would seem to be clearly established by the current of authority both of the courts and text-writers that their holding under the extended term would be by virtue of the original demise, and not by virtue of the notice of extension. The fact that the lessees had assigned their rights under said lease to another, who might exercise the right of extension of its original term, thus becomes immaterial, in the absence of a novation between their assignee and the original lessor, since the lease was for the full term, including the extension, and the original lessees were liable thereunder as principals while they held the lease, and as sureties for their assignee thereafter and during such full term for which they had secured the right to have and enjoy said premises under said lease. This principle was laid down in the case of Wiener v. Graff & Co., 7 Cal. App. 580, 95 Pac. 167, the court in dealing with a lease similar in terms, holding:

"That upon compliance with the condition as to giving notice the lessees would then be entitled to hold for the additional term under the original lease, and not under the notice—the lease would then become a lease for both the original and extended terms."

It will be noticed by reference to the terms of the lease in question here that the right of election granted to the lessees therein was not the right to renew said lease upon notice, but was an election to take a three-year extension of this lease. This was in effect a stipulation giving them an additional three-year term at their election. In McAdam on Landlord and Tenant (3d Ed.) 160, it is said:

"A lease for one year, or three additional years if the lessee elect, is of itself a lease for four years if the lessee elect to continue it beyond the first year. This is so because, if the lessee makes the election, he still holds under the original demise; there is no further act to be done by the lessor."

In the case of Sheppard v. Rosenkans, 109 Wis. 58, 85 N. W. 199, 83 Am. St. Rep. 886, the court in commenting upon a lease similar to that in the instant case, says:

"It was an unconditional lease for the period expiring April 30, 1896, and a conditional lease for four years thereafter. The condition was the giving of a certain notice by the lessee, but it might just as well have been the happening of an event over which neither party had control, such as the death of a person or the falling of a tree. When such required event happened, the condition was satisfied, and the lease became a lease for the additional period by its own terms. The act of the lessee in giving the notice was not the making of an agreement, but the performance of a condition upon which the previously made agreement depended. * * *

The following authorities also support the same view: Kimball v. Cross, 136 Mass. 300; House v. Burr, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 525; Cusack v. Gunning System, 109 Ill. App. 588.

The case of Samuels v. Ottinger, 169 Cal. 209, 146 Pac. 638, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 830, from which the appellant quotes certain extracts, which he asserts uphold his contention, will be found upon the whole to rather sustain the respondent's position upon this appeal, since the court, in construing the much more doubtful terms of the lease involved in that case, held the lessees liable for the entire term of the lease notwithstanding the assignment thereof.

Upon the foregoing reasoning and authorities we are therefore of the opinion that the trial court was not in error in adjudging the appellant liable for the unpaid rent accruing after termination of the original three-year term of said lease, but during the extended term thereof.

This being the only point involved in this case, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KNIGHT, Judge pro tem.

45 Cal. App. 696

FAY v. COX. (Civ. 2100.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 30, 1920.)

1. NEGLIGENCE — 111(3) — ALLEGATION OF PROXIMATE CAUSE OF INJURY ESSENTIAL.

Negligence may be charged in general terms, that is, what was done, without stating the particular omission which rendered the act negligent, but it must appear from the facts averred that the negligence caused or contributed to the injury.

2. NEGLIGENCE — 111(3) — PROXIMATE CAUSE OF INJURY BY FIRE FROM ENGINE SUFFICIENTLY ALLEGED.

Where it appeared from the complaint that the fire in question was the result of the negligent construction and operation of defendant's traction engine, and that the fire destroyed plaintiff's grain, causal connection between defendant's negligence and plaintiff's loss was sufficiently shown, and plaintiff was not required to anticipate or negative in his complaint any defense as to an intervening agency.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1039(4) — COMPLAINT NOT SHOWING PROXIMATE CAUSE HELD HARMLESS ERROR WHERE ANSWER TENDERED ISSUE.

Mere defect in the complaint through failure to allege or show sufficiently causal connection between defendant's negligence and plaintiff's loss was rendered harmless, where the allegations of the answer tendered the issue of agency intervening between the negligence and the loss, and such issue was fully tried.

4. NEGLIGENCE — 134(11) — EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SHOW THAT FIRE CAME FROM ENGINE.

In an action for destruction of a crop by fire set by defendant's traction engine, evidence held to warrant a finding that the fire was set by defendant's engine.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1002 — VERDICT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE CONCLUSIVE.

Where the evidence is in conflict, the appellate court must follow that for the party who secured verdict.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1003 — APPELLATE COURT CANNOT INTERFERE WITH VERDICT UNLESS SATISFIED IT IS UNREASONABLE.

Before the appellate court is authorized to interfere with verdict for plaintiff, court must be satisfied that it is entirely unreasonable to attribute the finding to a condition imposing liability on defendant.

7. DAMAGES — 112, 174(3) — MEASURE OF DAMAGES FOR DESTRUCTION OF CROP STATED; EVIDENCE OF DAMAGE TO CROP ADMISSIBLE.

In case of destruction of a growing crop, it is proper to admit evidence showing kind of crops land is capable of producing, kind destroyed, average yield per acre on land not destroyed and on similar land, expense of cultivation, harvesting, and marketing, and market value at time of maturity or within a reasonable time; but, while such evidence may be considered in determining damages, the true measure of compensation is the value of the crop in the condition it was when destroyed.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR — 1052(5), 1068(4) — ERROR IN RULINGS AS TO DAMAGES HARMLESS WHERE LEGAL DAMAGES EXCEEDED AMOUNT AWARDED.

In action for destruction of barley by fire set by defendant's engine, any error in permitting plaintiff to prove highest market value of barley during month of fire, and in instructing that in measuring damage jury were to determine proper yield and market value of crop and deduct costs, and that in arriving at market value they had right to determine what grain was selling for at the time or within a reasonable time, was harmless to defendant, where even at the lower market price for barley, precisely at the time of the fire, actual damage to plaintiff was in excess of amount awarded him.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; W. H. Langdon, Judge.

Action by John J. Fay against W. W. Cox. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. J. Maddux, of Modesto, G. A. Ditz, of Stockton, and Goldman & Altman, for appellant.

Ostrander, Clark & Carey, of Oakland, and J. M. Walthall, of Modesto, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Plaintiff and defendant owned and occupied adjoining tracts of land in Stanislaus county. On the morning of June 7, 1916, a fire started on the ranch of defendant, subsequently spreading to that of plaintiff on the south, and destroyed about 150 acres of standing ripened barley, which plaintiff alleged was of the value of $4,464. Plaintiff claimed that defendant, by reason of his negligence, was responsible for this destruction of the grain. The theory of the contention is found in the following allegation of the complaint:

"That on the 7th day of June, 1916, the defendant above named was the owner of a certain steam traction engine, which he was at said time operating by and through his agents and employes, acting in the course of their employment, in the harvesting of a certain crop of ripened grain, belonging to defendant, situated upon section 19 of said township and range, and adjacent to the said unharvested crop of barley belonging to plaintiff; that on said date, by reason of the negligent and careless operation of said traction engine by the said agents and employes of said defendant, and by reason of its defective condition and defendant's failure to keep it in proper repair and to equip it with adequate devices to prevent the escape of fire or sparks from the smokestack, ash pan, fire box, and other parts of said engine, and the use by defendant of defective and improper appliances and material in and upon said traction engine, the stubble and dried grass and other inflammable matter in which said engine was then being operated was set on fire by burning material which escaped from said traction engine by reason of the said negligence of defendant and his said agents and employes; that said fire then and there spread to the plaintiff's said crop of unharvested barley and entirely destroyed it."

The jury found a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $2,066, and the appeal is from the judgment rendered upon said verdict in favor of said plaintiff for that sum.

The points urged for reversal by appellant are:

"(1) That the complaint fails to state a cause of action; (2) that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict; (3) that the court erred with reference to the admission of testimony and in instructing the jury upon the measure of damages."

[1, 2] The attack upon the complaint is directed to the asserted failure "to allege either directly or inferentially that the destruction of plaintiff's grain proximately resulted from the negligence of defendant as herein alleged." Manifestly, the mere allegation of negligence on the part of defendant and the loss of property by plaintiff would not charge the former with responsibility for the damage. It must appear expressly, or by fair intendment, that said negligence caused or contributed to said loss. This, of course, is fundamental, and the principle is stated in Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 95, 27 Pac. 29, as follows:

"It is well settled that negligence may be charged in general terms; that is, what was done, * * * without stating the particular omission which rendered the act negligent. But it must appear from the facts averred that the negligence caused or contributed to the injury."

In his closing brief, appellant disclaims any contention "that plaintiff was required to use the words that the injury complained of was the proximate result of the negligence alleged," but he insists that any possible intervening agency, which would excuse the original act of negligence, should have been eliminated. He does not suggest the phraseology by which this might be made to appear, but declares that "the complaint should have in some manner alleged that the negligence of defendant was the proximate cause of the injury complained of."

It may be that in this respect the complaint could have been improved, but we think the criticism of appellant is somewhat hypercritical. It certainly does appear that the fire was the result of the negligent construction and operation of defendant's engine, and that this fire destroyed plaintiff's grain. The causal connection between the negligence and the loss seems thus to be expressly though concisely shown. Plaintiff was not required to anticipate or negative any defense that might be urged as to an intervening agency.

[3] Moreover, any such defect, if existing, was rendered entirely harmless by reason of the allegations of the answer tendering such issue and the fact that the issue was fully tried. In said answer it was denied—"that on said date, or any other time, by reason of the negligent or careless or any operation of said traction or any engine, by the said or any agents or agent, or employes or employe, of said defendant, or at all, the grain, or any part thereof, of the plaintiff was destroyed by fire;" or "that by reason of defendant's failure to keep the engine in proper repair, or at all, or its defective or any condition, or to equip it with adequate or any devices, or to prevent the escape of fire or sparks from the smokestacks, ash pan, or fire box, or other or any parts or part of said engine, any grain of the plaintiff was destroyed."

The point is covered by the decisions of the Supreme Court in Sampson v. Hughes, 147 Cal. 62, 81 Pac. 292; Santa Rosa Bank v. Paxton, 149 Cal. 195, 86 Pac. 193; Grossetti v. Sweasey, 176 Cal. 793, 169 Pac. 687.

We quote from the last of these as follows:

"And the matter of pleading becomes unimportant when a case is fairly tried, as this one apparently was, upon the merits and under circumstances which indicate that nothing in the pleadings misled appellant to its injury."

[4, 5] As to the second point, it is not disputed that the fire started on defendant's premises and spread rapidly to the barley field of plaintiff and soon destroyed his grain; there being a strong north wind at the time. Furthermore, it is a fair inference that this fire was caused by sparks from defendant's engine, and that it was traceable to his negligence as alleged in the complaint. The fire originated in a pile of straw, a short distance from the uncut grain, and was discovered a few moments after the engine had passed the point. The situation was such that any other reasonable inference could hardly be drawn than that the fire came from the engine. This was the only apparent cause, and it may be added that no effort was made to show that it might have originated from any other source. It is true that there is a conflict of evidence as to the distance of said pile of straw from the course of the engine; but, manifestly, we must accept that which harmonizes with the verdict, and, so regarding the case, it seems quite rational to conclude that the fire came from the engine.

As to the element of negligence, it appears that there was no spark arrester on the engine, and from certain testimony, which we cannot say is inherently improbable, the jury was justified in concluding that if said engine had been so equipped the fire would not have occurred, and that the exercise of ordinary care required the use of said arrester on the part of appellant. Here, again, the evidence is strikingly conflicting, the defendant having made an impressive showing, but we must follow the evidence for respondent. In this connection we may remark that immediately after the fire the defendant secured an arrester for his engine—a circumstance of no inconsiderable significance.

Again, when Mr. Fay arrived on the scene, the engine was standing still and whistling for the water wagon, but it soon started to meet the latter and "it strung a string of fire all the way until he met Mr. Cox with the water wagon." It is a fair inference that this fire in the stubble extending for several hundred feet caused, or at least contributed to, the destruction of plaintiff's grain. It was for the jury to say, also, that it was an act of negligence for the defendant's employes in this manner to drive across the field with the fire thus dropping from the engine. It may be added that there was evidence that the fire box was defective. In fact, plaintiff testified that defendant admitted as much and thus accounted for the fire. But whether this was true, or whether the wheels picked up burning straw and thereby scattered the fire as claimed by appellant, we cannot hold the inference to be unfair that such conduct constituted negligence.

Both these theories were set forth in the complaint; they find support in the evidence, and singly or together they warrant the finding in favor of plaintiff. Sampson v. Hughes, supra.

[6] Appellant apparently conceives it to be the duty of this court to reverse the judgment if "the origin of the fire could be reasonably attributed to a condition for which no liability attaches"; but the truth is that before we are authorized to interfere we must be satisfied that it is entirely unreasonable to attribute it to a condition imposing liability. It is not sufficient if a finding in favor of appellant would be rational, but we must be satisfied that the opposite finding is irrational. We cannot say that such is the case.

[7] The third point grows out of the fact that the court permitted respondent, over the objection of the appellant, to prove the highest market value of barley during the month of June, 1916, and that the court instructed the jury as follows:

"In measuring the damage, you will determine from the evidence the proper yield and market value of the crop and deduct therefrom the cost of harvesting and marketing the same, and in arriving at the market value you have the right to determine what grain of the same kind and similar quality was selling for in the market in the vicinity where said crop was grown at the time of its destruction or within a reasonable time thereafter."

In this connection the claim of appellant is that the damage to the innocent party is measured by the actual loss sustained by him at the time of the destruction of his crop, and that the jury had no right to speculate as to any possible increased value that might have accrued to plaintiff had he held his grain throughout the month of June. Appellant claims that the rule is, as stated in Teller v. Bay & River Dredging Co., 151 Cal.

209, 90 Pac. 942, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 267, 12 Ann. Cas. 779:

"The true measure of damage for the total destruction of a growing or standing crop is the value of the crop in the condition it was at the time and place of destruction."

As to the values, the evidence shows that on June 7th barley was worth \$1.20 a bushel, whereas the highest price in June was \$1.31 $\frac{1}{4}$. It is the claim of appellant, therefore, that the jury may have adopted the latter figure, to the prejudice of appellant. The trial court probably misapplied the language of the Supreme Court in the Teller Case, supra, wherein it said:

"The true rule in arriving at the value at the time of destruction is that laid down by the trial court and abundantly supported by authority. The Supreme Court of Utah well states the proposition (Lester v. Highland Boy Gold Min. Co., 27 Utah, 470, 101 Am. St. Rep. 988, 76 Pac. 341 [1 Ann. Cas. 761]): 'In cases of destruction of growing crops it is proper and important to introduce and admit evidence showing the kind of crops the land is capable of producing, the kind of crops destroyed, the average yield per acre of each kind on the land not destroyed and on other similar lands in the immediate neighborhood, cultivated in like manner, the stage of growth of the crops, at the time of injury or destruction, the expense of cultivating, harvesting, and marketing the crops, and the market value at the time of maturity, or within a reasonable time after the injury or destruction of the crops. And,' proceeds that court, 'while all such evidence may be considered by the jury in determining the amount of damages, if any, still the true measure of compensation is the value of the crops in the condition they were in at the time of their injury or destruction.'"

In other words, it is proper to consider the market value at the time or about the time, but this is for the purpose of determining the value at the time of the destruction.

[8] But it is perfectly apparent that this error was without prejudice, for the reason that all the evidence shows that at the lower rate the damage was in excess of the amount awarded by the jury. The total yield from the 155 acres at 20 sacks per acre would be 3,100 sacks, weighing 108 pounds a sack, and at $1.20 per cwt. the value would be $4,017.60. The entire cost of harvesting and marketing, according to the evidence, would be $942.40 and the net value would be $3,075.20. Or, if we take the lowest estimate of the yield, 18 sacks to the acre, the net value would be $2,674.44. Moreover, it was admitted by the answer that the value of the grain was $3,000, the language being:

"Denies that said crop of barley was at the time of its destruction, as set out in the complaint, or otherwise, of the reasonable value of $4,464, or any other amount over and above the sum of $3,000."

Even if we subtract from this sum the cost of harvesting and marketing, the balance would be in excess of the jury's award.

We think that under well-established principles we are not authorized to disturb the judgment, and it is therefore affirmed.

FERRO v. LAGOMARSINO. (Civ. 3173.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 2, 1920. On Petition for Rehearing, March 3, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 1, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 981—GRANTING OF NEW TRIAL ON NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE IS FOR TRIAL COURT.

The matter of granting a new trial for newly discovered evidence is with the trial court, and it is for that court to say whether the proffered evidence is such as to affect the decision of the court if introduced.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 1010(1)—FINDINGS SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE NOT DISTURBED.

Findings of the trial court supported by evidence are conclusive on appeal.

On Petition for Rehearing.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 989—IN CONSIDERING FINDINGS EVIDENCE MUST BE CONSIDERED AS A WHOLE.

The evidence must be considered as a whole, and a finding cannot be successfully attacked on the ground that particular evidence does not support it.

4. EVIDENCE $\S$ 16—TRIAL $\S$ 395(1)—JUDICIAL NOTICE OF MEANING OF WORDS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1875, subd. 1, the courts will take judicial notice of the meaning of the words "trial balance" which were indorsed on a statement as to the assets of a corporation whose stock defendant sold to plaintiff; so, in view of Civ. Code, $\S$ 3532, it was unnecessary for trial court sitting without jury to define the phrase in its finding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by Giovanni Ferro against John Lagomarsino. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Earl E. Moss, of Ventura, for appellant. Robert M. Clarke, of Los Angeles, and Orr & Gardner, of Ventura, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought to recover the sum of $9,100, claimed by plaintiff for alleged misrepresentation as to the value of certain shares of stock in the Theater Improvement Company, a corporation, such misrepresentation being alleged as follows:

" * * * Defendant stated and represented to plaintiff that the capital stock of the Theater Improvement Company * * * was worth the sum of $130 and of the market value of the sum of $125 per share, and that it was then earning and paying dividends at the rate of one-half per cent. per month or 6 per cent. per annum on the par value of $100 per share, and then and there delivered to plaintiff a certain statement which defendant stated and represented to plaintiff was a true and correct statement of the financial affairs of said Theater Improvement Company, which said statement was in words and figures as follows, to wit:

Trial Balance Theater Imp. Co.

To August 1, 1916, from May 1, 1913.

To W. T. Wyatt Co.....	$ 3,345 00
" Central Bank	929 17
" Dividends	12,572 50
" Expense	12,531 05
" Real estate and improvements	70,326 25
" Loss—Gain	413 29
By Capital stock		$ 53,500 00
" Surplus		14,105 10
" Rents—Income		32,512 16
	$100,117 26	$100,117 26

"That plaintiff believed that all said statements and representations so made by defendant were true, and, relying wholly on the truth thereof, on or about the 1st day of October, 1916, plaintiff purchased 140 shares of the capital stock of said Theater Improvement Company from defendant for the sum of $17,500, and paid to defendant said sum of $17,500 by accepting the said * * * shares * * * from defendant as part of the purchase price of $67,500 paid by defendant to plaintiff for 587½ shares of the capital stock of the Del Norte Land Company, a corporation, sold to defendant by plaintiff."

Following this, by proper allegation, appears a statement that said Theater Improvement Company stock was not worth the sum of $130 per share, and that it did not have said alleged market value, but that, on the contrary, the shares were not worth and did not have "a market value of more than $60 per share, and that said Theater Improvement Company was not then earning or paying dividends * * * at a rate greater than one-quarter per cent. per month, or 3 per cent. per annum." Plaintiff further alleged that the "statement" referred to was false in certain particulars, and that all these alleged false statements were made with the intent and for the purpose of inducing plaintiff, and that he was so induced, to purchase the stock, with the intent and purpose to deceive and defraud him.

The issue of fraud is made by appropriate denials in the answer. The court found in favor of the defendant on the issues thus presented, and judgment was entered accordingly. There was a motion for a new trial, which was denied. The appeal is from the judgment.

Appellant urges that the findings are not supported by the evidence, and that the court erred in denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. We shall discuss the latter proposition first.

[1] The affidavits presented by plaintiff on the motion for new trial, and which were based on newly discovered evidence, are set forth in full in the record. As to whether the ruling of the court was error, we are confronted at the outset with two questions: (1) Was due diligence shown? and (2) if so, would the introduction of the testimony revealed by these affidavits produce a different result on another trial? Without any further discussion, we are bound to decide that there is nothing contained in the record which will permit us to disturb the ruling of the learned trial judge. The matter of granting a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence is with the trial court, and it is for that court to say whether or not the proffered evidence is such as would affect the decision of the court if introduced. The court in this instance determined that it would not. Jones v. Lewis, 19 Cal. App. 575, 126 Pac. 853; Mayne v. San Diego, etc., Ry. Co., 175 Pac. 690; Cahill v. Stone Co., 167 Cal. 135, 138 Pac. 712; People v. Selby, etc., Co., 163 Cal. 94, 124 Pac. 692, 1135, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1267; Oberlander v. Fixen & Co., 129 Cal. 690, 62 Pac. 254.

[2] As to whether or not the evidence supports the findings, we are not disposed to indulge in a lengthy discussion, which, even were it conceded that such might be enlightening and interesting, we are convinced would be without profit, save only to law-book publishers. Suffice it to say that there is direct conflict in the evidence as to the material issues involved. In such case, if there be any evidence in support of the findings, this court will not interfere. Levey v. Henderson, 177 Cal. 21, 169 Pac. 673; Kuck v. McConnell, 178 Pac. 533. In the case at bar we find evidence which amply supports the findings of the trial court.

No other point raised need be considered. Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; SLOANE, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. This application for a rehearing is nothing more nor less than a further argument on the same points urged by appellant in the main case—that of insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. No new point is raised nor has any point previously urged been made more clear or presented in a different light.

In the opinion heretofore handed down by this court it was said, in discussing the point as to whether the evidence supports the findings:

"Suffice it to say that there is direct conflict in the evidence as to the material issues involved. In such case, if there be any evidence in support of the findings, this court will not interfere. * * * In the case at bar we find evidence which amply supports the findings of the trial court."

We have not been convinced that such statement was or is erroneous. Indeed, the learned trial court resolved the conflict referred to in respondent's favor, and that decision is binding upon this court. Counsel has not called our attention to any law under which, when confronted with facts such as are found in the instant case, will authorize this court to set aside the findings of the trial court and in effect substitute others favorable to appellant.

[3] As respondent puts it:

"The vice of the appellant's position is that he selects a particular finding for attack, selects some evidence from the record, and then proceeds to argue at some length that this particular evidence does not sustain a particular finding or portion of a finding."

That will not do. The evidence must be viewed as a whole.

[4] One instance of that which we regard as a narrow and perverted conception of the evidence we cite from among the 21 "points" urged, viz.:

"* * * A trial balance might very well be between the dates upon the top of the statement, which was the interpretation that appellant placed upon it, and the only interpretation that a person of the least intelligence could place upon such a remarkable document."

Unfortunately for the author of the foregoing statement, the "trial balance" referred to shows nothing, except certain totals, as of the date August 1, 1916, there being no statement or item of any transaction appearing therein at or under any date from May 1, 1913, to and including August 1, 1916. In the same connection it is urged that "the court's finding that the statement was a 'trial balance,' without defining these words, means nothing." This appears to us rather remarkable, in view of the fact that certain facts of general notoriety may be assumed to be true. Under subdivision 1 of section 1875, Code of Civil Procedure, the court would take judicial notice of the true significance of the words "trial balance," and, if need be, may resort for its aid to appropriate books or documents of reference. This fact is equally binding on all. We know of no law, and none has been called to our attention, which requires the court to define any such phrase. The "statement" referred to was certainly not a report of the corporation's financial condition. Under these conditions, to require the defining of such words by the court would be to exact the performance of an idle and unnecessary act. This the law does not do. Section 3532, Civ. Code.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

DEPONS v. ARISS et al. (S. F. 8718.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 19, 1920.
Rehearing Denied April 16, 1920.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨ 705 (1) —
DRIVER OF MOTORTRUCK HELD NOT NEGLI-GENT AS TO DECEASED WHO STEPPED INTO PATH OF TRUCK.

Where deceased was cranking a car parked along the curb of a street where travel was restricted because of repairs on the street car tracks, the driver of a motortruck which struck deceased cannot be deemed negligent, where deceased suddenly left his place of safety and stepped in front of the truck, which had been deflected so as to escape a wagon; for the driver of the truck had a right to assume that deceased would not recklessly expose himself.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⇨ 706(3)—RES
IPSA LOQUITUR DOES NOT APPLY IN CASE OF ONE STRUCK BY AUTOMOBILE.

Where plaintiff's intestate, who was cranking a car parked along the curb, left his place of safety, stepping in front of a motortruck, which killed him, the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur does not apply; for there can be no presumption of negligence from the mere fact of injury.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by Celestin Depons, administrator of the estate of Jean B. Depons, deceased, against W. B. Ariss and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ostrander, Clark & Corey, of Oakland, for appellant.

Decoto & Calkins, of Oakland, and Barry J. Colding and Theodore Hale, both of San Francisco (Eugene F. Conlin, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

KERRIGAN, Judge pro tem. This is an action for damages for the death of one Jean B. Depons. The action was brought by the administrator of the estate of deceased, and the complaint alleges that the death of Depons was caused by the negligent operation of an automobile truck, which was driven at the time of the accident by defendant Clark, an employé of the other defendants, Ariss and Knapp. The case was tried without a jury, and the court rendered judgment in favor of defendants. Findings were waived, but it appears from the record that the trial court's decision was based upon the fact that the plaintiff had failed to establish negligence on the part of defendants. It was stipulated that in the event of a reversal that the trial court should be directed to enter a judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $2,800. To prove her case plaintiff introduced only two witnesses at the trial. The testimony of one of these was confined to the surroundings and the condition of the street where the accident occurred. The other witness testified to the circumstances of the accident. The facts, therefore, are practically without conflict, and, in brief, are as follows: Deceased was employed and interested in a laundry, situated on the east side of San Pablo avenue, between Fifty-Ninth and Sixtieth streets, in the city of Oakland.

San Pablo runs in a general northerly and southerly direction. A street railway company occupies tracks in the center thereof. On the day of the accident these tracks were in the course of repairs, and the westerly portion of the street was, in consequence, obstructed and unsuitable for travel. For this reason, vehicles going in both directions were using the easterly side. The width of the roadway on this portion of the thoroughfare, from the curb to the first car rail, is about 24 feet. Of this, 2 feet adjoining the car tracks was excavated and had been filled with fresh cement and was not suitable for travel, leaving about 22 feet of this easterly portion of the street open for traffic.

On the day of the accident, a Ford machine, facing south, was parked along the curb in front of the laundry. Deceased was bending over in front of this machine, apparently fixing or cranking it, his back being turned to the south. While in this position a heavy truck, some 8 feet wide and loaded with crushed gravel, operated by defendant Clark, was proceeding northerly along the easterly side of the street, approaching the point where the Ford machine was standing. At the same time a coal wagon was moving southerly along the same side of the street, and it also had reached the immediate vicinity of the stationary machine. After the coal wagon had passed defendants' truck, Clark, the driver thereof, moving at from 10 to 12 miles an hour, swung sharply to the left in order to clear the Ford car, which was then from 10 to 12 feet away. At this time, without warning or intimation of his intention so to do, deceased straightened up, stepped to his left with his hand upon the fender of the car, and stood directly in front of the approaching truck. Immediately upon seeing the deceased in this exposed position the driver of the truck, who had then slowed down to about 8 or 10 miles an hour, sounded his horn, shut off his engine, apparently applied his brakes, and turned sharply to the left to avoid striking deceased, but the truck, travelling by gravity of its own momentum, struck deceased, and at the same moment stopped.

The above facts, relating to the accident, were testified to by a witness, who was driving his machine about 15 feet behind the truck, and he was the only witness of the accident produced at the trial. Upon the conclusion of this testimony, plaintiff announced that these were all the facts to be offered. The trial court thereupon expressed the opinion that plaintiff had proved no negligence on the part of defendants, but that the act of deceased in stepping in front of the moving truck was the proximate cause of his death. Judgment followed for defendants.

[1] Under the facts stated we are asked to reverse the judgment. This we cannot do. It was shown that deceased left a position of safety and put himself directly in the path of the approaching truck. This evidence was sufficient to support the conclusion of the trial court. Under these circumstances no duty was imposed upon the driver of the truck to assume that deceased would suddenly expose himself to imminent peril. On the contrary, he had a right to conclude that he would not recklessly move directly in front of the approaching machine. Green v. Los Angeles Terminal Ry. Co., 143 Cal. 31, 44, 76 Pac. 719, 101 Am. St. Rep. 68, and Basham v. Southern Pacific Co., 176 Cal. 320, 168 Pac. 359.

The facts further show that defendant Clark, after seeing deceased in a position of danger, used every proper care and precaution to avoid injuring him.

[2] Appellant invokes the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and claims that the facts as narrated make out a prima facie case of negligence sufficient to shift the burden of proof. We cannot subscribe to this contention. In this state negligence is not presumed from the mere fact of injury. Here no negligence on the part of defendants was shown, nor can any be implied from the circumstances surrounding the accident. The doctrine invoked has no application in such a case.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROBERT SHERER & CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 9254.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 20, 1920.
Rehearing Denied April 16, 1920.)

1. DIVORCE ⚭324—REQUIREMENT THAT FATHER PAY FIXED SUM DOES NOT TERMINATE LIABILITY TO SUPPORT CHILD.

A divorce decree requiring the father to pay a specified sum at stated intervals for the maintenance of his minor child does not relieve him from liability for the maintenance of the child and substitute therefor an ordinary debt or money obligation.

2. DIVORCE ⚭309—AMOUNT OF PAYMENT FOR SUPPORT OF CHILD MAY BE VARIED.

The court, having in divorce proceedings awarded custody of minor child to the mother and required father to pay a stated monthly sum for its support, may vary the amount so fixed from time to time in the exercise of its sound discretion.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⚭388—COMMISSION CAN DETERMINE CHILD'S DEPENDENCY ON DIVORCED FATHER.

Industrial Accident Commission, in proceedings to recover death benefits for the support of employe's minor child, whose custody had been awarded to her divorced mother, can determine whether the amount father was required to pay the mother for the child's support was sufficient for the entire support of the child.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⚭388—CHILD HELD "DEPENDENT" ON DIVORCED FATHER.

Where the payments which a father was required to make to his divorced wife for the support of his minor child were sufficient for the entire support of the child, the commission can find that the child was wholly "dependent" on the father within Workmen's Compensation Act, § 14, subd. a (2).

Shaw, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Certiorari by Robert Sherer & Co., a corporation, and another against the Industrial Accident Commission and others to review an award by the Industrial Accident Commission of death benefits to Ruth Iris Haskell, the minor daughter of William A. Haskell, who was killed in an industrial accident. Award affirmed.

Griffith R. Williams, and Redman & Alexander, all of San Francisco, for petitioners.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LENNON, J. Certiorari to review the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in awarding death benefits to Ruth Iris Haskell, the minor daughter of William A. Haskell, who was killed in an industrial accident. The issue presented is whether or not the commission was justified in finding that the applicant was wholly dependent for support upon the deceased employe.

It appears that the mother of the applicant, who appears as the guardian ad litem herein, obtained a decree of divorce in an action against Haskell. By this decree the mother was awarded the custody of the child, Haskell being ordered, however, to pay $20 a month for its support. The mother remarried, but the order requiring Haskell to pay $20 a month for the support of the child was in force at the time of his death. It is conceded that under section 14a (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 844) the applicant is to be presumed wholly dependent for support upon the deceased if, under the facts stated, he was legally liable for her maintenance.

[1] Petitioner contends, in effect, that where the court merely requires the payment by the father of a certain specified sum at stated intervals, it does to all intents and purposes relieve the father from liability for the maintenance of the child, creating in the place of such liability an ordinary debt or money obligation. A similar contention was made on behalf of defendant in the case of People v. Schlott, 162 Cal. 347, 122 Pac. 846, and was held to be without merit.

But it is insisted that, even if Haskell's obligation to support the applicant did continue after the divorce, it was an obligation which could be fulfilled by paying $20 a month, and that, inasmuch as the mother would be under a duty to contribute any additional sum needful to make suitable provision for the child, it necessarily followed that the girl was only partially dependent on the deceased. With this contention as a basis it is argued that the deceased was not legally liable for the maintenance of the child within the meaning of section 14a (2) of the statute. We do not undertake to decide whether or not the deceased would have been legally liable for the maintenance of the child within the meaning of the statute had the sum which he was required to pay been unquestionably insufficient for the entire support of the child.

[2] However that may be, it is certain that the court may fix a specified sum for the support of the child as a matter of administrative convenience and may vary its amount from time to time in the exercise of its sound discretion. Harlan v. Harlan, 154 Cal. 341, 346, 98 Pac. 32; Lewis v. Lewis, 174 Cal. 336, 338, 163 Pac. 42.

[3] This being so, it is, we think, in any case competent for the commission to determine as a matter of fact that the father was liable for the maintenance of the child where it finds upon competent evidence that the sum which he was ordered to pay was fully sufficient for its entire support.

[4] In the instant case the commission found:

"That the said monthly sum of $20 was fully sufficient for the entire support of said minor child in the custody and care of the mother."

It follows that the commission was justified in finding that the child was wholly dependent upon the deceased.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; OLNEY, J.; KER-RIGAN, Judge pro tem.

SHAW, J. I cannot agree with the conclusion of Justice LENNON.

A divorced man was by the decree of divorce required to pay $20 a month for the support of his minor child, whose custody was awarded to its mother. A person employed this man, and while he was so employed he was killed by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment. Thereupon the Industrial Accident Commission, although this man was liable for only $20 a month during the child's minority, a period of 10 years only, amounting at most to only $2,400, made an order compelling the employer of the man to pay for the benefit of the child $4,175 to be invested, held in trust, and paid to the child in installments of $25 a month, and continuing, if paid out of principal alone, until the child is 22 years old and as much longer as the accruing interest will carry it. It does not seem reasonable to conclude that the act was intended to produce a result so absurd and unjust. Its terms should receive a strict construction, if necessary, to avoid such injustice.

The father was legally liable for only $20 a month for the child's support. It was not a full liability. It was limited to that sum. The child was not one "for whose maintenance such parent was legally liable," within the meaning of section 14a (2) of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Stats. 1917, p. 844). The quoted language obviously refers exclusively and only to a complete liability, a liability for the expenses or cost of all necessities required for the support of the child, a parent who could be made to pay for such necessities, if furnished by a third person, whatever their reasonable cost, not a parent who could not be made to pay beyond a limited sum, nor one who could not be made to pay at all to any person except the mother.

In Continental, etc., Co. v. Pillsbury, decided October 8, 1919, 184 Pac. 658, the husband was declared to be "legally liable" for the support of the wife, although they were living apart and she had secured judgment against him for her maintenance. Some language in that opinion may seem inconsistent with the foregoing when considered without reference to the context. But the real point there decided is that the primary obligation of the husband for the wife's support remains, notwithstanding the maintenance decree. In this case the father is not "legally liable" when deprived of the custody of his child, except as provided in the decree of divorce. The two cases are unlike in fact and in law, and that case is not inconsistent with my position in this case.

For these reasons I am of the opinion that such a child is not conclusively presumed to be "wholly dependent" for support upon the parent who is not legally liable for its entire maintenance, if need be, and that the award is not warranted by the law.

HARRELSON v. MILLER & LUX, Inc.
(Sac. 2839.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 12, 1920.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚡41—CHARACTERIZATION OF LEASE AS SUCH NOT CONTROLLING, BUT EVIDENCE OF INTENTION.

Considered with the general tenor of the instrument, the fact that the parties called it a lease is some evidence that they intended it so to operate, though the characterization is not of controlling importance.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚡323—INSTRUMENT CONSTRUED AS "LEASE" AND NOT AS "CROPPING AGREEMENT."

Where an instrument characterized itself as a lease, treated possession as transferred, right of re-entry being reserved to owner, who also reserved a room in the dwelling house on the land, right to enter and inspect premises, etc., required lessee to keep premises in repair, created a definite term of three years, and provided for delivery to the lessor of his share of the crops off the premises, the instrument was a "lease," and not a mere "cropping agreement."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Lease.]

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚡45—RIGHTS OF TENANT FOR YEARS UNDER STATUTE STATED.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 819, 820, a tenant for years is entitled to the rights accorded by section 819, unless their exercise is forbidden by the lease itself; but so far as additional privileges are concerned his rights are measured by the terms of the instrument.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚡136—GRANT OF RIGHT TO PASTURE ON PASTURE LANDS NOT IMPLIED PROHIBITION AS TO GRAIN LANDS.

Where a single lease implied two agreements, first, the letting of the grain land which was included in the demised tract, and second, the letting the pasture land included in the tract, the fact that it expressly granted right to pasture the pasture land cannot be construed as implied prohibition to pasture straw and stubble on grain lands.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚡138—ONLY CUSTOMS OF GOOD HUSBANDRY IN THE VICINITY CAN OBLIGATE TENANT.

In the absence of such express provision in the lease, an obligation on the tenant's part to use for fertilizer the straw and stubble on grain lands covered by the lease can be based only on the rules and usages of good husbandry prevailing in the vicinity.

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚡139(1)—LESSEE FOR FARMING NOT OBLIGED TO LEAVE STRAW AND STUBBLE THEREON.

The pasture of grain land being common practice as incidental to farming, there was no obligation on the part of a lessee of land demised solely for the purpose of farming to leave straw and stubble on such land.

7. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⚡76(2)—SALE OF STUBBLE WITH LICENSE TO BRING SHEEP ON LAND NOT SUBLETTING.

Sale by lessee of straw and stubble on grain land, coupled with mere license to bring sheep up on land to use it, was not violation of covenant against subletting, since, if lessee had a right to sell the feed, he also had the right to use it on the land.

8. TRIAL ⚡397(1)—FAILURE TO FIND ON SPECIAL ISSUES SUPPORTED BY PROOF ERRONEOUS.

In suit by assignee from lessee of right to use stubble feed on grain land, where damages sustained by plaintiff through injury to his sheep occasioned by their premature removal from land by defendant lessor and by reason of loss sustained by premature dismantling of water troughs were capable of ascertainment to a reasonable certainty, the trial court erred in not finding on such issues.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡422—APPEAL WILL NOT BE DISMISSED FOR MISDESCRIPTION OF JUDGMENT IN NOTICE.

Notices of appeal are not strictly construed, and an appeal will not be dismissed because of a misdescription of the judgment or that to which it relates, unless it appears respondent has been misled.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡419(1)—NOTICE OF APPEAL FROM PART OF JUDGMENT HELD SUFFICIENT.

If notice of appeal from part of a judgment specifies the part with reasonable certainty, so that respondent is not misled, it will suffice even though the terms used in indicating the part appealed from are defective.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡419(1)—NOTICE HELD SUFFICIENT IN SPECIFYING PART OF JUDGMENT APPEALED FROM.

Judgment having consisted of two parts, first, that plaintiff recover nothing, and, second, that defendant recover $760 together with costs, notice of appeal from "that part of the final judgment * * * which limits the amount to be recovered by defendant from plaintiff to $760" held sufficient as indicating with reasonable certainty part of judgment providing that defendant recover such amount; further specifications relating to part of judgment failing to give judgment for defendant being cumulative and open to disregard as surplusage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by W. H. Harrelson against Miller & Lux, Incorporated. From judgment for plaintiff, both parties appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Stephens & Stephens, of Los Angeles, and Power & McFadzean, of Visalia, for plaintiff.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco, (Farnsworth & McClure, of Visalia, and Berkeley B. Blake, of San Francisco, of counsel), for defendant.

LENNON, J. Plaintiff was the owner of about 5,880 acres of land in Tulare county. This land was let by plaintiff to one L. B. Crow in 1910 for a term of three years, which was afterward extended to the 1st day of October, 1916. In June, 1916, Crow granted to defendant, Miller & Lux, the right to pasture said land with sheep. For this right Miller & Lux paid to Crow the sum of $3,040. After the sheep were taken onto the land, plaintiff received information of the fact and ordered defendant to remove them, which it did. Plaintiff thereupon instituted this suit to recover damages from defendant for various injuries to his property alleged to have been occasioned by the running and bedding of the sheep upon the land. Defendant filed a cross-complaint, wherein it asserted its right to run and bed the sheep upon plaintiff's land and sought to recover the value of the straw and stubble remaining upon the land at the time of the eviction, together with damages for the injury to its sheep occasioned by their removal and for the loss sustained in dismantling watering troughs erected by it upon the land. The trial court decided in effect that Crow had a right to grant to defendant the right to pasture its sheep upon the land; that defendant had had the benefit of one half of the straw and one half of the stubble upon the land; that the other half of the straw belonged to plaintiff; that defendant was entitled to recover $760 for the other half of the stubble, and that the other injuries alleged by defendant were too remote to justify recovery. Judgment was entered accordingly, and from the judgment so entered both parties have appealed.

[1, 2] Plaintiff contends that Crow had no right to allow defendant to pasture its sheep upon the land, basing this contention primarily upon the assumption that the agreement between plaintiff and Crow amounted to a mere cropping agreement and did not constitute a lease of the premises. We think, however, that the instrument executed by the parties to that agreement is to be construed as a lease. In reaching this conclusion we have not attached controlling importance to the fact that the instrument so characterizes itself. But, considered with the general tenor of the instrument, the fact that the parties called it a lease is some evidence that they intended it to operate as such. While retention of possession by the owner is one indication of a cropping agreement, the so-called lease repeatedly treated possession as transferred to Crow; right of re-entry being reserved to the owner for certain limited purposes only. Thus plaintiff reserved to himself the use of a certain room in the dwelling house upon the place, the right to enter and inspect the premises, and also the right to pasture four animals upon the land. If the arrangement was intended to make Crow a mere cropper, there would have been no necessity for the reservation by the plaintiff of such rights, for under a mere cropping agreement plaintiff would have had the right at any time to enter and occupy the land subject only to the rights of Crow with respect to the crops. It further appears that Crow was required to keep the premises in repair at his own expense. Moreover, a definite term of three years was created. Both the term and its length indicate that this was not a mere cropping agreement. Finally, delivery to the plaintiff of his share of the crops was to be made off the premises, strong evidence that the instrument constituted a lease. 16 R. C. L. 587. These provisions of the agreement, taken together with the description of the instrument as a lease by the parties themselves, indicate, we think, an intention to execute a lease.

Plaintiff next contends that Crow was not entitled to pasture the straw and stubble even if the instrument embodying their agreement did constitute a lease. This contention is based upon several grounds.

[3] The first of these grounds is that the right to pasture the straw and stubble was outside of Crow's rights as measured by section 820 of the Civil Code. Conceding in this behalf that the right in question is given to a tenant for years by section 819 of the Civil Code, since section 820 provides that "A tenant for years or at will has no other rights to the property than such as are given to him by the agreement or instrument by which his tenancy is acquired, or by the last section," plaintiff argues that wherever express rights are granted to a tenant by the lease itself he cannot claim any of the rights accorded by section 819. This argument is based upon the use of the word "or" which we have italicized in quoting the Code section. It is evident, however, from a consideration of sections 819 and 820, taken together, that it was intended by the Legislature that a tenant for years should be entitled to the rights accorded by the former section unless their exercise was forbidden by the lease itself, but that, so far as additional privileges were concerned, his rights should be measured by the terms of the instrument itself.

[4] It is contended, however, that the lease itself forbids the pasturing of the stubble and straw for the reason that since express provision is made for pasturing certain of the lands demised the failure to expressly authorize the pasturing of the stubble and straw must be held to amount to an implied prohibition by an application of the rule of construction expressio unius est exclusio alterius. We have examined the lease which defines the rights of Crow and find that it dealt with two separate and distinct subjects: First, the letting of the grain land which was included in the demised tract, the right to pasture which is involved herein; and, second, the letting of the pasture lands which were included in the tract, the latter demise being for an independent purpose, to enable Crow to raise stock on shares and to receive stock on the land to pasture for profit. We thus find two virtually independent agreements included within one lease. Under these circumstances, the fact that the lease expressly granted the right to pasture the pasture lands cannot be construed as an implied prohibition of the pasturing of the straw and stubble on the grain lands.

[5, 6] Apparently receding from the position taken in the court below that the lease should be construed as requiring a division of the straw between the lessor and lessee, plaintiff still contends that, if no division was to be made, at all events the straw and stubble should have been left upon the land as a fertilizer. There being no express provision to this effect in the lease, an obligation on Crow's part to so use the straw and stubble can be based, if at all, only upon the rules and usages of good husbandry prevailing in the vicinity. The evidence in the case shows without dispute, however, that pasturing grain land was a common practice as incidental to farming. This evidence it may be noted is also fatal to plaintiff's contention that Crow had no right to pasture the grain land since it was demised solely for the purpose of "farming." The pasturing of grain land being a common practice as incidental to farming, there was no obligation on the part of Crow to leave the straw and stubble upon the land. It follows that, if defendant was entitled to recover at all, it was entitled to recover for all of the straw of which it was deprived.

[7] Plaintiff insists, however, that whatever may have been Crow's rights to pasture the grain land himself, the granting of the right to the defendant amounted to a violation of the covenant in the lease against subletting. The contract between Crow and defendant amounted essentially to a sale of the feed coupled with a mere license to come upon the land to use it. If Crow had a right to sell the feed at all, he certainly had a right to grant the right to use it on the land, for obviously the stubble at least could not be otherwise utilized. That the granting of such a right is not a violation of a covenant against subletting has been directly held in Baldwin v. Jacobs, 182 Iowa, 789, 166 N. W. 271, 273. This view not only accords with the rule that such covenants should be strictly construed, but it also accords with a fair and reasonable construction of the covenant as forbidding the letting of the premises to a third person for the purpose of using them as it was provided that the lessee should use them, viz., for the purpose of raising grain and the development of such other interests as are usually incidental to farming.

[8] Although defendant introduced evidence in support of its allegation of damage sustained by reason of injury to the sheep occasioned by their premature removal from the land and by reason of the loss occasioned by the premature dismantling of its watering troughs, the court failed to find upon these issues. This was error. The special damages so set up by defendant are capable of ascertainment by proof to a reasonable certainty, and, so far as damage was suffered at all in the respects named, it was certainly the direct or proximate result of the act of plaintiff in forcing the removal of the sheep before the pasturage contracted for by defendant had been used. Under these circumstances, there is no apparent justification for the failure of the trial court to find upon the issues tendered.

[9-11] Defendant cannot, it is claimed, under its attempted appeal, avail itself of the record furnished in this case on the alternative plan, for the reason that the appeal is taken from that which does not appear in the judgment instead of from what does appear, and therefore is ineffectual in that there is a failure to appeal from any part of the judgment rendered. The notice of appeal specifies that the appeal is "from that part of the final judgment * * * which limits the amount to be recovered by defendant from plaintiff to $760, and from that part of said judgment which fails to give judgment in favor of the defendant for the balance of the damage prayed for in the answer and cross-complaint herein, and particularly from the part of the said judgment that fails to give judgment for the value of the straw upon the said property, and for the special damage alleged in the answer and counterclaim herein, and from the whole of the said judgment with the exception of the part thereof which adjudges that plaintiff take nothing by the said action, and that the defendant recover $760 from the plaintiff, together with costs of suit." The point raised is that this notice of appeal does not state that the appeal is "from the judgment, order or decree, or some specific part thereof," within the meaning of section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure. Notices of appeal are not strictly construed, and an appeal will not be dismissed because of a misdescription of the judgment or order to which it relates unless it appears that the respondent has been misled by such misdescription. Meley v. Boulon, 104 Cal. 262, 37 Pac. 931; Estate of Stone, 173 Cal. 675, 161 Pac. 258. If a notice of appeal from part of a judgment specifies the part appealed from with reasonable certainty so that respondent is not misled, such notice will suffice even though the terms used in indicating the part of the judgment appealed from are defective. Anderson v. Phegley, 54 Or. 102, 102 Pac. 603; State v. Bleth, 21 N. D. 27, 127 N. W. 1043. The judgment in the present case consists of two parts, namely: (1) That plaintiff recover nothing by the action; and (2) that defendant recover $760 together with costs,

By the use of the words "that part of the final judgment * * * which limits the amount to be recovered by defendant from plaintiff to $760," the notice indicates with reasonable certainty that part of the judgment which provides that defendant recover $760. The further specifications relating to the part of the judgment which fails to give judgment for the defendant, while they do not relate to a part of the judgment as rendered, are merely cumulative and may be disregarded as surplusage which does no injury. Sharon v. Sharon, 68 Cal. 326, 9 Pac. 187. The notice of appeal must therefore be held sufficient.

The judgment is reversed, with costs to defendant, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

1. ADMIRALTY § 1 — PURPOSE OF FEDERAL CONSTITUTION WAS TO ESTABLISH EXISTING MARITIME LAW.

The purpose of Const. U. S. art. 3, § 2, extending a federal judicial power to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, was to designate the existing law of the sea as that by which rights of litigants in maritime cases were to be determined.

2. ADMIRALTY § 20—POWER TO SAVE STATE REMEDIES DOES NOT INCLUDE POWER TO SAVE RIGHTS.

The validity of Judicial Code, §§ 24, 256 (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 991[3], 1233), conferring exclusive admiralty jurisdiction on federal courts, but saving the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it, does not establish the validity of the amendment by Act Oct. 6, 1917 (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, §§ 991[3], 1233), which extended the saving clause to secure to claimants the rights as well as the remedies under state Workmen's Compensation Laws.

3. COURTS § 90(2) — MAJORITY OPINION STATES LAW NOTWITHSTANDING DISSENT.

The opinion concurred in by the majority of the Justices of the United States Supreme Court establishes the law, though four of the Justices dissent therefrom.

4. COMMERCE § 12—POWER TO SUBJECT LIQUOR TRAFFIC TO STATE PROHIBITION DOES NOT EXTEND TO ADMIRALTY RIGHTS.

Decision upholding the validity of the statutes subjecting interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors to state prohibition does not establish the power to subject admiralty rights to the several state Workmen's Compensation Laws, since the former power was based upon the nature of intoxicating liquor.

5. ADMIRALTY § 20 — AMENDMENT SAVING STATE COMPENSATION FOR MARITIME INJURIES IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

The amendment of Judicial Code, § 256, by Act Oct. 6, 1917 (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, § 1233), saving to claimants for maritime injuries the rights and remedies under the Workmen's Compensation Law of any state, destroys the uniformity which Const. art. 3, § 2, was intended to secure in admiralty cases, since the Compensation Laws are not strictly confined to local matters, and therefore that amendment is unconstitutional.

Certiorari by Sudden & Christenson against the Industrial Accident Commission and others, to review the action of the Commission in awarding death benefits to Maria Soarez and another. Award annulled.

McCutchen, Willard, Mannon & Greene and McCutchen, Olney & Willard, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Henry Heidelberg, of San Francisco (A. E. Graupner and Warren H. Pillsbury, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

LENNON, J. Certiorari to review the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in awarding death benefits to respondents Maria and Carmina Soarez. The deceased, Joe Soarez, died as the result of an accidental injury sustained by him while employed as a stevedore on the deck of petitioner's vessel, which was at the time discharging a cargo of lumber at a San Francisco dock. The rights and liabilities of the parties in connection with the injury and death of Soarez were matters clearly within admiralty jurisdiction, and, prior to the amendment of the Judicial Code in 1917, the application of the California Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) would have been an unwarranted invasion of the admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts. Southern Pacific Co. v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205, 37 Sup. Ct. 524, 61 L. Ed. 1036, L. R. A. 1918C, 451, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 900.

At the time the decision in the Jensen Case was rendered, sections 24 and 256 of the Judicial Code gave to the District Courts of the United States exclusive original cognizance "of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it." 36 Stat. 1091, 1160, c. 231 (U. S. Comp. Stat. §§ 991, 1233). By Act Oct. 6, 1917, hereinafter referred to as "the amendment," Congress amended the Judicial Code to extend the saving clause to secure "to claimants the rights and remedies under the Workmen's Compensation Law of any state." Act Oct. 6, 1917, c. 97, 40 Stat. 395, § 2, Fed. Stat. Ann. Supp. 1918, pp. 401, 414 (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, §§ 991 [3], 1233). Petitioner resists the application of the amendment in support of the award in the instant case upon the ground that the said amendment is in conflict with article 3, section 2, of the United States Constitution and therefore wholly void.

[1] Article 3, § 2, of the Constitution, provides that the judicial power of the federal courts shall extend to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. It is the theory of petitioner that the existing law of the sea was impliedly designated by this provision to furnish the rules by which the rights of litigants in maritime cases were to be determined. The correctness of this theory is not open to question. Benedict's Admiralty (4th Ed.) § 139; Willoughby on the Constitution, c. LV; The Genesee Chief, 12 How. 443, 13 L. Ed. 1058; The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 558, 22 L. Ed. 654; Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 21 Sup. Ct. 212, 45 L. Ed. 314; Southern Pacific Co. v. Jensen, supra. Nor is it open to serious question that the reason for this implied adoption of the existing law of the sea as the basis and groundwork of the maritime system of the nation was to withdraw the rules and limits of maritime law from the disposal and regulation of the several states, thereby securing that uniformity and consistency at which the constitution aimed on all subjects of a commercial character affecting the intercourse of the states with each other and with foreign nations. The Lottawanna, supra; Southern Pacific Co. v. Jensen, supra. Whether or not the amendment to the Judicial Code assumes to authorize under federal sanction the exercise of a power of disposal and regulation over the rules and limits of maritime law which would be fatal to that uniformity and consistency which it was one of the primary objects of the Constitution to secure is the question now presented for our determination.

[2] On behalf of respondents, the suggestion is made that the numerous decisions upholding the constitutionality of the old "saving to suitors" clause of the Judicial Code foreclose all discussion in the instant case for the reason that the present amendment is merely an expansion of that clause. The difficulty with this reasoning lies in the fact that the original "saving clause" saved remedies only, whereas the amended clause saves, not only remedies, but rights as well. Under the original clause, the substantive law, wherever administered, was for maritime cases the law of the sea. Chelentis v. Luckenbach S. S. Co., 247 U. S. 372, 38 Sup. Ct.

501, 62 L. Ed. 1171. The old "saving clause" did not, therefore, interfere with the uniform and harmonious operation of the maritime law, and, consequently, it did not violate the Constitution. It by no means follows, however, that the same may be said of the clause as expanded to save to claimants the rights and remedies under the Workmen's Compensation Law of any state. By the statute as so amended, Congress has adopted as part of the substantive maritime law of the nation the rules governing liability in the case of industrial accidents contained in the Workmen's Compensation Acts of the several maritime states. In general, these acts, like that in force in this state, are exclusive in character; that is to say, where applicable at all, they furnish the sole basis for recovery in the case of industrial accidents. It follows that in states having this type of statute Congress has wholly abolished all liabilities under the general maritime law arising out of industrial accidents. The Howell (D. C.) 257 Fed. 578. The Workmen's Compensation Acts in the various states are widely divergent in their terms. Moreover, if it be true, as it undoubtedly is, that the amendment must be interpreted prospectively, there is no visible limit to the possible future divergence between the terms of these laws. Finally, when it is considered that the courts have upheld clauses in the Workmen's Compensation Acts giving to those statutes an extraterritorial effect, it is at once apparent that the rules adopted by Congress to govern the liabilities of the parties in the case of maritime accidents cannot fail to present an aspect of "confusion worse confounded." The question in the instant case, therefore, is whether or not the divergence and confusion so created in the substantive law of the sea interferes with the proper harmony and uniformity of the maritime law in its international and interstate relations which it was the aim of the Constitution to secure.

The constitutionality of the amendment to the Judicial Code has been upheld in Stewart v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 226 N. Y. 305, 123 N. E. 383. The reasoning upon which the decision in that case was based is stated as follows by the Court of Appeals of New York:

"In view of the close division of opinion amongst the learned Justices of the Supreme Court, involved in the decision of the Jensen Case, and in view of the concession made in the prevailing opinion that it was difficult to determine just how far the jurisdiction of the federal courts in maritime matters might be limited or affected by such legislation, we think that we are justified in assuming that the Congress has acted within its powers under the Constitution when, after due consideration, it has confided to the states the power to enact and enforce Workmen's Compensation Acts in respect of injuries received in the course of maritime employment. We think that it would be altogether an unjustifiable concession of lack of state jurisdiction in this field of compensation to injured workmen or their dependents, if, after this amendment by the Congress, we should hold that our statute was unconstitutional."

[3] This reasoning appears to us to be based upon a misconception of the Jensen Case. It is true that in that case four Justices dissented, but it is in the prevailing opinion that we must seek for a statement of the law as established by the decision of the court. It is also true that that opinion concedes the difficulty of determining the exact extent to which state legislation may limit or affect maritime rights and states that, considering the former opinions of the court:

"It must now be accepted as settled doctrine that * * * Congress has paramount power to fix and determine the maritime law which shall prevail throughout the country."

The court did not mean to imply, however, that Congress in the exercise of this "paramount power" or that the state Legislatures in the exercise of their somewhat indeterminate authority could destroy the uniformity of the maritime law which it was the aim of the Constitution to secure. That the uniformity of the maritime law is guaranteed by the Constitution itself is unequivocally stated and restated in the opinion of the court. That such, indeed, was the fundamental basis of the prevailing opinion is clearly recognized in the opinions of the dissenting Justices. Since, therefore, it has been determined that, whatever may be the power of Congress or of the state legislatures in maritime matters, the Constitution itself guarantees the uniformity of the maritime law, we can see no escape from the necessity of considering whether or not the amendment to the Judicial Code destroys the uniformity so guaranteed.

[4] Respondents contend that by granting to Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states and with the Indian tribes, the framers of the Constitution evinced a purpose to secure consistency and uniformity of regulation identical with that evinced by extending the judicial power of the federal courts to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. With this contention as a basis, respondents argue that the case of Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland R. Co., 242 U. S. 311, 37 Sup. Ct. 180, L. R. A. 1917B, 1218, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 845, which upholds the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon Act (U. S. Comp. St. § 8739), is a conclusive authority in favor of the constitutionality of the enactment which we are now considering. The position of respondents in this behalf is squarely sustained by the opinion of Judge Hand in The Howell, supra. The learned judge held, in effect, that the Clark Distilling Co. Case established the proposition that as to any matters over which Congress has jurisdiction, it may allow state legislation untrammelled until such time as in its own pleasure it may choose to assume explicit legislative control. While we have the utmost respect for the learning and ability of the author of that opinion, after mature deliberation we are constrained to disagree with his conclusion.

In Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland R. Co., supra, the United States Supreme Court held that Congress had power to forbid "the interstate shipment or transportation of intoxicating liquor which was intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of the state into which the liquor is transported." It was claimed "that the act was not within the power given to Congress to regulate because it submitted liquors to the control of the states by subjecting interstate commerce in such liquors to present and future state prohibitions, and hence, in the nature of things, was wanting in uniformity." It is not, we think, open to serious question but that this claim would be sound as applied to any ordinary article of commerce or but that it would have prevailed with the court had liquor been regarded, as it once was, as an ordinary article of commerce. Bowman v. C. & N. W. R. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700; Vance v. Vandercook Co. (dissenting opinion) 170 U. S. 438, 457, 18 Sup. Ct. 674, 42 L. Ed. 1100. The United States Supreme Court has shown an unmistakable inclination to uphold restrictions upon traffic in liquor without openly declaring that liquor was not an ordinary article of commerce. In so doing, the court has resorted to applications of constitutional principles which would not have been applied in like manner to uphold restrictions upon traffic in lumber or cotton which were similar in their scope and effect. See Willoughby on the Constitution, §§ 317-321, inclusive. This fact is recognized by the Chief Justice in the closing paragraph of the opinion in the Clark Distilling Co. Case:

"Before concluding, we come to consider what we deem to be arguments of inconvenience which are relied upon; that is, the dread expressed that the power by regulation to allow state prohibitions to attach to the movement of intoxicants lays the basis for subjecting interstate commerce in all articles to state control, and therefore destroys the Constitution. The want of force in the suggested inconvenience becomes patent by considering the principle which, after all, dominates and controls the question here presented, that is, the subject regulated and the extreme power to which that subject may be subjected. The fact that regulations of liquor have been upheld in numerous instances, which would have been repugnant to the great guaranties of the Constitution, but for the enlarged right possessed by government to regulate liquor has never, that we are aware of, been taken as affording the basis for the thought that government might exert an enlarged power as to subjects to which, under the constitutional guaranties, such enlarged power could not be applied. In other words, the exceptional nature of the subject here regulated is that basis upon which the exceptional power exerted must rest, and affords no ground for any fear that such power may be constitutionally extended to things which it may not, consistently with the guaranties of the Constitution, embrace." (The italics are ours.)

The difference between the character of the Webb-Kenyon Act and the amendment to the Judicial Code now under consideration, as well as the difference between the subjects of which these two laws treat is manifest. The one deals with certain property, the abuse of which is a menace to society. The other deals with ships (of whose vital importance to the welfare and even to the life of the nation the recent war furnishes a vivid reminder) and subjects them at one and the same time to the varying, and even conflicting, laws of the many states at whose ports they must call in the course of their necessary wanderings. As stated in The Lottawanna, supra:

"The general system of maritime law which was familiar to the lawyers and statesmen of the country when the Constitution was adopted was most certainly intended and referred to when it was declared in that instrument that the judicial power of the United States shall extend 'to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction.' * * * One thing, however, is unquestionable; the Constitution must have referred to a system of law coextensive with, and operating uniformly in, the whole country."

There was no general system of liquor laws designed to be preserved by the Constitution. Indeed, the subject-matters of the two enactments which respondents seek to link together are so vitally and patently different in nature, purpose, history, and circumstance that we find it impossible to conceive that the question of the constitutionality of one is conclusively determined by the ruling on the constitutionality of the other. We therefore consider ourselves not only free but also under a manifest and unescapable duty to consider on its own merits the question as to whether or not the Judicial Code as amended in effect destroys the uniformity of the admiralty and maritime law, which, like the law merchant, is always national, even international, in character, and necessarily so to fulfill its mission.

[5] It is only in case the state Workmen's Compensation Acts merely assume to regulate matters of a local nature admitting of diversity of treatment according to local necessities that their adoption by Congress as part of the maritime law would not be destructive of that uniformity which it was the aim of the Constitution to secure. Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. Ed. 23; Port

Richmond Ferry v. Hudson County, 234 U. S. 317, 34 Sup. Ct. 821, 58 L. Ed. 1330; Wilmington Transportation Co. v. Cal. R. R. Com'n, 236 U. S. 151, 35 Sup. Ct. 276, 59 L. Ed. 508; Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 7 Sup. Ct. 4, 30 L. Ed. 244. That such, however, is not the nature and effect of the Workmen's Compensation Acts has been conclusively determined by the United States Supreme Court in Southern Pacific Co. v. Jensen, supra. In this behalf the court said:

"If New York can subject foreign ships coming into her ports to such obligations as those imposed by her compensation statute, other states may do likewise. The necessary consequence would be destructive to the very uniformity in respect to maritime matters which the Constitution was designed to establish, and the freedom of navigation between the states and with foreign countries would be seriously hampered and impeded. A far more serious injury would result to commerce than could have been inflicted by the Washington statute authorizing a materialman's lien, condemned in The Roanoke," 189 U. S. 185, 23 Sup. Ct. 491, 47 L. Ed. 770. "The Legislature exceeded its authority in attempting to extend the statute under consideration to conditions like those here disclosed. So applied, it conflicts with the Constitution and to that extent is invalid." (The italics are ours.)

After admitting that state legislation may to some extent change or modify the general maritime law, and after refusing to attempt to define with exactness just how far such changes and modifications are valid, the court continued:

"And plainly, we think, no such legislation is valid, if it contravenes the essential purpose expressed by an act of Congress, or works material prejudice to the characteristic features of the general maritime law, or interferes with the proper harmony and uniformity of that law in its international and interstate relations. This limitation, at least, is essential to the effective operation of the fundamental purposes for which such law was incorporated into our national laws by the Constitution itself." (The italics are ours.)

The decision in the Jensen Case was based, therefore, upon the conclusion that the Workmen's Compensation Act of New York (Consol. Laws, c. 67), as applied to maritime accidents, did work material prejudice to the characteristic features of the general maritime law and did interfere with the proper harmony and uniformity of that law in its relation to international and interstate relations.

It is true that this language was used of the Workmen's Compensation Act of New York as applied to maritime accidents ex proprio vigore. But by no possible process of reasoning can it be asserted that that act, or any of the other varying and conflicting Workmen's Compensation Acts of the several maritime states, can have the effect of destroying the uniformity of the general maritime law when their force is derived from the respective state Legislatures, but that these identical acts have precisely the opposite effect when their force is derived from the act of Congress. If the Workmen's Compensation Act of New York, or of California, operating in the field of maritime accidents by the act of the state Legislature, would have the effect of inflicting upon commerce a far more serious injury than that which would have resulted from the Washington statute authorizing a materialman's lien which was condemned in The Roanoke, supra, its effect in the same field can be no less injurious and no more consonant with the uniformity of regulation which it was the aim of the Constitution to secure if its operation is extended to that field by the act of Congress. If the effect of the statute as enacted by the state Legislature was to make its application to maritime accidents a violation of the Constitution of the United States by reason of the fact that it destroyed the uniformity of the law of the sea, such must of necessity be its effect when enacted by Congress, for the identical conflicts and inconsistencies are adopted and perpetuated.

We therefore conclude that the amendment to the Judicial Code is unconstitutional in that it violates article 3, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States.

The award is annulled.

46 Cal. App. 55

In re GUILBERT'S ESTATE.

GUILBERT v. KOESTER et al.

(Civ. 2061.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 7, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 5, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶762—POINTS ABANDONED IN CLOSING BRIEF NOT CONSIDERED.

Where appellant in his closing brief abandoned points made in opening brief, and advanced reasons for reversal not discussed in opening brief, appellate court will take it for granted that the matters discussed in closing brief were the only matters considered by appellant as possessing merit.

2. EVIDENCE ¶596(1)—PARTY HAVING BURDEN NOT REQUIRED TO PRODUCE CONVICTION IN JURORS' MINDS.

A party having the burden of proof is not required, in order to prevail, to produce conviction in the minds of the jurors, but it is sufficient if his evidence outweighs that of the opposite party, and the jury considers from the evidence his contention as more probably true than otherwise.

3. TRIAL ¶296(8)—INSTRUCTION ON PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE HELD CURED BY OTHER INSTRUCTIONS.

Inaccuracy of instruction that "testimony which produces conviction in the unprejudiced minds of the jurors represents the preponderance of proof" held cured by other instructions.

4. TRIAL ¶296(2)—INSTRUCTION ON SOUNDNESS OF MIND HELD NOT MISLEADING.

In will contest instruction on soundness of mind held not misleading in view of other instructions.

5. TRIAL ¶256(6)—CONTESTANT DESIRING MORE ACCURATE DEFINITION SHOULD REQUEST SAME.

In will contest, where instruction on soundness of mind was somewhat obscure, but not misleading, contestant, if he desired any fuller or more accurate definition or instruction, should have requested it.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶1170(9)—ERROR IN INSTRUCTIONS AS TO PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE HELD IMMATERIAL IN VIEW OF OVERWHELMING EVIDENCE.

In will contest, on ground of unsoundness of mind, evidence of sanity held so thorough and overwhelming as to render any errors in instructions on preponderance of evidence and unsoundness of mind harmless under Const. art. 6, § 4½.

7. WILLS ¶31—WHEN "UN SOUNDNESS OF MIND" OR "INSANITY" WILL INVALIDATE WILL.

Anything short of a normal and healthy mind free from any defective co-ordination arising from disease or decay, in a medical sense, may constitute insanity or unsoundness of mind, but the law does not demand such perfection to give capacity to manage one's affairs and make valid disposition of property.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Insane; Unsound Mind.]

8. WILLS ¶38(2)—DELUSION MUST HAVE ENTERED INTO SCHEME OF DISTRIBUTION; "INSANITY."

The insanity which will render a will invalid is general mental incompetency or some narrower form under which the testator is the victim of some hallucination or delusion, in which case the act to be avoided must have been produced in whole or in part by some delusion.

9. EVIDENCE ¶574—EXPERT TESTIMONY OF PHYSICIANS WILL NOT PREVAIL AGAINST MASS OF EVIDENCE SHOWING COMPETENCY.

Expert testimony of physicians as to insanity of testator, where physicians had medical, and not legal, standard in view, will not be allowed to prevail against the mass of evidence showing competency to make will.

10. WILLS ¶55(1)—EVIDENCE HELD TO SHOW MENTAL COMPETENCY.

Evidence held to show mental competency.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Lucien E. Guilbert, deceased. Proceedings to probate will by Katherine Koester and others, contested by August Lucien Guilbert. Judgment admitting will to probate, and contestant appeals. Affirmed.

James D. Fairchild, of Yreka (A. Walter Allen, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Taylor & Tebbe and Herbert R. Raynes, all of Yreka, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. This was a contest of the will of Lucien E. Guilbert, deceased, brought by his nephew and devisee under his will. The sole ground of contest was that at the time of the making of his will said deceased was of unsound mind and not capable of making a testamentary disposition of his property. The issue was properly framed by the pleadings and was submitted to the jury in the form of this question:

"Was Lucien E. Guilbert, on January 16, 1919, at the time he executed the document claimed to be the last will and testament, of sound mind?"

The jury answered the question in the affirmative, and thereupon findings of fact and conclusions of law were made and filed by the judge of the superior court, and said will was admitted to probate, and respondents were appointed executrices thereof. The appeal is from said judgment and order admitting said will to probate. In the opening brief of appellant several reasons are urged for a reversal of the judgment, but in his closing brief he seems to have abandoned all these points, and for the first time urges that the court committed prejudicial error in giving certain instructions to the jury. As this was a new point, advanced for the first time in the closing brief for appellant, respondents were permitted to file a brief in reply thereto.

[1] Under the circumstances we take it for granted that this matter of the instructions is the only consideration which appellant considers as possessing merit, and we therefore devote our attention to it, stating, however, that the other points urged in the opening brief are clearly and satisfactorily met and answered in the reply brief of respondents. One instruction which appellant assails is as follows:

"The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff, August Lucien Guilbert, to establish by a preponderance of the evidence all the allegations of the opposition denied by the petitioners. The burden of proof lies on the party who would be defeated if no evidence were given on either side, and if after a consideration of all the evidence in the case you should find the evidence upon any question is equally balanced, you should answer such question against the party who has the burden of such issue, for in such a case there would be no preponderance of the evidence in favor of such proposition. The preponderance of evidence in a case like this is not determinable by the number of witnesses introduced to support the affirmative of the issue, but that testimony which produces conviction in the unprejudiced minds of the jurors represents the preponderance of proof, regardless of the number of witnesses from whom it proceeds."

[2] It is fair to state that appellant does not challenge the accuracy of the first part of the above instruction, but his criticism is directed to that portion which we have underscored. Undoubtedly this was not an accurate or correct definition of the preponderance of evidence which the law contemplates. The one having the burden of proof is not required, in order to prevail, to produce conviction in the minds of the jurors, but it is sufficient if his evidence outweighs that of the opposite party, and the jury considers from the evidence his contention as more probably true than otherwise. A similar instruction was condemned in People v. Miller, 171 Cal. 649, 154 Pac. 468, and more recently in the case of In re Ross Estate, 178 Pac. 510, and by reason thereof each cause was reversed. The corresponding language in the Miller Case was:

"Preponderance of the evidence means that degree of evidence which proves to a moral certainty, or, in other words, that degree of proof that produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind, regardless of the number of witnesses from whom it proceeds."

In the Ross Case the objectionable portion was:

"By a preponderance of evidence is meant that amount of evidence which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind."

It is apparent that by reason of the expression "to a moral certainty" the instruction in People v. Miller was more objectionable than the one involved in this case. The Ross instruction, though, contains the identical language of the instruction herein, and it was given in a similar case.

[3] We must hold, therefore, that said instruction contained an inaccurate statement of the rule as to "preponderance of evidence." However, for the reasons stated in Lawrence v. Goodwill, 186 Pac. 781, and Boa v. San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways, 187 Pac. 2, the inaccuracy was virtually cured, and it was rendered innocuous by a consideration of the entire charge. In the former the court instructed the jury that—

"If the plaintiff has proven the material allegations of his complaint by such evidence as satisfies and produces conviction in the minds of the jury, then he may be said to have proven his case by a preponderance of evidence. When you are satisfied that the truth lies with a single witness or with any number, you are justified in returning a verdict in accordance therewith. This is what is meant by a preponderance of proof. It is that character or measure of evidence which carries conviction to your minds."

The foregoing is probably more objectionable than the one before us, but after a thorough consideration of the question in the light of other instructions, especially this one, "In civil cases the affirmative of the issue must be proven; the affirmative being upon the plaintiff, upon him therefore rests the burden of proof, and he must establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence; that is to say by the greater weight of the evidence," this court, through Justice Hart, reached the conclusion that the jury was not misled by the inaccurate portion of the charge.

In the Boa Case, supra, the jury was instructed:

"The defense of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is an affirmative defense, and, unless it appears from the evidence on the part of the plaintiff, must be established by the defendant to your satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence, and, if in your minds the evidence is evenly balanced, the defense fails in that particular."

The Supreme Court condemned the use of the phrase "to your satisfaction," but held that it was rendered harmless by other instructions and followed certain decisions from other jurisdictions to the effect that—

Such instruction "is not reversible error, where the other instructions in the case clearly define what is meant by a preponderance of the evidence and distinctly advise them that a preponderance of the evidence will be sufficient to justify a finding in favor of the party having the burden. In such cases it is held that the words 'to the satisfaction of the jury' are equivalent to 'find' or 'believe.'"

Herein, in the first part of the instruction complained of, it is implied that the preponderance of evidence means the greater weight of evidence; for the court stated that, if the evidence were equally balanced, there would be no preponderance.

From this expression the jury would naturally infer that, if it "preponderated" in favor of the party having the burden, the requirement of the rule would be satisfied. But scarcely any doubt could remain as to what the court meant by "produces conviction" when the jury considered this instruction:

"The jury are instructed that the preponderance of evidence in a case is not alone determined by the number of witnesses testifying to a particular fact or state of facts. In determining upon which side the preponderance of evidence is, the jury should take into consideration [reciting certain recognized tests of credibility], and from all these circumstances determine upon which side is the weight or preponderance of the evidence.

"You are not to be governed by the number of witnesses, but by the weight or preponderance of the evidence. The plaintiff must prove the case by the preponderance of the testimony or by the greater weight of the evidence. This does not necessarily mean a greater number of witnesses who testify on any side of the issue or issues involved in any case, but according to the weight you give to the testimony of each witness."

If, in the consideration of all these instructions, the jurors were misled by said objectionable expression, they must have been stupid, indeed.

Appellant also criticizes the following portion of another instruction:

"What we mean by soundness in this connection is not that the mind should be in its full vigor and power, but that its faculties, its machinery, should be in working order, so to speak, with an active power to collect and retain the elements of the business to be performed for a sufficient time to perceive their obvious relation to each other."

[4, 5] The instruction is somewhat obscure, but we do not consider it misleading. The jurors might find some difficulty in comprehending it, but in another part of the charge they were instructed that to be of sound and disposing mind the deceased "must have understood what he was doing." We are satisfied that, taken together, the instructions on this subject could not have created any prejudicial impression. If appellant desired any fuller or more accurate definition or instruction, he should have requested it.

Indeed, we find nothing in the record to show that these instructions were not given on request of appellant. The incompleteness of the record in that respect is probably due to the fact that no attack was made upon the instructions on the motion for a new trial, or, indeed, until the final brief was filed.

[6] However, if we concede that error was committed as claimed, and that it was not the fault of appellant, then the cause should not be reversed for the sufficient reason that, under the evidence submitted, it is not at all probable that, if a new trial were had, any fair jury would reach a different result. We may go further and say that the proof of the sanity of the testator, in the legal sense, seems to have been so thorough and overwhelming as to make it almost inconceivable that there was any miscarriage of justice. In other words, if we were to grant all the errors charged in both briefs of appellant, we should have a clear case for the application of the recent amendment to the Constitution (section 4½, art. 6).

It is probably seldom, in a serious contest of this character, that the contrast is so great in favor of the proponent of the will as against the contestant. Considering the immediate circumstances attending the execution of the will, we may remark that three persons were present besides the testator: Fred Martin, his confidential clerk; George A. Tebbe, the man who drafted the will under the direction of decedent; and R. S.

Taylor, a leading attorney of Yreka. These witnesses had known Mr. Guilbert intimately for many years. They testified minutely to what occurred at the time he executed his will, and, if credit is to be given to their statements, there can be no doubt that the testator had a clear conception of every essential element of the transaction; he comprehended what property he owned; he knew the objects of his bounty; he understood what disposition he was making of his possessions; and he had no difficulty in giving expression to his testamentary purpose. We may add that these witnesses also affirmed, as intimate acquaintances, the complete sanity of the testator. They were joined by other intimate acquaintances, his bankers, his regular physician, his friends and business associates, many of whom had known him for a lifetime, and they unqualifiedly declared that he was at all times during their acquaintance of sound mind. We may state also that there seems to be nothing unnatural or extraordinary in the terms of the will. The testator was a bachelor, and his collateral kindred apparently had no particular claims upon his bounty. He did, however, remember them in his will, leaving to one brother the sum of $5,000. To contestant, who was the son of a half-brother, he devised the sum of $500, and he had a life-insurance policy of $3,000 in favor of contestant's mother. There were gifts to other relatives, and the residue of his estate, amounting to a considerable sum, was left to respondents, who were strangers to his blood. But he had an affection for them; they had been kind to him and had been attentive to his invalid sister while she resided with him, and it is not surprising that he thus manifested his appreciation of what they had done.

On the other hand, no intimate acquaintance expressed the opinion that he was insane, although some of them related instances of peculiar and eccentric conduct on the part of the deceased. These, however, were all consistent with entire sanity. The most serious circumstance, it may be said, occurred on January 15th, when he was undoubtedly stricken with a serious malady. He seemed to be unable to control his movements; he "was staggering around and mumbling to himself; didn't seem to comprehend what he was doing." One of the physicians described it as the condition of a man suffering from overindulgence in alcoholic drink or some powerful drug. This may have been the case, as the deceased was in mortal dread of influenza then prevailing, and to fortify himself had laid in a large supply of whisky. At any rate, he recovered from the attack that day, and there is no evidence that the incident affected his mind in the slightest at the time he executed his will.

It is true that two physicians, who were called in to prescribe for him, expressed the positive opinion that he was insane. They both were trained and experienced men in their profession, and their views are entitled to respectful consideration. But they were applying a different test from what the law requires in order to determine a person's competency to make a will.

[7, 8] Anything short of a normal and healthy mind "free from any defective co-ordination arising from disease or decay," in a medical sense, may constitute insanity or unsoundness of mind, "but the law does not demand such perfection to give capacity to manage one's affairs and make valid dispositions of property." Estate of Collins, 174 Cal. 670, 164 Pac. 1110. The insanity which will render a will invalid is general mental incompetency, or some narrower form under which the testator is the victim of some hallucination or delusion, and in the latter instance the act to be avoided must have been produced in whole or in part by said delusion. Estate of Chevallier, 159 Cal. 161, 113 Pac. 130.

[9] That said physicians had in view the medical, and not the legal, standard, and that their opinions could not be allowed justly to prevail against the mass of evidence showing the competency of Mr. Guilbert to make his will, appears clearly from the record.

Indeed, one of them said that, if the testator was capable of transacting business, he would still pronounce him insane, while the other, strange to say, declared that under such circumstances he would consider him sane, thus virtually lending support to the cause of respondents, since there can be no doubt that the testator understood and was capable of transacting business affairs. It may be added that the first of these did not see the testator until one week after the execution of the will, and there can be no question that there had been a marked deterioration, mentally and physically, in the condition of the patient.

[10] Without going further into the incidents of the case, we conclude, having read the transcript carefully, that the jury's conclusion was legal and just, and that, in the light of the principles enunciated in the Estate of Carithers, 156 Cal. 422, 105 Pac. 127, Estate of Chevallier, supra, and Estate of Collins, supra, a finding in favor of contestant could not be upheld.

The judgment is affirmed.

46 Cal. App. 47

SMITH v. PETERS. (Civ. 2741.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 6, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 907(2)—ISSUE RAISED BY PLEADINGS PRESUMED TO HAVE BEEN TRIED.

Where answer denied an allegation of ownership in complaint, which allegation was a conclusion of the pleader, appellate court, in absence of the evidence, would presume that issue was tried.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 193(4)—IN ABSENCE OF DEMURRER, CONCLUSION OF PLEADER RAISING COLORABLE ISSUE WAS SUFFICIENT ON APPEAL.

Allegation "that plaintiff is now the owner and holder of said note," which was denied in the answer, was a colorable tender of an issue, even though only a conclusion of law, and, in the absence of a demurrer, no objection on appeal can be urged.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 883—ESTOPPEL TO DENY ASSUMED ISSUE.

Where an issue is assumed by the parties to exist, and the trial is had on the assumption that such an issue is before the court, the parties will be estopped from thereafter asserting that such issue was improperly made the subject of a finding.

4. BILLS AND NOTES $\S$ 315—NONNEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT SUBJECT TO DEFENSE OF LACK OF CONSIDERATION.

A nonnegotiable instrument in the hands of an assignee or indorsee is subject to equitable defense that it lacked consideration.

5. BILLS AND NOTES $\S$ 155—NOTE WITH ACCELERATION OF MATURITY CLAUSE NOT NEGOTIABLE.

A note containing a clause, "Should the interest not be paid monthly, then the whole sum of principal and interest shall immediately become due and payable, and interest shall be compounded monthly thereafter at the same rate," making its due or maturity date uncertain, was nonnegotiable, where executed prior to the going into effect of the Negotiable Instrument Law on April 27, 1917.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by B. K. Smith against J. T. Peters. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment vacated and set aside, and trial court directed to amend conclusions of law and to enter judgment in favor of defendant.

Winslow P. Hyatt, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bowen & Bailie and Norman A. Bailie, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff.

This action was brought to recover upon a promissory note dated January 8, 1916, and signed by the defendant Peters. The payee in the note was A. Vitagliano. The note provided that interest should be paid at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and further contains the following clause:

"Should the interest not be paid monthly, then the whole sum of principal and interest shall immediately become due and payable, and interest shall be compounded monthly thereafter at the same rate."

The defendant in his answer asserted that the note was given without consideration, and in conformity with the defense pleaded the court made the following finding:

"The court finds: That on the 25th day of February, 1916, A. Vitagliano, the payee of the promissory note involved in this action, and the defendant occupied an office together at 619 H. W. Hellman Building, Los Angeles, Cal. That on said date the defendant, at the instance and request of said A. Vitagliano, executed and delivered to him the certain promissory note involved in this action, in words and figures as set forth in paragraph I of plaintiff's complaint. That said promissory note was so executed and delivered for the purpose of enabling said A. Vitagliano to exhibit the same as evidence of his financial worth, and that no consideration passed to the defendant in connection therewith. That said note was expressly dated as of January 8, 1916, in order that the same should appear as past due at the time of its execution and delivery."

The court further found that on February 29, 1916, for a valuable consideration, the payee indorsed the promissory note and deposited it with a bank as collateral security for the payment of an indebtedness due to the bank from him, and that the said bank had no notice of the equities existing between the parties to the note; that no demand was made upon the defendant for the payment of the principal or interest until July 2, 1917, which such demand was made by the indorsee bank. There was a further finding that, upon Vitagliano failing to discharge his indebtedness to the bank, a pledgee sale was had and the note in question was sold to the plaintiff. Among the conclusions of law, the following recitation occurs:

"That the promissory note involved in this action was past due, according to its terms, at the time of the delivery thereof, and was therefore a note payable upon demand;" that the bank "became an innocent holder of said note before the apparent maturity thereof, and, no prior demand having been made, took the same free from the defenses and equities existing between the parties thereto."

[1-3] The appellant makes question as to the sufficiency of the allegation of ownership of the note in the complaint, because of the fact that the only allegation appearing to show a transfer from the payee was "that plaintiff is now the owner and holder of said note." In the answer, however, issue was made by a denial of this allegation, and we will assume that that issue was tried, as the evidence is not before us and the findings determine the fact. Conceding, also, that the allegation would have been considered insufficient in the face of a demurrer, it must be held, under the authority of Penrose v. Winter, 135 Cal. 289, 87 Pac. 772, that a colorable issue was tendered, even though the allegation amounted to only a conclusion of law, and that in the absence of a demurrer the objection here made cannot be urged. The further answer is that where an issue is assumed by the parties to exist, and the trial is had upon the assumption that such an issue is before the court, the parties will be estopped from thereafter asserting that such issue was improperly made the subject of a finding.

[4, 5] The principal argument of appellant is that as the note, considering the date shown upon its face, was transferred after maturity, it was subject, as against the claims of the indorsees, to the equitable defenses pleaded. The respondent answers this contention by authorities to the effect that, as the fact was determined to be that the note was not delivered until its apparent maturity date, it became in the hands of the holder a demand note, and therefore would not mature until the demand for payment was made, which the court finds to have been done at a later time, and after the indorsee bank received the note in pledge. The following cases, which seem to support respondent's contention in this regard, are cited: Bank of Sonoma County v. Gove, 63 Cal. 355, 49 Am. Rep. 92; Eames v. Crosier, 101 Cal. 260, 35 Pac. 873.

The difficulty we find in applying these authorities, however, is that to us the note appears to be on its face nonnegotiable rather than negotiable. If nonnegotiable, it would, of course, be subject to the equitable defenses made, and under the findings of fact as settled by the trial court the defendant, rather than the plaintiff, would be entitled to judgment. The note contains the accelerating clause which we have quoted, which makes its due or maturity date uncertain. That such a note is nonnegotiable was decided in Smiley v. Watson, 23 Cal. App. 409, 138 Pac. 367. This decision is supported by the reasoning in Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 681, 65 Pac. 1110; National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 Pac. 881; Mathews et al. v. Wilson et al., 175 Pac. 647; Spotton v. Dyer, 184 Pac. 23. The late case of Utah State Bank v. Smith et al. (Sup.) 179 Pac. 160, contains language which might indicate a contrary view; but the court does not therein overrule its former decisions, but expressly declares that a different state of the law was being considered by reason of a stipulation made by counsel. Under the uniform Negotiable Instrument Law now in force in this state (St. 1917, p. 1531), the note here sued upon would be negotiable; but that law did not become effective until April 27, 1917, more than a year after the note in this suit was made, delivered, and indorsed. It follows from these conclusions that the judgment appealed from must be set aside.

The judgment is vacated and set aside, and the superior court is directed to amend its conclusions of law to conform to the views expressed in this opinion, and, upon the findings of fact as made and such amended conclusions, enter judgment in favor of defendant.

46 Cal. App. 63

ONG et al. v. COLE. (Civ. 2082.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 9, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 7, 1920.)

1. DEEDS ⚡208(7)—EVIDENCE HELD TO SHOW DELIVERY WITH INTENT THAT DEED SHOULD BE OPERATIVE AT ONCE.

In a suit to avoid a deed executed by a person since deceased, evidence held to support a finding that the deed was delivered with intent that it should be operative, though at the grantor's request the grantee deposited it with a bank and withheld it from record until the grantor's death.

2. EVIDENCE ⚡588—DUTY OF COURT AS TRIER OF FACTS WHERE EVIDENCE IS CONFLICTING STATED.

In a suit tried without a jury, it is the province of the court to harmonize, if it can, the testimony of different witnesses, and, if this cannot be done, to decide whose testimony to accept, and, when the same witness has given conflicting accounts of the same transactions, to determine which statement it will accept as being in accord with the fact.

3. DEEDS ⚡61—MEMORANDUM STATING THAT DEED WOULD BE "DELIVERED" TO GRANTEE ON GRANTOR'S DEATH CONSTRUED.

The word "delivered," is used both in a popular and in a technical sense; and, when a deed had been delivered to the grantee, who at the grantor's request deposited it in a bank and signed a memorandum stating that it was to be delivered to her on the grantor's death, the word was evidently used as meaning that she would call for the deed and the bank would let her have it.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Deliver.]

4. DEEDS ⇨56(2)—INTENT THAT DEED SHALL BE OPERATIVE TO BE DETERMINED FROM ALL FACTS AND CIRCUMSTANCES.

Whether a change of possession of a deed from grantor to grantee is with the intent that the deed shall become operative as such must be ascertained by a consideration of all the attendant facts and circumstances.

5. WITNESSES ⇨202—ATTORNEY MAY TESTIFY TO CLIENT'S DIRECTION TO DRAW DEED.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2, as to the disclosure by an attorney of communications made by the client to him or his advice given thereon in the course of professional employment, an attorney employed to draw a deed may testify to what the client said she wanted done, where she stated no facts and received no advice.

6. DEEDS ⇨48—NOT RENDERED VOID BY DELAY IN AFFIXING REVENUE STAMP.

Where, at the grantor's request, a grantee withheld a deed from record until the grantor's death, and the failure to place revenue stamps on the deed until just before it was offered for record was not with intent to defraud the government, the delay in placing the stamps on the deed did not render it void.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by A. C. Ong and others against Jennie L. Cole. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. C. Ong and Tanner, Odell & Taft, all of Pasadena, for appellants.

Hahn & Hahn, of Pasadena, and Adams, Adams & Binford, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff, D. B. Ong, is the executor of the last will of Minnie R. Ong, deceased, and that the other named plaintiffs are devisees under the will of said deceased. Continuing, it states that said Minnie R. Ong, in her lifetime and at the time of her death, was the owner of a certain described piece of real estate situate in Los Angeles, Cal.; that the defendant, Jennie L. Cole, now claims title to said real property by reason of a certain deed, which she claims was executed and delivered to her by said Minnie R. Ong in her lifetime. Plaintiffs allege that this deed was never executed as a deed, was without consideration, and was never delivered by Minnie R. Ong to Jennie L. Cole. The prayer of the complaint is that said deed be declared null and void, and plaintiffs decreed to be the owners of said property.

The court found that the deed was executed by Minnie R. Ong for a valuable consideration, and by her delivered to Jennie L. Cole, and entered judgment for the defendant. Plaintiffs assert that the finding of the court as to the delivery of the deed is not sustained by the evidence.

[1] The only witnesses examined on the trial were the defendant, Jennie L. Cole, and Mr. George W. Adams, the attorney who drafted the deed. Concerning the execution and delivery of the deed, the defendant testified that she was a trained nurse, and had acted as such, and as housekeeper and companion for Minnie R. Ong, deceased, for 20 years; that the husband of the deceased was an invalid for several years prior to his death, and that she nursed him for several years until 1914, when he died; that thereafter she looked after his widow until her death, which occurred in 1916. Continuing, she testified:

"I had a conversation with Mrs. Ong with regard to the property after that, just prior to the execution of the deed, possibly a week or two—I can't just remember the exact date. This conversation took place in the home, and just the two of us were present. She simply said that she was anxious to deed the home to me, or she wanted me to have the home, because she appreciated all that I had done and the faithfulness and the care that I had taken of everything, and that she wanted to feel that I would have it, and she felt that she was not going to live long, and she wanted everything arranged so that I would have a home and the furniture, and always have a place to stay. She felt that she wanted to do that, and that she and Mr. Ong had talked that matter over during his lifetime, and he had made the remark, 'If I go before you, Minnie, I want you to look after Jennie.' Q. Did Mrs. Ong ever hand you the deed to that property? A. She did. Q. When and where was that deed handed to you? A. In Mrs. Ong's room at 161 North Mentor avenue, in her den on October 15th, I think. The deed came that morning by the post. The postman left the deed, and I brought in the envelope and gave it to her in her room. I gave her the deed, or the paper, a business envelope, you know, of Adams, Adams & Binford, which was on the outside, and handed her the deed, and she took it from me, and I think she remarked, possibly, 'It has come at last.' She took the deed and I went on out in the kitchen; I was preparing lunch, and she called me in her room and says, 'Jennie, here is your deed; you had better take it down to the bank. * * * It is my wish that you should not have the deed recorded during my lifetime, as I don't want any fuss with the relations.' I said: 'Minnie, your wishes shall be granted.'"

Mr. George W. Adams testified, in substance:

That he had been attorney for Mrs. Ong in settling her husband's estate. "Shortly before her death she sent for me to come to her house in Pasadena. She stated to me that now the controversy over the estate of L. B. Ong had been settled and the property distributed, she wanted to make a deed to the home property to Jennie L. Cole. * * * She further stated to me that she wanted Miss Cole to have the property, meaning the home where she then lived, and that it was her purpose to deed the property to Miss Cole at that time rather than give it to her by any codicil to her will. She then instructed me to draw such a deed, which I did, and she then signed it. I took it to my office in order to put my notarial seal on it, and I then mailed the deed back to Mrs. Ong."

The foregoing testimony is ample to sustain the finding that the deed was delivered to take effect as a present conveyance of the title to the property. It shows a putting of the deed by the grantor into the possession of the grantee, accompanied by the words:

"Here is your deed. You better take it down to the bank."

The testimony of the defendant shows that the handing to her of the deed was the carrying out of a preconceived intention on the part of Mrs. Ong to make her the owner of the property at that time. The testimony of Mr. Adams is to the same effect. He said Mrs. Ong did not want to give her the property by codicil to her will, and it was her purpose to deed the property to Miss Cole at that time. "She then instructed me to draw such a deed, which I did, and she then signed it."

If it had been the desire and intention of Mrs. Ong to so deal with the title that it would vest in the defendant only upon her death, it seems reasonable to assume that something along those lines would have been said to her attorney.

Appellants claim that the testimony of the defendant above referred to was in conflict with testimony given by her on other occasions concerning the same transaction. It appears she was examined as a witness in the matter of the estate of the deceased, Mrs. Ong, and also that her deposition was taken before trial in this action.

Plaintiffs introduced the testimony of defendant given on these two previous occasions, and in their brief point out what are claimed to be different and contradictory versions of what occurred concerning the execution of the deed, and it is now their claim that these contradictions are so material as to destroy the effect, largely of defendant's testimony given at the trial, and, also, that these former statements are evidence favorable to plaintiffs' case. To illustrate counsel's position, and without referring to all the claimed contradictions, it will be sufficient to advert to one or two. In probate proceedings these questions were asked her:

"Q. Well, you stated you were requested by her to hand it (the deed) to Mr. Hall. What did she say when she requested you to do that? A. It had been understood before—she had talked—as I remember it she says, 'Jennie, here is the deed.' Q. And what then? A. And she said, 'Take it to Mr. Hall.' Q. Take it to Mr.

Hall and then do what? A. He was to keep it in his possession until her death."

When her deposition was taken in this case she testified:

"The postman brought a letter and a deed in a long envelope. I gave it to Mrs. Ong, and she opened it. She was in her den, and I was out in the other room busy. She called me and said, 'Come here.' I responded, and she took the deed and said: 'Jennie, this is your deed. Now you had better take it down to the bank and take care of it.' I think she said, 'Take it to Mr. Hall' because that was where we did our business there at the bank, and I was personally acquainted with Mr. Hall, and I think she did say Mr. Hall. Q. What did she tell you to say to Mr. Hall? A. Not a word."

[2] It is to be noticed that in her first testimony she said she was to take the deed to Mr. Hall, and he was to keep it in his possession until Mrs. Ong died. In her second deposition she testified that Mrs. Ong told her to take the deed to Mr. Hall, but did not tell her anything to say to him. It is the province of a court to harmonize, if it can, the testimony of different witnesses, and if this cannot be done, to decide whose testimony to accept. Similarly, when there appears to be conflicting accounts of the same transactions given by the same person, it is the duty of the court to determine which statement it will accept as being in accord with the fact. The court could accept the version of the transaction given by the witness at this trial, notwithstanding it might appear to be in conflict, to some extent, with statements made by her on other occasions.

Counsel for appellants rely much upon a written memorandum that appeared upon the envelope, in which the deed was inclosed when left with the bank. It was as follows:

"Union Trust & Savings Bank of Pasadena, California, Trust Department. Contents. The within deed is deposited by Jennie L. Cole, and is to be delivered to Jennie L. Cole upon the presentation of satisfactory evidence of the death of Minnie R. Ong the grantor and not otherwise. Jennie L. Cole."

It is claimed by appellants that this memorandum shows that it was the understanding, both of the grantor and grantee, that the deed was not to be delivered until the death of the former, and that in taking the deed to the bank, defendant was simply acting as the agent or servant of the grantor. The defendant testified on the taking of her deposition concerning this indorsement on the envelope:

"Why I had the deed, and I simply took it down there and asked Mr. Hall if he would keep the deed for me. And he first said he did not know whether he could or not. And then asked me to explain. I told him that Mrs. Ong had deeded the property to me, and had delivered the deed to me, requesting me to bring it down there for safe-keeping and would he take care of it for me, as near as I can remember, and he asked the question: 'Miss Cole, did Mrs. Ong deliver this deed to you?' and I said: 'Yes, sir,' and he said: 'Well, under the circumstances I can take the deed and keep it for you.' Mr. Hall wrote this down after talking with me. He put the deed in the envelope and sealed it, and then wrote this on the outside, and I read it over and signed it. Q. Did that statement which you signed contain the substance of what you and Mrs. Ong talked about what was to be done? A. Practically as far as I can remember. Q. Then the deed was not to be delivered to you until after Mrs. Ong's death? A. That was the understanding."

It will be observed from this that the defendant took the deed to the bank; told Mr. Hall that Mrs. Ong had deeded the property to her and delivered the deed to her and had requested her to bring it to the bank for safe-keeping, and asked him to take care of it for her. The writing was all done by Mr. Hall and defendant signed it. The writing begins with stating that the deed is deposited by Jennie L. Cole. If she had taken it there as the servant of Mrs. Ong, it is reasonable to assume that the memorandum would have stated it was deposited by Mrs. Ong. Mr. Hall, in making out the memorandum, used the expression "to be delivered to Jennie L. Cole."

[3] The word "delivered" is used both in a popular and in a technical sense. It was evidently not used by Mr. Hall, nor understood by Miss Cole, in its technical sense. She had already told him that Mrs. Ong had deeded her the property and delivered the deed to her. The word was evidently used by him and understood by her that when Mrs. Ong died she would call at the bank for the deed, and he would let her have it. She had agreed with Mrs. Ong that she would not place the deed on record until Mrs. Ong died. She had no occasion then to get the deed from the bank and have it in her personal possession until the time came to have it recorded.

Similarly, in the last question and answer:

"Q. The deed then was not to be delivered to you until after Mrs. Ong's death? A. That was the understanding."

It is not to be thought that the defendant, not a lawyer, and not familiar with the significance attached to the word "deliver," had in mind, in answering the question, all that the word conveys to one using legal terms with legal accuracy, in saying that was the understanding. It is fair to believe she meant what she had said on several occasions, that it was the understanding that she was to place the deed with the bank for safe-keeping, and when Mrs. Ong died get it and place it on record.

In Smith v. Smith, 173 Cal. 725, 161 Pac. 495, it appears the grantor in a deed had delivered it to R. Grant Taylor with written instructions, as follows:

"I herewith deliver to you two deeds, one to each of my sons, N. D. Smith and G. C. Smith, and direct that you keep and hold the same in escrow during my lifetime, and upon my death deliver them to N. D. Smith and G. C. Smith, so that they may then take effect."

It was claimed in that case that the use of the word "deliver," where it occurs the second time in the paper, showed an intent not to pass the title at that time. Upon this feature of the case, the court said:

"Appellant places great stress upon the words contained in the written directions to Mr. Taylor: 'Upon my death deliver them' (the deeds), and 'so that they may then take effect.' There is nothing in this language to prevent the present passing of title at the time of the giving of the deeds to Mr. Taylor, if the intention of the grantor was that it should then pass. Earlier in the letter of instruction Mr. Smith had used the technical language, 'I herewith deliver to you two deeds.' In view of all the evidence the court was justified in deciding that the word 'deliver,' used in the latter part of the writing, was employed in its general sense, meaning 'transmit,' and that the expression, 'then take effect,' referred, not to the vesting of title, but to the time of enjoyment. Haug v. Schumacher, 50 App. Div. 562, 64 N. Y. Supp. 310-313; Middleton's Heirs v. Middleton's Devises (Ky.) 43 S. W. 677; Newberry v. Hinman, 49 Conn. 130-132; Chambers v. Chambers, 139 Ind. 111-119, 33 N. E. 334; Dove v. Torr, 128 Mass. 38-40."

[4] Counsels for appellants have cited several decisions bearing upon the question of a delivery sufficient to pass title, and from them conclude that the delivery in this case did not measure up to the rule therein announced, but these cases go no further than to decide that to be effective it must appear that the change of possession of the deed from grantor to grantee was accompanied with the intent that the deed should become operative as such. This intent must be ascertained by a consideration of all the attendant facts and circumstances, and we think such intent appears in this case.

[5] Appellants claim it was error to permit Mr. Adams to testify to what Mrs. Ong said to him when he was called in and asked to draw the deed; that such statements were protected from disclosure by virtue of subdivision 2 of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This section has been considered by our higher courts in a number of cases, but the exact point now under consideration seems never to have been directly passed upon. Thus, in Re Bauer, 79 Cal. 312, 21 Pac. 762, it is said:

"When two persons address a lawyer as their common agent, their communications to the lawyer, as far as concerns strangers, will be privileged, but as to themselves they stand on the same footing as to the lawyer, and either can compel him to testify against the other as to their negotiations."

In this case defendant did not employ Mr. Adams, and he was not acting as her attorney. In Murphy v. Waterhouse, 113 Cal. 467, 45 Pac. 866, 54 Am. St. Rep. 365, it is said:

"Where two persons are negotiating with each other in the presence of the attorney of one of the parties, the very nature of the transaction, and the circumstances surrounding it, are inconsistent with the notion of a confidential communication between one of the parties and his attorney who happens to be present."

The defendant testified that she was not present at the interview between Mrs. Ong and Mr. Adams, so the case does not entirely meet the situation.

In Wigmore on Evidence, § 2292, the rule as to privileges of an attorney is stated as follows:

"(1) Where legal advice of any kind is sought; (2) from a professional legal adviser in his capacity as such; (3) the communications relevant to that purpose; (4) made in confidence; (5) by the client; (6) are at his instance permanently protected from disclosure by himself or by the legal adviser; (8) except the client waives the protection."

And again, at section 2297, the same learned author says:

"In the United States, the drafting of a will has almost always been assumed (and naturally) to bring the testator's communications within the privilege. But for deeds and other instruments the privilege has been strictly construed, and where no legal problem has been expressly brought forward by the client, his communications concerning the mere drafting of the instrument have been commonly admitted."

The author quotes from Hatton v. Robinson, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 416, 25 Am. Dec. 415, as follows:

"There are many cases, in which an attorney is employed in transacting business, not properly professional, and where the same might have been transacted by another agent. In such case, the fact that the agent sustains the character of an attorney does not render the communications attending it privileged; and they may be testified to by him, as by any other agent. We cannot perceive that the communications were made to the attorney by Winch, were with the purpose of instructing him in any cause, or engaging him in the conduct of any professional business, or of obtaining any legal advice or opinion. Here was no legal advice asked, no opinion requested as to the effect and operation of such a conveyance in point of law, and none given."

Another case cited by Mr. Wigmore is Grimshaw v. Kent, 67 Kan. 463, 73 Pac. 92:

"Again, for the purpose of showing deceased knew and understood the contents of the written contract at the time it was executed by her, the witness W. H. Burbage, who prepared the contract, was asked, 'Will you state what conversation, if any, occurred between yourself and Mrs. Elizabeth C. Grimshaw leading up to the execution of this contract?' The answer of the witness to this question was also excluded. It is contended, as witness was a lawyer, that the conversation requested was privileged. We think not. Here no relation of attorney and client existed. Any person at all familiar with business transactions could have performed the labor of drafting the contract in question as readily as the witness. As the purpose of the question was to place before the jury the mental capacity of deceased to know and understand the contract she was entering into with defendants, and as the question propounded was not for the purpose of varying or contradicting the terms of a written contract, the witness should have been allowed to answer the question."

The testimony of Mr. Adams shows that Mrs. Ong communicated to him no fact for the purpose of getting any legal advice, and he gave her none. She stated to him that she had decided to deed the property at that time to the defendant, and asked him to prepare the deed. She could have had the same work done by any real estate agent or notary public. As said in Hatton v. Robinson, supra:

"Here was no legal advice asked, no opinion requested as to the effect and operation of such a conveyance in point of law and none was given."

It does not appear that any statement was made by Mrs. Ong to Mr. Adams for the purpose of getting any legal advice from him, and under the circumstances we hold that his testimony, as it appears in the transcript, does not come within the rule of privilege. It was not a case: "(1) Where legal advice of any kind is sought; (2) from a professional legal adviser as such" (Wigmore on Evidence, sec. 2292)—and it was not error to permit him to give the evidence.

[6] The record shows that at the time the deed was executed no United States revenue stamps were placed upon the deed by defendant. Upon getting it from the bank and before offering it for record she placed, or caused to be placed, upon it the proper stamps. Appellants claim that the delay in stamping the deed rendered it void. We are unable to agree with him. In Green v. Holway, 101 Mass. 243, 3 Am. Rep. 339, it is said:

"The only reasonable construction of all these provisions, taken together, is that an instrument not duly stamped at first is not by reason thereof absolutely void, but only voidable by proof that the stamp was omitted with intent to defraud the government."

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. AIROLA. (Cr. 488.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 9, 1920.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1160—VERDICT SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE NOT DISTURBED AFTER NEW TRIAL DENIED.

Where testimony warrants a rational inference that defendant committed the crimes charged, and where the trial judge, on motion for new trial, was satisfied that defendant was properly convicted, appellate court will not interfere with the verdict; it being sufficient for appellate court to know that there is nothing inherently improbable in testimony pointing to defendant's guilt and that in a legal sense it supports the verdict.

2. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1159(3)—INCONSISTENCIES IN TESTIMONY NOT GROUND FOR SETTING ASIDE VERDICT.

Inconsistencies and contradictions in testimony do not warrant appellate court in setting aside verdict.

3. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1088(7), 1144(4)—RECORD HELD TO SHOW PROPER PLEA OF NOT GUILTY.

Record stating that "defendant was asked if he was ready to enter a plea, and he stated that his plea was not guilty," held sufficient, under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1017, and in view of section 1019, as against contention that it does not appear that defendant was asked by the court, or by the clerk or district attorney under its direction, whether he pleaded guilty or not guilty, as provided by section 988; it being presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the official duty was performed, and that there was no departure from the accustomed proceeding.

4. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1141(2) — BURDEN OF SHOWING ERROR ON APPELLANT.

The burden is upon appellant to show error.

5. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1167(5) — INFORMALITY OF PLEA OF NOT GUILTY HELD HARMLESS.

Where record shows that defendant pleaded not guilty to whatever offense was charged in the information, any informality in that respect was entirely without prejudice.

6. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION $\S$ 130—INFORMATION CHARGING THREE SEPARATE OFFENSES OF RAPE HELD NOT DEFECTIVE.

In view of Pen. Code, $\S$ 954, information for rape, charging three separate offenses of the same kind against prosecutrix on the same day, held not defective.

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; J. A. Smith, Judge.

Augustine Airola, Jr., was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Virgil M. Airola, of San Andreas, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. [1, 2] The defendant was convicted of the crime denounced by section

261 of the Penal Code, the female being of the age of 13 years. The only point made by the appellant in his opening brief is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. There is no merit whatever in the contention. The prosecutrix testified to facts and circumstances from which it is a rational inference that the defendant committed the crimes charged in the information. The jury undoubtedly believed that her statements as to material matters were worthy of credit, and we are not justified in saying that there is no legal foundation for such belief and the verdict in accordance therewith. The trial judge, also, on the motion for a new trial, had an opportunity to review the sufficiency of the evidence, and he was satisfied that the defendant was properly convicted. We have no right, if we had the inclination, to interfere with the determination of the jury and the judge. The responsibility of determining the guilt or innocence of the accused was theirs, not ours. It is true that there are some inconsistencies and contradictions in the testimony of the prosecutrix, but that does not warrant us in setting aside the verdict. It is sufficient for this court to know and to say that there is nothing inherently improbable in the evidence pointing to the guilt of defendant, and that, in a legal sense, it amply supports the verdict.

The recital of the evidence would accomplish no good, and, in answer to the criticism by appellant of the story told by the prosecutrix, it is sufficient to refer to People v. Lewis, 18 Cal. App. 359, 123 Pac. 232; People v. Preston, 19 Cal. App. 675, 127 Pac. 660; People v. Crawford, 24 Cal. App. 396, 141 Pac. 824; People v. Slaughter, 33 Cal. App. 366, 165 Pac. 44; People v. Kaiser, 119 Cal. 456, 51 Pac. 702; People v. Moore, 155 Cal. 237, 100 Pac. 688. We may add that there was some corroborative evidence which, no doubt, was duly considered in the court below. In his closing brief appellant makes the additional point that—

"The trial and judgment were a mere nullity, as no plea was ever entered by the defendant to the offenses charged in the information and no issue joined therein."

The record shows that on July 9, 1919:

"Under instruction of the court the clerk duly arraigned the defendant. The court asked the defendant if he was ready to enter a plea to the information and through his counsel he answered that he was not. The defendant then asked for additional time in which to plead. The request was granted and the case was continued until Wednesday, July 16, 1919."

The record for July 16th shows the following:

"The defendant was asked if he was ready to enter a plea and he stated that his plea was not guilty. The trial of this case was then set for Monday, August 11, 1919."

This was a substantial compliance with the requirement of section 1017 of the Penal Code. The plea of not guilty put in issue every material allegation of the information. Pen. Code, § 1019. Appellant complains that—

"It does not appear by whom the defendant was asked the question nor does it appear whether or not the 'plea' mentioned had reference to this case. It does not appear that the defendant was asked by the court or by the clerk or district attorney under its direction whether he pleads guilty or not guilty to the information, as provided by section 988 of the Penal Code."

[3-5] But the burden is upon appellant to show error, and if the matters referred to should be deemed material, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, the presumption would follow that official duty was performed and that there was no departure from the accustomed proceeding. The record, indeed, does show with sufficient precision that the defendant pleaded not guilty to whatever offense was charged in the information, and, it may be added, that if there was any informality in that respect it was entirely without prejudice. People v. Tomskey, 20 Cal. App. 672, 130 Pac. 184.

At the oral argument the point was made for the first time that the defendant should not have been charged with three separate offenses in one information. This course was authorized by section 954 of the Penal Code, providing that—

"The indictment or information may charge two or more different offenses connected together in their commission, or different statements of the same offense, or two or more different offenses of the same class of crimes or offenses, under separate counts," etc.

[6] Herein the defendant was accused in separate counts of three offenses of the same kind against the prosecutrix on the same day. We can see no valid objection to the procedure. As said in Korth v. State, 46 Neb. 640, 65 N. W. 795:

"The offenses were all of the same general character, required for their proof the same quality of testimony, the same manner of trial and mode of punishment, and it was proper to try the [offender] upon the several counts at the same time."

In said opinion many authorities are cited in support of said ruling of the court.

Some of the cases hold that where different offenses are charged the prosecution, although permitted to introduce evidence of all of them, may be put to an election as to which a conviction will be demanded. However, that question is not presented here, as no such demand was made. We may add that, if the defendant had desired to be tried separately on each count, he should have made it known, and no doubt the learned trial judge would have exercised a wise discretion, as contemplated by said section 954, providing:

"That the court, in the interest of justice and for good cause shown, may, in its discretion, order that the different offenses or counts set forth in the indictment or information be tried separately, or divided into two or more groups and each of said groups tried separately."

We see no occasion for more extended consideration of the case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

CHAMBERS v. SECURITY COMMERCIAL & SAVINGS BANK. (Civ. 3247.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 6, 1920.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT — 232—INTEREST ON RENT RECOVERABLE WITHOUT PRAYER.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1174, requiring the tenant seeking relief from forfeiture of a lease to pay the rent due with interest thereon, and Civ. Code, § 3287, giving right to interest on unliquidated demands, the landlord is entitled to interest on the rent from the date when several installments became due, though he did not in prayer of his complaint particularly ask for interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by George J. Chambers against the Security Commercial & Savings Bank to recover possession of real property and for rent due. Judgment for the plaintiff for the amount of rent due but without interest thereon, and plaintiff appeals. Order that lower court modify the judgment by adding interest on rent from the dates due.

Crouch & Chambers, of San Diego, and Hunsaker & Britt and Leroy M. Edwards, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Sweet, Stearns & Forward and Sam Ferry Smith, all of San Diego, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was brought to recover possession of certain real property, the prayer being for restitution of the premises and "for the sum of $18,000, treble the rent due," with costs and disbursements, and "all other and proper relief." In the complaint it was alleged that the defendant had failed to pay rental at the rate of $500 per month, as provided in a lease, on the first of each month for the year 1915, amounting in all to the sum of $6,000. A jury was called to find the amount of rent due, and a verdict was returned fixing that amount as alleged in the complaint at the sum of $6,000; the verdict reciting that sum to be "the total amount of unpaid rent at the rate of five hundred dollars per month for 12 months in the year 1915." Before the entry of judgment, the plaintiff moved for a judgment on the verdict, and asked that the judgment include interest upon the installments of rental from the several dates of default in the payment thereof. The trial court refused to allow interest and entered its judgment only for the sum of $6,000 and the costs which plaintiff had incurred, amounting to $180 additional. There was no judgment for restitution of the premises and no damages provided to be recovered. Plaintiff has appealed from the judgment, specifying as the only objection thereto the failure of the court to include interest upon the rental installments from the dates when they matured.

We think that interest should have been allowed and that it should have been entered as an incident to the main judgment, regardless of the fact that plaintiff did not, in the prayer of his complaint, particularly ask for such allowance to be made. Under section 1174, Code of Civil Procedure, where forfeiture of a lease is declared, in order to be relieved from such forfeiture, the tenant is required to pay "the amount found due as rent, with interest thereon, and the amount of the damages found by the jury or the court for the unlawful detainer, and the costs." Furthermore, the question seems to be settled by the provisions of section 3287, Civil Code, which gives the right to interest upon demands which are not unliquidated and which in character, both as to the amount thereof and their due date, are fixed and certain. Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Easterbrook v. Farquharson, 110 Cal. 311, 42 Pac. 811. This case, as it was resolved by the judgment, took the final character of a suit for rent only; hence there appears to be a stronger reason, if any distinction can be drawn, why interest should be allowed, than where the usual judgment for restitution of premises and damages is made. In Mason v. Wolff, 40 Cal. 246, an unlawful detainer suit, the court remarked that, "in a certain sense, the suit is brought upon the lease." The judgment in this case was strictly a judgment upon the lease obligation for the rent due.

It is ordered that the superior court modify the judgment by adding thereto a provision that the plaintiff recover interest on the several installments of rental from the dates on which they became due up to the 10th day of June, 1918, at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum.

WEBBER et al. v. HERBERT et al.
(Civ. 3272.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 10, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 7, 1920.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇐187—VENDORS HELD TO HAVE WAIVED PROMPT PAYMENT OF INSTALLMENTS.

Where vendors accepted eight installment payments aggregating in amount $2,000 on account of principal and $720 on account of interest, after purchasers had defaulted in making prompt payment of such installments, and where after particular installment was due vendors demanded payment by purchasers of the taxes, the vendors by their conduct had waived provision of contract making time of its essence, and had no right to refuse tender of installment made subsequent to date on which it was due, and declare a forfeiture for purchasers' failure to make prompt payment.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇐185—VENDORS' ACTION TO QUIET TITLE AFTER FORFEITURE CONTROLLED BY EQUITABLE CONSIDERATIONS.

Vendors' action to quiet title against purchasers, on the ground that purchasers had forfeited their rights under contract, is addressed to the equitable powers of court, and equity has always looked with marked abhorrence upon forfeitures.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇐187—INSISTENCE ON CURRENT CONDITION NOT ALLOWED BY PARTY REPUDIATING CONTRACT FOR PRIOR BREACH.

A party to a contract cannot insist on the performance of current condition, such as the payment of taxes, and thereafter repudiate the contract for a prior breach of which he must have known.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇐187—WHERE PROVISION MAKING TIME OF ESSENCE DISREGARDED, FORFEITURE FOR TRIFLING DELAY IN PAYMENT OF INTEREST NOT PERMITTED.

Vendor cannot for years disregard a provision making time of the essence of a contract little by little, getting half the value of his land, and then, without notice to purchaser who has been lulled to a false sense of security, enforce a forfeiture for a trifling delay in the payment of interest.

5. COSTS ⇐260(4)—PENALTY FOR FRIVOLOUS APPEAL TAXED AGAINST VENDORS APPEALING FROM JUDGMENT REFUSING TO QUIET TITLE AGAINST PURCHASERS.

Where vendors appealed from judgment refusing to quiet title against purchasers on ground of a forfeiture, with no real foundation for the appeal, and for purpose of delay thereby, for more than three years, deprived purchasers of the beneficial use of the $2,000 they had already paid, vendors will be taxed the sum of $250 as a penalty for a frivolous appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

Action by R. H. Webber and others against Phillip D. Herbert and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. S. Hupp, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Nathan Newby, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

BRITTAI, J. The plaintiffs appeal on the judgment roll from a judgment in a suit to quiet title to land in Riverside county.

On February 24, 1912, the appellants entered into a contract with the defendants Phillip D. Herbert and Sallie L. Herbert, by which the appellants agreed to sell to the Herberts 80 acres of land for $4,000, payable in 10 annual installments of $400, with interest on deferred payments at the rate of 6 per cent., payable semiannually. The buyers were also bound to pay all taxes and assessments. The contract in terms provided for assignment by either of the two parties. It contained a clause making time of the essence of the contract, and providing for forfeiture of all prior payments upon any default.

The buyers assigned to John S. Webb an undivided interest in the land, and this fact was communicated to the sellers in February, 1915, when the sellers promised to notify Webb of any default on the part of the Herberts. An installment of $108 for interest became due in August, 1912, and was paid to the sellers and accepted by them two months later. Between that payment and an installment of $60 for interest which became due on August 24, 1916, there were eight payments accepted by the sellers after their respective due dates. The $60 was sent to the sellers and returned by them on October 7, 1916. At that time, apparently, the only default was the payment of the $60 on August 24. Under the terms of the contract, the buyers theretofore must have paid $2,000 on account of the principal and $720 on account of interest. The $60 was returned in reliance on the term of the contract making time of its essence. No notice was given to Webb of the default, and, notwithstanding the frequent delays in payments of from one or two days to more than two months, the sellers gave the buyers no warning that in the event of delay in the payment of either of the particular installment of interest or of all future payments the forfeiture of all prior payments would be enforced. The default, even though the provision of the contract making time of its essence had not been waived, must have been at the date when the payment became due. After that date, in reliance on the term of the contract binding the buyers to pay taxes, the sellers demanded of Webb that he pay the taxes for the year 1916-17. This he did. The defendants thereafter offered to pay the $60, and after suit brought tendered the amount of principal and interest which became due under the contract in February, 1917. The suit was commenced on October 20, 1916, a few days after the plaintiffs' demand on Webb for the payment of taxes.

[1] Upon findings from which the facts which have been stated appear, the trial court very properly concluded that the plaintiffs by their conduct had waived the provision of the contract making time of its essence, that they are the owners of the legal title to the land subject to the rights of the defendants under the contract, which is in full force, and that the defendants recover their costs, and judgment was entered.

[2-4] Such a suit is addressed to the equitable powers of the court. Equity has always looked with marked abhorrence upon forfeitures, and it has been said many times that any unquestioned evidence of sharp practices and over-reaching is sufficient to defeat a complainant in equity who has been guilty of such practices. Neither serious consideration nor citation of authority is necessary to support the conclusion that no party to a contract can insist on the performance of a current condition, such as the payment of taxes, and thereafter repudiate the contract for a prior breach of which he must have known. A court of equity does not permit parties who seek its aid thus to blow hot and cold. Neither may a seller for years disregard a provision making time of the essence of a contract, little by little getting half the value of his land, and then, without notice to the buyer who has been lulled to a false sense of security, enforce a forfeiture for a trifling delay in the payment of interest. Farley v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 227; Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126; Hayt v. Bentel, 164 Cal. 680, 130 Pac. 432; Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 128 Pac. 751; American-Hawaiian, etc., Co. v. Butler, 165 Cal. 519, 133 Pac. 280, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 44; Myers v. Williams, 173 Cal. 301, 159 Pac. 982; Newell v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., 184 Pac. 659; Bayside Land Co. v. Phillips, 184 Pac. 951.

[5] Notwithstanding the well-established rules of law governing such cases as this, by the pendency of this litigation the defendants since October 20, 1916, have been in a position where they could not deal with their property rights, for no one wants to buy even a good lawsuit. The judgment was entered more than a year and a half ago. The appeal is without real foundation and appears to have been taken only for delay. During the time the suit has been pending the respondents have lost the beneficial use of the $2,000 they have already paid.

The judgment is affirmed, and it is ordered that the respondents recover of the appellants the sum of $250 as a penalty for the frivolous appeal.

LANDLORD AND TENANT §248(2) — LANDLORD'S CONTRACT WITH TENANT'S CREDITOR, WHO ADVANCED RENT, CONSTRUED.

Where landlord, to secure continuation of tenancy, made contract with tenant's creditor, whereby creditor, in consideration of landlord's agreement not to terminate tenancy for default in payment of rent, advanced certain sum toward payment of rent to constitute, together with other advances to certain amount, a lien on the crops, and whereby, after payment thereof, proceeds of crop should be applied to tenant's indebtedness to landlord, creditor, after reimbursement from proceeds of specified amount, was not entitled to recover therefrom advances made necessary for caring for the crop; the landlord being first entitled to indebtedness due it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by the Southern California Oil Syndicate of London, England, against the Lompoc Produce & Real Estate Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. Kelley Hardenbrook, of Lompoc, and Wm. G. Griffith, of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

Richards & Heaney, of Santa Barbara, and J. F. Frick, of Lompoc, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This appeal is taken by the defendant from a judgment entered by the trial court, granting the relief to secure which the action was brought. In November, 1914, plaintiff was the owner of certain land, which had theretofore been and was at the time being held by one Tashiro as tenant. Tashiro was, at the time, indebted to the owner of the land for rental which had accrued under the terms of the lease. The tenant had also had business relations with the defendant produce company, which latter had handled crops grown by him. Tashiro, being unable to make payment of the amount due to the plaintiff from his own resources, interested the defendant to the extent that in consideration of the making of the contract hereinafter referred to, he was allowed to continue in the tenancy. The contract referred to was reduced to writing, and signed by the plaintiff and the defendant, plaintiff being the first party and defendant the second party, and contained the following terms:

"Whereas, S. Tashiro is the tenant in possession of certain land belonging to the party of the first part; and whereas, the party of the second part has this day advanced to said Tashiro the sum of $550, which has been paid to the party of the first part to apply on the rent for the year ending October 31, 1915; and whereas, the said Tashiro is indebted to the party of the first part in the sum of $1,650 on account of the balance of said rent due or to become due, and is also indebted to the party of the second part in certain sums, and has given to the party of the second part a mortgage of all crops to be grown on the above-mentioned premises during the ensuing year as security for said last-mentioned indebtedness and advances:

"Now, therefore, it is hereby agreed that the party of the second part shall have a first lien upon said crop under its mortgage for the sum of $550 this day advanced to be applied on the rent, and also for all further sums which the said party of the second part shall advance to said Tashiro after this date, said further advances not to exceed in all the sum of seven hundred ($700) dollars.

"It is further agreed that, after taking out of the proceeds of said crop the amount of said $550 and said advances, the said proceeds shall be applied upon the balance due the party of the first part as rental, and the party of the first part expressly agrees that said tenant shall not be held in default for nonpayment of rent until said crop shall have been harvested. After said rent shall have been paid, the balance of the proceeds of said crop shall be applied in payment of any indebtedness due from said Tashiro to the party of the second part."

The crops grown during the year 1915 were harvested and received by the defendant, and there was credited upon the books of the defendant the sum of $2,823.29 as the price thereof. Meanwhile the full amount of $550 and $700, covered by the agreement as advances to be made to the tenant by defendant, had been so advanced to Tashiro. The defendant, however, refused to account to the plaintiff for any part of the crop price, claiming that further advances and expenditures had been made in order to protect the crops of Tashiro, which advances and expenditures more than equaled the difference between the $550, plus the $700, and the amount credited as the price of the crop. Defendant, in its answer, made the following allegations:

"That on said 19th day of May, 1915, said premises had been planted to beans, which were growing thereon, and in order to properly tend and care for said crop of beans it then became and was necessary to expend considerable sums of money for labor, machinery, and supplies. That on said last-mentioned date said Tashiro was without funds or credit to enable him to properly tend and care for said crop, and said Tashiro did then and there refuse and fail to tend, take care of, and protect said crop well, or carefully, or at all, and said crop, by reason thereof, was in danger of becoming damaged and destroyed, so that neither plaintiff nor defendant might obtain any money or benefit from the proceeds thereof. That thereafter defendant gave notice to plaintiff that the sum of $700 advanced to said Tashiro as aforesaid had been expended, and that in order to tend, care for, and harvest said crop it would be necessary to expend further sums therefor, which the said Tashiro was unable to provide, and defendant demanded of plaintiff that plaintiff advance such necessary sums or permit defendant to do so, and first deduct the same from the money received from the sale of said crop; but that plaintiff failed and refused to advance any sums whatever to be used in the protection, caring for and harvesting of said crop. That on the 31st day of July, 1915, the defendant, pursuant to the terms of said crop mortgage, and for the purpose of protecting the interests of defendant and plaintiff in said crops, entered upon the said premises and took possession thereof and of the crops growing thereon; and thereafter defendant took all necessary measures for the protection of said crops, harvested, threshed and sacked the same, and delivered them into a warehouse."

At the trial the treasurer of defendant company testified that, after the crops were harvested, a credit of $2,823.29 was given to Tashiro on the books of the defendant, and in this connection he further testified:

"Q. Was that a credit, Mr. Kahn, or was it a sale of the crop of Mr. Tashiro? A. It was a credit. The beans were in our possession at all times. A credit was made upon a sale to us. We bought that produce from Tashiro at that price."

On behalf of the defendant the same witness was asked as to whether his company had paid out additional money in raising, cultivating, and harvesting the crops during the summer of 1915, and as to what the condition of the crops was in May, 1915, and as to what measures were taken by the defendant to protect the crops, if any, and whether it became necessary for the defendant to expend money for the protection of the crops during the summer of 1915, and whether the defendant entered into the possession of the premises and took possession of the crops during that summer. All of these questions were objected to, and the objections sustained.

The main contention presented by this appeal involves the rulings of the court in sustaining objections to these questions. The evident theory of the defendant was that, notwithstanding the express and particular terms of the contract, entered into between defendant and the plaintiff, limiting the advances to be made to the two sums of $550 and $700, it was entitled to show other advances made for the purpose of protecting the crops for the mutual benefit of plaintiff and defendant. We think the court did not err in its rulings. The contract was quite plainly made with the intention of assuring the plaintiff that it would receive payment of the rental due it from Tashiro, provided the crop brought a sum of money in the market over and above the amounts specifically fixed as the maximum which the defendant was entitled to charge against the sale price. By the allegations of the answer it appears that the advances fixed by the contract were not sufficient, for the defendant states therein that "said Tashiro was without funds or credit to enable him to properly tend and care for said crop." Without a further agreement—and it appears there was none—covering that matter, we do not think that the defendant was entitled to expend further sums, even for the protection of the crops, and charge that expenditure against the sale price obtained, and so deprive the plaintiff of any right to participate in the proceeds. We must assume that it was to defendant's interest to secure a continuation of the tenancy of Tashiro, and it was by reason of the consideration expressed in the written contract that the plaintiff allowed the lessee to continue to crop the ground. The trial judge allowed offsets against the sale price of the crop for the $700 and $550 advanced by the defendant, and gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the rental due to it. In our opinion, the judgment was right.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Civ. 3192.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS $\S$ 313 — IF OWNER WOULD ESCAPE LIABILITY, HE MUST REQUIRE GOOD BOND FROM CONTRACTOR.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1183, providing that if the original contract is filed for record together with a bond of the contractor with sufficient sureties in an amount not less than 50 per cent. of the contract price, which bond by its terms inures to the benefit of laborers and materialmen, then the court must when equitable restrict recovery under liens to an aggregate amount equal to the amount found due the contractor, an owner desiring to restrict liability must require a bond which would continue good at least till expiration of the period during which laborers and materialmen can avail themselves of the benefit afforded by the bond.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS $\S$ 313—SURETIES ON CONTRACTOR'S BOND REQUIRED BY OWNER HELD INSUFFICIENT.

Where the owner accepted contractor's bond, which was signed by the contractor's son and wife, and the son was worth less than $100, the wife's only property being a homestead on which she filed declaration, after execution of the bond the sureties on the bond must be deemed insufficient.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS $\hookrightarrow$ 304(1) — WHERE SURETIES ON CONTRACTOR'S BOND INSUFFICIENT, JUDGMENT AGAINST OWNER PROPER.

Where the sureties on contractor's bond taken pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, providing that, where the contract shall be recorded and the owner shall require a bond with good and sufficient sureties for not less than the one-half the contract price, the court must when equitable restrict mechanics and laborers to the amount due the contractor, were wholly insufficient, the court properly allowed mechanics' lien claimant to recover against the property although there was nothing due from the owner to the contractor.

4. MECHANICS' LIENS $\hookrightarrow$ 157(4)—CHARGE FOR BRUSHES FURNISHED CONTRACTOR HELD ILLEGAL.

Where brushes furnished contractor were not used and there was nothing in the contract requiring the contractor who was to paint building to use brushes, a charge therefor in plaintiff's demand was an illegal charge.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by the S. R. Frazee Company against R. H. Arnold and others for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien. From judgment of foreclosure, the named defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Ralph E. Homann, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

G. C. De Garmo, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of foreclosure of a materialman's lien for materials furnished in the construction of certain apartment houses owned by the defendant and appellant, Arnold.

The defendant Joe Goetz, on January 7, 1916, contracted to perform the labor and furnish the materials for painting and papering said apartment houses for the sum of $2,930. The contract was in writing and was duly filed for record, together with a bond furnished by the contractor pursuant to section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the sum of $1,465, which said bond by its terms insured to the benefit of laborers and materialmen. On March 16, 1916, after Goetz, the contractor, had been paid $1,430, he abandoned the contract, and the owner, Arnold, necessarily expended the additional sums of $1,363.30 for labor and $215.42 for materials in completing the job, thereby making the total cost of the work and materials covered by the Goetz contract $3,008.72, excluding plaintiff's demand for $833.66.

Judgment was rendered against the contractor and his sureties for the amount of plaintiff's demand, and a foreclosure of the lien was decreed against the property. The owner of the property, Arnold, appeals.

Appellant contends, first, that having required the contractor, under section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to furnish and file a bond in the requisite amount, the terms of which insured to the benefit of laborers and materialmen, a recovery against him as owner should have been restricted to the amount found to be due from the owner to the contractor, and a judgment rendered against him as contractor and his sureties for the deficiency. Nothing was found to be due from the owner to the contractor, and therefore appellant claims that his property is not liable for any part of plaintiff's demand.

By section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, among other things, it is provided that if the original contract is filed for record, together with a bond of the contractor "with good and sufficient sureties," in an amount not less than 50 per cent. of the contract price, which bond by its terms insures to the benefit of laborers and materialmen, "then the court must, where it would be equitable so to do, restrict the recovery under such liens to an aggregate amount equal to the amount found to be due from the owner to the contractor, and render a judgment against the contractor and his sureties on said bond for any deficiency or difference there may remain between said amount so found to be due to the contractor and the whole amount found to be due to claimants for such labor or materials or both."

Said section further provides:

"It is the intent and purpose of this section to limit the owner's liability, in all cases, to the measure of the contract price where he shall have filed or caused to be filed in good faith with his original contract a valid bond with good and sufficient sureties in the amount and upon the conditions as herein provided."

The trial court found that said owner in good faith caused the contractor to furnish a bond for the required amount, but further found that the sureties on said bond were insufficient. Said sureties were, respectively, the son and the wife of the contractor. The evidence shows without conflict that the contractor's son was worth financially not more than $71, and that the only property possessed by the contractor's wife at the time she executed the bond or afterward was their home place where they were then living, claimed by her as community property, of the value of $3,000, subject to a mortgage of $800, and the evidence further shows without conflict that in March, 1916, the same month the contract was abandoned, a homestead was declared and filed on said property by the contractor's wife.

Appellant contends that since the property of Mrs. Goetz at the time she executed the bond had a net value of $2,200, which was

$735 in excess of the amount of the bond on which she qualified, her subsequent act in declaring a homestead upon the property did not have the retroactive effect of rendering her an insufficient surety at the time the bond was executed. In other words, appellant argues that so far as the property owner's liability is concerned under said section 1183, if he acts in good faith in requiring the contractor to file a bond, "the sureties should not be judged as of the time of the execution of the bond."

[1-3] We are satisfied that the finding of the court in holding that the sureties on the bond were insufficient was justified by the facts shown by the evidence and by the law as embodied in said section 1183. The bond mentioned is required to be furnished for the express purpose of protecting laborers and materialmen. The necessity of duty, therefore, devolved upon the owner to require a bond that would continue good at least until the period had expired during which said laborers and materialmen could avail themselves of the benefit afforded by said bond, and this not alone for the protection of the laborers and materialmen, but also for his own protection in the matter of the limitation of the recovery which might be had against him. Here the contractor was shown to be insolvent at all times. His son was wholly unqualified as a surety at any time, and his wife possessed only such property as she might reasonably be expected to preserve inviolate against her husband's obligations if such necessity should arise. It was therefore entirely within the discretionary power of the court, granted it under said section 1183, to hold that under the circumstances above mentioned it would not be equitable to restrict the recovery against the owner to the amount of the contract price.

[4] Appellant's next contention is that plaintiff's demand contained materials not called for by the specifications. We have examined the evidence on this point and find no merit in appellant's contention, except as to certain paint brushes. The evidence shows that the materials objected to were materials in fact called for by the specifications, but which were designated and furnished under a different name, or else they consisted of materials which were necessary to be used in connection with and as a part of the specified materials. All of such materials were actually used and consumed in the performance of the contract by the contractor. The paint brushes, however, which were of the value of $31.26, were not called for by the specifications, nor were they consumed in the performance of the contract. They were left on the premises after the contract was abandoned, and counsel for respondent stipulated during the trial that the specifications did not "specifically require the contractor to use brushes." In view of this stipulation, and in view of the further fact that the brushes were not consumed in the performance of the contract, the value of the same was an illegal charge against the owner.

Appellant's final point is that plaintiff charged appellant for said materials more than the price agreed upon between plaintiff and the contractor. There is no evidence, however, to support such claim, and in the absence of such showing we are not disposed to disturb the finding of the trial court.

It is directed that the judgment be modified by striking therefrom the reasonable value of the paint brushes, to wit, $31.26, and as thus modified the judgment will stand affirmed.

HARPOLD v. SLOCUM et al. (Civ. 2740.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 6, 1920.)

NOVATION ~~CIVIL~~—NOTE GIVEN BY TRUSTEE OF PROPERTY HELD TO WORK NOVATION.

Where three persons interested in a garage exchanged the same for other property, title being taken in the name of one of them, and on request for settlement by plaintiff who owned the largest interest the trustee executed a note in plaintiff's favor of an amount equal to plaintiff's interest as computed, held that where plaintiff, though he did not surrender the contract providing for disposition of the proceeds by the trustee, considered that he received the note in payment, a novation was worked, particularly where the trustee disposed of the property, but failed to account, and on trial would not give information as to disposition of the proceeds.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by C. Harpold against Thos. A. Slocum and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 168 Cal. 364, 143 Pac. 609.

James R. Jaffray, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Andrews, Toland & Andrews, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff upon a promissory note alleged to have been executed by the defendants. The note was set out in full in the complaint and its execution was not denied by the defendants, except that it was affirmatively alleged in the answer that the note was given in connection with a separate contract as security only to the plaintiff that the defendants, parties to the alleged separate contract, would perform the obligations imposed upon them thereunder. This alleged separate contract was made on the 2d day of December, 1909, and the note on November 28, 1910. In so far as the facts relating to the transaction were agreed to, they show: That prior to December 2, 1909, plaintiff and the defendants had jointly owned a garage in a California town. In addition to his interest in the garage business, the plaintiff held a mortgage upon the building in which the business was being done to secure payment to him of the sum of $1,000. It being mutually agreeable to all, an exchange was effected by trading the garage property for a house and lot in the city of Los Angeles, title to which was taken in the name of defendant Thomas A. Slocum. Thereupon an agreement was signed by the three, which in its material parts provided as follows:

"That all three of the parties are the owners of a certain house and lot, on Twenty-Fifth street near San Pedro, for which they have traded the garage in Santa Paula, on which building C. Harpold owned a mortgage for one thousand (1,000) dollars; therefore be it understood and agreed between all parties hereto, that as consideration for surrendering the mortgage, aforesaid, the said C. Harpold shall receive as an interest in such property, or out of any money received for the sale of the aforesaid house and lot, or any trade that is made on or with said property as a basis, the first thousand (1,000) dollars after which all the remainder shall be divided among the several parties hereto in equal parts. It is understood and agreed among the three parties to this agreement that for convenience in handling the deed shall be made out in the name of Thos. A. Slocum, though the ownership shall be held in all three in the ratio aforesaid and that the said Thos. A. Slocum shall act as trustee."

It has been noted that the promissory note was made in November, 1910, almost a year after the exchange of properties was effected and the contract referred to executed. At this point the contentions of the plaintiff and defendants and the testimony as to the facts concerning the execution of the note are divergent. Plaintiff testified as follows:

"At the instance of Tom Slocum we traded the garage for the property in Los Angeles. This contract we have been talking about was made at the time we traded for the Los Angeles property. The understanding according to the contract, based on our dealings at Santa Paula, was, Slocum wanted a power of attorney, or whatever you call it. He wanted to sell the property or do something with it, and that is the reason they gave me that contract—so when the property was sold I was to have the first $1,000, and the rest of it was to be divided up in three equal shares between the three of us. That is the property referred to as being on Twenty-Fifth street near San Pedro. Well, it must have been something like a year after that I had been down in Nevada and was going back. I stopped at their office, and they made the proposition they would give me $1,750 for my part and leave them the rest of it; that they would give me a note for $1,750, payable in one year. They said they thought by that time they could dispose of the property. I told them that was satisfactory to me. They didn't say anything about the contract then that we had before. I supposed, when I got the note, that was the last of it; that everything belonged to them."

On cross-examination the plaintiff was asked whether he still retained the original contract, and he said that he thought he had it. Asked whether he was willing to turn it over, he said he didn't think he was. When asked why he didn't give up the contract when they gave the note, he said:

"They didn't ask me for it. I didn't suppose it was any good after I got the note. I supposed everything was canceled. Q. Will you now give it up? A. Under one consideration. Q. What is that consideration? A. Pay the note and interest."

Defendant Thomas A. Slocum testified that the occasion for the giving of the note was that Harpold was dissatisfied with the condition of affairs and "wanted something tangible, I suppose." He further testified:

"Q. How did that note come to be made in the sum of $1,750? A. That is what we figured that the third—Mr. Harpold was entitled to $1,000 out of everything we made, and the $750 was what I considered the property would bring, that is three times $750, after deducting the mortgage of $3,200 and this $1,000. Mr. Harpold spent more than that. We all did. The building at Santa Paula cost us something like $1,200 to $1,500, * * * and besides that Mr. Harpold must have put in about $400 cash into this house, as well as my brother and myself."

When asked what had become of the house and lot in Los Angeles, Thomas A. Slocum admitted that he had disposed of it. The record shows that the following then occurred:

"Q. What has it been turned into? A. It has been turned into other properties. Q. What are the properties? (No answer.) Q. What is the answer? A. I have not given any yet. I was trying to decide where the properties were. That is something that would have to be worked out in detail. Q. You ought to know where it is, hadn't you? A. I suppose so. Q. Now, where is it? A. Well, it is not in tangible form right now. Q. What form is it in? A. In undivided interests that would have to be figured out. I am not ready to give a statement to-day on it."

It is clear beyond question that there was ample evidence upon which to base a finding that the promissory note had been given in extinguishment of any right that the plaintiff had to the proceeds to be derived from the sale of the house and lot in Los Angeles. Not only was the plaintiff's testimony positive to this point, but there was the further persuasive circumstance that the promissory note was not made simultaneously with the contract, but was dated nearly a year thereafter. Practically the whole contention of counsel for appellant is that because the plaintiff had not delivered up the copy of the contract of date December, 1909, and because he expressed himself as unwilling at the trial to so deliver it up, it could not be said that he had ever legally accepted the note obligation of the defendant in lieu of his right to share in the proceeds of the sale of the house and lot. While it does appear as a fact that Thomas A. Slocum was to hold the property as trustee, it also appears that he had power to dispose of the same, and would be chargeable to account only for the share of the proceeds to the plaintiff and the other Slocum. Under such circumstances, we think that the novation worked by the acceptance of the promissory note operated to cancel any interest of the plaintiff in the property or the proceeds therefrom, and that the fact that the plaintiff may have retained in his possession his copy of the original contract was not evidence of a lack of consummation of the agreement effected by the note transaction. The plaintiff himself looked to the obligation of the defendants upon the note alone, and by his acceptance of the note and his acts with relation thereto he would be conclusively estopped from claiming that the earlier contractual obligations assumed still survived. He himself testified:

"I supposed, when I got the note, that was the last of it, that everything belonged to them."

Thomas A. Slocum, the only one of the defendants who testified, admitted that he had disposed of the house and lot; had never made any accounting therefor to the plaintiff, and, surprising as it may appear, was unable to tell the court what property he had gotten in exchange for the house and lot, contenting himself generally with the statement that "it is not in tangible form right now." We are scarcely able to see how a trial court would have justified a judgment different from that entered in the case.

The judgment is affirmed.

There appearing to have been no reason for the appeal other than for delay, damages will be awarded.

Action by Marie Verdier against V. J. Stoll. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Appeal from order dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

See, also, 36 Cal. App. 573, 172 Pac. 1127.

R. J. Hudson, of Woodland, for appellant. Alfred Siemon, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. [1] Defendant appeals from the judgment and has also attempted to appeal from an order denying his motion for a new trial. There being no right of appeal from such an order, the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is dismissed.

[2] By a contract in writing signed by one J. B. Estribou, it was stipulated that he agreed to sell and did thereby sell to defendant certain horses described in the contract. Five dollars in cash was paid at the signing of the contract, and the remaining $765 was to be paid within five days from date of the contract. Estribou assigned the contract to one O. S. Dormitzer, who assigned to the plaintiff. Appellant claims that the contract as written was only an option and that therefore an action cannot be maintained against him for the contract price. But the evidence shows that defendant took possession of the horses, which never were returned to the plaintiff or to either of her assignors. Assuming, as claimed by appellant, that he did not take possession of the horses until the day following the expiration of the five days named in the contract, there is no escape from the conclusion that in accepting the property he took it under that contract and subject to the obligation to pay the consideration therein named. Counsel for appellant admits that if plaintiff proved the allegations of her amended complaint the judgment was correct. He has failed to convince us that any of said allegations were not proved.

[3] There appears to have been no reason for this appeal other than that it was made for delay.

For that reason the judgment is affirmed, and it is further ordered that the plaintiff recover from the defendant the additional sum of $50 damages.

2. GUARANTY 85(1)—COMPLAINT HELD IN-SUFFICIENT IN NOT ALLEGING EXECUTION OF GUARANTY.

In an action on a note signed by one of the defendants, on the back of which appeared a recital that appellant, another defendant, guaranteed one-half of the amount, the complaint is defective where it did not specifically allege appellant's execution of the guaranty, for that matter could not be inferred from the note which was attached as an exhibit.

Action by Los Angeles Humane Society (for Children), a corporation, against M. C. Adler, Emma S. Brusch, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Adler appeals. Reversed.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William Lewis, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal by defendant Adler from a judgment entered against him for money after he had suffered default to be taken. The action was brought to enforce payment of a promissory note executed by defendant Brusch, which note was secured by mortgage upon real property of the said Brusch. That portion of the complaint referring to the execution of the note reads as follows:

"That on the 14th day of February, 1912, at Los Angeles county, in the state of California, defendant Emma C. Brusch, a widow, made, executed and delivered to the Los Angeles Humane Society (for Children) her promissory note for the principal sum of $1,100.00 in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"Note Secured by Mortgage.

"$1,100.00. Los Angeles, Cal., February 14, 1912.

"Three years after date for value received, I promise to pay to the Los Angeles Humane Society (for Children), or order at the city of Los Angeles, state of California, the sum of eleven hundred ($1,100.00) dollars, with interest from date until paid, at the rate of six (6%) per cent. per annum, payable quarterly. Should the interest not be so paid it shall become part of the principal and thereafter bear like interest as the principal. Should default be made in the payment of any installment of interest when due, then the whole sum of principal and interest shall become immediately due and payable at the option of the holder of this note. Principal and interest payable in gold coin of the United States. This note is secured by a mortgage upon real property.

"Emma C. Brusch."

Indorsed on back:

"We hereby guarantee the payment of the within sum; I for one-half thereof, viz, $550.00 and interest thereon.

"Elmar R. McDowal.

"And I for one-half thereof, mainly $550.00 and interest thereon.

"M. C. Adler."

The further allegation referred to the mortgage having been executed by Brusch and the mortgage was attached as an exhibit to the complaint. In the prayer of the complaint, judgment against this appellant was asked for such proportion of the deficiency that might result upon the sale of the property as appellant had contracted to be responsible for.

[1, 2] The principal point made upon this appeal is that the complaint failed to state a cause of action against appellant, and with this contention we agree. No allegation is contained in the complaint to the effect that Adler executed the guarantee attached to the note, and without such an allegation the complaint was insufficient to show any obligation assumed by appellant.

"Matters of substance must be alleged in direct terms, and not by way of recital or reference, much less by exhibits merely attached to the pleading. Whatever is an essential element to a cause of action must be presented by a distinct averment, and cannot be left to an inference to be drawn from the construction of a document attached to the complaint." Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Thornton, 117 Cal. 481, 49 Pac. 573; Estate of Cook, 137 Cal. 184, 69 Pac. 968; San Francisco Sulphur Co. v. Aetna Indemnity Co., 7 Cal. App. 98, 93 Pac. 888.

The further point is made that the judgment was entered without foreclosure sale of the property of the defendant Brusch, which action the court was unauthorized to take. It appears from the recitals in the judgment that the court determined that the security had been exhausted by reason of a prior mortgage claim held by one of the defendants in this action, in consequence of which no decree of foreclosure was made in this action. This determination of the court was based upon a stipulation as to facts entered into between the plaintiff and such prior mortgagee. The conclusion already expressed, that the complaint failed to state a cause of action against this appellant, makes it unnecessary, we think, to enter upon a discussion as to whether, in the absence of an allegation made in the complaint as to the insufficiency of the security, the court was authorized to accept the stipulation and therefrom determine that no decree of foreclosure should be entered. The first point made and here considered goes to the very foundation of the right of the plaintiff to any judgment against appellant.

The judgment is reversed.

(Civ. 2065.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 12, 1920. Rehearing Denied March 13, 1920.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨335—VENDOR ENTITLED UPON DEFAULT TO RETAIN PAYMENTS MADE.

Vendor in a contract of sale of land, under which time is of the essence of the contract, upon default of the vendee in payments of installment without legal excuse, is entitled to retain the moneys that have been paid thereon.

2. FRAUD ⇨59(2) — DIFFERENCE BETWEEN ACTUAL AND REPRESENTED VALUE MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Measure of damages which a vendee of land is ordinarily entitled to recover in an action against his vendor for deceit is the difference between the actual value of the property and its value had the property been as represented, and the measure of recovery is not affected by the price paid.

3. FRAUD ⇨47—VENDEE MUST ALLEGE ABILITY AND WILLINGNESS TO PERFORM.

In a vendee's action against vendor for deceit, where the contract is executory, the plaintiff must allege his ability and willingness to perform the contract.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨117—VENDEE CANNOT RETAIN POSSESSION AND REFUSE PAYMENT.

A party in possession of land on an executory contract to purchase it cannot while retaining possession refuse, because of fraud, to make the payments provided by his contract.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨334(4)—NOTICE BY VENDOR THAT HE "RESCINDED" HELD NOT TECHNICAL RESCISSION ENTITLING VENDEE TO RETURN OF PAYMENTS.

A notice by a vendor under an executory contract of sale of land that he elected to "rescind" because of nonpayment of installments due held not to be construed to mean a technical rescission as defined by the Civil Code such as would entitle the vendee to a return of installments paid, when considered together with correspondence between the parties and the contract of sale.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Rescind.]

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⇨335—VENDEE AFTER CANCELLATION BY VENDOR CANNOT RESCIND FOR FRAUD AND RECOVER PAYMENTS.

A vendee, under executory contract of sale of land, who retained possession and refused to pay certain installments because of fraudulent representations made at the time of the sale, cannot, after the vendor has elected to cancel under the contract, move from the premises and give notice of rescission so as to become entitled to a return of installments paid; there being no mutual rescission.

ELLISON, Presiding Justice pro tem. This action was brought to recover from the corporation defendant moneys paid by plaintiffs on a contract for the purchase of a residence lot, with the buildings and improvements thereon, situate in Los Angeles. The plaintiffs had judgment, and the defendant appeals therefrom.

On the 1st day of November, 1913, the defendant, as party of the first part, entered into a written agreement with the plaintiffs, as parties of the second part, whereby said party of the first part agreed that upon the performance of the covenants to be kept by the plaintiffs it would convey to them the lot and premises described therein. The plaintiffs were to pay for the said property the sum of $3,250, with interest on deferred payments at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. Payments were to be made, as follows: $150 upon the execution of the agreement, and $30 per month on the 1st day of each and every month thereafter until the full purchase price was paid. Said $30 per month was to include interest, taxes, and insurance. The agreement contained this clause:

"It is further agreed that time is of the essence of this agreement, and if the second parties shall fail and make default in any of the payments by the second parties hereinafter promised to be made as the same may mature or become due, then this contract may be rescinded at the option of the party of the first part, and the first party shall thereupon be released from all obligations in law or equity to convey, or cause to be conveyed said property, and the second parties shall forfeit all right thereto, and all moneys paid to the first party be forfeited and retained by it as rent and agreed liquidated damages."

Plaintiffs paid the $150 agreed to be paid on the execution of the agreement, and made the agreed monthly payments of $30 per month to March 23, 1915. On the 17th day of March, 1915, the defendant, at the request of plaintiffs, reduced the monthly payments to be made from $30 per month to $20. After this reduction the plaintiffs were dilatory in paying the $20 per month, as agreed, and by letter were often reminded of the delay. On December 28, 1915, the plaintiffs had defaulted in making the payment of November 1st of $20 and of December 1st of $20, and taxes agreed by them to be paid in the amount of $9.53, making in all a total of $49.53. Prior thereto, and on the 9th day of December, the defendant had addressed a letter to the plaintiffs from which we quote:

"We have to call your attention to the fact that you are now two months in arrears in the payments of your contract. In view of the fact that some time ago we reduced the monthly payments for you, we think you should make payments promptly. We cannot continue the contract in its present condition, and we will ask you to send us the two monthly payments. We also call your attention to the fact that the taxes are now past due, and we will ask you to be good enough to give this matter your attention by return mail."

On December 13th the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs again:

"We addressed you last Thursday calling attention to the condition of your contract. We should have had an answer from you on Saturday. Up to the present time we have not heard from you, and we have to call your attention to the fact that you are two months in arrears on the payments and that this condition cannot be allowed to continue. Unless you take the necessary steps to meet these obligations we will have to protect our interest in the property by appropriate measures."

Again, on December 21st the defendant wrote to the plaintiffs. In this letter, after calling attention to the clause in the contract hereinbefore set out in full, making time the essence thereof, and so forth, the letter proceeded:

"On December 9th we addressed a communication to you, calling your attention to the fact that you were at the time two months in arrears in your payments, and, also, that you had failed to pay the taxes, as provided in the contract. To this communication we received no reply. We then on December 13th addressed you again, calling your attention to the fact that you had failed to reply to the previous communication, and advised you unless we did hear from you we would take the necessary steps to protect our interest in the property. To this communication we received no reply. We therefore beg to advise you that, in view of the fact that you are in arrears in the payments on your contract, and also failed to pay the taxes, as provided, that unless by Monday, December 27th, 1915, you make the payments now past due, and also pay the taxes, we will, in accordance with the rights we have in the above mentioned contract, terminate it, and cancel it, and, as provided in the contract, your payments will be forfeited, and you will cease to have any rights in the property, or any rights whatever."

Not having received any communication from the plaintiffs, the defendant, on December 28th, served upon the plaintiffs the following notice:

"Notice is hereby given that the contract between you and the Harbor View Land Company, dated the 1st day of November, 1913, for the purchase and sale of lot 13, block 8, tract 2085, as per map recorded in Book 21, page 168, of Miscellaneous Records of Los Angeles County, in the office of the county recorder of said county, as modified by our letter to you dated March 19, 1915, is hereby rescinded for breach of conditions contained in said contract on your part, to wit, for failure to make the following particular payments: November 1, 1915, $20.00; December 1, 1915, $20.00; one-half of 1915-1916 taxes, $9.53. * * * $49.53. Immediate possession of said premises is hereby demanded."

On January 8, 1916, the defendant brought an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county to quiet title as against the plaintiffs to the lot in question. To this complaint the plaintiffs filed an answer and also a cross-complaint. In the cross-complaint they alleged the same matters and also the fraudulent misrepresentation as are in the complaint in this action, to which reference will be made later, and prayed for a judgment for the return to them of the moneys they had paid upon the contract. To this cross-complaint the defendant filed an answer, and the cause came on regularly for trial, whereupon the court excluded, upon objection of the plaintiff therein, all evidence offered in support of the cross-complaint therein, upon the ground, as stated, that the cross-complaint could not be tried in said action. Thereafter, judgment was entered in said action in favor of the plaintiff (defendant herein), quieting plaintiff's title to the property in dispute, and enjoining the defendants from ever asserting any claim thereto.

On February 15, 1916, the plaintiffs in this action served upon the defendant a notice, as follows:

"You will please take notice that we hereby elect to rescind our contract with you, bearing date November 1, 1913, regarding the purchase of lot 13, in block 8, because of the discovery of the falseness of your representations regarding a car line to be built to and from said property, and regarding the construction of the house upon said property. You will also please take notice that we vacated said premises on February 10, 1916, and possession of the same is hereby surrendered to you. Demand is hereby made on you for the payment to us of the sum of $780.00 paid by us on this contract, and for the further sum of $500.00 damages for the injury we have suffered as the result of your false and fraudulent representations to us."

Thereafter, on August 14, 1916, the present action was begun by the plaintiffs against the defendant. The complaint alleges the making of the contract between the parties hereinbefore referred to, and then in detail sets out various alleged fraudulent representations that had been made by the defendant to induce the plaintiffs to enter into said contract. Briefly stated, it was alleged that the property, when they purchased it, was a remote distance from the business center of San Pedro and street car service, and that its value depended upon car service largely, and that the defendant, as an inducement for them to buy it, stated that $8,000 had already been deposited with the Pacific Electric Railway Company, and that a street car line would be built near the said property, and the construction thereof would be begun not later than the 1st day of February following; that a certain reservoir site near the property was to be removed, and a street projected through the land occupied by it; that the house was a new house and cost $2,500, and was well constructed, and built on a firm and solid foundation. The plaintiffs then allege that all of these allegations were false; that the house was not properly constructed; was not on a good foundation; that neither $8,000, nor any other sum, had been deposited to obtain an extension of the electric railroad to a point near the property in dispute, etc. The complaint alleged that, subsequent to the making of the said agreement, they had paid, pursuant to the contract, the sum of $780; that the plaintiffs had rescinded the contract; and asked for a judgment for the return to them of said $780.

The defendant filed an answer, denying the principal allegations of the complaint. Upon the trial thereof, the court found the alleged charges of fraud and misrepresentation to be true; found that the contract had been rescinded by the plaintiffs on February 10, 1916; and also found that the contract had been rescinded by the defendant on or about January 1, 1916, and that said rescission was concurred in by the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs joined in said rescission by giving notice thereof to the defendant within a reasonable time thereafter; and entered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $375, and $26.25 interest, making a total of $401.25, the said amount representing the $780 that had been paid on the contract, less the sum of $405 allowed for 27 months' rental of the premises while occupied by the plaintiffs.

The appellant's main contention on this appeal is that by virtue of the terms of the contract, when it exercised its option to declare the contract ended for default in payments, the money that had heretofore been paid by the plaintiffs to it became its property, and that it is entitled to retain it, unless there has been a rescission of the contract which changed the rights of the parties; and it is its contention that the evidence in the case does not sustain the finding of the court that the contract was rescinded by the defendant on or about January 1, 1916, or that it was rescinded by the plaintiffs February 10th, or at any other time, or that the plaintiffs concurred in any rescission that has been made by the defendant.

[1] After some uncertainty and fluctuation in the opinions, the law is well settled in this state that the vendor in a contract, such as we have before us, upon default of the vendee without legal excuse, is entitled to retain the moneys that have been obtained thereon.

At the outset it is proper to ascertain the nature of the case now before the court, and it may be first stated that it is not an action for damages for fraud and deceit. The complaint is not based upon such a theory of the case.

[2] In Hines v. Brode, 168 Cal. 507, 143 Pac. 729, it is stated that the rule of damages in an action for deceit is as follows:

"The measure of damages which a vendee of land is ordinarily entitled to recover * * * is the difference between the actual value of the property and its value had the property been as represented, and the measure of recovery is not affected by the price paid."

In the complaint in this case, there is no allegation of any damages resulting from the alleged fraudulent representations. There is no prayer in the complaint for the damages as representing the difference between these two values, but the complaint asked simply for the return of the money that had been paid on the contract. The findings of the court follow the complaint in this feature, in that there is no finding of the difference between the value of the property as it was and the value of the property as it would have been had the representations alleged to have been made been true, but simply a finding of the amount that had been paid and a judgment for the return thereof, less rental value while used by plaintiffs.

[3] Further, in an action for deceit, where the contract is executory, the plaintiff must allege his ability and willingness to perform the contract.

"Where, under an executory contract, a plaintiff seeks recoupment in damages for deceit while affirming the contract (and it must necessarily be an affirmation if the action be not after rescission), it must be conclusively taken as to such plaintiff that he stands ready and willing to pay the full consideration called for by the contract." Hines v. Brode, supra.

There is no allegation in the complaint that the plaintiffs stand ready and willing to pay the consideration mentioned in the contract and no finding of such willingness or ability.

The plaintiffs' notice of February 15, 1916, makes it manifest that they had no intention of paying any installment of the purchase price due or to become due.

[4] It not being an action for damages growing out of the alleged fraudulent representations, and the alleged fraudulent representations, not being made a basis for the recovery of damages based thereon, it is somewhat difficult to ascertain with accuracy what legitimate place the fraudulent allegations have in the pleadings, or what part they are entitled to play in the final decision of the case. The law is well settled that a party in possession of land on an executory contract to purchase it cannot, while retaining possession, refuse, because of claim of fraud, to make the payments provided by his contract. The fact, if it be a fact, that the vendor has no title to convey, or that the contract was entered into by reason of fraudulent representations of the vendor, furnish no legal justification for neglect or refusal to pay the installments when due so long as possession is retained. Los Molinos Land Co. v. Mackay, 175 Cal. 305, 165 Pac. 926; Joyce v. Shafer, 97 Cal. 335, 32 Pac. 320; Empire Investment Co. v. Mort, 169 Cal. 733, 147 Pac. 960; Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 531, 91 Pac. 498.

The plaintiffs' case must be considered as one wherein a vendee is seeking, after an alleged rescission of a contract of purchase of real estate, to recover back the moneys paid thereon. And whether he is entitled to recover or not depends upon whether there has been such rescission.

[5] 1. We are of the opinion that the finding of the court that the defendant, on or about January 1, 1916, rescinded the contract of purchase, is not sustained by the evidence. It is true that in its notice to the plaintiffs, dated December 28, 1915, it used the word "rescind"; but this, in view of the terms of the contract and the previous letters written by it to the plaintiffs, could not be construed as intended to mean a technical rescission, as defined by the provisions of the Civil Code.

It will be observed that the contract between the parties provides that if default is made in the payment the vendor might "rescind" the contract, but in the same connection it provided that if it did so it should retain all moneys that had been paid as rent and liquidated damages. This is entirely inconsistent with the technical rescission defined by the Civil Code.

Again, in the letter of December 21, 1915, it was called to the attention of the plaintiffs as to what would result if their payments were not made and they were given an extension of time to the 28th to make them, wherein it was stated:

"We therefore beg to advise you that, unless by Monday, December 27th, 1915, you make the payments now past due, and also pay the taxes, we will, in accordance with the rights we have in the above mentioned contract, terminate it, and cancel it, and, as provided in the contract, your payments will be forfeited, and you will cease to have any rights in the property, or any rights whatever."

The contract, and these various letters, and the final notice served upon the plaintiffs to vacate the premises, are properly to be construed together in determining the intention of the defendant in its conduct towards the plaintiffs, and it is clear from all these that it did not intend, by its notice of December 28th, to make a technical rescission in accordance with the Code provision, and that the notice served upon the plaintiffs was nothing more than a notice in line with the provisions of the contract if they failed to make the payments their rights under the contract would be terminated. There was then no rescission by the defendant on January 1, 1915, and the finding of the court to that effect is not sustained by the evidence.

In Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 739, 93 Pac. 1007, it is held:

"Upon the default of the vendee, without excuse, to perform the conditions of the bond, the mere service of a notice on him by the vendor, calling attention to the particulars in which the default consisted, and declaring the bond to be forfeited and all the interest of the vendee in the property to be terminated, and demanding possession of the property, and the subsequent peaceable taking possession of the property by the vendor, and his bringing an action to quiet his title thereto, did not constitute a rescission of the contract by the mutual consent of the parties, so as to give the vendee a right of action against the vendor for the recovery of the portion of the purchase price paid under the contract or for disbursements made in the performance of other conditions thereof."

[6] 2. When the defendant had exercised the option given to it by the contract to declare it forfeited and ended for nonpayment of installments due, the money that had been paid by the very terms of the contract became the property of the defendant, and nothing that the plaintiffs could thereafter do without the consent of the defendant, would have the effect of transferring title to the money from the defendant to the plaintiffs and give them a right of action for its recovery. The attempted rescission by the plaintiffs on February 15, 1916, gave them no right of action for the money. If, before the contract had been ended for nonpayment, the plaintiffs had surrendered possession of the premises and rescinded the contract, they would have had a right of recovery upon proving fraudulent representations sufficient to justify such rescission. But the decisions all hold that, after default without legal excuse, no recovery can be had for moneys paid, unless there is a mutual rescission.

In List v. Moore, 20 Cal. App. 622, 129 Pac.

964, the decisions are reviewed at some length, and it is there said:

"But there could seem to be no controversy as to what are the controlling principles of law here in view of the decision in the Glock Case [123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17]. Therein, it is clearly held that 'under a contract for the sale of real estate, in which time is made of the essence of the contract and performance by the purchaser is made a condition precedent to a conveyance, and upon his breach of the contract he is declared to forfeit all rights thereunder, and all moneys paid thereon, the purchaser cannot, after his default without excuse shown therefor, by a tender of the amount due, acquire either an equitable or legal right to maintain an action to recover back the moneys paid under the contract.' Furthermore, that 'where time is expressly made of the essence of the contract for the purchase of land, equity will not ignore such provision but follows the law and will neither make a contract for the parties, nor violate that which they have entered into; nor will it relieve a purchaser who has made unexcused default under such a provision, and has not fulfilled conditions precedent to the vesting of his right of action.' It is declared also that the right of the vendor to retain the part of the purchase price paid after the default of the vendee is independent of any express clause in the contract for forfeiture of rights or for retention of the purchase money as liquidated damages, that such clauses are merely declarations in express terms of the legal rights of the parties under such a contract, without them, and that the validity of such express clause is immaterial. It is furthermore held that in such case it is only where the vendor, after default of the vendee, agrees to a mutual abandonment and rescission that the vendee is entitled to receive the purchase money paid."

And in the recent case of Russell v. Hawxhurst, reported in 187 Pac. 146, it is said:

"It is now the settled law of this state that a vendee under a contract for the purchase of real property cannot continue to hold the possession thereof after making default in the payments as therein provided, regardless of whether the vendor has title or not, and that the vendee cannot refrain from making payments as by the contract provided, and also continue to hold possession of the land; nor can the vendee, under any circumstances, be entitled to the return of the money by him theretofore paid thereunder while he continues to hold possession of the land; nor can the vendee after making default in his payments without legal excuse ever recover the return of any of the money he may have paid thereon when the vendor was not in default of anything on his part to be kept and performed, except when there has been mutual rescission—citing Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 10 et seq., 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Haile v. Smith, 128 Cal. 419, 60 Pac. 1032; Bruschi v. Quail Mining Company, 147 Cal. 120, 123, 81 Pac. 404; Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 526, 531, 91 Pac. 498; Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 739, 745, 93 Pac. 1007; Gervaise v. Brookins, 156 Cal. 103, 108, 103 Pac. 329; List v. Moore, 20 Cal. App. 616, 129 Pac. 962; Skookum Oil Co. v. Thomas, 162 Cal. 539, 123 Pac. 363; Champion Min. Co. v. Champion Mines, 164 Cal. 205, 213, 128 Pac. 315."

The fraud alleged not being a legal excuse for the nonpayment of the installments so long as plaintiffs held possession of the property, and such fraud being the only excuse suggested for such nonpayment, it follows that, when the defendant declared the contract ended, the plaintiffs were in default without legal excuse, and no recovery could thereafter be had without a mutual rescission of the contract. As no such rescission took place, it necessarily follows that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

46 Cal. App. 139

REED v. OAKDALE IRR. DIST. (Civ. 2101.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, Feb. 13, 1920.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⇨280—OWNER SILENT UNTIL AFTER CONSTRUCTION OF DITCH IN HIGHWAY HELD LIMITED TO COMPENSATION.

The rule that, where property is taken for a public use by a public service corporation, and the property owner has not in an appropriate way objected to the taking, but has by silence permitted the use to be inaugurated and carried on for some time, he has waived or lost his right of ejectment or abatement, and is limited to his compensation in damages guaranteed by Const. art. 1, § 14, applies to right of abutting owner against irrigation company which has so constructed and operated a ditch in a highway.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨907(2)—FINDINGS PRESUMED SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

In the absence of the evidence from the record, it must be presumed that it supports the theory of the findings and judgment that an irrigation ditch running along the center of a highway does not cover its entire width, and that removal of sand thrown out in cleaning the ditch will furnish opportunity for travel on the highway.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; W. H. Langdon, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth H. Reed against the Oakdale Irrigation District. From judgment for less relief than demanded, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Reeder, of Oakdale, for appellant.

P. H. Griffin, of Modesto, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff brought the action to recover from defendant the sum of $3,000, as damages caused by obstructions to a highway by means of a ditch constructed therein and sand thrown from said ditch into the highway, and to have said obstructions removed. A jury, called to pass upon the question of damages, awarded plaintiff $150, and she was given judgment for that amount and costs. As to the remaining issues, the court made findings of fact and conclusions of law and entered judgment in accordance therewith. Plaintiff appeals from the whole of said judgment on the judgment roll alone.

The following findings will sufficiently indicate the matters in dispute:

It was found that defendant is a public corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of California; that for more than seven years last past plaintiff has been the owner and in possession of lots 14 and 15 of the Oakdale Syndicate tract, in Stanislaus county, as per the official map of said tract filed for record in the office of the county recorder on the 1st day of April, 1890.

"(5) That along the southerly boundary of" said lots "there is laid out and dedicated by said map so filed as aforesaid a public highway, used by the public for highway purposes, 40 feet in width, which plaintiff and her employés have used as a means of ingress and egress to said lots * * * ever since her ownership of same or since the 29th day of March, 1911.

"(6) That said public highway is the only means of ingress and egress to plaintiff's property.

"(7) That during the months of July and August, 1915, defendant entered in and on the said public highway and constructed an irrigation ditch along the center of said highway" from a certain point to a point "beyond the westerly boundary line of lot 14 of plaintiff's property.

"(8) That during the month of December, 1917, defendant enlarged and cleaned out said irrigation ditch and threw the dirt upon the embankments of same in such a manner as to entirely obstruct the whole highway" between the points above mentioned.

"(9) That said ditch is constructed in sandy soil, and in the cleaning and enlarging of said ditch great quantities of coarse white sand were thrown out on each side of said ditch completely obstructing said highway and making same impassable for loaded animal or motor drawn vehicles of any kind and preventing the ingress and egress of plaintiff to her said property.

"(10) That plaintiff's property is planted to alfalfa and almond-bearing nut trees, and produce large crops of alfalfa hay and almond nuts.

"(11) That it is necessary at different times to go upon said lands of plaintiff with horses and farming implements to take care of the irrigation ditches located thereon, and to cultivate, prune, and spray the said almond trees, and to cut, rake, and haul the alfalfa grown on said lands, and harvest and haul to market the almond nuts and hay grown thereon.

"(12) That by reason of the obstruction of said public highway by defendant plaintiff is prevented from going upon her said lands and taking loaded vehicles to and from said lands over said highway.

"(13) That said irrigation ditch is of a width at the top of from 20 to 30 feet and of a depth of 4 feet, with embankments thrown out on either side of said ditch, all of which embankments and ditch are located in the highway mentioned in plaintiff's complaint."

It was also found that an allegation in the answer that plaintiff consented to the construction of said irrigation ditch in said highway was untrue.

The judgment is:

"(1) That plaintiff recover $150 damages.

"(2) That the sand deposited in the road * * * by the defendant * * * from said irrigation ditch is a nuisance, and that said nuisance be abated.

"(3) That the public rights have intervened as to the ditch, and that same cannot be abated as a nuisance.

"(4) That plaintiff, by reason of the conveying to her and her predecessors in interest of" said lots, "has acquired an easement on said highway, but that said easement is subordinate to the public rights of the Oakdale irrigation district in reference to the maintenance of said irrigation ditch in said highway.

"(5) That the road in question * * * is a public highway.

"(6) That plaintiff have her costs of suit."

The defendant is a public service corporation, engaged in distributing water to the public for farming and domestic purposes within the territory to which the water from its ditch is available. From the findings it appears that the defendant's ditch was constructed over and along the portion of the highway to which it is alleged in the complaint it constitutes an obstruction in the year 1915. The complaint here was filed by the plaintiff on June 18, 1918, approximately three years after the ditch had been constructed and presumably in active operation. Thus it is clear that the portion of the highway over and along which the ditch was constructed, and which portion, according to the complaint, is thus so far obstructed as to prevent vehicles from passing over it to and from the plaintiff's place, had, long before plaintiff made any complaint in reference thereto, or objected to the maintenance of the ditch at that point on the highway, been taken for and devoted to a public use. In other words, according to the findings, which we must presume were authorized by the evidence, the plaintiff remained passive and made no protest at the time of the construction of the ditch at the point on the highway referred to and remained so and still made no objection to the construction of the ditch until after it had been fully completed and was being operated as an irrigating ditch.

[1] It is plain to us that the facts of this case bring it squarely within the cases which hold that, where property is taken for a public use by a public service corporation, and the owner of the property has not in an appropriate way objected to its being so taken, but has, by silence or quiescence, permitted the public use to be inaugurated and carried on for some period of time, he has thus waived or lost his right to proceed against such use of his property by ejectment or abatement. In such case, if he had suffered damage to his property by reason of such taking and use of his property, he is, of course, entitled to be compensated in damages. The Constitution expressly gives him this right (Const. art. 1, § 14), and such right in the plaintiff here is not denied by the respondent. But in the case stated the owner is restricted to the relief which is obtainable in an action for damages. The theory of the rule as above stated is that after property is taken for a public use by a public service corporation and has been devoted to that purpose the public thereby and thereupon acquires rights in such public use which cannot be divested or destroyed at the behest of a private individual upon the ground or for the reason that his property will suffer damage or deteriorate in value, or even become valueless for the purposes to which it is peculiarly adapted and for which it has always been used, by reason of the act depriving him of such of his property rights as were necessary for the installation and prosecution of the public use.

In Crescent Canal Co. v. Montgomery, 143 Cal. 248, 76 Pac. 1032, 65 L. R. A. 940, the plaintiff had extended its canal so that it crossed over the lands of one Poyser and one Johns. These parties made no objection at the time against the construction of the canal extension over and across their lands. They subsequently conveyed the lands to the defendants, who, upon taking possession, proceeded to cover up and fill in the portion of the canal crossing said lands, claiming that the same was extended over the lands without and against the consent of their grantors, Poyser and Johns. The plaintiff instituted an action against defendants to enjoin the destruction of the canal and for damages. The trial court found that Poyser and Johns never gave their consent to the extension of the canal, and judgment accordingly went to the defendants. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court from the order denying plaintiff a new trial, and the order was reversed, Chief Justice Beatty, the author of the opinion, saying, among other things:

"The court, amongst other things, finds that Poyser and Johns never consented to the extension of the canal. The evidence of Poyser and Johns sustains this finding so far as an express consent is concerned, but a tacit consent evidenced by conduct quite as significant as any express words could possibly be is proved by evidence which is not only uncontradicted, but is expressly admitted by Poyser and Johns to be true. It is confirmed also by the circumstances and situation of the parties."

Again, the late Chief Justice further said in that case:

"The plaintiff is the agent of the state in the administration of a public use (Const. art. 14, § 1), and is within the protection of the principle of the decision, and of the authorities cited in Fresno St. Ry. Co. v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 135 Cal. 202 [67 Pac. 773], and of Southern California Ry. Co. v. Slauson, 138 Cal. 342 [71 Pac. 352, 94 Am. St. Rep. 58]. It is to be presumed that a farming community dependent for a vital necessity upon the continuous operation of this canal has become established upon the lands which it covers. The establishment of such a community with the improvements and expenditures necessarily involved was one of the results of the acquiescence of Poyser and Johns in the extension and increased efficiency of the canal. They may have had a right to demand and receive a reasonable compensation for any damage to their lands caused by such extension. But they had no right to abate the canal by action, and no right to injure or destroy it."

In Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 160 Cal. 699, 117 Pac. 906, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185, the action by plaintiff was in ejectment to dispossess defendant of a certain described portion of plaintiff's lands and premises, over and across which a public wagon road or highway leading from the city of Red Bluff to the eastern boundary of Tehama county had for over 40 years existed and been maintained. The defendant, a public service corporation, organized for the purpose and engaged in the business of furnishing the public with electricity for power, heat, and lighting, and also furnishing municipalities, cities, and towns with electricity for like purposes, including the lighting of highways, had erected its power lines along said highway, digging holes and erecting poles for that purpose. The late Mr. Justice Lorigan prepared the opinion in that case, and his clear and forceful discussion of the principles governing cases whose facts are analogous to those of the case at bar involves the consideration of so much that has peculiar and cogent application to the present case that to give the views as therein set forth as they should be given would necessitate the reproduction of the entire opinion herein, and this we do not deem necessary, for it will be sufficient to give here a brief statement of what is decided in that case, viz.: (1) That, while the maintenance of the defendant's power line in the highway over the land of plaintiff was not for a purpose incidental to the use of such highway and is inconsistent with the dedication of the highway to the use of the public, and was therefore an invasion of the plaintiff's property rights for which he was entitled to redress, his remedy under the circumstances of the case, he not having complained or objected until after the power line had been installed and put in operation and public rights had intervened therein, was entirely in an action for damages, and not in ejectment. (2) That among the exceptions to the general rule that one may maintain eject-ment against either an individual or a corporation who has without right entered upon his land is, in the case of a public corporation, where it appears that, notwithstanding that the entry was originally without right, the owner permitted the corporation to make the entry on his land and construct the works for which the land was thus appropriated, and failed to bring any action until after public interests, by reason of the construction, had intervened. In such case the right to maintain ejectment is denied, and the owner of the land is remitted and limited to an action for damages for redress. (3) That the principle which underlies this rule is not based on any consideration of rights pertaining to the public service corporation itself, but solely upon considerations of public policy. Nor is the rule based so much upon the doctrine of estoppel, but mainly on the great principle under which the rights of the citizen are sometimes abridged in the interest of the public welfare.

"Public policy requires that, under such circumstances [where the owner of land has suffered by silence or quiescence a public service corporation to enter thereon, and expend large sums in the construction of the works, before he complains of the trespass], the remedy of ejectment should be denied to plaintiff, when the effect of a judgment in such an action would be to destroy the efficiency of the electric line system by taking possession from defendants of that part of it constructed over the land of plaintiff, and thus destroying the public rights which have intervened."

In Miller & Lux v. Enterprise Canal & Land Co., etc., 169 Cal. 415, 147 Pac. 567, Mr. Justice Shaw examines exhaustively the principles above enunciated, and reviews in extenso the cases in which they have been applied. We refer to that case as a clear exposition of the doctrines referred to, and also to the cases therein cited and considered.

The case of Eltinge v. Santos, 171 Cal. 278, 152 Pac. 915, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 1143, cited by appellant, is not pertinent to the facts of this case. There the controversy was between private individuals, and no question as to the intervention of public rights arose.

No point is made here that the compensation awarded plaintiff for damages sustained by her by the act of the defendant in invading her property rights in the manner described is inadequate. The abatement of the ditch was properly denied on the doctrines enunciated and applied in the cases above considered and referred to.

[2] But plaintiff further contends that the judgment is inconsistent with the findings and that it is uncertain and ambiguous. It is not necessary to follow in detail the ramifications or course of reasoning to which learned counsel for the plaintiff resorts to support this contention. It is considered quite enough to say that a comparison of the judgment with the findings and the plaintiff's complaint will show that there is no inconsistency between the findings and the judgment or any uncertainty or ambiguity in the judgment. The complaint alleges:

"That during the month of December of the year 1917 defendant enlarged and cleaned out said irrigation ditch and threw the dirt upon the embankments of same in such a manner as to entirely obstruct the whole highway, from the intersection of said before-mentioned public highway with Central avenue, of said Oakdale Syndicate tract, running westerly along said avenue, and in front of plaintiff's property, to the western boundary line of lot fourteen of said tract; that said ditch is constructed in sandy soil, and in the cleaning out and enlarging of said ditch, great quantities of coarse white sand were thrown out on each side of said ditch, completely obstructing said highway and making same impassable for animal or motor drawn vehicles of any kind and completely preventing the egress and ingress of plaintiff to her said property."

The court found those allegations to be true, and that to that extent the defendant was maintaining a nuisance, and thus had trespassed upon or infringed the plaintiff's property rights, and obviously upon those findings the court awarded damages to the plaintiff and decreed the abatement of the nuisance so maintained. This is as far as the findings and the judgment go, so far as the plaintiff's rights are concerned. They, in other words, found and decreed that there was a total obstruction of the highway resulting from the dumping thereon by defendant from its ditch, when in December, 1917, it enlarged and cleaned out the same, of large quantities of dirt and sand, and that such obstruction constituted a nuisance, and abated it. Then the findings declare and the judgment decrees that, public rights having intervened by reason of the construction of the ditch, no action by an individual would lie to abate the maintenance of the ditch. There is no inconsistency between the latter finding and the judgment in that respect and the adjudication of the plaintiff's rights, as found and decreed by the court and above referred to. Counsel argues, however, that the finding and that part of the judgment decreeing that plaintiff has an easement in the highway and the finding and that part of the judgment declaring that the ditch cannot be abated are irreconcilably inconsistent, because, as he asserts, the ditch and its bank cover the entire width of the highway, and that the mere removal only of the sand dumped upon the highway from the ditch when the ditch was enlarged and cleaned out would not make the highway suitable for use as such. But the findings do not show that the entire width of the highway is covered by the ditch. From finding 7 it appears that the ditch runs along the center of the highway, and we cannot assume, in the absence from the record of evidence touching that proposition, that the ditch itself covers the whole width of the highway. To the contrary, the presumption is, under the state of the record before us, that there was evidence which supports the theory of the findings and thus to show that the plaintiff could, with the removal from the highway of the sand and dirt dumped there by defendant when in 1917 the ditch was enlarged and cleaned out, enjoy her easement in or right to the use of the highway for all the purposes which the exigencies of her business as a farmer and fruit grower might require.

Without further consideration of the matter, we hesitate not to state our conclusion to be that a careful examination of the findings and the judgment in comparison with the averments of the pleadings will show that the complaint that there is an inconsistency between the findings and the judgment, or that the judgment is ambiguous and uncertain in its terms, is without foundation.

No reason appears to us for disturbing the judgment appealed from, and it is accordingly affirmed.

ZIMMERMAN v. PRIOR et al. (Civ. 2481.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 6, 1920.)

1. CONTRACTS $\S$ 337(2)—COMPLAINT HELD TO SUFFICIENTLY ALLEGE NONPAYMENT.

Complaint, alleging that defendants formed a voluntary association known as the Venice Road Race Association, and that such association employed plaintiff to perform labor and services in the repair of the streets, and that the services were performed, and that no part of claims had been paid, held a sufficient averment of nonpayment.

2. CONTRACTS $\S$ 333(1)—COMPLAINT HELD TO SUFFICIENTLY ALLEGE PROMISE TO PAY FOR SERVICES.

A complaint, alleging that plaintiff was engaged by Road Race Association to improve public streets, that he did so, but had not been paid, held sufficient allegation that the services were performed at the request of the association, and that it agreed to make payment of reasonable value thereof.

3. ASSOCIATIONS $\S$ 16—MEMBERS INDIVIDUALLY LIABLE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 388, recovery may be had from the individual members of an association.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR $\S$ 907(3)—PRESUMED THAT EVIDENCE SUPPORTED FINDING.

Where an appeal is on the judgment roll, it will be presumed that the evidence was sufficient to support the findings of the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by C. E. Zimmerman against Thomas W. Prior and others, City of Venice, a municipal corporation, and Dana Burks and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendants first named appeal. Affirmed.

Ernest B. Coil and C. E. McDowell, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, E. O. Leake, Charles W. Lyon, and Fredericks & Hanna, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was brought against the defendants to recover for labor and services performed. Certain of the defendants have appealed from the judgment entered against them. As to these defendants, it was alleged in the complaint that, prior to entering into the contract with the plaintiff and his assignors, they had formed a voluntary association, known as the Venice Road Race Association; that said association employed plaintiff and his assignors to perform labor and services in the repair of public streets in the city of Venice; that services were performed as agreed, and that no part of the claims "had been paid by the defendants, or any, or either, of them." The court made findings determining the facts that said association had been formed and that appellants were members thereof; that the services of plaintiff and his assignors had been performed at the request of said association and the association had agreed to pay the reasonable value thereof, and that "no part or portion of either or any of said amounts has been paid to either or any of said persons." The court made further finding that the association, at the time the services were performed, was engaged in promoting, for the purpose of advertising the city of Venice, a road race, and that appellants were at the time engaged in conducting an amusement enterprise in said city of Venice, and expected, as the result of the holding of said race, to derive a profit therefrom.

[1] Appellants first contend that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute any cause of action. This upon two main grounds: First, that the allegation of nonpayment of the debts was insufficiently stated; second, that the complaint failed to show sufficient consideration moving to the appellants to sustain the alleged contracts. The allegation of nonpayment, we think, was sufficient. The criticism made in certain cases, wherein it was held that the words "due and owing" were not tantamount to an allegation of nonpayment because they expressed mere conclusions of law, such as Knox v. Buckman Contracting Co. et al., 139

Cal. 598, 73 Pac. 428, and Roberts v. Treadwell, 50 Cal. 520, is not applicable here. The allegation here made is as to the fact and directly that the defendants had not paid any part of the debt. This allegation, we think, is sufficient under decisions made in O'Hanlon v. Denvir, 81 Cal. 60, 22*Pac. 407, 15 Am. St. Rep. 19; Rankin v. Sisters of Mercy, 82 Cal. 88, 22 Pac. 1134; Gardner v. Donnelly, 86 Cal. 367, 24 Pac. 1072.

[2-4] We think, also, that the complaint in its allegations was sufficient as to the statement of a good contract, for it was alleged that services were performed at the request of the association, and that the latter promised to make payment of the reasonable value thereof. The recovery from the individual defendants, members of an association, is expressly authorized under the provisions of section 388, Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal being on the judgment roll, it will be presumed, of course, that the evidence was sufficient to support the findings of the court.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

ZIERATH et al. v. CLAGGETT et al.
(Civ. 3178.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⚡232(3) — STOCKHOLDERS LIABLE ON UNPAID SUBSCRIPTIONS ISSUED ON EXCESSIVE VALUATION.

Where the promoters of a corporation had transferred an oil lease to the company in exchange for all of the stock of the corporation as fully paid up and nonassessable, and the valuation so placed upon the lease was so grossly excessive as to be constructively fraudulent as to creditors, the creditors could recover from the stockholders amounts equal to their unpaid subscriptions, notwithstanding the honest belief of the directors as to the value of the property at the time of the exchange.

2. CORPORATIONS ⚡244(5) — TRANSFEREES OF STOCK TAKE SUBJECT TO OBLIGATIONS OF SUBSCRIBERS.

The same liability attaches to transferees of corporate stock as original subscribers, and by purchasing from the original subscribers the transferees assume as a matter of law all the liabilities that the transferors of the stock to them were under and take it subject to all their obligations.

3. CORPORATIONS ⚡240(1) — CREDITOR NOT ESTOPPED TO ENFORCE STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY WHERE HE DID NOT KNOW THAT STOCK WAS NOT FULLY PAID.

In an action by a creditor of a corporation to enforce stockholders' liability, the defense that the creditor was estopped to set up its complaint because it had extended credit wholly upon its own representations of results that could be obtained from the use of the drilling rig sold to the corporation and that sales of stock would furnish the funds necessary to pay the creditor could not be maintained where the evidence showed that the creditor did not know that the stock subscribed had not been fully paid.

4. CORPORATIONS ⚡228 — CREDITOR ENTITLED TO COLLECT JUDGMENT FROM UNPAID STOCK SUBSCRIPTIONS.

When credit is extended to a corporation, it is done under the presumption that the capital stock that is issued has been or will be paid for in full if necessary to pay creditors, and, where capital stock has not been paid for in full, the creditors, if they are unable to collect directly from the corporation, are entitled to seek to satisfy the judgment out of the unpaid portions of such subscribed and issued stock.

5. EVIDENCE ⚡373(2) — CORPORATE BOOKS HELD SUFFICIENTLY IDENTIFIED TO BE ADMISSIBLE IN SUIT TO ENFORCE STOCKHOLDERS' LIABILITY.

In an action by trustees of a corporation to enforce stockholders' liability, the books of the corporation were admissible in evidence as against an objection that it had not been shown by the books that they truly showed the amount of capital stock issued or the names of subscribers or holders of the capital stock, where the first secretary of the corporation identified the books; the presumption being that such books continued to be the books of the company in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32.

6. PLEADING ⚡127(2) — ADMISSIONS HELD TO SHOW IDENTITY OF STOCKHOLDERS AT COMMENCEMENT OF ACTION TO ENFORCE THEIR LIABILITY.

In action to enforce stockholders' liability, admissions in defendants' answers as to the ownership of stock held sufficient to show that such defendants were stockholders at the time of commencement of the action.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡1011(1) — FACT FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE NOT DISTURBED.

Findings of fact on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

8. JUDGMENT ⚡150 — AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT GOING TO SUBSTANCE OPENS DEFAULT.

The test as to whether an amendment opens a default is that, if it goes to the substance, the default is opened, but, if only to the form, it is not.

9. JUDGMENT ⚡150 — AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT IN ACTION TO ENFORCE STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY HELD NOT TO OPEN DEFAULT.

In an action to enforce stockholders' liability, an amendment of the complaint setting up an additional count identical with the first except that it contained by reference every paragraph of the first count except one, for which it alleged that the promoters of the corporation had transferred a certain purported oil lease to the company in exchange for all the stock of the corporation, and that the valuation on such lease equal to the full capital stock was so grossly excessive as to be fraudulent, instead of alleging a flat payment per share as set forth in the first count, did not go to the substance of the complaint so as to open a default by defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by A. C. Zierath and others, as trustees for the stockholders and creditors of the Zierath Combination Drill Company, against S. F. Claggett and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, a new trial was denied, and certain of the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John E. Daly and James H. Daly, both of Long Beach, for appellants.

Olin Wellborn, Jr., and Alfred H. McAdoo, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought by the trustees of a defunct corporation to ascertain and to have adjudicated the amount due from each of the 248 defendants other than the corporation defendant, as subscribers, owners, and holders of shares of stock of the defendant Midway Southern Oil Company of Long Beach, and to have and recover judgment against each of the defendants herein for the amount found to be due plaintiff, not to exceed, as to any defendant, the amount found due from said defendant, and for general relief.

The second amended complaint is in two counts. Each count is based upon a judgment recovered by plaintiff against said corporation defendant—the Midway Southern Oil Company of Long Beach. There was a specific denial of each and every material allegation of this complaint upon which the action was tried. Trial was had before the court without a jury, and findings were entered in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $4,727.84, with interest, adjudicating "that in no event are the plaintiffs entitled to a judgment against any defendant in an amount to exceed 80 cents per share upon the number of shares owned by such defendant," and fixing the limit of liability as to each defendant, beyond which plaintiff could not proceed in any event, in exact dollars and cents. There was a motion for a new trial, which was denied. The appeal is from the judgment so entered, and is taken by but 32 of the defendants named herein.

[1] Many points are urged by appellants for the reversal of the judgment herein, and they will be considered in the order presented. The first point urged constitutes an attack on findings VI and VII, as not supported by the evidence. It is urged by appellants that there was "no evidence of intentional fraud * * *"; the land in this case was taken solely for mining purposes. There was no certainty as to what would be obtained from it any more than if the parties had purchased a prospect for any other mineral substance and formed a company to develop the property by a discovery of the minerals in it;" and hence, that "it is the value of the property in the condition it is in at the time of the exchange, the value as known to the parties and as they honestly believed it to be, that determines the liability, at least where there is no subsequent increase in value nor any intentional fraud." This is only another way of arguing that "incorporators of mining companies should be permitted to violate the law and deliberately deceive the public, but incorporators of manufacturing enterprises should not; and this notwithstanding the truth that the same specific statute grants no greater power to one than the other, and fixes the same liabilities upon the stockholders in each." With such contention we cannot agree. A mere cursory perusal of the record will, we think, disclose the fact that these findings are amply supported by the evidence. In support of their contention appellants urge that the case of In re South Mountain C. M. Co. (D. C.) 5 Fed. 403, is in point. We do not think so. The Supreme Court of this state has repudiated the doctrine therein enunciated in cases such as the one at bar ever since its decision of the case of Vermont Marble Co. v. Declez, etc., Co., 135 Cal. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L. R. A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143, decided February 25, 1902; and this fact is made clear by the case of Herron Co. v. Shaw, 165 Cal. 668, 133 Pac. 488, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1265, wherein it is said:

"We think the case of Vermont Marble Co. v. Declez Granite Co. * * * establishes the opposite rule in this state."

Then, too, in the case at bar defendants failed to show by the evidence, or at all, that the business of the Midway Southern Oil Company of Long Beach came within the class of cases to which the South Mountain C. M. Co. Case is applicable, were that doctrine applicable in this state.

[2] Appellants further urge that "the defendants are transferees, and not liable." For our present purpose we think it needless to differentiate, distinguish, or try to show the fine technical variations or shades of meaning between the words "stockholder" and "subscriber," in view of the fact that both the Supreme Court of this state and this court have said that "the same liability attaches to transferees * * * as original subscribers. By purchasing from the original subscribers the transferees assumed, as a matter of law, all the liabilities that the transferors of the stock to them were under, and took it subject to all their obligations." Perkins v. Cowles, 157 Cal. 625, 108 Pac. 711, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283, 137 Am. St. Rep. 158; Rhode v. Dock-Hop Co., 194 Pac. 11.

[3, 4] It is next urged that "plaintiffs did not rely upon the capital stock of the corporation in extending credit," but, on the contrary, that "the plaintiff company extended credit wholly upon its own representations of results that could be obtained from the use of its drilling rig and upon the understanding that the defendant corporation had no funds; that certain of its stockholders should furnish necessary funds to start the work; that a log or report of the work would be furnished; and that sales of stock would furnish the funds necessary to pay for the drilling of the well and payment for the rig." In other words, as we see it, this contention, for all practical purposes, simply amounts to a claim that plaintiffs are estopped to set up their complaint because of the purported facts contained in the statement just quoted. We know of no law, and none has been called to our attention, that supports such contention. Assuming for the present that the statement is true, still that condition itself is impotent to relieve these defendant stockholders from liability in this case. Certain it must be that no citation of authorities is needed to support the statement that, when credit is extended to a corporation, it is done so under the presumption that the capital stock that is issued has been or will be paid for in full if necessary to pay creditors, and that where capital stock has not been paid for in full the creditors, if they are unable to collect directly from the corporation, are entitled to seek to satisfy their judgment out of the unpaid portion of such subscribed and issued capital stock. It is held in Sherman v. Harley, 178 Cal. 584, 174 Pac. 901, that, where a creditor at the time credit was given extended such credit with full knowledge of the difference between the par value of the stock and the value of the property received for such stock, he would have no claim upon the shareholders for further contribution of capital. It would seem that defendants had this case in mind, and by proper pleading brought themselves within it. Hence this question was before the court at the time of the trial. The allegation of the answers presenting this defense was as follows:

"That at the time of extending the credit represented by said alleged judgment, the Zierath Combination Drill Company well knew that none of the defendants named in said second amended complaint had paid the full amount of the par value of the capital stock owned by them in said corporation, and well knew that none of said defendants had paid more than 20 cents per share to apply thereon, and that said Zierath Combination Drill Company in extending said credit did not rely upon the capital stock of said corporation which was then and there issued, and upon the professed capital stock of said corporation having been in fact paid up in full, but extended said credit of said corporation wholly upon the responsibility of the corporation itself."

The record fails to disclose that the Zierath Combination Drill Company, or any of its officers or agents, had any such knowledge; and the court, after trial on the issues thus presented by the defendants themselves, found against them, which finding is supported by the evidence, being the testimony of the former officers of the company last mentioned. Here, then, we have the concrete evidence of the fact that the trial court proceeded in accordance with the doctrine laid down in the Sherman Case, supra, as a matter of law; but it finds, as a matter of fact, that said Drill Company was in no way brought within the exception pointed out in that case. This being true, the plaintiffs were not estopped to seek to satisfy their judgment against the defendant corporation out of the unpaid subscriptions of stockholders.

[5] It is also a contention of these appealing defendants that the books of the defendant corporation were inadmissible in evidence, having been admitted over defendants' objection that it had not been shown by the books "that they truly show the amount of the capital stock issued by this corporation, or that they correctly show the names of the subscribers or holders of the capital stock which was authorized under the charter of the corporation." The answer to this is found in the evidence of the witness Brooks, who testified that he was the first secretary of the defendant company, and identified the very books against which the objection was directed as the books of the defendant corporation during the time he was such secretary. Presumptively, until shown to be otherwise, these books continued to be the books of the company. Subdivision 32, § 1963, Code Civ. Proc. This, therefore, was a sufficient showing to support the correctness of the court's ruling.

The language of the Supreme Court of this state, in the case of Knowles v. Sandercock, 107 Cal. 629, 40 Pac. 1047, is pertinent, and, we think, applicable to the case at bar:

"The evidence, it is said, is not sufficient because there may be other subscribers for stock besides those whose names appear in these books, and the liability of stockholders is made to depend upon the number of shares subscribed for. The burden, it is said, was on the plaintiff not only to show that there were certain stockholders, which, at the most, is all the books introduced show, but also to prove that no more shares had been subscribed for. * * * The book introduced seems to have been designed for the stock and transfer book. It is true that its contents are not shown here further than is above stated. So far as its contents are set out it corresponds with what is required by the Code. The fact that the book is not named as the Code requires is not material. The Code does not require that there shall be a subscription book, nor direct how subscriptions shall be made. It does not appear that this corporation had any other book showing who the subscribers were. The suit is by strangers to the corporation against its stockholders. I think these books, together with the testimony, sufficient. Evans v. Bailey, 66 Cal. 112 [4 Pac. 1089]."

[6] In connection with appellants' further argument on this same point they say:

"The defendants R. R. Teemley, H. P. Coleman and S. M. Gardiner testified that they each held no stock in the company at the time the action was brought, and that no re-registry was made or attempted to be made by them. There is no proof in the record showing what the holdings of any of the other defendants appealing were; and the finding that they were the holders of the shares set opposite their names finds no support in the evidence."

The answer to this is that the record discloses conclusively: (1) That the majority of the defendants and appellants admitted, by their answers, the ownership of stock as alleged in the complaint; and (2) that under such condition of the record no further proof as to the last-mentioned defendants was necessary; hence the proof which was offered and received over appellants' objection was necessarily limited to those defendants who had by their answers denied such allegations of the complaint as charged them with owning the amount of stock alleged. Manifestly this must be true when the answers of the three defendants referred to are examined. So far as the appellants Teemley, Coleman, and Gardiner are concerned, the issue, so far as material here, was presented by their answers in the following language:

"* * * Defendants deny that they are subscribers or owners or holders of shares of stock," etc.

It is contended that this is not a denial that they were owners at the time of the filing of the complaint. This contention is without merit, so far as this case is concerned. The record discloses that on the trial, when this became apparent, counsel for these defendants stated that it had been their intention to put these matters in issue as of the time of the filing of the complaint, which statement was accepted by plaintiffs' counsel, who thereupon proceeded to prove their case accordingly.

[7] Of the seven defendants who answered, joining issues on the foregoing alleged fact, the evidence did not support the allegations of the complaint as against two of them—Cody and Shippey—and hence in the findings and judgment each of them was eliminated as not being stockholders at the time of the commencement of this action. As to the remaining five contending defendants, there can be no doubt, we think, about the correctness of respondents' contention. The findings are amply supported by the evidence. There was some little conflict in some of the evidence on this issue, but that has been resolved by the lower court in plaintiffs' favor. This being true, we cannot interfere.

[8, 9] This brings us to the consideration of the last point urged by appellants. It appears from the record that as to certain defendants default had been entered for their failure to answer the first amended complaint, and that thereafter, by leave of court, a second amended complaint was filed, which was not served on any of such defaulting defendants. The second amended complaint, appellants contend, contained an amendment in matters of substance, thereby opening the defaults theretofore entered; and hence, no service having been made of such second amended complaint upon the defaulting defendants, the judgment was improperly entered against them. We have examined both complaints. The first amended complaint was in one count. The second was in two counts. For all practical purposes, the second amended complaint is identical with the first, except that the second count thereof contained, by reference, every paragraph of the first count, except the ninth; and for this it was alleged that the promoters of the corporation had transferred a certain purported oil lease to the company in exchange for all of the stock of the corporation, as fully paid up and nonassessable, and that a valuation upon such oil lease equal to the authorized capital stock of the corporation was so grossly excessive that it would be, as to the creditors, constructively fraudulent, instead of offering a flat payment of 20 cents per share upon the stock, as set forth in the first count. It is conceded that the test as to whether an amendment opens a default is that, if it goes to the substance, the default is opened, but, if only to the form, it is not. Did the amendment in this case go to the substance? We think not. The first count of the first amended complaint stating a cause of action, the default admitted the truth of its allegations; and the judgment against the defaulting defendants was no more than an admission of said allegations, which showed the amount to which the plaintiff corporation was entitled. It was therefore not necessary to serve said defaulting defendants with the second amended complaint.

Judgment affirmed.

(Civ. 2538.)

1. ESTOPPEL ⚡75—PAWNBROKERS AND MONEY LENDERS ⚡5—PLEDGEE NOT ENTITLED TO RELY ON MERE POSSESSION IN PLEDGOR AS TITLE OR RIGHT TO PLEDGE.

A person purchasing or receiving in pledge personal property from another is bound to ascertain what the title and right is of the proposed vendor or pledgor, mere possession at best only furnishing prima facie evidence of ownership; but where an owner allows another to assume the apparent ownership of property for the purpose of making any transfer of it, he cannot, under Civ. Code, § 2991, defeat the right of a pledgee, who in good faith has made advances, relying upon the apparent ownership of the possessor.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⚡931(1)—INFERENCE FROM FINDINGS IN FAVOR OF JUDGMENT MUST BE CONSISTENT WITH OTHER FINDINGS.

An inference to be drawn from findings in support of judgment must not only be reasonable, but be consistent with other express and direct findings on material issues.

3. PAWNBROKERS AND MONEY LENDERS ⚡9—FINDINGS HELD TO DETERMINE THAT PLEDGOR'S POSSESSION WAS WITHOUT AUTHORITY FROM OWNER TO TRANSFER TITLE.

In owner's action to recover diamonds against pledgee, who had received diamonds from a third person, findings held to definitely and sufficiently determine the fact that third person's possession was without any right or authority given him by the owner to transfer any title to any one.

4. PAWNBROKERS AND MONEY LENDERS ⚡5—PLEDGE MADE WITHOUT AUTHORITY FROM OWNER GIVES PLEDGEE NO TITLE.

Where owner gave pledgor possession of diamonds for the sole purpose of permitting another party to inspect them, and without any authority to transfer title, loan broker, to whom pledgor in excess of his authority transferred diamonds had no title as against owner, under Civ. Code, § 2991.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by the E. Bastheim Company against H. C. Schultz and others. From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Hollzer & Greenberg, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

W. I. Foley and Cleveland Schultz, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. This action was, as framed by the complaint, in form, claim and delivery for the recovery of possession of two certain diamonds. Omitting the more formal allegations of the complaint, it was alleged that on the 4th day of December, 1916, defendants Schultz and Schlager obtained the diamonds from the plaintiff—

"upon the representation that they desired to exhibit the same to a third party for the purpose of inspection, and then and there promised and agreed to promptly return the same to said plaintiff."

It was alleged, on information and belief, that the said Schultz and Schlager had deposited the diamonds with defendants Cohn under some agreement, the true nature of which plaintiff did not know. By supplemental allegation the complaint was made to show that subsequent to the commencement of the action plaintiff had, by replevin process, caused possession to be taken of said diamonds from defendants Cohn.

Defendant Schlager defaulted; defendants Cohn and Schultz made answer. The answer of Schultz was, in substance, a specific denial of the allegations of the complaint, while that of the Cohns showed that they had, in the regular course of their business as loan brokers, loaned to Schlager, on the 4th day of December, 1916, the sum of $100 on each diamond, and that they held the diamonds in pledge as security for the repayment of said loan. The court upheld the right of the defendants Cohn to retain possession of the diamonds as security, and directed that possession be redelivered to them, with the condition that if plaintiff should pay the amount loaned by the Cohns upon the diamonds it should be entitled to possession of the property. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment and presents the appeal upon the judgment roll.

[1] In support of its appeal, plaintiff insists that under the facts found by the court in its decision the judgment should have been in favor of the plaintiff. By the court's findings it was determined to be true that the plaintiff was the owner of the property in question and that it was entitled to the possession thereof were it not for the fact that Schlager, having possession of the diamonds, had pledged them with the defendants Cohn as security for the loan. Before making a further analysis of the findings, the well-established rule may be adverted to, to wit, that a person purchasing or receiving in pledge personal property from another is bound to ascertain what the title and right is of the proposed vendor or pledgor, and that mere possession alone, at best, only furnishes prima facie evidence of ownership. This rule is, by the Code, made subject to one modification, and that is that where an owner allows another to assume the apparent ownership of property "for the purpose of making any transfer of it" (Civ. Code, § 2991), he cannot defeat the right of a pledgee who, in good faith, has made advances, relying upon the apparent ownership of the possessor. The case of Shafer v. Lacy, 121 Cal. 574, 54 Pac. 72, contains a very full discussion as to the rights of an owner of personal property who has permitted possession to pass to another, and also of the modifying effect of the code section. In the decision in that case it is said:

"The rule of the Code permits the owner to show that the property was not intrusted to the bailee or person assuming ownership, for the purposes of sale, but for transportation or temporary custody and the like objects. * * * 'Mere possession of a chattel is not title; and one taking a pledge of it is bound to satisfy himself that the pledgor is the owner; and if he relies solely upon the pledgor's possession, he takes the risk of having to surrender the property to the true owner.'"

In that case—it being one very similar to this in that it involved the pledging of jewelry rightfully in the possession of the pledgor, but which he had received not for the purpose of making a transfer of it—the court reversed a judgment in favor of the pledgee and directed the trial court, upon the findings made, to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff. In point, also, are the cases of Akron, etc., Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 3 Cal. App. 198, 84 Pac. 778, Coolidge v. Austin, 22 Cal. App. 334, 134 Pac. 357, and a case recently considered by this court, to wit, Knapp v. Lyman, 186 Pac. 386. Our examination of the findings made in the case will therefore necessarily be limited to a determination of the one question as to whether such findings, expressly or by reasonable inference, determined that the plaintiff, when it delivered the diamonds to Schlager, made such delivery with the authorization to Schlager to make a transfer of the property. As material to that point, we quote from the findings of the trial judge:

"That on the 4th day of December, 1916, at said city of Los Angeles, the defendant Schlager obtained said diamonds from said plaintiff upon the representation that he desired to exhibit the same to a third party for the purpose of inspection, and then and there promised and agreed to return the same to said plaintiff. That by reason of said representation and at the request of the defendant Schultz, and upon the promise and agreement of said defendant Schultz to have said diamonds returned to it, said plaintiff then and there delivered said diamonds to said defendant Schlager, for the purpose of inspection only, and said defendant Schlager then and there executed a receipt for the same, in words and figures as follows, to wit:

"E. Bastheim Company, Wholesale Jewelers, Title Guaranty Building, Broadway at Fifth, Los Angeles. Telephones Home F-3216, Main 2700, 1703. Memorandum Bill. We request report on all goods charged on memorandum within five days.

"Dec. 4, 1916.

"To H. C. Schultz: The goods described and valued as below are sent to you for your examination, remaining our property and subject to our order, and shall be returned to us on demand. E. Bastheim Company.

"2 Br # 5000 1.75/100 at 290 per ct
"HJO Deld to S. Schlager

"These goods are the property of E. Bastheim Company and are not for sale until selection is approved by E. Bastheim Company, and regular bill of sale rendered."

"That thereafter, and on or about the 9th day of December, 1916, said defendant Schultz approved in writing the delivery of said diamonds, made to said defendant Schlager, as aforesaid. That said representation made by said defendant Schlager to plaintiff was false, and was known by said defendant Schlager to be false at the time the same was made."

It will first be noted that the court directly found that Schlager obtained possession of the diamonds upon a representation, falsely made by him, that he desired to exhibit the same to a third party and that he would return them to plaintiff. Referring to the action of defendant Schultz (the reason for which is not apparent from the findings), the court found that—

"By reason of said representation, and at the request of the defendant Schultz, and upon the promise and agreement of said defendant Schultz to have said diamonds returned," plaintiff delivered the same to Schlager "for the purpose of inspection only."

We think it is quite clear that the court sufficiently determined the fact to be that the diamonds were not delivered to Schlager with any authorization to Schlager or any one else to make a transfer of them. Able counsel who represents the respondents Cohn attaches particular significance to an expression in the findings where it is recited:

"That thereafter, on or about the 9th day of December, 1916, said defendant Schultz approved in writing the delivery of said diamonds, made to said defendant Schlager, as aforesaid."

The argument is that, in view of the rule that every reasonable inference should be drawn from the findings of the court in order to support a judgment, it should be inferred from the expression last quoted that the court intended to say that Schultz was an agent of the plaintiff and, as such agent, authorized Schlager to make transfer of the property.

[2-4] In view of the direct findings as to the conditions under which the diamonds were delivered (already referred to), we think that no such inference is permissible. Any such inference permitted to be drawn must be not only reasonable, but be consistent with other express and direct findings upon material issues. And so we conclude that the findings should be considered as having definitely and sufficiently determined the fact that Schlager's possession of the diamonds was without any right or authority given him by the plaintiff to transfer any title to any one. The conclusions of law made by the trial judge, and the judgment which followed, are therefore erroneous.

The judgment appealed from is reversed; it is directed that the superior court amend its conclusions of law in conformity with the views expressed in this opinion, and with the findings of fact as made, and enter judgment thereon in favor of the plaintiff as prayed for in its complaint.

PEOPLE ex. rel WOOLWINE, Dist. Atty., v. FERAUD et al. (Civ. 3189.)

1. NUISANCE §88—EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATION NOT TAXABLE AS "PLAINTIFF'S COSTS" UNDER REDLIGHT ABATEMENT ACT.

There is no authority in Redlight Abatement Act, §§ 7, 8, for allowance as costs of plaintiff's expense of investigations resulting in the suit, but the expression "plaintiff's costs" in section 8 means only those ordinarily allowed in equitable proceedings in which costs incurred by prevailing party for his own benefit in the preparation of his case are not taxable.

2. NUISANCE §85—UNDER REDLIGHT ABATEMENT ACT COURT MAY NOT PLACE KEEPERS IN POSSESSION BEFORE JUDGMENT.

Under Redlight Abatement Act, §§ 4, 7, prior to judgment the court may not take possession of the questioned premises by placing keepers therein, nor may it order the same closed.

3. NUISANCE §88 — REDLIGHT ABATEMENT ACT CONTROLLING AS TO COSTS.

Although a proceeding under the Redlight Abatement Act to enjoin a nuisance is one in equity, the recovery of costs is purely statutory, and, as the provisions of such act do not provide for cost of service of guards in the premises prior to judgment, they are controlling.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Proceeding by the People of the State of California, on the relation of Thomas Lee Woolwine, District Attorney, against Mary R. Feraud and others. From an order denying her motion to retax costs, the named defendant appeals. Order reversed, and trial court directed to grant motion and to strike from the judgment the amount of the contested items.

Gurney E. Newlin and A. W. Ashburn, both of Los Angeles (Eugene D. Williams, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

KNIGHT, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant Feraud from an order denying her motion to retax costs in a suit instituted by the district attorney of Los Angeles county under the "Redlight Abatement Act." Stats. 1913, p. 20.

The contested items aggregate $435.65 and constitute two charges: First, for the services of plaintiff's agents in investigating and securing evidence before the commencement of the suit of the existence of the alleged nuisance; and, secondly, for the services, meals, and car fare of "guards" placed by plaintiff in charge of the premises in question after the commencement of suit and before trial, pursuant to the terms of the preliminary injunction.

Appellant is the owner of the property, but she is not charged in the complaint with knowledge of the existence of the nuisance, nor does the court find that she had such knowledge.

[1] The sections of the Redlight Abatement Act bearing upon the disputed costs are sections 7 and 8 thereof. By section 7 it is provided that—

"If the existence of a nuisance be established in an action as provided herein, an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case, which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, musical instruments and movable property used in conducting, maintaining, aiding or abetting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution, and the effectual closing of the building or place against its use for any purpose, and so keeping it closed for a period of one year, unless sooner released, as hereinafter provided. While such order remains in effect as to closing, such building or place shall be and remain in the custody of the court."

Said section further provides that for the removal and sale of the movable property the officer shall be entitled to the same fees as are allowed under execution, and that "for closing the premises and keeping them closed, a reasonable sum shall be allowed by the court."

By section 8 it is provided that the proceeds of the sale shall be applied:

"1. To the fees and costs of such removal and sale; 2. To the allowances and costs of so closing and keeping closed such building or place; 3. To the payment of plaintiff's costs in such action; 4. The balance, if any, shall be paid to the owner of the property so sold."

And it is further provided that, if the proceeds of the sale of the movable property are insufficient to pay such costs, then the "building and place" shall be sold, etc.

These sections, of course, should be read together, and, as thus read, we find no authority therein, nor elsewhere in the act, for the allowance, as costs, of the expense of plaintiff's investigations which resulted in the filing of the suit. Indeed, our attention has been directed to no case wherein a defendant, unsuccessful in the result of trial, has been required to reimburse the prevailing party for the costs incurred by the prevailing party in making the investigations and in collecting the evidence upon which the action is brought. It is true that subdivision 3 of section 8, above quoted, provides for the payment of "plaintiff's costs in such action," but, in the absence of more extensive expression than is here used, we are inclined to the opinion that by the use of the term "plaintiff's costs" the Legislature intended to include only such costs as are ordinarily allowed in an equitable proceeding, and in such proceedings it has been held, in numerous instances, that costs incurred by a prevailing party for his own benefit in the preparation of his case are not taxable in the action. Among such instances are the cost of the preparation of a map (Miller v. Highland Ditch Co., 91 Cal. 103, 27 Pac. 536), the expenses of an expert accountant employed to dissolve a copartnership (Faulkner v. Hendy, 79 Cal. 265, 21 Pac. 754), and the fees of a surveyor for obtaining data from which maps are prepared (Bathgate v. Irvine, 126 Cal. 135, 58 Pac. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 158).

Under the terms of said act a private citizen may commence and maintain, in his own name, an action to abate an alleged nuisance. The far-reaching effect of respondent's contention, if sustained, would mean that such citizen would have the authority, in conducting investigations and collecting evidence against certain premises, to create expense without limit, and afterward recover the same from the owner of the property, who might be entirely innocent of the wrongful purpose to which the property was being devoted.

In the absence of any authority in the act for the allowance of the costs incurred by plaintiff in making and conducting the investigations before the commencement of suit, we are of the opinion that said costs constituted illegal charges and should have been disallowed.

[2] The second contention of appellant raises the direct question of whether or not, under said act, the court is granted the authority to take possession of, or place keepers in, the premises in question at any time before trial and judgment. According to the terms of said section 7, it would seem that such authority does not exist, and that the drastic features of the act attach only after trial and judgment. In that section it is expressly stated that the order of abatement and for the closing and keeping closed the premises in question shall be made "a part of the judgment in the case," and then only "if the existence of the nuisance has been established." There are no other provisions in the act which tend to modify or change the operation of said section 7 in this respect.

Section 4 provides that, if the existence of a nuisance is shown to the court by a verified complaint or affidavit, it shall allow a temporary injunction to abate and prevent the continuance or recurrence of such nuisance, the disobedience to or violation of which shall be deemed a contempt, punishable by fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, or imprisonment in the county jail for not less than one month nor more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment. But apparently punishment for contempt is the limit of the court's power prior to judgment.

In view of the plain terms of said section 7, we are of the opinion that prior to judgment the court may not take possession of the questioned premises, by placing keepers therein, nor may it order the same closed. To hold otherwise not only would be contrary to the express provisions of the act itself, but it might lead to unjust results. For instance, as we have already seen, a private citizen, in a verified complaint or affidavit, may charge any establishment, however reputable, with being a nuisance within the meaning of the Redlight Abatement Act, and, if the law were as contended for by respondent, such person, upon an ex parte application based solely upon said verified complaint or affidavit, would be entitled to an order closing said establishment until trial; whereas upon trial it might develop that the charge was entirely unfounded, and the proceedings would accordingly be dismissed. No bond or other indemnity being necessary to institute said action, the owners, or other persons conducting the establishment would be without redress, notwithstanding the fact their establishment had been unjustly closed between the time of the filing of suit and the trial of the action.

[3] It is argued by respondent that, although express authority for the allowance of the contested items may not be found in the provisions of said act, yet implied authority is granted by reason of the fact that the court, in administering the Redlight Abatement Act, exercises its jurisdiction as a court of equity. In this contention respondent is not supported by the authorities. It has been held on numerous occasions that the right to recover costs is purely statutory, and that, in the absence of statute, no costs can be recovered by either party. Williams v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 156 Cal. 140, 103 Pac. 885, 134 Am. St. Rep. 117, 19 Ann. Cas. 1260; Bond v. United Railroads, 20 Cal. App. 124, 128 Pac. 786; Kummeth v. Atkinson, 23 Cal. App. 401, 138 Pac. 116; Fox v. Hale & Norcross S. M. Co., 122 Cal. 219, 54 Pac. 731. And in Sierra Union Water & Mining Co. v. Wolff, 144 Cal. 430, 77 Pac. 1038, it was held that the allowance of costs does not depend upon the form or nature of the action, but upon whether or not the case comes within the terms of the statute relating to costs.

The provisions of the Redlight Abatement Act, therefore, are controlling. They do not provide for the cost of the services of "guards" placed in said premises prior to judgment, and for that reason said costs constituted an illegal charge and should have been disallowed.

The order denying appellant's motion to retax costs is reversed, and the court is directed to grant the same in accordance with the views herein expressed, and to strike from the judgment the amount of said contested items.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. McKEAG et al.
(Civ. 2760.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 187—ORDINANCE GOVERNING AWARD TO WIDOW OR CHILDREN OF DECEASED POLICEMAN FROM PENSION FUND CONSTRUED.

The allowance provided by section 7 of the ordinance of the city of Los Angeles governing the administration of the police pension fund, established pursuant to Charter, § 2, subd. 45, to be made to the widow, child, or children of a police officer dying from natural causes, is to be attended by the same limitation as contained in section 4 of the ordinance relative to disability by injuries or sickness in course of duty, and does not permit any allowance after child reaches 16 years, or after the marriage of widow.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 187—"CHILD OR CHILDREN" AS USED IN ORDINANCE RELATING TO POLICE PENSION FUND APPLY TO MINORS.

Under section 7 of the ordinance of the city of Los Angeles governing administration of the police pension fund established under Charter, § 2, subd. 45, providing that when any member of the police department dies from natural causes his widow, child, or children shall receive an amount based on the number of years of his service, the words "child or children" naturally apply only to minors, and do not include adults.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Child.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS 187—DISCRETION OF POLICE PENSION COMMISSIONERS FINAL ONLY ON MATTERS WITHIN JURISDICTION.

The fact that police pension commissioners of the city of Los Angeles were vested with jurisdiction over the police pension fund meant that their discretion when exercised was final only as to matters and persons confided to their jurisdiction by Charter, § 2, subd. 45, providing for the fund, and the ordinance of the city governing its administration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by the City of Los Angeles against Wm. H. McKeag, Jr., and Charles E. McKeag. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Davis, Kemp & Post, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., and Wm. P. Mealey, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was brought by the city of Los Angeles to recover the amount of $1,000, alleged to have been improperly and without authority paid to the defendants out of the policemen's pension fund of said city. Defendants were the sons of W. H. McKeag, Sr., who at the time of his death was a police officer employed by said city, and he had been such police officer for more than ten years prior to his death. The defendants, at the time of the death of their father, were of adult age. It was alleged in the complaint that McKeag, Sr., died from natural causes, "and that the sickness which caused his death was not caused by the discharge of his duties as a member of said police department." In their answer defendants, stating that they had no information or belief sufficient to enable them to answer concerning the cause of the sickness resulting in the death of McKeag, denied "that the sickness which caused his death was not caused by the discharge of his duties as a member of said police department." The answer further sets up the charter provisions which authorized the establishment of the police pension fund. Plaintiff gave notice of motion for a judgment on the pleadings, which the court granted and defendants appealed.

Referring first to the charter provisions which are set forth in the answer of defendants, we find there the plan outlined under which the police pension fund was established; also the limitations governing the application of such fund. We quote, in part, subdivision 45 of section 2 of that charter:

"To create and maintain and provide for the disbursement of a policemen's relief, health, life insurance, and pension fund, to be used for the payment of pensions to members of the police department of the city who shall be retired from such department; for the payment of pensions to members of such department who shall become physically disabled by reason of bodily injuries received in, or by reason of sickness caused by, the discharge of their duties, and for the payment of pensions to the widows and children of members of such police department who shall have died from bodily injuries received, or sickness or disease contracted in the performance or discharge of their duties. Said fund shall be created, maintained and disbursed in such manner as may be prescribed by ordinance. * * * The disbursement of said 'Policemen's Pension Fund,' as provided for by ordinance, shall be left to the exclusive control, discretion and judgment of a commission of three persons, to be called the 'Policemen's Pension Commission,' the said commission to consist of the chief of police, the health commissioner, and the president of the council. Said commission shall make semiannual reports to the city council of all moneys received and disbursed by them."

From an examination of these provisions it must be concluded that the fund when created could only be used in the furtherance of the purposes therein specified. Those purposes included the payment of pensions to members of the department who should become physically disabled by reason of bodily injuries received in, or sickness caused by, the discharge of their duties, and for the payment of pensions to widows and children of such members who should die from bodily injuries received or "sickness or disease contracted in the performance or discharge of their duties." For the purpose of carrying out the intent of the charter provisions an ordinance was passed wherein a complete plan for the administration of the fund was provided for and the cases in which allowances might be claimed were enumerated. Among other things, it is provided by section 4 of the ordinance that when a member of the police department shall become disabled by reason of bodily injuries received or sickness caused by the discharge of his duties, such member may be retired and paid a yearly pension, and that, if he should die leaving a widow or children, they should participate so long as the widow should remain unmarried or the children be under the age of 16 years. All of the provisions of the ordinance except those contained in section 7, which will be hereinafter referred to, limit any allowance to children to those only who are under the age of 16 years. By section 7 it is provided that when any member of the police department dies from natural causes, "then his widow, child, or children, or his dependent father or mother, if there be no such widow, child, or children, shall receive from said fund an amount based upon the number of years of service of such person in said department as fixed in the following schedule, to wit." It was evidently under the authority assumed to be given by this provision of the ordinance that the money was paid by the pension commission to defendants.

[1] As a matter of construction, and viewing the preceding terms of the ordinance, it seems both fair and reasonable that the allowance provided to be made there to the widow, child, or children is to be attended by the same limitation as is contained in the other provisions, which do not permit any allowance or continuation thereof to be made after a child reaches the age of sixteen years, or after the marriage of the widow. In a similar case, and where similar provisions governing the disbursement of a police pension fund were under consideration, the construction which we have indicated was enforced. Mackey et al. v. Mott et al., 25 Cal. App. 110, 142 Pac. 1082.

[2] Under this construction of the provisions of the ordinance before us it matters not whether the illness which caused the death of McKeag was caused by or contracted during the performance of duties as a member of the police department, and even though we were not to construe the ordinance in its entirety, and were considering section 7 alone, the natural construction to be given to the words "child or children" would be to consider such provision as applying to minors alone and not to include adults. The determination of the one question just considered necessarily compels an affirmation of the judgment.

[3] The fact that the police pension commissioners were vested with exclusive authority over the fund means that their discretion, when exercised, is final only as to matters and persons confided to their jurisdiction.

It is unnecessary to consider other questions presented affecting the condition of the pleadings relating to alleged issues raised by the answer.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by Sarah A. Higgins and another against Fred M. Jennings, Sheriff, etc. Judgment for named plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henning & McGee, of San Diego, for appellant.

Shreve & Shreve, J. T. Reed, and Theodore Stensland, all of San Diego (Shreve, Reed, Sample & Reed, of counsel), for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff Sarah A. Higgins against defendant, Fred M. Jennings, sheriff of San Diego county, in an action in claim and delivery and by which said plaintiff was decreed to be entitled to the possession of a certain promissory note for $9,600, together with a mortgage on real property given to secure its payment, which the defendant as such sheriff had taken into his possession as the property of one B. B. Higgins, husband of said plaintiff, under an attachment issued in an action pending against him.

The facts of the case are very fully found by the court, and may be briefly summarized as follows: In the year 1904 Sarah A. Higgins married said B. B. Higgins, who at the time was a widower with two young children, and the owner of and living upon a ranch in said county, upon which there was a mortgage for $2,000. She had been his housekeeper for two years, and there was due to her from Higgins some $300 or $400 as unpaid wages. She was also the owner of five acres of land, with a few head of cattle and other personal property, including $200 or $300 in cash. Higgins had requested her to marry him, promising that if she would do so and raise his two children and assist him in paying off the mortgage on his said ranch he would give her the property. She consented and became his wife, sold her land, and devoted the proceeds to the removal of said incumbrance, and otherwise carried out the terms of her undertaking. No immediate transfer of the ranch was made to Mrs. Higgins, but in the year 1911 she declared a homestead upon it, her husband not joining in said declaration, and indeed not knowing of it until after the declaration was made. In September, 1913, after negotiations conducted through R. E. Harrison, the other plaintiff in this action, the ranch was sold, Mrs. Higgins joining in the deed, and thus relinquishing her homestead right upon the understanding with Higgins that the proceeds of the sale should be paid to her. Through a misunderstanding by Harrison of his instructions, a note and mortgage, taken as part payment for said ranch, and which constitute the bone of contention in this action, were assigned to Higgins, upon discovering which a few days later, Mrs. Higgins took exception to it, and she and her husband went to a lawyer and had the error rectified by an assignment of said note and mortgage from Higgins to his wife. Some 15 months thereafter, viz. in December, 1914, an attachment was issued in an action pending against said B. B. Higgins and brought by the Bank of Oceanside upon a promissory note executed by said Higgins, and said attachment was levied upon the note and mortgage now in controversy, and which was then in the hands of one Alden, having been assigned to her by Sarah A. Higgins as security for a loan of $600. A few days thereafter, viz. on December 7, 1914, said Alden assigned said note and mortgage to said Harrison, who later, in the month of February, 1915, assigned them to Sarah A. Higgins. The defendant having secured possession of the note and mortgage by virtue of said attachment, said Harrison and Mrs. Higgins, as plaintiffs, brought this action against him for their recovery, and upon giving the necessary replevin bond regained possession of the property.

It further appears that on February 1, 1915, B. B. Higgins filed a petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court, and was on that day adjudicated a bankrupt. A trustee was appointed, and qualified, and in the course of said proceeding the Bank of Oceanside made proof of its claim, being the same obligation upon which its pending suit against Higgins was based. At the time of the trial of the present action, which took place nearly three years after its commencement, the suit of the Bank of Oceanside against Higgins had not been tried, nor had the trustee in bankruptcy of the defendant therein intervened in said suit, but he had by an independent action sought to recover said note and mortgage as assets of the estate of his bankrupt. In due time Higgins procured his discharge in said proceeding. In the meantime and between the time of the commencement of this action and its trial in May, 1917, Mrs. Higgins, in consideration of a loan of $2,000, assigned said note and mortgage to one Gottstein, and in conjunction with said assignee, commenced a suit in foreclosure upon said note and mortgage. She recovered judgment therein, the property was sold, and a deficiency judgment entered in her favor.

The court found the facts generally as above narrated, and also that the transfer by Higgins to his wife of said note and mortgage was made for a valuable consideration and without intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the creditors of the husband, and at a time when the latter was not insolvent, in these respects rejecting the contentions of the defendant as set up in his answer to the amended supplemental complaint. The court concluded as matter of law that at the time of the commencement of the action and of the trial of the cause said Sarah A. Higgins was entitled to the possession of said personal property, and rendered its judgment accordingly and for her costs. The defendant appeals.

[1] In the briefs of counsel for the respective parties hereto quite a number of legal propositions are discussed, with copious citations of and extracts from cases pro and con; but to our minds most, if not all, of these questions are not necessary of decision herein in the face of the foregoing facts as found by the trial court, which findings an inspection of the record shows to have been based upon conflicting testimony. If, for example, the evidence supports—as we think it does—the finding of the trial court that B. B. Higgins was not insolvent at or prior to the date of his transfer of the note and mortgage in question to his wife, and that such transfer was based upon a sufficient consideration, and was not fraudulent as to his creditors, then it follows, as a legal conclusion requiring no citation to support it, that the note and mortgage so transferred were not subject to attachment some 15 months after the said transfer at the suit of one of the creditors of said B. B. Higgins, and hence that the defendant, as the sheriff levying such attachment, can found no right to withhold said note and mortgage from the rightful owner thereon; and thus the fact that B. B. Higgins thereafter went into bankruptcy becomes an immaterial factor in the decision of this case.

[2] As to the right of a husband and wife acting in good faith to enter into an oral agreement with respect to what shall be done with the proceeds of the sale of their homestead property by the terms of which such proceeds are to be transferred to the wife, we have no doubt as to the validity of such an oral understanding when the same has been fully executed by the making of such transfer. Freitas v. Freitas, 31 Cal. App. 16, 159 Pac. 611; Hussey v. Castle, 41 Cal. 239; Bates v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 479, 30 Pac. 605, 16 L. R. A. 745, 29 Am. St. Rep. 133; Ferrell v. Stanley, 83 Kan. 491, 112 Pac. 155, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 777.

[3] The foregoing two propositions are decisive of the case at bar, since under either the defendant herein cannot be heard to question the correctness of the court's conclusion based, as we have seen, upon findings in favor of the plaintiff on evidence which, while conflicting, sufficiently supports the plaintiff's case.

Judgment affirmed.

OHIO ELECTRIC CAR CO. v. LE SAGE et al. (L. A. 5285.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 17, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶193(9)—THAT COMPLAINT DOES NOT STATE CAUSE OF ACTION MAY FIRST BE RAISED ON APPEAL.

The objection that a complaint failed to state a cause of action may first be raised in the appellate court.

2. PLEADING ¶34(7)—COMPLAINT FIRST ATTACKED IN APPELLATE COURT WILL BE LIBERALLY CONSTRUED.

Where the sufficiency of a complaint to state a cause of action was first attacked in the appellate court, it will be liberally construed.

3. GUARANTY ¶27—CONTRACT OF GUARANTY SHOULD RECEIVE FAIR AND REASONABLE INTERPRETATION.

The language of a contract of guaranty should receive a fair and reasonable interpretation under the same rules of construction that are applicable to other written instruments, but the liability of the guarantor cannot be extended by implication.

4. GUARANTY ¶70—GUARANTY OF COLLECTION REQUIRES DILIGENCE AGAINST PRINCIPAL; "UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTY"; "GUARANTY OF COLLECTION."

A guaranty to hold plaintiff harmless as a result of its sale of automobiles to a dealer is not an "unconditional guaranty," within Civ. Code, § 2806, so as to come within the rule of section 2807 that a guarantor is immediately liable upon default of the principal, but being in effect a "guaranty of collection" within section 2800, the guarantor is under sections 2801, 2802, discharged if proceedings against the principal are not taken with reasonable diligence, unless no part of the debt could have been collected, or the principal has removed from the state having no property from which the obligation might have been satisfied.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Guaranty of Payment and Collection.]

5. GUARANTY ¶47 — "GUARANTY OF PAYMENT" AND "INDEMNITY AGAINST LOSS" CONTRASTED.

In case of "guaranty of payment," the liability of the guarantor is fixed by the failure of the principal debtor to pay at maturity, but "indemnity against loss" partakes of the nature of a guaranty of collection; no liability being incurred until after by use of reasonable diligence the creditor has become unable to collect the debt from the principal.

6. GUARANTY ¶85(1) — COMPLAINT AGAINST GUARANTOR OF COLLECTION HELD NOT TO STATE CAUSE OF ACTION.

A complaint, alleging that defendant agreed to hold plaintiff harmless from loss by reason of its sale of automobiles, but which failed to allege that any steps were taken against the principal, or that diligence would have proved unavailing, is insufficient to state a cause of action.

7. PLEADING ¶433(7) — DEFECTIVE COMPLAINT NOT CURED BY FINDINGS.

Where a complaint was insufficient to state a cause of action against one guaranteeing collection because not showing that steps had been taken against the principal, findings in language similar to the complaint that no part of the debt due from the principal had been paid, that demand had been made, and that there was due from the guarantor to plaintiff a specified sum, are insufficient to cure the defect.

8. EVIDENCE ¶448—UNAMBIGUOUS WRITTEN CONTRACT OF GUARANTY CANNOT BE EXPLAINED BY CIRCUMSTANCES.

Under Civ. Code, § 1639, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1856, 1860, where a written contract of guaranty was not ambiguous, evidence of the extrinsic circumstances is inadmissible to explain the meaning of the language, nor is the conduct of the parties admissible to show their construction.

9. CONTRACTS ¶238(2) — WRITTEN CONTRACT CANNOT BE ALTERED BY ORAL AGREEMENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 1698, a written contract cannot be altered by a parol agreement unless executed.

10. GUARANTY ¶85(1)—COMPLAINT ON CONTRACT IN NATURE OF GUARANTY OF COLLECTION HELD DEFECTIVE.

Where a complaint on a contract in the nature of a guaranty of collection was defective because failing to show proceedings against the principal, general allegation that plaintiff had sufficiently performed all of the conditions of the contract on its part to be performed will not supply the deficiency.

11. GUARANTY 47 — MERE NONPAYMENT DOES NOT GIVE CAUSE OF ACTION ON GUARANTY OF COLLECTION.

Mere nonpayment of a debt when it becomes due does not constitute a loss or damage within the meaning of a guaranty of collection.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by the Ohio Electric Car Company against Gideon Le Sage and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, the named defendant appeals. Reversed.

Julius V. Patrosso, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Perry F. Backus, of Los Angeles, and Parker & Parker, of Pasadena, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The defendant Le Sage appeals on the judgment roll alone from a judgment against him. His only point is that the complaint does not state a cause of action against him.

[1, 2] The plaintiff contends that the appellant cannot raise this point because the demurrer to the complaint was a joint demurrer in behalf of all the defendants, and that, as the complaint is conceded to be good as against some of the defendants, it must be held good as to all of them upon a joint demurrer. In Asevado v. Orr, 100 Cal. 300, 34 Pac. 777, the court said that—

"A joint demurrer by all of the defendants must be overruled if the complaint is good against either of them."

We need not attempt to explain this remark or to show that it is inapplicable to the present case. It is immaterial whether the point was properly raised by the demurrer or not. The objection that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is not waived by the failure to demur, but may be raised for the first time upon appeal. Code Civ. Proc. § 434; Arnold v. American Ins. Co., 148 Cal. 663, 84 Pac. 182; Lyden v. Spohn-Patrick Co., 155 Cal. 177, 100 Pac. 236. It is true that, where the objection is not made good until after judgment, the complaint will be liberally construed, and if the necessary facts appear by implication only, or as a conclusion of law, the complaint will be upheld. But where there is an entire absence of an essential allegation, the complaint will be held bad, even when the point is first raised upon appeal.

[3-6] The complaint here contains five counts. Upon the fifth count judgment was given in favor of the defendants, and it need not be further considered. So far as the defendant Le Sage is concerned, the action is based upon a guaranty by him and Duffet attached to a contract executed by the defendants, MacIntosh and MacIntosh, under the name of Washington Street Electric Garage

Company. We will hereafter refer to them as the "garage company." The contract between the plaintiff and the garage company provided that the garage company should have the exclusive right, in the city of Los Angeles, to sell electric automobiles manufactured by the plaintiff. It also provided that the plaintiff would sell such automobiles to said garage company at a discount from the list price and upon specified terms of payment. Attached thereto, after the signature of the said partners, was the guaranty signed by Le Sage and Duffet upon which Le Sage is sought to be held liable, which was in the following words:

"Whereas, we are interested in the Washington Street Electric Garage Company and at our request the Ohio Electric Car Company has consented to deliver certain automobiles to the said Washington Street Electric Garage Company, without payment therefor in cash, and that the said Ohio Electric Car Company has further, at our request, entered into the foregoing contract with the Washington Street Electric Garage Company, we hereby guarantee to hold the Ohio Electric Car Company whole and harmless from any and all loss or damage by reason of any transaction or transactions between it and the Washington Street Electric Garage Company."

The complaint alleges that certain automobiles were purchased by the garage company from the plaintiff at specified prices upon which partial payments had been made. The allegations of nonpayment were in the same phraseology in each count. It will be sufficient to quote the clause of the first count upon that subject:

"That no part of said $1,928.70 or of the interest thereon has been paid to the plaintiff and there is now due and owing to it thereon, from said defendants, E. D. MacIntosh, R. B. MacIntosh, Geo. E. F. Duffet, and Gideon Le Sage, said sum of $1,928.70, with interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the 14th day of July, 1915."

There is no allegation that the plaintiff has suffered any loss or damage by reason of any transaction with the garage company, or that the plaintiff has taken any legal proceedings to collect from said company indemnities alleged to be due it, or that said company is insolvent, or that for any other reason legal proceedings against them would be unavailing. No facts are alleged to indicate that the debts of the garage company could not have been enforced by ordinary legal proceedings. The appellant contends that the complaint is insufficient against him because of the want of such allegations, and we think this contention must be sustained.

The appellant's only liability is upon the guaranty signed by him. The language of the guaranty is to receive a fair and reasonable interpretation upon the same rules of construction that are applicable to other written instruments, but the liability of the guarantor cannot be extended by implication beyond the terms of the guaranty when so construed. London & San Francisco Bank v. Parrott, 125 Cal. 482, 58 Pac. 164, 73 Am. St. Rep. 64. The guaranty of Le Sage is not an unconditional guaranty, as described in section 2806 of the Civil Code, and hence it does not come within the rule of section 2807 that—

"A guarantor of payment or performance is liable to the guarantee immediately upon the default of the principal, and without demand or notice."

The guaranty clearly imports a condition, that is, that the plaintiff must suffer some loss or damage from the transactions guaranteed, in order to make the guaranty operative. It is, in effect, a guaranty of collection such as that mentioned in section 2800 of the Civil Code. Such a guaranty imports that the debtor is solvent and that the demand is collectible by the usual legal proceedings, if taken with reasonable diligence. If such proceedings are not taken, the guarantor is discharged unless "no part of the debt could have been collected thereby" or unless the principal obligor has removed from the state leaving no property therein from which the obligation might be satisfied. Civ. Code, §§ 2801, 2802. The complaint does not show any of these facts, or any excuse for the failure to take legal proceedings first against the principal. The rule in regard to such guaranty is well stated in Pierce v. Merrill, 128 Cal. 471, 61 Pac. 67, 79 Am. St. Rep. 63, in a quotation from Burton v. Dewey, 4 Kan. App. 589, 46 Pac. 325, as follows:

"There is a well-understood difference between a guaranty of payment and a contract of indemnity against loss as the result of the nonpayment of a debt. In the first case the liability of the guarantor is fixed by the failure of the principal debtor to pay at maturity, or at the time when payment was guaranteed. In the second, the contract partakes of the nature of a guaranty of collection, no liability being incurred until after, by the use of due and reasonable diligence, the guarantee has become unable to collect the debt from the principal debtor."

In Fernandez v. Tormey, 121 Cal. 515, 53 Pac. 1119, a mortgage was given by the defendant to secure Fernandez "against any loss which he may ever sustain by reason of the transfer and assignment by him to Henry Rogers" of certain obligations particularly described. Concerning the meaning and effect of this clause of the mortgage, the court said, "Its natural import is indemnity against loss contingent and not yet accrued" (121 Cal. 520, 53 Pac. 1119), and held that the mortgagee could not recover unless he proved, not only that Rogers had failed to discharge his obligations on account of such assignments, but that the mortgagee had, as a consequence thereof, suffered some loss from the failure.

There are many authorities to the same effect. Elder v. Kutner, 97 Cal. 490, 32 Pac. 563; Willson v. McEvoy, 25 Cal. 172; Prader v. Grimm, 28 Cal. 12; Roussin v. Stewart, 33 Cal. 208; 20 Cyc. 1447.

[7] There is nothing in the findings which cures this defect in the pleadings. On the contrary, they also merely state, in language similar to that of the complaint, with respect to each item found to be owing from the garage company to the plaintiff, that no part of the same, or any interest thereon, has been paid to the plaintiff; that a demand has been made therefor and that there is now due from said defendants to the plaintiff the sum of money specified. Upon the principles relating to such guaranties as above set forth, the findings not only do not cure the complaint, but they are insufficient to sustain the judgment against the defendant Le Sage.

[8, 9] The surrounding circumstances cannot be resorted to for the purpose of giving a different meaning to the terms of the guaranty. There is nothing ambiguous in those terms, nor were any facts alleged which create an extrinsic ambiguity, and in such cases extrinsic evidence to control or explain the meaning of the language is inadmissible. Civ. Code, § 1639; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1856, 1860. Nor was any conduct of the parties in construing the contract contrary to its terms shown which could have the effect of giving the language a different meaning with respect to the particular transactions here involved, whatever effect such conduct may have had upon other obligations covered by the guaranty. A written contract cannot be altered by an oral agreement except when such oral agreement is executed. Civ. Code, § 1698. There has been no oral agreement made or executed purporting to alter the guaranty as to the claims sued on. No foundation is laid in the pleadings for any claim that the defendant Le Sage was a partner in the garage company and directly liable as such for its obligations. Hence the judgment cannot be supported by any presumption to that effect.

[10] The allegation in the complaint that the plaintiff "has sufficiently performed each and all of the conditions of said contract on its part to be performed" manifestly refers, on the face of the complaint, solely to the contract between the plaintiff and the garage company as distinguished from the guaranty appended thereto. The same statement in the findings appears in the same connection and must have the same application and meaning. They cannot be considered as sufficient to authorize a judgment against the plaintiff on the theory that they are equivalent to an allegation and finding that the plaintiff had prosecuted an action against the garage company with due diligence and had failed to recover anything therein.

[11] The mere nonpayment of a debt when it becomes due is sufficient foundation for an action to recover the same, but it does not constitute loss or damage within the meaning of a guaranty such as that here under consideration. The authorities already referred to sufficiently demonstrate this proposition. We are of opinion that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute any cause of action against the appellant Le Sage, and that the judgment against him is not supported by the findings.

The judgment is reversed.

URY v. VAN EVERY et al. (L. A. 5306.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 1, 1919.)

1. BANKRUPTCY §302(1)—DEFINITENESS OF COMPLAINT IN ACTION TO RECOVER PROPERTY.

A bankruptcy trustee's complaint, alleging the bankrupt had transferred property to a sister upon a secret understanding to hold it for his use, and also that he had fraudulently conveyed it to her with intent to defraud his creditors, etc., held not subject to demurrer upon ground that complaint is not clear as to whether it is desired to impress a trust on property or set aside the transfer on account of fraud, since, if the property was transferred without consideration under a secret understanding, the trustee would be entitled to its return, and pleading actual fraud does not essentially change the action.

2. BANKRUPTCY §143(10)—INTEREST IN TRUST ESTATES PASSES TO TRUSTEE.

Where one for whom property is held in trust becomes a bankrupt, his entire interest in the trust estate passes to the trustee in bankruptcy, and such ownership draws with it the right of possession, in so far as such interest is capable of possession.

3. BANKRUPTCY §143(10)—SECRET TRUST FOR BANKRUPT PASSES TO TRUSTEE.

Any property, in which there is a secret trust for the bankrupt's benefit, no matter how much covered up, passes to the trustee.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Loren Ury, Jr., a minor, by L. G. Ury, his guardian, now Wm. H. Moore, Jr., trustee for the estate of John L. Van Every, bankrupt, as substituted plaintiff, against J. L. Van Every and Jessie L. Van Every. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

Simpson & Simpson, of Pasadena, Elmer I. Moody, of Los Angeles, and Ticknor & Carter, of Pasadena, for appellant.

A. K. Hancock, S. M. Johnstone, and Hancock & King, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment entered after a demurrer to the third amended complaint had been sustained.

The pleading held defective by the superior court contained allegations that Loren Ury, Jr., a minor, appearing by his guardian ad litem L. G. Ury, was a judgment creditor of John L. Van Every, the amount of the judgment being $1,000; that after Loren Ury, Jr., sued defendant by his guardian ad litem, Van Every was adjudged a bankrupt December 31, 1914; that William H. Moore, Jr., was appointed trustee of the estate in bankruptcy; and that subsequently said Moore, as trustee, was by order of court substituted for Ury as plaintiff.

It was further alleged that on February 10, 1913, J. L. Van Every made and executed a certain instrument purporting to convey to his sister, Jessie L. Van Every, certain described property; that other property, description of which was unknown to plaintiff, had been similarly conveyed; that Van Every had also given into the hands of his sister money and other personal property prior to the adjudication of the fact that he was a bankrupt; and that all of such transfers were without consideration and "with the understanding and agreement between the said John L. Van Every and the said Jessie L. Van Every, that she was to hold the same as and for the property of the said John L. Van Every." It was further averred that the estate of John L. Van Every, bankrupt, owned all the property; that Jessie L. Van Every held it as the property of her brother and for his use and benefit; that she received it in trust for said John L. Van Every; that she had no right, title, or interest in the said property received by her prior to the bankruptcy of her brother.

It is conceded by respondents that, if the pleading had contained only such averments, it might have properly passed demurrer, but the complaint also contains allegations which, with those epitomized above, made it, as respondents assert, demurrable as both ambiguous and uncertain. In substance, these averments (based upon information and belief) are that John L. Van Every willfully and fraudulently transferred and assigned the property, prior to bankruptcy, "under a secret trust agreement with the said Jessie L. Van Every, and with the intent for a purpose of avoiding and escaping the payment of just debts of the said defendant, John L. Van Every, and for other purposes unknown to this plaintiff, and that the said John L. Van Every and the said Jessie L. Van Every refused to deliver to the trustee of said bankrupt the said property so held by said trustee, and both of said defendants are fraudulently withholding said property from the trustee of said bankrupt, thereby preventing the payment of just debts of the creditors of the said John L. Van Every in the estate." According to the complaint, claims to the amount of $1,025 have been proved and filed in the bankruptcy proceeding; the trustee has no money or property in his possession; and it is necessary that he obtain possession of the property held by Jessie Van Every that it may be sold and the proceeds used in paying claims and expenses of administration in the estate of the bankrupt.

The prayer is for a decree declaring Jessie L. Van Every trustee as to the property involved in the suit; requiring her to reconvey, assign, and transfer all of said property to the estate of the bankrupt; and restraining her from asserting any adverse claim thereto as against the estate.

[1] Respondents take the position here, as evidently the superior court did, that it is impossible to determine, from the pleading, whether the object of the action is to impress a trust on the property in the hands of defendant Jessie L. Van Every, or to set aside the transfer on the ground of fraud.

We are of the opinion that this criticism is without merit. If the property was transferred to Jessie L. Van Every without consideration as the property of her brother under a secret understanding that she was to hold it as his, the effect was to work a deception upon his creditors unless she should be required to return it to his estate. This would be true whether actually a deception was intended or not. The pleading of actual fraud, therefore, does not alter the essential characteristics of the action. Whether the trust be considered voluntary or involuntary, the officer having control of the bankrupt's estate would be entitled to conveyances or assignments.

[2] "Where one for whom property is held in trust becomes a bankrupt, his entire interest in the trust estate passes to the trustee in bankruptcy, and such ownership draws with it the right of possession, in so far as such interest is capable of possession." 7 Corpus Juris, 118.

[3] "Any property, in which there is a secret trust for the bankrupt's benefit, no matter how much covered up, passes to the trustee." Brandenburg on Bankruptcy (4th Ed.) § 853.

In view of the principles above announced, we feel constrained to hold that the complaint is sufficient as against the demurrer.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to the superior court to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

CONFLICTING EVIDENCE NOT DISTURBED.

Findings of fact by the court upon substantially conflicting testimony will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Percy S. King and another, as executors of the last will and testament of Johanne Augusta Emily Marx, deceased, against A. R. Cave and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. W. Dorsey and W. E. Cashman, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

U'Ren & Beard, of Napa, and Milton T. U'Ren, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. An action upon two promissory notes of the defendants to Mrs. Emily Marx, deceased, payable two years after date with interest at 8 per cent., the first dated August 11, 1918, for $2,000, and the second dated October 1, 1918, for $1,000. These notes, given in renewal of two notes of the same amounts and tenor executed in 1909, and a third note of $5,500, dated January 11, 1910, payable in five years, together with 9,000 shares of the capital stock of the Wes Johnson Company, were held by the Anglo & London Paris National Bank in San Francisco for decedent at the time of her death. It is admitted by the defendants that they received from the payee of the notes the sum of $8,500; that because of that fact they gave the notes in question, deposited the stock as security, and paid the interest thereon. The defendants claim that the $8,500 which they received from the deceased was a conditional gift; that the payment of interest, the placing of the security, and the giving of the notes were either consistent with such gift, or, if not, that they were without consideration, because the money was conditionally given them. The claim is that the purpose of the testatrix was to secure to herself interest upon the money given during her life as an annuity, and at her death the principal was to belong to the makers of the notes. All the evidence that either party deemed material to the elucidation of the question at issue was presented to the trial court without objection, in accordance to a stipulation to that effect. The trial court found that there was no such agreement as that claimed by the defendants, and accordingly rendered judgment for the plaintiffs. Defendants appeal, and claim that the evidence without substantial conflict sustains their contention. In addition to the admitted facts above stated, there is also in evidence correspondence between the parties and the bank concerning the notes, and other evidence which supports the finding of the trial court that the transaction was a loan. It is therefore sufficient for the purposes of this appeal to point out that, notwithstanding the number of witnesses who testify to statements of the deceased that she intended to give, or had given, $8,500 to the makers of the notes, and the testimony of the defendants that such was the understanding, the case comes within the rule that, where the testimony in the trial court is substantially conflicting, we cannot interfere with the findings of fact by that court. It becomes unnecessary, therefore, to consider the question as to whether or not the transaction sought to be shown by parol, if proved, comes within the rule that such evidence cannot be received to contradict or vary the terms of a written instrument, or whether or not, if a gift of the $8,500 was proved prior to the giving of the notes, they were therefore without consideration. The evidence sufficiently sustains the findings.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. RULIA SINGH. (Cr. 2270.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 17, 1920.
Rehearing Denied April 16, 1920.)

1. HOMICIDE $\S$ 253(1) — EVIDENCE HELD TO SUPPORT CONVICTION OF FIRST-DEGREE MURDER.

In prosecution for murder in first degree committed by one Hindu upon another, evidence, including that of threats by defendant, and the dying declarations of deceased that defendant had killed him, held sufficient to support conviction, despite defendant's claim of alibi.

2. HOMICIDE $\S$ 218, 221—COURT PASSES ON ADMISSIBILITY OF DYING DECLARATIONS, AND JURY DETERMINES WEIGHT.

In California it is the function of the trial court primarily to pass upon the admissibility of alleged dying declarations, and of the jury to determine whether they were in fact made under a sense of impending death, and, if so, then to determine credibility and weight to which they are entitled.

3. HOMICIDE $\S$ 203(1), 221—DYING DECLARATIONS NOT CONSIDERED IF REASONABLE DOUBT OF EXTREMIS; OTHERWISE IF EXTREMIS APPEARS.

If jury is not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that deceased, claimed to have made dying declarations, was in extremis, and believed at the time that he was, in arriving at verdict they must disregard such declarations, but, if satisfied he acted under a sense of impending death, they must determine what facts, if any, are established by his declarations, and apply them accordingly.

4. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 763, 764(21)—INSTRUCTION ON DYING DECLARATIONS HELD NOT ERRONEOUS.

In prosecution for murder, instruction as to dying declarations that jury had right in considering whether or not they should accept declaration as a correct statement to determine whether it was made under a sense of impending death held not erroneous as leading jury to understand that, if they found deceased to have had sense of impending death, he was making a correct statement.

5. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 763, 764(21)—INSTRUCTION ON DYING DECLARATIONS HELD NOT ERRONEOUS.

In a prosecution for murder, instruction on dying declarations that jury were at liberty to disregard declarations, if not satisfied they were made under a sense of impending death, held not erroneous in that jury were not instructed they must disregard declarations in such case.

6. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 823(10)—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTION ON DYING DECLARATIONS CURED BY SUBSEQUENT CORRECT CHARGE.

In a prosecution for murder, instruction on dying declarations, erroneous in that jury were not told they must disregard such declarations if not made under a sense of impending death, held cured by a following instruction that, if satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt the declarations of deceased were so made, they might be considered.

7. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 763, 764(21)—INSTRUCTION AS TO DYING DECLARATIONS OF DECEASED HELD NOT INVASION OF JURY'S PROVINCE.

In a prosecution for murder, instruction that certain statements made by deceased had been admitted in evidence "on the theory" they were dying declarations held not an invasion of the province of the jury, in view of the quoted language.

8. HOMICIDE $\S$ 216—DYING DECLARATIONS HELD ADMISSIBLE ALTHOUGH COURT DID NOT DETERMINE ADMISSIBILITY BY PRELIMINARY PROOF ADDRESSED TO ITSELF ALONE.

In a prosecution for murder, where there was much foundation testimony for the admission of the dying declarations of deceased, all indicating his settled conviction of pending dissolution, trial court did not err in not determining by means of preliminary proof addressed to itself alone question as to admissibility of declarations.

9. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 682—ADMISSION AS PART OF PROSECUTION'S CASE IN CHIEF OF EVIDENCE ATTACKING DEFENDANT'S ALIBI HELD NOT ERRONEOUS.

In a prosecution for murder, admission as part of the people's case in chief of testimony responsive to theory of prosecution that defendant by going to a hospital had fabricated an alibi held not erroneous; prosecution not having been required to defer its attack on the alibi until evidence in support was first introduced, while evidence of whereabouts of defendant at time of murder was indispensable to case of prosecution in chief.

10. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 682—EVIDENCE REBUTTING PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE ADMISSIBLE FOR PROSECUTION IN CHIEF.

Any competent evidence which tends to rebut the presumption of innocence is always admissible as a part of the prosecution's case in chief.

11. HOMICIDE $\S$ 158(4)—NECESSARY ADMISSION OF TESTIMONY OF THREATS BY DEFENDANT AGAINST OTHERS THAN DECEASED NOT ERRONEOUS.

In a prosecution for murder, where threats by defendant toward deceased necessarily involved proof of collateral threats towards persons other than deceased—that is, defendant's wife and her daughter, the wife of deceased—there was no error in admission of such evidence.

12. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1168(4)—REFUSAL TO STRIKE UNRESPONSIVE ANSWER HARMLESS WHERE SIMILAR TESTIMONY ADMITTED WITHOUT OBJECTION.

Refusal to strike out answer of witness claimed not to be responsive to question was harmless, where testimony to same effect had already been admitted without objection.

13. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 413(1)—STATEMENT BY DEFENDANT IN HOSPITAL BEFORE KILLING INADMISSIBLE AS SELF-SERVING.

In a prosecution for murder, any statement as to how he felt, made by defendant in the hospital, on the night of the killing, before its time, held inadmissible as a self-serving declaration.

14. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 419, 420(6)—PRIOR INCONSISTENT STATEMENT OF WIFE OF DECEASED INADMISSIBLE AS HEARSAY.

In a prosecution for murder, certain former inconsistent statements of the wife of deceased as to his dying declarations, considered as independent evidence, held hearsay and inadmissible.

15. WITNESSES $\S$ 388(10)—IMPEACHMENT BY SHOWING INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS MUST BE PRECEDED BY INQUIRY AS TO TIMES, PLACES, AND PERSONS PRESENT.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 2052, in a criminal case before the statements of a witness inconsistent with his present testimony may be shown, the statements must be related to him, with the circumstances of times, places, and persons present, and he must be asked whether he made such statements, and, if so, allowed to explain them.

16. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 670—TO RESERVE EXCEPTION TO EXCLUSION OF QUESTION NOT APPARENTLY MATERIAL, QUESTIONER MUST REFRAME IT.

Where a question does not show on its face whether or not it is material, the questioner, in order to reserve exception, must formally reframe the question so that its materiality is apparent.

17. HOMICIDE $\S$ 160—EVIDENCE OF KEEPING OF PISTOL BY DEFENDANT HELD TOO REMOTE.

In a prosecution for murder, testimony of defendant's wife that he kept a pistol at the head of his bed held inadmissible as too remote.

18. HOMICIDE $\S$ 338(3)—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE AS TO KEEPING OF PISTOL ADMITTED AND EXPLAINED BY DEFENDANT HELD HARMLESS.

In a prosecution for murder, admission of testimony of defendant's wife that he kept a pistol at the head of his bed, which in fact was inadmissible as too remote, held harmless to defendant, whose statement that he kept such pistol and that it belonged to his partner was not questioned.

19. WITNESSES $\S$ 62—STATUTE HELD TO REMOVE WIFE'S INCOMPETENCY AS WITNESS AGAINST HUSBAND WHERE ACQUIESCENCE OR NO OBJECTION.

The rule of the common law that the wife was absolutely incompetent to testify against her husband has been modified in California by Pen. Code, $\S$ 1322 (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1881), so that either spouse may testify with the consent of the other, which may be express or implied, as from a lack of objection and apparent acquiescence by the other.

20. WITNESSES $\S$ 75—OBJECTIONS TO QUESTIONS TO DEFENDANT'S WIFE INSUFFICIENT TO RAISE QUESTION OF HER COMPETENCY.

In a prosecution for murder, defendant's objections to questions to his wife that they were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial held insufficient to raise the competency of the wife as a witness under Pen. Code, $\S$ 1322.

21. CRIMINAL LAW $\S$ 1036(2)—OBJECTIONS TO COMPETENCY OF WITNESSES NOT MADE BELOW NOT CONSIDERED ON APPEAL.

If objections to the competency of witnesses are not made in the trial court, they will not be considered on appeal.

22. WITNESSES $\S$ 76(3)—PRIVILEGE TO OBJECT TO SPOUSE AS WITNESS NOT MADE AT THE TIME AND ON CLEAR GROUNDS DEEMED WAIVED.

If one spouse, a party, and present in court, relies on the incompetency of the other to testify, the objection must be made at the time and on such grounds as to bring clearly before the court the question of the incompetency of the witness, or the privilege will be deemed to have been waived.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Rulia Singh was convicted of murder in the first degree, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

D. V. Noland, of Los Angeles, and O. V. Willson, of El Centro, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, E. R. Simon, Dist. Atty., of El Centro, and J. F. Seymour, special prosecutor, for the People.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal taken by the defendant from a judgment of conviction of murder of the first degree after a verdict fixing the punishment at imprisonment for life. The defendant also appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It was charged in the information that on November 21, 1918, in the county of Imperial, the defendant killed and murdered one Albert Joe. The defendant and the deceased were Hindus. The deceased was sometimes called "Joe Albert" and "Alberto," and the defendant is also referred to by the Christian name of "Raoul." The deceased was the husband of Alejandrina Cardenaz and the defendant of Valentina Alvarez, her mother. The wives are Mexicans. At the time of the marriage of Alejandrina Cardenaz to the deceased in November, 1917, Valentina Alvarez had three other daughters, Romana, Andria, and Anna Maria, who made their home with her and the defendant on a ranch some six or seven miles northwest of the town of Holtville. The deceased lived with his wife and their baby on a ranch about the same distance in a southeasterly direction from the said town. Gajan Singh was the brother of the deceased and lived in a house about one mile from the latter's ranch. Following the marriage between the deceased and Alejandrina, sometimes known as "Mrs. Albert Joe," trouble arose between the defendant and his wife. The latter, explaining why she left him, said:

"I had good reasons to separate from him: * * * First, he didn't give me enough for my family; * * * secondary, he was very quarrelsome, always mad at me all the time. * * * He saw when I was telephoning, and he told me to stop and not to telephone any more, that he would send me to 'Chingada,' * * * and then he grabbed me by the hair and threw me on the floor. * * * The main reason of the quarrel was that I wouldn't give my consent for his partner to marry my daughter, Romana. * * * He told me that by and by we would remember him; that he was going to kill Alberto. * * * He did drive me away; he drove me away. * * * I went because he drove me from the house; he said he didn't want me in the house any more."

According to the evidence, in the month of May, 1918, the wife telephoned Mrs. Albert Joe to come out to the ranch and take her away. The deceased and his wife went out to the Rulia Singh place, and, after some loud words in Hindustani had passed between the men, and the defendant had said to his wife, "You go with your daughter, and some day your daughter will think of me," they brought Valentina Alvarez and her three daughters in Albert Joe's automobile to the latter's ranch. Two weeks later Valentina, Romana, Andria, and Anna Maria went to San Diego, where they remained until the death of Albert Joe, the defendant making two visits to that city with the object of inducing his wife to return to him, which she declined to do. The separation of the defendant and his wife, and her refusal to return to him, apparently caused bad feeling on the part of the defendant toward the deceased and his wife; for several Hindus and the Mexican women testified to threats made by Rulia Singh against the life of Albert Joe on various occasions. These threats, according to the prosecution, culminated in the assassination of the deceased. It is conceded that the deceased died from the effects of a 38-caliber bullet fired into his body, but whether from a revolver or a rifle does not appear.

In order more fully to understand the points urged as grounds for reversal we shall set forth the evidence somewhat in detail. On the afternoon of November 21, 1918, the deceased and his wife were in the town of Holtville on business. The evidence is not clear as to the exact hour, but it was late in the afternoon when they returned to their ranch in their automobile. When they arrived they stopped for a little while, put some provisions in the automobile, and then went on to the house of his brother, Gajan Singh, where they milked the cows. They then returned home, and he and his wife sat down to supper.

The deceased and his wife lived in two "tent houses," each containing only one room. One was used as a "parlor," and the other as a "kitchen." About 150 feet south of the "kitchen," and about 80 or 90 feet from the highway, was a small milk house containing a cream separator. This was a frame building about 10 feet square, and, excepting for 3 feet at the base, the walls were made of wire screen.

The wife testified that while they were eating their dog commenced a loud barking very close to the kitchen, and that—

"My husband came out and called him and he came in and I gave him his supper and then he went off again. * * * He barked a great deal. I was in the house and did not notice which way he went. * * * He barked all around there by the milk house."

After supper the deceased went out to operate the cream separator. At the same time his wife started to fill and light the oil lamps in the tents. According to her testimony the dog's barking was still audible at a distance. The night was dark; there was no moon; a lighted lantern hung in the milk house. From the spot where the deceased was found in the milk house immediately after the shot was fired, the location of the cream separator, a hole made by the bullet in the screen $4\frac{1}{2}$ feet from the floor, a scar made by the bullet on the wooden handle of the separator, and minor wounds in the thumb and finger of one of Albert Joe's hands, it may be assumed that at the time he was shot he was standing, facing south, turning the machine. The bullet came through the wire screen on the south side of the milk house, and footprints were found the night of the shooting leading to and away from a point about 8 or 10 feet south of the house, in a direct line with the bullet hole in the screen and the scar on the handle of the separator.

About 15 minutes after the deceased had gone out to the milk house, as his wife was re-entering the kitchen carrying the second lamp, which she had just filled, she heard the only shot that was fired. She immediately rushed into the kitchen, lighted the lamp, and then ran over to the milk house, where she found her husband on the floor suffering from a gunshot wound in his abdomen. She testified that while she was running toward the milk house she heard her husband cry out, "Raoul has killed me! Raoul has killed me!" On cross-examination she said that his exclamation was: "Raoul is killing me! Raoul is killing me!" She testified further that when she reached her husband she asked him if he had seen Raoul Singh, and that he replied, "Yes," and that Raoul Singh had said, "Now, you son of a b—h, you remember what I told you; you would not let Valentina come with me, and now see what you got." Questioned further, her version of this latter statement of the deceased was, "You son of a b—h, why didn't you let Valentina come to my house?"

The wife placed the deceased in a small milk cart and wheeled him over to the ranch house. She testified that as she was crossing the 50 yards between the milk house and the kitchen she heard the dog barking to the north of the tent houses, and, from the same direction, the sound of buggy wheels on the Holtville road. After leaving her husband lying on the floor, inside the ranch house, she took her baby and ran about one-quarter of a mile to the dairy of a neighbor, Manuel Magruda, who promised to telephone for a doctor, and then hurried to the house of Gajan Singh, her brother-in-law. The latter accompanied her back to the Albert Joe ranch.

As the result of a telephone call, Dr. H. B. Graeser arrived about 20 minutes later and made an examination of the injured man. The physician questioned Albert Joe as to who shot him. The deceased answered, "Rulia Singh shot me." In response to another question, "How do you know Rulia Singh shot you; did you see him?" his reply was "No." Later, C. L. Gillett, city marshal of Holtville, Dr. David A. Stevens, and A. R. Underwood, a constable, appeared on the scene. They were followed by Undersheriff H. L. Barker and Deputy Sheriff J. L. Ridgway. Dr. Stevens testified that as he came into the room where the dying man lay the first words he heard were those of Dr. Graeser "telling him [the deceased] that he was a goner and he was dying." Dr. Stevens and Dr. Graeser then held a consultation in the presence and hearing of the deceased during which Dr. Graeser remarked to Dr. Stevens, referring to the deceased, "that he was a goner." Dr. Stevens then examined Albert Joe and told him that he was going to die. In response to this the wounded man said, "Rulia Singh killed me." The following is the substance of what passed between Dr. Stevens and Albert Joe: When the doctor inquired why Albert Joe thought that the defendant had shot him and what reason Rulia Singh would have, he replied that it was a long story. Again the doctor suggested to Albert Joe that it could not have been the defendant, because he had been put in the hospital at 2 o'clock that afternoon. The injured man reiterated that the defendant had killed him. The undersheriff asked Albert Joe who shot him, and he replied, "Rulia Singh; he is my only enemy; all men are my friends." To similar questions by the city marshal, Albert Joe declared that the defendant shot him. His words were, "Mr. Charlie, it is a long story; I cannot tell you; I am going to die pretty soon, but I know Rulia Singh killed me."

After a consultation between the physicians, Dr. Graeser, the city marshal, Gajan Singh, and Mrs. Albert Joe took the injured man to Holtville in an automobile. Stopping in front of the Holtville Hospital, Gajan Singh detailed the following conversation with Albert Joe:

"After he stopped the machine, I said, 'Brother dear, so you no live, you have got to be die, you better talk now; after he start the machine to go to El Centro, maybe too far; maybe you talk again, and maybe not talk again.' * * * He say: 'Rulia Singh shot me; at the same time he shot, he talk bad talk. He says, 'Son * * *' at the same time he started to shoot. * * * Rulia Singh said, 'Son * * *' and knock me down.' * * * I said, 'You tell me all you got, everything of your business.' He say: 'I buy bull, a little one, and I no pay; he got paper, notes. * * * Anybody got my signature, I have notes and everything; some Hindu he take five, ten dollars, maybe give Albert Joe note, you give it note. See. Anybody got note paper of any kind of me you pay. Pay everybody got my papers. You watch my baby; you look after my baby.' Me cry and me no say nothing, and he talk talk, and that is all. * * * Yes, sir; he told me sure, 'I got bad place, I die, I die,' he say, 'die.'"

The party then left for the hospital in El Centro, but the deceased died on the way about midnight. Dr. Stevens, the undersheriff, and the deputy sheriff went in an automobile to the Holtville Hospital, on the first floor of which Dr. Stevens had his office, to see the defendant, who had gone there in the afternoon. The party arrived about midnight.

The trial lasted eight days, and many witnesses, mostly Hindus and Mexicans, were examined. In support of its claim that the defendant committed the murder, the prosecution assigned as the motive for the crime the grudge which he conceived against Albert Joe when Valentina Alvarez left his ranch and refused to return to him, and that this motive was made evident by the conduct of Rulia Singh toward Albert Joe, and especially by his repeated threats against the life of the deceased. The defense relied upon two main contentions as to the evidence—that the prosecution failed to prove the defendant guilty, and that, on the other hand, his alibi established his innocence.

There is much evidence of threats against Albert Joe in addition to the one made by defendant at his ranch the day his wife left. Mrs. Albert Joe testified that two days after the separation the defendant came to the Albert Joe ranch and said to her, "Alejandrino, you tell your mother to come back to my house, and, if you don't, I will kill Joe Albert." According to this testimony, he also said, "You tell your mother if she don't return to my house I will kill Alberto." Mrs. Albert Joe stated further that defendant made a second visit to the Albert Joe ranch two months later and asked her for the address of his wife, who at that time was in San Diego, and that "he got very mad at my husband; they used to talk very angrily."

Valentina Alvarez and her daughter, Romana, testified that defendant had a pistol, which he kept at the head of his bed. They also corroborated the testimony of Alejandrino as to the threats made by the defendant on the occasion of his first visit to the Albert Joe ranch after his wife left him. According to the testimony of his wife, when the defendant visited her in San Diego for the first time, he asked her to go out with him, and, when she declined, "he told me to go to hell; * * * that I would remember him; that there would be no more Capt. Alberto." When he saw her for the second and last time in San Diego, he told her " * * * by and by there would be no more Alejandrino and no more Albert Joe; that it didn't make any difference; he would kill them all."

The daughter, Romana, testified that the defendant spent at least two days in San Diego on the occasion of his second visit to his wife in that city, that she, Romana, saw him on the second day of his visit, and that he then told her and her mother "he didn't give up hope of killing Albert Joe."

One Lav Singh testified that in a conversation held with the defendant about 20 days before the murder the latter said, "I am going to kill Albert Joe; he took my wife; she wants to come home, and he won't let her come home."

Sher Singh, husband of a sister of the defendant's wife, testified to four conversations held with the defendant between the time that the latter's wife left him and the date of the murder. About 20 days or one month after defendant's wife had gone to the Albert Joe ranch, he visited the witness and his wife at their ranch in Imperial county and suggested that perhaps Sher Singh's wife could get her sister to come back to him. Ten or 15 days later the witness met the defendant on the street in Holtville, and on this occasion the defendant said, "Joe Albert took my wife, and I am going to kill him." Again, on meeting the witness on the street in Holtville about 2 weeks later, the defendant said, referring to the deceased, "I am going to kill him." In the course of a fourth conversation subsequently held with the defendant in front of the cotton gin in Holtville, Rulia Singh said to the witness, "I am going to kill him; if I can get somebody, I can spend $400 or $500 to try and have him killed by somebody; I will spend $400 or $500."

Rul Singh, Chet Singh, and Deva Singh all testified to the substance of a conversation held between the three and Rulia Singh near the courthouse in Holtville in the month of October, 1918. Rul Singh stated that the defendant "abused to Albert Joe," and said, referring to the deceased, "He is my son-in-law and I am his father-in-law, and I will see him some time; * * * I am not going to settle up." The testimony, in part, of Deva Singh is as follows:

"Rul Singh say, 'You and Albert Joe pretty mad; * * * you had better settle up.' Rulia says, 'I cannot settle with him; I no want him; I want to kill him;' and he talked more to him about it, and he was pretty mad. After I talk to Rulia Singh, I say, 'You and Joe pretty bad mad, and that is no right; you had better settle up, and I go with you, and take some more men.' Rulia Singh say to me, 'He cannot settle with me; I no want him, and he no want me.' He says, 'I fix him pretty soon, you see.'"

Chet Singh testified that in the course of the conversation last mentioned Rul Singh urged the defendant to "shake hands and be friends hereafter," and Rulia Singh replied, "Should I shake my hands with him; I am going to kill him."

Sunder Singh testified that about 3 o'clock on the day of the killing Rulia Singh came to his ranch, about six miles north of Holtville, in an automobile and held a conversation with the witness in the course of which he said, "I will kill that Albert Joe, the son * * *; I no want him at all to keep my wife on the place."

Appellant's position with respect to his alibi is thus stated in his brief:

"The appellant and his witnesses gave evidence * * * that * * * the defendant had been ill at his ranch of influenza, treating himself and without the services of a physician during the ten days preceding the day and the night of the shooting, and that in the fore part of the afternoon of November 21, 1918, the appellant had come from his ranch * * * to Dr. David A. Stevens, * * * who examined him * * * and directed him to a hospital in the business district of Holtville, where the appellant went about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, * * * and in which hospital * * * he stayed until he was taken out under arrest the next day by one of the officers."

The first witness called in support of the alibi was Mrs. Anna Miller, a graduate nurse, in charge of the Holtville Hospital. She testified on direct examination that on November 21, 1918, about 1:30 p. m., the defendant, accompanied by one T. D. Sherm, applied for admission to the hospital; that the defendant said he was convalescing from la grippe; that he was assigned a room, undressed, and put to bed, and that his temperature was taken and noted on a chart made for that purpose; that at that time there were in the hospital two other patients, one of them a Hindu, Neer Singh, very seriously ill, who died less than two days later; that the defendant was given lunch that day and some medicine about 3 o'clock in the afternoon after the doctor had called and prescribed for the patient; that either she or her husband took the defendant's temperature at 3 p. m., and recorded it on the chart at the time; that about 5 p. m., while she was ministering to a patient across the hall, "I seen a Hindu passing from this Neer Singh's room, and I looked in and saw Rulia Singh in bed"; that about half past 5 "Rulia Singh came through the hall and inquired where the toilet was"; that Dr. Graeser, who was attending another patient, showed him the toilet, and that shortly after she saw defendant return to his room; that her husband took supper to the defendant about 6 o'clock; that she saw the defendant again at 7 o'clock; that she and a Mrs. Ramsay saw the defendant in bed at 9 o'clock, "his regular medicine time"; and that about half past 11 when she was called by City Marshal Gillett, she went up to the defendant's room and saw him in bed. On cross-examination she said that it was between 1 and 2 o'clock when the defendant first came to the hospital; that she was "pretty nearly" sure that she made a record of his temperature on the chart at the time she took it; that Dr. Stevens came in between 2 and 3 o'clock and left a prescription for the defendant; that she was not positive where the doctor left the prescription; that she "thought" she and her husband had the prescription filled by 3 o'clock; that she was "quite positive" that the first medicine was given the defendant about 3 o'clock, but, when further pressed on the subject, admitted that she did not remember; that she "thought" she gave the defendant medicine at 6 o'clock; "At 6 o'clock he had a—I guess he had the medicine again;" that she did not see Rulia Singh asleep at any time while he was in the hospital; that "Rulia Singh didn't have any temperature when he came in; his temperature was 99; he wasn't sick;" that she didn't see Rulia Singh come out of the toilet to which he was shown by Dr. Graeser at half past 5, but that she did not think he went out of the building; "I heard Rulia Singh coming back to his room with his shoes unlaced; I suppose it was him; his shoes was unlaced and they were making a noise on the carpet as he walked along." When further questioned, she was not so positive as to whether she or her husband administered the medicine. The above-mentioned chart was introduced in evidence, and Mrs. Miller admitted that the entries thereon did not correspond with her visits to the defendant to which she had just testified, but accounted for the discrepancy with the statement that "we were short of help and we didn't keep our records." She further stated that Rulia Singh did not seem to need much attention; admitted that she and her husband were in the habit of writing down the various items on the chart whenever they had an opportunity to do so and not necessarily at the time indicated; and said that she could not remember whether, at the time Dr. Stevens arrived at the hospital, about 11 o'clock the night of the shooting, the entries then appeared on the chart or were added subsequently. She admitted that when Undersheriff Barker and Deputy Sheriff D. J. Matlock called on her a few days after the murder to get the hospital chart, she told them that she had not seen the defendant between 6 and 9 on the night of November 21, 1918, and that she made the same statement to the district attorney, Undersheriff Barker, and a stenographer when they called at her house during the month of December, 1918. On this latter occasion she also said that when, about 5:30 p. m., the defendant came out of his room, as she had already stated he was dressed; that "he could have gone out easy enough, as there was a sick Hindu man in the next room, and the Hindus kept coming up to see him in bunches of two and three all afternoon and the early part of the night, so you see he could have gone out and come back with some of them, and we would never have known the difference; * * * He could have done it easy; * * * he was always awake."

Undersheriff Barker testified that when he saw the chart in the hospital at midnight on November 21, 1918, the only entries appearing thereon were those of the defendant's temperature and pulse, taken when he was admitted to the hospital on that day. Dr. Graeser testified that his "recollection" was that the Hindu to whom he showed the toilet was fully dressed.

Mrs. Miller's husband, Delos M. Miller, a carpenter by trade, testified that on the afternoon the defendant was admitted to the hospital he was assisting his wife; that he saw the defendant in bed at 3 o'clock and again at 6 o'clock, when he took him his supper; that he could not remember whether he or his wife gave the defendant his medicine; that he did not see the defendant go out of the hospital that afternoon, but that he might have left the building while the witness was in one of the other wards; that he "thought" he took the pulse or temperature of the defendant at various times during the afternoon and early evening. On cross-examination he said that he did not think the defendant had any medicine between 6 and 9 o'clock; that it was possible that Rulia Singh had passed out of the hospital after 6 o'clock and then slipped back before 9 o'clock; that there was a door from the defendant's room out onto the roof of Dr. Stevens' office, from which descent to the ground was practicable by means of a ladder placed on the east side of the building.

Basant Singh testified that at 6 o'clock on the evening of the shooting, accompanied by Jewn Singh, he went to the hospital to visit his brother, Neer Singh; that while there they made one visit to the defendant in the latter's room; that they remained in defendant's room about five minutes; that, according to Jewn Singh's watch, it was 7:25 p. m. when they left; and that the witness "went about 20 times to the hospital that day because he [Neer Singh] was so sick and on the point of death."

Jewn Singh testified that he went to the hospital that day with Basant Singh; that he heard Rulia Singh coughing and went into his room and talked with him about five minutes; that he saw by his watch in the stairway of the hospital as he was leaving that it was 7:25 p. m. On cross-examination he stated that Rulia Singh looked "pretty pale" and coughed a great deal; that the reason why he entered defendant's room was because he heard him coughing and saw that he was a fellow countryman.

The defendant took the stand in his own behalf and testified that for ten days before he applied for admission to the hospital he had been suffering from influenza and had been treating himself with lemon and whisky without the care of a physician; that he arrived at the hospital about two in the afternoon and went "right to bed"; that Mrs. Miller gave him some medicine shortly after he arrived, and that Mr. Miller brought him supper; that he was shown to the toilet by a man whom he could not identify; that after supper—how long after he could not remember—Mrs. Miller gave him some medicine; that he slept all the time and had to be awakened to take his medicine; and that Basant Singh and Jewn Singh were in his room "from 7 to half past 7, or quarter to 7, somewhere there. I don't know for sure, but they know. * * * I guess it was 7 or a quarter after 7. I don't know any time. * * * I don't know how long after supper the time that Basant Singh and Jewn Singh left." On cross-examination he said that he was "very sick" the day he went to the hospital; that for eight or nine days preceding that time he had been ill and had not left his ranch; that he was out in his automobile the morning of the murder "seeing about some corn cutters"; that he did not know what time it was when he had his supper.

Sun Singh, who was examined by the prosecution in rebuttal, testified that he saw Jewn Singh in the town of Imperial at 5 p. m. on the day of the murder, and that from that time on they spent the evening and night together "in a colored man's hotel" in that town.

Sunder Singh, recalled in rebuttal by the prosecution, testified that at half past 6 on the evening of November 21, 1918, Basant Singh came to the witness' ranch from Holtville bringing some groceries which the witness had asked him to get that morning, and that he took supper and went home "about 7 o'clock, maybe a little over." According to Basant Singh's testimony, he was in the hospital at Holtville from 6 to 7:25 p. m.

Bertha Gonzales, who lived with her husband on the defendant's place and Alisa Comfort, cook on the same ranch, both testified that the defendant was sick for a period of a week or ten days preceding the day of the murder, during which time he did no work and dosed himself with lemon and whisky.

Hira Singh, defendant's partner, corroborated this testimony, and said that defendant told him about noon on the day of the shooting that was going to the hospital in Holtville.

Hockum Deen and Noor Mohammed, called for the prosecution, testified that they were in Holtville the afternoon of November 21, 1918, and that at half past 4 they saw Rulia Singh "standing and hiding" by a lamp post on the street near the bank.

Mrs. Albert Joe testified that on the day of the murder, while she was sitting in their automobile on the street in Holtville, waiting for her husband, Rulia Singh "passed two or three times, and I think it was about half past 4."

Dr. Stevens testified that the defendant came into his office about 2 o'clock that day; that he was accompanied by one T. D. Sherm, a well-dressed Hindu speaking good English. "He came in and said he wanted to go into the hospital and stay about a week. He said he just wanted to pick up, or something of that kind. * * * I took his pulse and temperature. * * * There was a normal pulse rate and a normal temperature. * * * There was nothing the matter with him that I could discover. I prescribed a simple tonic for him, just a simple tonic to be given every three hours." He stated further that he did not see the defendant again until midnight, at which time he was accompanied by Undersheriff Barker and Deputy Sheriff Ridgway. They found the defendant in bed with the covers over his head. This witness testified that there was a ladder on the east side of the hospital building, leaning against the roof thereof. County Physician T. O. Luckett testified that he examined the defendant in the county jail the day after the killing, and continued: "I examined his throat and found it normal. I took his temperature, and it was normal, and his pulse was normal, and I decided there was nothing wrong with him."

The defendant testified further that Albert Joe was not the cause of the separation; "I told Albert Joe myself to take her to visit; I think it was my wife's fault, and not Albert Joe's at all; I had no trouble whatever with him;" that when the deceased and Alejandrina came to take his wife away he was "cleaning the ditch in the river," and that he and the deceased were friendly and laughed together; that he did not drag his wife around by the hair; that when she left him she "kissed and hugged" him and told him to come and see her in two or three days at Albert Joe's house, and that he gave her $100 in cash; that on the occasion of his first visit to his wife in San Diego she told him, "I will be back as soon as the summer time will pass;" that he then gave her $65 more, all he had at the time; that about July 4th he learned that she was not coming back to live with him, when he saw her in San Diego the second time, "walking in the street with another man holding their arm in each other." The defendant denied that he ever told any one that Albert Joe was keeping his wife away from him, that he was going to kill Albert Joe, or that he owned a pistol, but said that he kept one belonging to his partner in the house.

[1] We think the foregoing summary of the testimony is sufficient upon which to determine whether or not, upon the question of the guilt or innocence of the defendant, his conviction can be upheld. One of the grounds stated in the motion for a new trial is that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. On appeal it is urged that the defendant was not identified by the deceased as the murderer, and that the alibi was clearly established. The evidence upon the three principal questions, the threats, the dying declarations, and the alibi, is involved throughout in conflict. As already shown, a number of witnesses testified to threats made by the defendant against the life of Albert Joe, and the defendant denied that he ever made such threats. Upon this evidence the jury could have found that the defendant threatened the life of Albert Joe, and on this question we must presume in favor of the verdict that the jury so resolved the evidence.

It must likewise be presumed that the jury not only were satisfied that the dying declarations were made in view of death, but that they represented the primary knowledge, and not the opinion of the deceased. There is an abundance of evidence to support the implied finding of the jury that Albert Joe from the beginning realized that he was mortally wounded. Indeed, as is hereafter shown, this is not disputed. The jury might well have concluded from the evidence, notwithstanding that it was a moonless night, that Albert Joe recognized the defendant at the time by the outline of his figure, the sound of his voice, or by some other circumstance or condition of which the men themselves had knowledge and the existence of which does not seem to be precluded by the record. Whether the dying declarations represented the primary knowledge of Albert Joe or merely his opinion as to the identity of his assassin was purely a question of fact for the jury to determine. "Where * * * want of knowledge does not appear either from the statement itself or from other evidence in the case, it must be presumed that the declarant stated a fact within his knowledge." 21 Cyc. 989; State v. Arnold, 35 N. C. 184; State v. Williams, 67 N. C. 12; State v. Clemons, 51 Iowa, 274, 1 N. W. 546; Walker v. State, 39 Ark. 221. In the state of the evidence, we would be invading the province of the jury if we held that Albert Joe did not recognize the defendant from impressions received through his senses, and that in crying out to his wife, "Raoul is killing me!" he was not speaking from knowledge, but was voicing an opinion, based either on the threats of the defendant or on his expressed animosity and enmity.

Nor are we prepared to hold that the implied rejection by the jury of defendant's abibi is not amply supported by the evidence. It will be recalled that Delos M. Miller testified that the defendant might have left the hospital after 6 and then slipped back before 9 o'clock without having been seen by him. His wife stated that she saw the defendant at 7 and did not see him again until 9 o'clock. As we have seen, she admitted that at the preliminary examination she had stated that the defendant could have absented himself from the hospital between the hours of 6 and 9 o'clock. When confronted with Basant Singh and Jewn Singh, her testimony seems to indicate that she had seen both men in the defendant's room, and when asked "what time they came to see Neer Singh that evening," she replied, "I cannot give you any definite answer to that." Even if the jury found that this testimony was entitled to full credit, there would be, according to the husband, three, and, according to the wife, two, hours in which the defendant might have made the round trip to the Albert Joe ranch and committed the murder. The evidence does not show the exact time the shot was fired. However, appellant's brief states that it was about 8 o'clock, and the jury may have found this to be correct. City Marshal C. L. Gillett testified that he received news of the tragedy by a telephone message from Gajan Singh about 10 or 15 minutes to 9. This would allow 45 or 50 minutes for Mrs. Albert Joe to accomplish all she testified she did following the shooting, which included getting word to the authorities. Can we hold, in the face of the foregoing testimony, that the jury would not be justified in finding, in accordance with the theory of the prosecution—asserted from the beginning—that the defendant went to the hospital for the purpose of laying a foundation for his alibi, that he slipped out, went to the Albert Joe ranch, committed the murder, and returned to the hospital without his having been missed? We think not. If the jury believed that Rulia Singh went to the hospital with this object in view, more convincing evidence of a deliberate and premeditated intention to commit murder it would be difficult to conceive. It is urged, however, that according to the testimony of Basant Singh and Jewn Singh they were in the defendant's room at 7:25 p. m. On this question of time, as his quoted testimony shows, the defendant was not as definite. But, assuming that there is agreement between the three as to the hour of 7:25 p. m., yet there was before the jury the counter testimony of Sun Singh and Sunder Singh as to the whereabouts of Basant Singh and Jewn Singh, respectively, on that evening, and in the presence of such a conflict in the evidence we must presume, in the light of the verdict, that it was resolved by the jury against the defendant.

Finally, on the sufficiency of the evidence, it may be mentioned that it is also objected by appellant that the testimony of the comparative size and shape of the footprints near the milk house was incomplete and unconvincing. According to the testimony, the shoes worn by the defendant were square-toed, and the footprints were of similar outline, but there was an apparent disparity in the sizes. It seems to us the objection was well-founded, but we are not inclined to believe that the jury considered the testimony in arriving at the verdict. And for that reason, as well as for the reasons hereinafter stated, we shall not discuss assignments of error Nos. 9 and 10 as to the rulings in the admission of this testimony.

[2, 3] The appellant relies for reversal upon a number of assignments of error. The first assignment is based upon those portions of the following instruction to the jury which we have italicized:

"You have the right, in considering whether or not you shall accept the declaration as a correct statement, to determine for yourselves whether the declarations were made under a sense of impending death, and fully convinced of that fact when making the declarations, and you are at liberty to disregard the declarations, or any of them, if you are not satisfied that they were made under a sense of impending death."

Section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, in part:

"In conformity with the preceding provisions, evidence may be given upon a trial of the following facts: * * * 4. * * * In criminal actions, the act or declaration of a dying person, made under a sense of impending death, respecting the cause of his death."

The weight of authority in respect to the relative functions of the court and the jury touching the admission and determination of dying declarations is that the court alone shall pass on the admissibility of this character of evidence, and that the jury shall exclusively determine its probative value. 56 L. R. A. 434; 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 660; 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 152; 3 Encyc. Evid. 947. Whatever the law may be in other jurisdictions, it is well settled in this state that it is the function of the trial court primarily to pass upon the admissibility of the alleged dying declarations and of the jury to determine whether they were in fact made under a sense of impending death, and, if so, then to determine the credibility and weight to which they are entitled. If the jury is not convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the declarant was in extremis and believed at the time that he was, they must, in arriving at their verdict, disregard such declarations. But if, on the other hand, the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the declarant acted under a sense of impending death, they must then determine what facts, if any, are established by his declarations and apply them accordingly. People v. Glenn, 10 Cal. 32; People v. Lem You, 97 Cal. 224, 32 Pac. 11; People v. Thomson, 145 Cal. 717, 79 Pac. 435; People v. Profumo, 23 Cal. App. 376, 138 Pac. 109; Greenleaf on Evidence, § 161.

[4] With respect to the use of the words in the instruction "as a correct statement," it is claimed in appellant's brief that—

"This instruction led the jury to the understanding * * * that, if they * * * found the deceased to have had a sense of impending death at the time of his declaration, he was making a correct statement."

We do not think that the phrase complained of was susceptible of the interpretation sought to be put upon it. The instruction was taken from People v. Thomson, 145 Cal. 717, 79 Pac. 435, touching the respective provinces of the court and the jury as to whether the dying declarations were made in view of approaching dissolution. The court said:

"They have the right, in considering whether they shall accept the declaration as a correct statement, to determine for themselves whether the declarant was in extremis."

In our opinion, the jury must have understood from this instruction that in addition to being satisfied that the declarant told the truth they must also be convinced that he was in extremis at the time.

[5, 6] The appellant claims that the other alleged objectionable phrase in the instruction, "you are at liberty to disregard," is erroneous in that the jury were not instructed that they must disregard the declaration if they found it was not made under a sense of impending death. In support of this contention the appellant relies upon People v. Profumo, 23 Cal. App. 376, 138 Pac. 109. In that case the entire instruction on dying declarations was given to the jury in the exact language used by this court in People v. Thomson, supra. The District Court of Appeal held the instruction to be erroneous, but that it did not constitute a miscarriage of justice. The respondent contends that the instruction in People v. Profumo, supra, was not erroneous, but we do not deem it necessary to pass on that question, because the appellant, according to his brief—

"did not seriously contend that the deceased did not have a sense of impending death. This was shown by the circumstances—what the surgeons told the deceased and the use by the deceased of the word 'killed.'"

And, for another reason, any possible misunderstanding by the jury was removed by an instruction immediately following:

*"If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the declarations of Albert Joe * * * were made by him under a sense of impending death, then you should consider such statements and give them such weight and credit as you think they are entitled to under the circumstances of the case."*

We quote from People v. Phillips, 30 Cal. App. 31, 157 Pac. 1003, 1005:

"Instructions are to be read in their entirety, and not by segregated and separate portions."

[7] The second assignment of error is that the trial court invaded the province of the jury in giving the following portion of instruction No. 5:

"Certain statements made by the deceased, Albert Joe, have been admitted in evidence on the theory that they were dying declarations."

The language we have italicized disposes of this objection. Moreover, this instruction was immediately followed by the one which we have considered under the first assignment of error.

[8] Assignment No. 3 is that the court erred in not determining by means of preliminary proof addressed to the court alone the question as to the admissibility of the numerous purported "dying declarations." This objection is without force for the reason that there was considerable foundation testimony, including the directions of the declarant to his brother, Gajan Singh, as to the adjustment of his wordly concerns, all indicating his settled conviction of pending dissolution. Encyc. Evid. 974; People v. Yokum, 118 Cal. 437, 50 Pac. 686; People v. Abbott, 4 Pac. 769.¹ And, as we have noted above, the appellant concedes that the dying declarations were made in view of death.

[9, 10] Assignments Nos. 4 and 5 are to the effect that the court erred in admitting, as a part of the case in chief, testimony having a tendency to anticipate and prejudice the alibi relied upon by Rulia Singh. We are of the opinion that this claim is without merit for several reasons. The testimony was clearly responsive to the theory of the people already referred to—that the defendant had fabricated an alibi—and hence the state was not required to defer its attack until evidence in support of the alibi was first introduced. But, apart from this, evidence of the whereabouts of Rulia Singh at the time of the murder was indispensable to the case of the prosecution in chief; and in meeting this burden testimony in support of the people's claim that the defendant entered the hospital as a part of his deadly scheme would be clearly admissible either as independent evidence of an incriminating nature or because it would have a tendency to corroborate the identification of the defendant by Albert Joe. Any competent evidence which tends to rebut the presumption of innocence is always admissible as a part of the prosecution's case in chief. In any event, even if it be conceded that the rulings complained of involved a departure from the proper order of proof, under the circumstances of this case the error would not be prejudicial.

[11] Assignment No. 6 is that—

"The court erred in admitting testimony of threats toward persons other than the deceased."

This objection has reference to threats already set forth, which apparently had a double import—an intention to kill Albert Joe, and thus, as a consequence, to cause mental suffering to defendant's own wife and her children, including Alejandrina, the wife of deceased. So far as the women are concerned the threats at most seemed to be another phase of the threats against Albert Joe, intended by the defendant principally, if not entirely, to effect a reconciliation with his wife. But whatever the actual state of the defendant's mind was toward the women it was so intermingled with his deadly animus toward Albert Joe—expressed on numerous occasions—that one could not be proved without establishing the other. In such a case evidence of such incidental or collateral threats will not be rejected. Appellant relies on 16 Corpus Juris, § 1041, which lays down the rule that—

“Threats are relevant to show intent and motive, provided they were directed against the person injured.”

Clinton v. State, 56 Fla. 57, 47 South. 389, is there cited. In that case the defendant was being tried for arson. Testimony was admitted of threats by the defendant against the attorney for the prosecuting witness. The appellate court said:

“There is nothing in this testimony to show that” “the hostility against the attorney might also include the client.”

The judgment was reversed, and we think properly so, for the reason that it did not appear that the client figured in the animus of the defendant, as was the situation of the women and the deceased in this case. At any rate, in the case at bar, in the light of the evidence of numerous threats to kill the deceased in which the women did not figure, the admission of the threats complained of would not, even if erroneous, constitute reversible error.

[12] Assignment No. 7 relates to the refusal of the court to strike out an answer claimed not to be responsive, but this calls for no special consideration other than that testimony to the same effect had already been admitted without objection.

Assignment No. 8 is to the effect that the testimony of the wife of the deceased touching his statements to her at the milk house was inadmissible as part of the res gestæ. But, inasmuch as the statements, as we have held, were admissible as dying declarations, it is immaterial whether or not they were a part of the res gestæ.

With regard to assignments Nos. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, and 14, the appellant has set forth the questions, the objections, the rulings, the motions to strike out, and the answers, where any were given, but no reasons are assigned nor authorities cited in support of the claims of error, other than the bare statement that “the court erred.” This court has, in numerous instances, declined to consider objections so presented. People v. McLean, 135 Cal. 306, 67 Pac. 770; People v. Cebulla, 137 Cal. 314, 70 Pac. 181; People v. Hadley, 175 Cal. 118, 165 Pac. 442. We have, nevertheless, examined these assignments, and find that there is no merit in any of them.

[13] The record shows, with respect to assignment No. 15, that Basant Singh, a witness for the defense, in answer to the question, “Did you go in to see him [referring to the defendant when he was in the hospital]?” said: “Yes, sir. It so happened that Jewn Singh had gone to see him * * * in his room, and then I went for Jewn Singh. I also asked him [Rulia Singh] how he was feeling and he said—” An objection was interposed at this juncture on the ground that any statement made by the defendant would be a self-serving declaration. The court did not err in sustaining this objection.

[14, 15] It may be explained in connection with assignment No. 16 that the wife of the deceased testified on cross-examination that she had “never told to anybody, except to said Seymour [the special prosecutor], the statements she gave in evidence as the dying declaration of her husband to her.” The defendant later called City Marshal Gillett with the view, according to the defense, of establishing by him that, while Mrs. Albert Joe at the ranch on the night of the murder told him about the dying declarations, in quoting the deceased she did not include the statement testified to by her at the trial, “Now, you * * *, see what you got.” The pertinent part of the question put to the city marshal was, “Will you state to the jury what your questions were and what answers were made by her, Mrs. Albert Joe?” The district attorney objected that the proper foundation had not been laid to permit such an impeachment. The objection was sustained. The following proceedings represent the only attempt to lay a foundation for impeachment:

“Q. Did you ever tell any person before you came on the witness stand to-day what your husband said about, ‘Now, you * * *, see what you got?’ A. No. Q. You didn’t tell this statement at the preliminary hearing at Holtville, did you? A. No, sir. Q. Why, not? A. Because I didn’t remember everything my husband told me. I am just remembering now.”

The position of the appellant is that the statements of Mrs. Albert Joe constituted independent evidence which did not require any foundation proof. We cannot assent to this proposition. Considered as independent evidence, the statements were clearly hearsay, and, as such, incompetent and inadmissible. The only ground upon which the statements could be received was that they tended to impeach the testimony of Mrs. Albert Joe, and it is not claimed that any foundation was laid for such impeachment. It is the settled law in this state that, before the statements of a witness inconsistent “with his present testimony” may be shown, “the statements must be related to him, with the circumstances of times, places, and persons present, and he must be asked whether he made such statements, and, if so, allowed to explain them.” Code Civ. Proc. § 2052; Birch v. Hale, 99 Cal. 299, 33 Pac. 1088; Rowe v. Hibernia Sav. & L. Soc., 134 Cal. 403, 66 Pac. 569; Sinkler v. Siljan, 136 Cal. 356, 68 Pac. 1024; People v. Glover, 141 Cal. 233, 246, 74

Pac. 745; Mutter v. I X L Lime Co., 42 Pac. 1068;² Hinckley v. Krug, 4 Cal. Unrep. 211, 34 Pac. 118; People v. Slaughter, 33 Cal. App. 365, 165 Pac. 44; 7 Encyc. Evid. 96, 156. Apart from the lack of foundation, the question put to the impeaching witness called for the entire conversation, and under no theory whatever was the defense entitled to more than the variant statements.

[16] Assignment No. 17 was that the court erred in the ruling contained in the following quotation from the record:

"Q. Where did you meet Mr. Seymour [special prosecutor] before you went to the district attorney's office? A. I didn't see Mr. Seymour before; I just came from Hesperia. Q. Did he approach you first? Mr. Simon: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The Court: I will sustain the objection."

This was an obviously proper ruling for the reason that the question did not show its materiality, nor does the record disclose that the question was reframed or any statement made to meet the defect. Where the question does not show on its face whether or not it is material, the questioner, in order to reserve an exception, must formally reframe the question so that its materiality is apparent. Snowball v. Snowball, 164 Cal. 476, 129 Pac. 784; 9 Encyc. Evid. 170. Upon the same reasoning assignment No. 19 is disposed of.

[17, 18] Assignment No. 18 has reference to the testimony of the wife of defendant that he kept a pistol at the head of his bed. It is conceded by respondent that "the evidence complained of was too remote, probably, to be material." With this we agree, and with the contention that it was not prejudicial, for the defendant admitted that he did so keep a pistol, but that it belonged to his partner, and this statement was apparently not questioned by the district attorney.

[19] The final contention of appellant is that the court erred in admitting the testimony of the wife of the defendant against her husband. This involves two questions: Was the wife a competent witness at all, and, if she was, were the objections to questions on the general ground that they were "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial" sufficient to raise the question of the competency of the witness under section 1322 of the Penal Code. That section reads:

"Neither husband nor wife is a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both are parties, except with the consent of both."
* * *

The rule of the common law that the wife was absolutely incompetent to testify against her husband has been modified in this state so that either spouse may testify with the consent of the other. Section 1322, Pen. Code; section 1881, Code Civ. Proc. This consent may be express or implied. The general rule is thus stated in 40 Cyc. 2228:

"A spouse who is present in court when the other spouse is offered as a witness and testifies, and who does not object, is presumed to have consented * * *"—citing Benson v. Morgan, 50 Mich. 77, 14 N. W. 705.

In the case at bar the wife was called by the prosecution and sworn as a witness in the presence of her husband with his knowledge and apparent acquiescence.

[20-22] The first objection was made to the question, "Why did you stop living with Rulia Singh?" on the grounds of incompetency, irrelevancy, and immateriality. The witness had already testified that she was the wife of the defendant, that she had not lived with him since May, 1918, and that she knew the deceased in his lifetime. The same objection was repeatedly interposed to various questions subsequently put to the witness during her direct examination, but all the objections were addressed to the testimony and not to the competency of the witness. The appellant, however, claims that these objections were sufficient to present to the court the question of the competency of the wife to testify. With this we do not agree.

No cases in this jurisdiction are cited by appellant which establish any exception to the rule above quoted, but we are referred to State v. McGrath, 35 Or. 109, 57 Pac. 321. That case is clearly distinguishable on its facts. There the defendant was on trial for murder. He testified to the effect that the deceased had been criminally intimate with his (defendant's) wife. The appellate court held that it was error to admit the testimony of the wife, offered in rebuttal by the state, in reference to the matter, against his objections and protest, and that the defendant, by offering himself as a witness, could not be deemed to have consented to the examination of his wife. Appellant also cites the case of Humphrey v. Pope, 1 Cal. App. 374, 82 Pac. 223. In that case the wife was the plaintiff in the action while her husband was neither a party thereto, nor, for all that appears, even present in court. Over a general objection of the defendant that the testimony was wholly incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, the wife was permitted to testify to certain communications made to her by her husband during marriage. The court states, and it appears the statement was not necessary to a decision of the case, since the wife's testimony was held incompetent as hearsay, that evidence as to communications between husband and wife, when offered by either spouse, is incompetent unless consent of the other spouse is shown, and concluded that the objection made was sufficient to enable the appellate court to consider the point of the wife's competency. In that case, the husband not being a party to the action, and the wife not having been offered as a witness against him, no question of her general competency as a witness arose, the husband's consent could not be implied from a failure to object, and thus it was to be presumed he did not consent. Under such circumstances a general objection to the competency of the question was held sufficient. Appearing, as it does in the case at bar, that at no time during the trial did the appellant signify a revocation of his consent to his wife's testimony implied from his failure to object thereto, the question of her competency comes too late when raised for the first time on appeal. "The objection must have been made in the trial court when the witness was examined," where her incompetency was then known. 3 Corpus Juris, 828. It is well settled in this state that, if objections to the competency of witnesses are not made in the trial court, they will not be considered on appeal. Curia v. Packard, 29 Cal. 194, 197; Ah Tong v. Earle Fruit Co., 112 Cal. 679, 45 Pac. 7. If one spouse, a party to the action and present in court, relies upon the incompetency of the other to testify, the objection must be made at the time and on such grounds as to bring clearly before the court the question of the incompetency of the witness, or, if this is not done, the privilege will be deemed to have been waived.

² Reported in full in the Pacific Reporter; reported as a memorandum decision without opinion in 110 Cal. xvii.

HANSEN v. VALLEJO ELECTRIC LIGHT & POWER CO. (Sac. 2780.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1920.
Rehearing Denied April 16, 1920.)

1. ELECTRICITY ☞11 — STATUTE ALLOWING RECOVERY FOR REFUSAL TO FURNISH CURRENT PROVIDES A PENALTY AND NOT LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

Civ. Code, § 629, repealed in 1915, which provided that, if a gas or electric light corporation for the space of ten days after application, etc., refuses to supply gas or current, it must pay to the applicant the sum of $50 as liquidated damages, and $5 for every day such refusal continues, provides a penalty despite use of the term "liquidated damages."

2. ELECTRICITY ☞11—FOR REFUSAL TO SUPPLY CURRENT APPLICANT CANNOT RECOVER AMOUNT IN EXCESS OF STATUTORY PENALTY.

Where an electric company refused to supply current and became liable to an applicant for the penalty provided in Civ. Code, § 629, the applicant is restricted to the amount specified, notwithstanding his actual damages exceeded the penalty.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ☞35(1) — ONE YEAR STATUTE APPLIES TO ACTION FOR REFUSAL OF ELECTRIC COMPANY TO SUPPLY CURRENT.

Where an electric company refused to supply current on application and became liable to the penalty prescribed by Civ. Code, § 629, in force, the one year period of limitation prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 1, was applicable, and penalties accruing more than a year before suit cannot be recovered.

4. ELECTRICITY ☞11—DAILY PENALTY PRESCRIBED FOR FAILURE TO FURNISH CURRENT IS CONTINUING.

The daily penalty of $5 prescribed by Civ. Code, § 629, for failure of an electric company to furnish current on application is a continuing penalty, and, notwithstanding more than a year had elapsed since the first refusal, so that recovery of the $50 penalty was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340, subd. 1, daily penalties of $5 for a year prior to institution of suit may be recovered.

5. ACTION ☞45(1)—SINGLE ACTION MAY BE MAINTAINED TO RECOVER NUMEROUS PENALTIES.

Where an electric light company by its failure to furnish current incurred daily penalties of $5 each under Civ. Code, § 629, the applicant may recover such penalties in a single action against the company.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ☞48—PRESUMPTION OF VALIDITY OF LEGISLATIVE ACTION.

There is a well settled presumption in favor of the validity of legislative action.

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ☞48—No PRESUMPTION OF INVALIDITY FOR DISCRIMINATION.

Where a statute imposing penalties on light and gas companies for failure to furnish gas and electricity was attacked as discriminatory on the ground that it was limited to corporations and did not include individuals or partnerships engaged in such business, it will not be assumed that there was any intention to discriminate against corporations in favor of individuals and partnerships.

8. EVIDENCE ☞22(2) — COURT JUDICIALLY KNOWS THAT GAS AND ELECTRICITY IS SUPPLIED BY CORPORATIONS.

The courts will take judicial notice that the business of supplying a community with gas or electricity for light, etc., is practically always conducted by a corporation.

9. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ☞242—STATUTE IMPOSING PENALTIES ON ELECTRIC COMPANIES FOR FAILURE TO FURNISH CURRENT HELD NOT DISCRIMINATORY.

In view of Const. art. 4, § 33, declaring that the Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by telegraph and gas corporations, etc., Civ. Code, § 629, requiring gas and electric companies to furnish gas and current on application, etc., and imposing a penalty for failure, is not invalid as discriminatory in violation of article 1, § 11, because omitting partnerships and individuals.

10. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT 47—WHERE ONLY PART OF CLAIM IS BARRED NONSUIT IS IMPROPER.

Where only part of plaintiff's claim was barred, nonsuit should have been denied.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by C. F. Hansen against the Vallejo Electric & Power Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

Clarence E. Todd and Vincent Surr, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank E. Powers, of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This action was brought to recover from defendant the sum of $2,665 because of its failure to furnish to plaintiff electricity for use in his dwelling house in the city of Vallejo. Upon the close of plaintiff's case the court granted defendant's motion for a nonsuit, on the ground that the action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 340, Code of Civil Procedure, and judgment was entered accordingly. This is an appeal from such judgment.

This action was commenced March 20, 1915. On the trial it was made to appear that the plaintiff on April 15, 1913, made demand upon defendant to furnish him with electricity for lighting his house, No. 221 Louisiana street, in Vallejo, which house was within 100 feet of a direct and primary wire of the company, and that defendant declined to do so unless plaintiff signed an application containing certain conditions which it was subsequently held by the Railroad Commission it had no right to impose, that plaintiff refused to sign this application, and that defendant to and including September 30, 1914, failed to comply with the demand.

Upon an examination of the record we are satisfied that in view of the pleadings this action must be held to be one solely for the statutory recovery allowed by section 629, Civil Code, and that no recovery whatever was sought other than such recovery as was authorized by the terms of that section.

[1, 2] Section 629, Civil Code, which was in force at all times mentioned in the complaint and until repealed in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 169), provided substantially that a gas or electric light corporation must supply gas or electricity to any building or premises distant not more than 100 feet from any main or direct or primary wire of the corporation, "upon the application in writing of the owner or occupant," and payment of all money due from him. It further provided:

"If, for the space of ten days after such application, the corporation refuses or neglects to supply the gas or electricity required, it must pay to the applicant the sum of fifty dollars as liquidated damages, and five dollars per day as liquidated damages for every day such refusal or neglect continues thereafter."

We are satisfied that this provision must be held to impose a "penalty" for noncompliance, notwithstanding the use of the words "liquidated damages." It has heretofore consistently been accepted by this court and the District Courts of Appeal as so doing, without, however, any question having been raised to the contrary. See Capital Gas Co. v. Young, 109 Cal. 140, 41 Pac. 869, 29 L. R. A. 463; Baker v. San Francisco, etc., Co., 141 Cal. 710, 75 Pac. 342; Thompson v. San Francisco, etc., Co., 18 Cal. App. 30, 121 Pac. 937; Id., 20 Cal. App. 142, 128 Pac. 347; Id., 34 Cal. App. 699, 168 Pac. 390. We can see no doubt of the correctness of this view. Unquestionably it provides for a recovery for a wrong or injury suffered without any reference whatever to the question of actual damage. The recovery is had even though it be conceded that there was no actual damage whatever. Likewise the recovery is limited to the amount specified, even though in a particular case it could be shown beyond question what the actual damage was and that such actual damage exceeded the statutory amounts many times over and ran to a very large amount. In County of Los Angeles v. Ballerino, 99 Cal. 593, 596, 32 Pac. 581, 34 Pac. 329, the statutory penalty referred to by subdivision 1 of section 340, Code of Civil Procedure, was declared to include "one which an individual is allowed to recover against a wrongdoer, as a satisfaction for the wrong or injury suffered, and without reference to the actual damage sustained." The provision here clearly falls within this description. The use of the term "as liquidated damages" does not preclude such a view. The same words are used in section 589, Civil Code, with relation to the right of a stockholder of a mining corporation to recover a specified sum from the corporation in the event of the denial of certain rights, and this court construed the provision conferring such right of recovery as one imposing a penalty. See Symmes v. Sierra Nevada Mg. Co., 171 Cal. 427, 153 Pac. 710. The term "as liquidated damages" in the connection in which it is used and in view of the character of the imposition cannot fairly be construed as meaning or intended to mean anything other than a penalty or forfeiture. Certainly the provision may not fairly be construed as an attempt on the part of the Legislature to merely establish a rule as to the measure of actual damages in such cases, in view of the fact that the specified recovery is authorized without any reference whatever to the question of actual damage. Much reliance is placed by learned counsel for appellant upon the fact that prior to the adoption of the Codes the statutes on this subject used the words "shall forfeit and pay" the designated sums, without the words "as liquidated damages," and that when the Codes were adopted in 1872 the section covering the matter was written in its present form providing that the corporation "must pay to the applicant" the designated sums "as liquidated damages." Just why the Code commissioners and the Legislature thus changed the phraseology we do not know, but we do not think the change altered the meaning or furnishes evidence of any intention to accomplish such an alteration as is claimed to have been effected thereby.

[3-5] As we have already noted, the non-suit was granted on the ground that the action was barred by subdivision 1 of section 340, Code of Civil Procedure. By the terms of that provision, "an action upon a statute for a penalty or forfeiture, when the action is given to an individual, or to an individual and the state, except when the statute imposing it prescribes a different limitation," must be brought within one year from the time the right of action accrues. Plaintiff's demand for electricity having been made on April 15, 1913, a right of action based thereon accrued upon the lapsing of ten days thereafter without compliance with his demand, viz. on April 26, 1913, and this action was not commenced until March 20, 1915, nearly two years thereafter. It is practically conceded that the initial amount of $50 fixed by section 629, Civil Code, together with the $5 per diem for all days prior to March 20, 1914, are barred if this be an action for a penalty or forfeiture imposed by statute within the meaning of subdivision 1 of section 340, Code of Civil Procedure. But it is claimed by appellant that in any event the action is not barred as to the $5 per diem for the time beginning March 20, 1914, and ending September 30, 1914. We are satisfied that this claim must be upheld. The terms of the statute are such that it may not fairly be held otherwise than that while there is a continuous default a new and additional penalty is imposed thereby for each day's refusal or neglect so long as the default "continues in force," and that the cause of action as to each day accrues with the expiration of that day and is barred only upon the expiration of one year therefrom. We are not concerned here with any question of multiplicity of actions or with the question whether successive actions for accruing penalties based upon a single demand are allowable. That all the penalties in such a case may be regarded as one for the purpose of recovering them in one suit is well established, and we may assume that only one action is permissible in such a case. As to this there is some conflict in the authorities. But, as was said by the Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut:

"The aggregated forfeitures may well be regarded as one, for the purpose of recovering them by one suit, when they could not be so regarded in applying the statute of limitations." See Wells v. Cooper, 57 Conn. 52, 17 Atl. 281.

In this aspect the case is not materially different from an action on an ordinary account for goods sold and delivered containing many items sold and delivered on different days. Where the language used is similar to that contained in our statute, the authorities to which we have been referred and those we have been able to find are practically unanimous in support of our view. See Udall Milling v. Atchison, etc., 82 Kan. 256, 108 Pac. 137; Wells v. Cooper, 57 Conn. 52, 17 Atl. 281; Atwood v. Lockwood, 76 Conn. 555, 57 Atl. 280; Town of Londonderry v. Arnold, 30 Vt. 401; Garrison v. Railroad, 150 N. C. 575, 586, 64 S. E. 578. The cases cited involve such provisions as "he shall forfeit five dollars * * * for every month of such neglect" (57 Conn. 52, 17 Atl. 281); "shall forfeit $1 per day for each car it fails to furnish" (82 Kan. 256, 108 Pac. 137); "shall forfeit * * * $20 for each month until he shall return such inventory" (76 Conn. 555, 57 Atl. 280); "shall forfeit and pay * * * a penalty of $5 for every 30 days he or she shall neglect to comply with such order of the selectmen" (30 Vt. 401); "forfeit and pay a penalty of $50 for each day it refuses to receive said freight" (150 N. C. 575, 64 S. E. 578). The only case cited by learned counsel for respondent in this connection is Jones v. Rochester, etc., Co., 168 N. Y. 65, 60 N. E. 1044, where a statute which is practically the same as ours was under consideration. The precise question presented and determined in that action was whether, a recovery having been had upon the penalties accrued up to a certain time, another action based on the original demand for penalties alleged to have accrued for a subsequent period could be maintained. It was held that but one action could be maintained based upon the original demand for gas. The learned court said:

"While the amount of the penalty would depend on the period during which the defendant's default should continue, still it was a single penalty for a default which was also single, though it might be continuous. The cause of action, being single, was indivisible, and but one recovery * * * could be had."

No question of the statute of limitations was involved in that case, and, as we have seen, the aggregated penalties may be considered as one for the purpose of recovery without being so regarded in applying the statute of limitations. The case cannot be considered as deciding the question we have here.

[6-9] It is claimed that section 629, Civil Code, was violative of section 11 of article 1 of our Constitution, which provides that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation"; the theory being that it discriminated unlawfully between corporations furnishing gas or electric light and natural persons and copartnerships engaged in the same business. The section was one contained in the title of our Civil Code relative to corporations furnishing light for public use, title 15 of part 4 of division 1; part 4 of division 1 being the portion of the Civil Code devoted to the subject of corporations. In view of the subject-matter of this section, it really had no proper place in a part of the Civil Code devoted solely to corporations, but under the guidance of the Code commissioners to that place it found its way from the act of 1863 (St. 1863, p. 647), relative to gas companies and consumers of gas, when our Codes were framed in 1872, where it was when our Constitution of 1879 was adopted, and where, repealed and re-enacted with some changes to include electric light corporations, it remained until its final repeal in 1915. No good reason occurs to us why such an obligation should be imposed on corporations engaged in the business of supplying gas or electricity, with the penalty for default, that would not be equally applicable in the case of an individual or copartnership engaged in the same business. At the same time we do not feel warranted in holding it opposed to section 11 of article 1 of our Constitution. Of course, the well-settled rule is that the presumption is in favor of the validity of legislative action. And it is not to be assumed, for the purpose of nullifying the law, that there was any intention to discriminate against corporations engaged in this business to the advantage of natural persons or copartnerships engaged therein. County of San Luis Obispo v. Murphy, 162 Cal. 588, 591, 123 Pac. 808, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 712. We think it may fairly be said that it is a matter of common knowledge that the business referred to, that of supplying a community with gas or electricity for light, etc., is in this state practically always conducted by a corporation. Isolated cases of the conduct of such business by an individual, copartnership, or voluntary unincorporated association may exist in some small communities, but certainly they are extremely rare, and, as said on a somewhat similar objection in County of San Luis Obispo v. Murphy, supra, the Legislature may have reasonably concluded that they were so inappreciable and insignificant in number that the corporations composed "the entire class" of persons actually engaged in such business. The Constitution itself assumes this to be a proper classification, for it is therein provided as follows:

"The Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by telegraph and gas corporations, and the charges by corporations or individuals for storage and wharfage, in which there is a public use." Section 33, art. 4, Const.

While, as suggested by learned counsel for defendant, this refers only to laws for the regulation and limitation of charges, a classification for that purpose must be based on the same principles as obtain with regard to such a provision as is here involved. In the face of this provision of the Constitution, which apparently was not brought to the attention of the District Court of Appeal in Thompson v. San Francisco, etc., Co., 34 Cal. App. 699, 168 Pac. 390, considered in connection with the other matters to which we have referred, we do not see how it can properly be held that section 629, Civil Code, was violative of section 11, art. 1, of the same Constitution.

[10] As a part of plaintiff's demand was not barred by subdivision 1 of section 340, Code of Civil Procedure, the motion for a nonsuit should not have been granted. Plaintiff made a prima facie case for the recovery of the $5 per diem penalties accruing within a year of the time of the commencement of the action.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

HUCHTING v. HUCHTING. (Civ. 3270.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 19, 1920.)

1. DIVORCE $\S$ 27(5)—SOCIAL STATUS OF PARTIES MATERIAL IN DETERMINING WHETHER ACTS CONSTITUTED CRUELTY.

In suit for divorce for cruelty, the trial court properly considered the social conditions of the parties and the probability of plaintiff's suffering from the acts complained of, as shown by her attitude upon the stand and the surrounding circumstances.

2. DIVORCE $\S$ 184(10) — FINDING AGAINST CRUELTY ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE, NOT TO BE DISTURBED.

Where the evidence on the issue of cruelty was conflicting, and there was no evidence of bodily cruelty, but plaintiff wife relied on mental cruelty solely, a finding against her on such issue will not be disturbed.

3. DIVORCE $\S$ 27(7)—HUMILIATING CONDUCT BY WIFE ENTITLED HUSBAND TO DIVORCE FOR CRUELTY.

Husband held entitled to divorce for wife's cruelty in not conducting herself in a wifely manner, where such conduct hurt his feelings and caused him mental suffering, arising from humiliation in being cast off by her, although his charges of more serious misconduct were not substantiated.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Suit by Mabel E. Huchting against Arnold F. Huchting. From decree for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Durelle F. Glidden, of San Diego, for appellant.

James E. Wadham, Leonard Wright, Wadham & Macomber, all of San Diego, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff instituted this suit for divorce against her husband on the ground of cruelty. The defendant cross-complained upon the same grounds. A decree was entered against the plaintiff upon her complaint and in favor of defendant upon his cross-complaint, and the custody of the two minor children of the parties was awarded to the plaintiff and defendant for alternate periods of six months each. Plaintiff appeals upon the grounds that the evidence was sufficient to support a decree in her favor upon her complaint, and that it was insufficient to support the decree in favor of the defendant. No objection is made to the award of the custody of the children or to the failure of the trial court to dispose of the community property of the respective parties.

The facts of the case generally are that plaintiff and defendant intermarried in 1908, she being of the age of 16 years and he of the age of 30 years. They took up their home on a farm in San Diego county, where he performed the ordinary duties of a farmer, and she performed the housework, taking care of her children and cooking for the family and farm hands. The specifications of cruelty in the complaint are that the defendant compelled her to perform unusually arduous duties in and about the farm; that he neglected and manifested little interest in the welfare of the children; that he continually chided and scolded her about her attending dances and parties with other young people of the neighborhood, and, not being interested in or associated with her in these functions, complained that she disturbed his sleep when she returned to the home late at night. There was also some evidence on behalf of the plaintiff to the effect that defendant made threats to end his life because of the differences in the family, but these, apparently were not taken seriously by the trial court. The specifications of cruelty relied upon by defendant in his cross-complaint are that the plaintiff spent too much of her time in attending dances and parties with her friends, and that she was unduly attentive to a young man who was in his employ, thereby causing gossip in the neighborhood, which, coming to his ears, caused him great mental suffering.

An examination of the entire record presents a case where, through the disparity of ages of the parties, the relations were congenial almost from the date of their marriage, and neither party being interested in the affairs of the other, both became intolerant, and magnified each little frivolity that occurred, so that when these were discussed with their relatives and friends they became offenses which eventually rendered it impossible for the two to live together as man and wife. The evidence produced at the trial is like that which is common to actions of this nature where the relatives and friends of one party line up solidly behind him and against the other, all being anxious to testify on behalf of the leader of the faction with which they have associated, with very little regard for the truth, so long as their testimony will assist the party with whom they have aligned. Thus, the members of the family, relatives, and friends of the plaintiff were positive in their conviction that she was a good and true wife and mother, and that all of the fault for the breach was attributable to the husband. And the family, relatives and friends of the husband took a like attitude when called to support his side of the case. It appears that in October, 1916, the plaintiff, with defendant's consent, went to Utah to visit her father, and that in January, 1917, while still there, addressed a letter to the defendant, telling him that she could no longer live with him. Notwithstanding this attitude on the part of the plaintiff, defendant testified that he was always willing to take her back to his home, and wrote her to that effect, but when she returned to San Diego county in February, 1917, he called upon her in the presence of her family, and informed her that he had seen an attorney and directed him to prepare a complaint for divorce against her, charging her with adultery, and urging her to go down to the city of San Diego and "straighten this out before it goes to court," so that he might have the custody of the children. Immediately following this the plaintiff sought legal advice, and instituted this proceeding. Thus, it appears that both had come to the conclusion that they had reached the parting of the ways, and had started a race to see which one could first get into court for the purpose of procuring a legal separation. The conversations of the parties, occurring immediately prior to the commencement of the action, as indicated by the evidence, show that they had no desire at that time to settle their petty squabbles and resume the marriage relation, but that their chief interest was in securing the custody of the two children. This attitude was evident throughout the trial, and the defendant seemed so anxious to obtain that result that he disregarded all limits to which a man might go to besmirch the character of their mother.

[1, 2] The trial court had all of the witnesses before it, and in an exhaustive review of the evidence found that the charges of cruelty made by the plaintiff were insufficient to support a decree of divorce upon her complaint. As there was no evidence of bodily cruelty, but the plaintiff relied solely upon mental cruelty, the trial court properly took into consideration the social conditions of the parties and the probability of the plaintiff suffering mental cruelty from the acts complained of as shown by her attitude upon the stand and the surrounding circumstances. With this consideration, and in view of the conflicting evidence upon the issue, the findings of the trial court that the acts of the defendant did not constitute such cruelty as would warrant a decree in her favor cannot be disturbed. As said in Robinson v. Robinson, 159 Cal. 203, 204, 113 Pac. 155, 156:

"It should further be borne in mind that the question whether acts and conduct constitute such cruelty as, under all the circumstances shown, warrants the granting of a divorce is of such a nature that the conclusion of the trial court is necessarily entitled to great weight, and it is only where it is clear that it is without any substantial support in the evidence that it will be disturbed on appeal."

[3] The same situation exists as to the attack upon the findings of the trial court regarding the acts of cruelty charged against the plaintiff. Though serious charges were made by the defendant against his wife and evidence was produced by him which would support another cause for divorce, all of which defendant failed to prove or corroborate, there was sufficient uncontradicted evidence to support the conclusion that the plaintiff had not conducted herself in a wifely manner, and that such conduct had hurt defendant's feelings and caused him mental suffering arising, no doubt, from humiliation in being cast off by his young wife, but sufficient to constitute what is known as cruelty.

For these reasons the judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte GUTIERREZ et al. (Cr. 700.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 11, 1920.)

1. INFANTS $\S$ 16—PETITION AND FINDING IN JUVENILE COURT PROCEEDINGS HELD SUFFICIENT TO SUSTAIN COURT'S JURISDICTION.

A finding by the juvenile court that the allegation of the petition that minors had no parent or guardian capable of exercising proper parental control substantially meets the requirement of Juvenile Court Law, § 1, subd. 2, and section 9b, and is sufficient to show the jurisdiction of the juvenile court.

2. HABEAS CORPUS $\S$ 4, 30(1)—NOT FOR REVIEW OF ERRORS.

The writ of habeas corpus is not intended to perform the functions of a writ of error to review errors or irregularities of proceedings in court having jurisdiction of the person and the subject-matter.

3. HABEAS CORPUS $\S$ 30(1)—WILL NOT ISSUE WHERE COURT HAS JURISDICTION, THOUGH PLEADING IS DEMURRABLE.

Even if a petition is obviously demurrable for insufficient statement of facts, the question of its sufficiency will not be examined on habeas corpus, provided it appears that there is an attempted statement of facts which would confer jurisdiction.

4. HABEAS CORPUS $\S$ 92(1) — EVIDENCE IN PROCEEDINGS ATTACKED CANNOT BE REVIEWED.

In habeas corpus for discharge from custody of the juvenile court proceedings, which is in the nature of collateral attack on the jurisdiction of court, the sufficiency of the evidence in the juvenile court cannot be reviewed.

5. HABEAS CORPUS $\S$ 92(1)—POWER NOT ENLARGED IN ATTACK ON JUVENILE COURT PROCEEDINGS.

The general rules governing the power of a court on habeas corpus proceedings are not enlarged on writ to discharge from juvenile court commitment so as to authorize review of the evidence.

6. INFANTS $\S$ 16—COURTS HAVE LARGER DISCRETION IN DEALING WITH CHILDREN.

The courts have larger discretion in dealing with matters pertaining to children than in other cases, since the welfare of the child, as well as the rights of the parents, are to be considered, but that discretion should be exercised with a view to the established rule to recognize the rights of parents, in the absence of radical abuse, to bring up their children in their own way.

Application of Guadalupe Gutierrez and another for writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged.

E. F. Du Fresne, of Manila, P. I., for petitioners.

E. S. Lovett, of San Diego, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This application for a writ of habeas corpus for release of two infant children from the custody of the probation officer of San Diego county was made by the father of the minors. The infants, aged three years and one year, respectively, were committed to the custody of the probation office by an order of the juvenile court, in proceedings under the juvenile court law. St. 1915, p. 1225. The petition on which the commitment was made charged that the minors "have no parent or guardian capable of exercising proper parental control" and that they are within the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 1 of the act. The court found, in making the commitment, "that the allegations of fact contained in the petition are true."

The jurisdiction of the court is attacked for alleged insufficiency of the petition and findings.

Although the statement of facts upon which jurisdiction in this matter must rest is rather meager, we think it sufficient to confer jurisdiction.

[1] Subdivision 2 of section 1 of the juvenile court law provides that its terms apply to any person under the age of 21 years "who has no parent or guardian; or who has no parent or guardian willing to exercise or capable of exercising proper parental control." Section 9b of the act provides that—

"No ward of the juvenile court as defined in this act shall be taken from the custody of his parent or legal guardian, without the consent of such parent or guardian, unless the court shall find such parent or guardian to be incapable of providing or to have failed or neglected to provide proper maintenance, training and education for said person."

The finding of the court that the allegation of the petition that these minors had "no parent or guardian capable of exercising proper parental control" was true substantially meets the requirements of these provisions.

[2] The writ of habeas corpus is not intended to perform the functions of a writ of error for the purpose of reviewing mere errors or irregularities of proceedings of a court having jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter involved.

[3] The petition filed under the juvenile court act is a pleading filed in a court of record. And even where the petition is obviously open to demurrer for an insufficient statement of the facts, if it appears from the declarations that there is a purported or attempted statement of facts which would confer jurisdiction, the question as to such sufficiency of statement will not be examined into on habeas corpus. Matter of Application of Clifton, 26 Cal. App. 334, 146 Pac. 1064; Matter of Ruef, 150 Cal. 665, 89 Pac. 605; Matter of Todd, 186 Pac. 790.

[4] Neither can we question the sufficiency of the evidence to support the order of commitment in this proceeding. Application for a writ of habeas corpus to avoid a judgment of court is in the nature of a collateral attack upon the jurisdiction, and can only be maintained where the want of jurisdiction is shown; and in such a proceeding the sufficiency of the evidence cannot be reviewed. In re Kennedy, 144 Cal. 634, 78 Pac. 34, 67 L. R. A. 406, 103 Am. St. Rep. 117, 1 Ann. Cas. 840; In re Jacobs, 175 Cal. 661, 166 Pac. 801; In re Leonardino, 9 Cal. App. 690, 100 Pac. 708; Matter of Todd, supra; Ex parte Sternes, 77 Cal. 156, 19 Pac. 275, 11 Am. St. Rep. 251; Ex parte Ah Men, 77 Cal. 198, 19 Pac. 380, 11 Am. St. Rep. 263; Ex parte Clark, 110 Cal. 405, 42 Pac. 905.

The case of In re Brodie, 33 Cal. App. 751, 166 Pac. 605, cited by petitioner, in which the order of the juvenile court was reversed for insufficient findings, was on an appeal Cal.Rep. 188-190 P.—17 from the order. A writ of habeas corpus taken upon the same record was denied, in proceedings reported in the same volume at page 808. In the very recent case of Matter of Hunter, 188 Pac. 63, an application for habeas corpus arising from a juvenile court order on grounds of insufficiency of proceedings to give jurisdiction—though it must be admitted upon a more satisfactory record than appears here—the writ was denied, the court holding that—

"While said petition is somewhat defective in all its material allegations, and some of its averments are entirely without pertinent significance, yet we cannot say that it appears therein that the court had no jurisdiction to inquire into the question whether said minors should be committed to the custody of such probation officer."

The court in its opinion very pertinently adds that it is of course a very "serious matter to deprive parents of the care and companionship of their minor children." If, in the present instance, the contention of the petitioner that the evidence does not support the judgment of the court is well founded, he still has his remedy by appeal, under conditions that will permit of a review of error in that or any other particular attending the proceedings in the juvenile court.

[5] In the application of the general rules governing habeas corpus proceedings to juvenile court acts, we find no enlargement of the power of the courts on habeas corpus to go behind the record of the commitment to review the evidence.

[6] It may be said that even a larger discretion is recognized in the courts in dealing with matters pertaining to children than in other cases. The objection that the informal procedure of juvenile courts does not constitute due process of law, and hence that the parental rights to the child's custody cannot be taken away by order or commitment, has almost uniformly been overruled. The wider discretion here recognized arises from the fact that it is not alone the rights of the parent, but the welfare of the child, that are presented to the court for determination. It is well to bear in mind, however, that it has long been a salutary rule of the domestic life of this country to recognize the rights of parents, in the absence of radical abuses, to bring up their children in their own way. The family is the fundamental basis of civilized society, divinely instituted, and mere incidents of poverty, or ignorance, or inadequacy in high ideals or standards in the homes, should not be made to justify taking young children from their natural guardians to make them wards of the state, or to give them to other relatives better qualified, in the estimation of the courts, to bring them up.

The comments of the learned judge who made this order of commitment, as contained in the record, indicate that he had these considerations clearly in mind, and we would not, in any event in this proceeding, be justified in calling in question the correctness of his conclusions from the evidence before him. We are therefore expressing no opinion on that point.

The writ is discharged.

EXECUTION §417—JUDGMENT DEBTOR ABLE TO PAY MAY BE COMMITTED IN SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1219, court, having found on supplementary proceedings judgment debtor able to satisfy judgment, could order that he be committed to the custody of the sheriff until he shall have complied with the order to satisfy judgment.

In the matter of the application of B. Myers, also known as Boris Myers, for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Willedd Andrews, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

F. S. Hutton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. Petitioner here, claiming that he is "unlawfully imprisoned, detained, confined, and restrained of his liberty by the Sheriff of Los Angeles county," asks this court that a writ of habeas corpus may be granted, directed to said sheriff, restoring petitioner to his liberty, etc.

It is alleged that said imprisonment, etc., is illegal, in that "no complaint has been filed in the superior court of the state of California, in and for the county of Los Angeles, charging this petitioner with any criminal offense or crime," and that he "was ordered and committed into the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county * * * by the honorable Grant Jackson, judge of the superior court, * * * which commitment is dated February 6, 1920, * * * and is based on the following testimony of B. Myers, who was called as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff in the case of A. L. Gore, Plaintiff, v. B. Myers, Defendant." Here follows copy of transcript of the testimony referred to. The sheriff, in his return, showed, among other things that—

"Said B. Myers * * * was committed to my custody by virtue of a commitment issued by the honorable judge of the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, a copy of which is hereto annexed," etc.

From said order of commitment it appears that defendant therein, petitioner here, was before the lower court in supplementary proceedings, and the court found that he "had in his possession and under his control, $15,000 * * * in the form of Canadian war bonds, and sufficient to satisfy said judgment, and * * * out of which he is able to pay the judgment herein," and ordered that "said defendant forthwith pay to the clerk of this court so much * * * as is necessary to satisfy said judgment," and that he be committed to the custody of the sheriff until such time as he shall have complied with the order so made.

Counsel for petitioner has called our attention to, and relies upon, the case of Ex parte Overend, 122 Cal. 201, 54 Pac. 740, to support his contention here. The case is not in point. It was there held that because the court had itself put it beyond the power of the witness to comply with its order, by discharging the jury and discontinuing the trial at which petitioner was called as a witness, the petitioner in that case could not be indefinitely punished for contempt under section 1219 of the Code of Civil Procedure, while in the case at bar the court found that petitioner could perform, and therefore he was amenable to the order made, under the terms of the section above cited, nothing appearing to the contrary in the record before us.

Though the facts here differ materially from those in the Matter of Gutierrez, 188 Pac. 1004 (Crim. No. 700)—which was also an application for a writ of habeas corpus—opinion in which has this day been filed, the reasons there given for denying the writ are equally applicable here.

The writ is discharged and the prisoner remanded.

FRIEND & TERRY LUMBER CO. v. DEVINE et al. (Civ. 2063.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 18, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨757(1) — STATUTE DOES NOT RELIEVE PARTY OF PRINTING IN BRIEF MATERIAL PARTS OF RECORD.

Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, as amended by St. 1919, p. 261, providing that no appeal shall be dismissed or decided adversely to any party for failure to print in his brief the portion of the record in support of his points, but that the court shall direct such party to print a supplement to his brief, does not relieve parties from the necessity of printing in their briefs or in a supplement appended thereto such portion of the record as they desire to call to the court's attention when the appeal is taken under section 953 et seq.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨757(1)—PARTY ONLY REQUIRED TO PRINT IN BRIEF MATERIAL PORTIONS OF RECORD.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, as amended by St. 1919, p. 261, a party is not required to print in his brief portions of the record that are immaterial and have no bearing on the questions presented.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨766—PARTY MOVING TO REQUIRE SUPPLEMENT TO BRIEF MUST SHOW OMITTED EVIDENCE.

On a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 953c as amended by St. 1919, p. 261, to require appellant to print and serve a supplement to his brief, setting forth additional evidence bearing on the contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment, the court will not examine all the evidence to determine whether any material evidence has been omitted where the moving party fails to point out the evidence which he claims is material and has been omitted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by the Friend & Terry Lumber Company against James H. Devine and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendant named appeals. On motion to require appellant to print and serve a supplement to the opening brief. Motion denied. See, also, 186 Pac. 187.

S. R. Hart, C. E. McLaughlin, and C. P. McLaughlin, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

Irving D. Gibson, of Sacramento, and Stanley Pedder, of Coalinga, for respondent.

NICOL, Presiding Judge pro tem. The appeal in this action is under the alternative method, and this is a motion by respondent for an order requiring the appellant to print and serve on respondent a supplement to the opening brief, in which shall be set forth in full all the record of the trial contained in the reporter's typewritten transcript on file in this court, and not printed in the said opening brief. The motion is made on the grounds that it appears from the opening brief that the only ground of appeal is the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, and that it appears from a comparison of the typewritten transcript on appeal that the appellant has failed to print in said opening brief all of the record of the evidence adduced at the trial.

The respondent claims that, when the appeal is on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment, the appellant is required by section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1919 (St. 1919, p. 261), to print in his brief, or in a supplement appended thereto, all the evidence contained in the transcript.

[1] With this contention of the respondent we are unable to agree. It is true that the amendment by the last Legislature to said section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure does not relieve the parties from the necessity of printing in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court, when the appeal is taken under the provisions of sections 953, 953a, 953b, and 953c of that Code. Eddy v. Stowe, 185 Pac. 1024. The said section as amended provides that no appeal shall be dismissed nor shall any appeal be decided adversely to any party for failure to print in his brief the portion of the record, or any part thereof, in support of his points, but in such case the court hearing the appeal shall direct such party to print and serve on the adverse party and file with it a supplement to his brief in which shall be set forth in full that portion of the record relied on by such party, and not printed in any former brief.

[2, 3] By this section a party is required to print in his brief the portions of the record in support of his points and is not required to print portions of the record that are immaterial and have no bearing on the questions presented. The section is clear and explicit as to the action to be taken by the court when a party fails to comply with its requirements. But on this motion the respondent has not called the attention of the court to any evidence that has been omitted from the appellant's brief that is material to any question therein discussed, and we are not in a position, without examination of the entire transcript, to say that the portions of the record printed in said brief are not full and complete as to the points argued. The court is not required on a motion of this kind to make such an examination when the moving party fails to point out the evidence which he claims is omitted from the brief and which is material to the questions discussed.

The motion is denied.

NEWBY v. TIMES-MIRROR CO.
(Civ. 2080.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 12, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1097(1)—PRINCIPLES ENUNCIATED ON PRIOR APPEAL LAW OF THE CASE ON SUBSEQUENT APPEAL.

Where the pleadings, issues and facts on subsequent trial are substantially the same as those at the first trial, the rules and principles enunciated and applied by appellate court on first appeal constitute the law of the case on subsequent appeal.

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⇨55—DEFACEMENT OF RECORD TO PREVENT FRAUD HELD NO DEFENSE TO IMPUTATION OF HYPOCRISY AND HABITUAL ALTERATION OF PUBLIC RECORDS.

In attorney's action for libel for publication by defendant newspaper of cartoon and articles imputing hypocrisy and habitual alteration of public records, action of court in striking from answer allegations as a special defense of the facts and circumstances of transaction whereby plaintiff had on one occasion altered record to avoid perpetration of a fraud on his client was not error, such facts not constituting a defense to the publications imputing hypocrisy and habitual alteration of public records.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1042(2)—STRIKING ALLEGATIONS FROM ANSWER HARMLESS, WHERE FACTS WERE INTRODUCED IN EVIDENCE.

Action of court in striking allegations from answer was harmless, where facts alleged were nevertheless introduced in evidence.

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⇨105(2)—EXCLUSION OF OTHER NEWS ARTICLES HELD PROPER.

In attorney's action against newspaper for damages from publication of cartoon and articles imputing hypocrisy and habitual alteration of public records published for political purposes, exclusion of a news article published by the defendant, reciting the facts relating to transaction whereby plaintiff had altered the judgment record without criminal intent to frustrate perpetration of a fraud on his client, held not error; such news article being entirely disconnected and for a different purpose from the cartoon and articles complained of.

5. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⇨111—NEWS ARTICLES OTHER THAN THOSE COMPLAINED OF HELD NOT ADMISSIBLE IN MITIGATION.

In attorney's action against newspaper for damages from publication of cartoon imputing hypocrisy and habitual alteration by plaintiff of public records, a news article other than those complained of, reciting the facts relating to transaction whereby defendant altered judgment record without criminal intent, for the purpose of frustrating the perpetration of a fraud on his client, held inadmissible for purpose of mitigating damages; the meaning of publications sued on being clear and unmistakable, and the publications being libelous per se.

6. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⇨111—EVIDENCE ALIUNDE PUBLICATIONS SUED ON ADMISSIBLE IN MITIGATION WHERE SHOWING GOOD FAITH.

Evidence aliunde the publications sued on is admissible, as in mitigation of damages, only where it is manifest that such evidence can and will, or tend to, show that the defendant, in making the publications complained of, acted in good faith and with honesty of purpose, and not maliciously.

7. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⇨100(1), 105(2)—PORTION OF LIBELOUS PUBLICATIONS NOT PLEADED MAY BE SHOWN TO MODIFY WORDS SUED ON.

The defendant may show that the remainder of libel not set out in pleadings modifies the words sued on, or other passages qualifies them, but he may not put in passages contained in a subsequent and distinct publication, unless the words sued on are equivalent or ambiguous.

8. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⇨104(3), 111—TEST AS TO ADMISSIBILITY OF OTHER PUBLICATIONS.

The test of admissibility of publications other than those complained of is whether such articles will or will not tend to show facts which should properly be considered as in mitigation of damages, or tend to show an absence of actual malice in publications complained of.

9. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⇨105(2)—OTHER PUBLICATION TO EXPLAIN THAT COMPLAINED OF ADMISSIBLE.

Where the meaning or sense of publications pleaded cannot be apprehended or understood without reference to some other publication on the same subject having reference to the plaintiff, such other publication may be received in evidence.

10. LIBEL AND SLANDER ⇨105(3)—EXTRINSIC TESTIMONY TO EXPLAIN PUBLICATION MAY BE ADMITTED.

Where the words published and complained of are not clear and unambiguous in meaning, or where the publication sued on is so connected with a previous or subsequent one, as that it is necessary to give the true meaning of publications complained of, or where it appears that true meaning of publications complained of may be in such language as to make it doubtful whether the true or intended meaning may be grasped or understood by the average person, testimony extrinsic to the publications sued on, tending to show their meaning, may be received for purpose of removing from the publication the sting of malice if the words themselves are upon their face defamatory and libelous.

11. WITNESSES ⇨270(2)—CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO OTHER CARICATURES THAN ONE COMPLAINED OF HELD PROPER.

In action against newspaper for damages from publication of cartoon concerning plaintiff and others associated with him in a political campaign, where object of publication of cartoon was to injure plaintiff and his associates politically, cross-examination of the general manager of newspaper as to whether he entertained ill feeling against persons caricatured in such cartoon held pertinent and proper on issue of newspaper's real attitude toward plaintiff.

12. WITNESSES ⇨270(2)—CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO LIBELING OF OTHERS THAN PLAINTIFF HELD PROPER.

In libel action against newspaper for damages from publication of defamatory cartoon, cross-examination of general manager of defendant newspaper as to his attitude toward others caricatured in such cartoon would not have been proper for the purpose of showing that defendant had been guilty of libeling the other persons associated with plaintiff in the cartoon.

13. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1170(7) — CROSS-EXAMINATION AS TO EXTRINSIC MATTERS HELD HARMLESS.

In action for libel against newspaper for damages from publications of cartoon imputing hypocrisy and habitual alteration of public records by plaintiff, cross-examination of defendant's general manager as to the attitude toward others associated with plaintiff in such cartoon, if error, was not ground for reversal under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where there was no showing by defendant rebutting the implication of malice resulting from such publications.

14. LIBEL AND SLANDER $\hookrightarrow$ 9(3) — IMPUTING HYPOCRISY AND HABITUAL ALTERATION OF PUBLIC RECORDS LIBELOUS PER SE.

A newspaper publication, involving a cartoon and imputing hypocrisy and habitual alteration of records by plaintiff, an attorney at law, held libelous per se.

15. LIBEL AND SLANDER $\hookrightarrow$ 5 — PRESUMPTION OF MALICE FROM DEFAMATORY ARTICLE LIBELOUS PER SE CANNOT BE REBUTTED.

The presumption of malice from the publication of a defamatory article in and of itself cannot be rebutted.

16. LIBEL AND SLANDER $\hookrightarrow$ 117, 119 — SHAME AND INJURY TO FEELINGS AND LOSS OF REPUTATION CONSIDERED.

In assessing actual damages from defamatory publications imputing hypocrisy and habitual alteration of public records, the shame, mortification, and injury to feelings, etc., may be considered in addition to the loss of reputation.

17. LIBEL AND SLANDER $\hookrightarrow$ 121(1) — \$7,500 VERDICT FOR LIBEL HELD NOT EXCESSIVE.

In action by an attorney of good reputation for damages from publications imputing hypocrisy and habitual alteration of public records, verdict of $7,500, held not excessive.

18. APPEAL AND ERROR $\hookrightarrow$ 1004(1) — LIBEL AND SLANDER $\hookrightarrow$ 121(1) — VERDICT IN LIBEL ACTION NOT TO BE SET ASIDE AS EXCESSIVE IN ABSENCE OF PASSION OR PREJUDICE.

There is no scale nor definite standard by which the damages from defamatory publications can be ascertained, but the amount must be governed by circumstances of each particular case and the allowance by jury will not be set aside by the courts unless it clearly appears to have been arrived at through passion or prejudice.

19. LIBEL AND SLANDER $\hookrightarrow$ 105(2) — EVIDENCE OF ABSENCE OF MALICE IN OTHER PUBLICATION HELD INADMISSIBLE.

In action for libel against newspaper for defamatory publications imputing hypocrisy and habitual alteration of public records published for political purposes, testimony of the reporter, who was not shown to have been responsible for publications complained of or to have had any authority to direct what publications should be made, that he had no malice in writing a news article of the facts and circumstances of transaction wherein plaintiff had without criminal intent and to frustrate perpetration of fraud on his client changed record, where such news article was separate and distinct from and for a different purpose from the publications complained of, held inadmissible.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Nathan Newby against the Times-Mirror Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George J. Denis, Hunsaker & Britt, Leroy M. Edwards, and Samuel Poorman, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edwin A. Meserve and W. F. Palmer, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HART, J. The action is for damages for libel. Plaintiff had judgment, following the verdict of a jury, for $7,500, and defendant appeals from the judgment.

On a former trial of the action, judgment was in favor of defendant, which judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court. Newby v. Times-Mirror Co., 173 Cal. 387, 160 Pac. 233, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 186. From that decision we quote the following statements of the facts:

"The defendant is the publisher of the Los Angeles Times, a daily newspaper of large and general circulation, published in the city of Los Angeles. The alleged libels consists of articles published in that newspaper. * * *

"Nathan Newby, at the time of the publications, in September, October, and November, 1909, had been practicing law in Los Angeles for the preceding 14 years. He was a man of good character and reputation, and was a well-known lawyer in active practice and in good standing, being one of a firm of lawyers practicing as Valentine & Newby. Prior to July, 1909, one Blumer had obtained a judgment by default in the superior court of Los Angeles county against Felix Mayhew for the recovery of $8,750. An execution had been duly issued thereon to the sheriff of Los Angeles county. A motion by Mayhew to set aside the judgment was pending. Valentine & Newby were attorneys for the plaintiff in the judgment, and Percy R. Wilson was the attorney for Mayhew. On or about July 23, 1909, the parties agreed on a settlement whereby the plaintiff was to accept $5,000 in money in full satisfaction of the judgment. Mayhew procured a check on the National Bank of California for $5,000, payable to himself and duly certified by the cashier for that sum, and Newby, for the plaintiff, agreed to accept this check, properly indorsed, in lieu of the money, upon the settlement. Pursuant to this agreement, and by arrangement, on the following day, July 24, 1909, Newby, Mayhew, Wilson, and McCabe, a lawyer, also acting for Mayhew, went together to the office of the county clerk, in order that Mayhew might there deliver the check to Newby, and Newby there enter satisfaction of the judgment and thereupon deliver to Wilson an order to the sheriff to release any property held by him under the execution. In the meantime the check had been duly indorsed by Mayhew to Valentine & Newby, and Mayhew, in collusion with McCabe, but without Wilson's knowledge, had surreptitiously prepared, ready for filing, a complaint in his own name against Blumer, the National Bank of California, Newby, and others, to enjoin payment of the check about to be delivered, together with a restraining order to the same effect ready for the signature of the judge on presentation. None of the other parties had any knowledge of the preparation or existence of these papers or of the design to enjoin the payment of the check after its delivery.

"At the clerk's office, which was in the courthouse, Ross, the judgment book clerk, produced the judgment book, and with a rubber stamp impressed on the margin of the entry of the judgment of Blumer v. Mayhew an entry of satisfaction thereof. Mayhew then delivered the $5,000 check to Newby, who thereupon signed the firm name, 'Valentine & Newby, Attorneys for Plaintiff,' to the entry of satisfaction, handed to Wilson the order to the sheriff for the release of property levied on, and passed to the deputy clerk $1 to pay the fee of 25 cents for the entry. The deputy then went back to the cash drawer for change, and Newby stood awaiting it. McCabe and Mayhew, saying that they supposed they were through, hurriedly left the room. Wilson also left the room with the order of release for the sheriff. While the deputy was getting the change and Newby was waiting for it, Mayhew and McCabe proceeded to the chambers of a judge of the superior court, presented to him the complaint and order for the injunction against payment of the check just delivered, and the judge signed the order and delivered it to them. All this occupied but two or three minutes. While Newby was still awaiting change, the injunction aforesaid, together with a summons in the injunction suit, which had been begun by the filing of the papers in that short space of time, were served upon him by some person other than McCabe or Mayhew.

"Quickly examining the papers served upon him, Newby perceived the gross fraud attempted, and at once called out to the clerk that he had been 'fimflammed' in the satisfaction of judgment, and that he desired immediately to mark it out, showing the deputy the said injunction order. The deputy thereupon turned to the entry of satisfaction, took a pen, and drew several canceling lines across it and wrote beneath it the words: 'Marked out at my request.' Newby then signed the name 'Valentine & Newby' under said words. He then left the room, intercepted Wilson before he had delivered the release to the sheriff, and told him of the injunction. Wilson expressed his indignation, and he and Newby then went together to the bank. There they found a person serving the injunction papers on the officers of the bank. Newby presented the check, the bank declined to pay it, and it never has been paid.

"All this occurred on Saturday. On the following Monday Wilson withdrew his name as attorney for Mayhew in the case of Blumer v. Mayhew, and Newby procured from the judge an order denying Mayhew's motion to vacate the judgment. Newby afterward began proceedings by motion for a formal order by the court setting aside the said entry of satisfaction. This motion came on for hearing on September 21, 1909. At that time an attorney in the interest of Mayhew called the matter to the attention of the defendant's city editor, who immediately detailed a reporter of that paper to get the facts and write up the 'story.' He proceeded to do so, and the article set forth in the first count of the complaint published in the Times on September 22, 1909, was the result. It states the facts substantially as above related, but added that Newby was accused of a felony in altering a public record, that the district attorney was considering the facts, and that Mayhew was willing to swear to a complaint charging Newby with such offense."

Before the retrial of the case, plaintiff filed an amendment complaint and omitted therefrom the article of September 22, 1909, above referred to.

In the first count of the amended complaint it is alleged:

"That the said defendant wickedly and maliciously, and with the intention and design to injure, disgrace, and defame this plaintiff, and to bring him into public discredit and obloquy, printed and published in said newspaper on the 4th day of October, 1909, of, and concerning this plaintiff, a certain cartoon, picture, or effigy which represented the plaintiff, with a pen or pencil in his right hand, with a book representing a public record, and marked on the back thereof 'Public Records,' and representing the plaintiff as saying, 'I'll change 'em;' that said cartoon also contained caricatures of other citizens of Los Angeles, most of them prominent in the good government organization, which had for its object the bettering of municipal conditions in the city of Los Angeles; that said cartoon, at the top thereof, had these words printed, 'And these are our leading reformers,' and at the bottom of said cartoon had the following quotation: 'All hypocrites are sinners, but, thank God, all sinners are not hypocrites.'"

A photographic copy of said cartoon followed the above allegation. It is then alleged:

"That by the foregoing false, malicious, and defamatory picture and publication, the defendant intended to convey the meaning, and the said picture was by the persons who observed the same as published in said paper understood and believed to convey the meaning, that the said plaintiff had changed public records and was in the habit of changing public records; that the plaintiff in his political activities was not sincere, but was a hypocrite; and that while posing as a reformer, plaintiff was, in fact, guilty of changing public records, and a criminal."

The second, third, fourth, and fifth counts of the amended complaint quote articles from issues of the Times on, respectively, October 5, October 29, November 16, and November 25, 1909, and repeat the allegation of the first count, above set out, as to the malicious intent with which each publication was made; and in each of said counts the meaning intended and understood is alleged practically as in the first count. The following excerpts will show the general character of the articles:

"If it were not for court records and newspapers files and the like of that, there are some Los Angeles 'reformers' who would exude eau de cologne instead of the familiar stench that now accompanies them on their devious peregrinations." "There is a movement to stop gambling of all kinds in Los Angeles, through an initiative petition proposing an anti-gambling ordinance submitted by the arch-reformer Nathan Newby. Beginning with a desire to stop humble citizens from shaking dice for cigars, which Newby and others volubly and defiantly expressed to the council before it was found Newby had been tampering with the county records," etc. "Then Nathan Newby's anti-gambling initiative ordinance will have place in the question box. It aims to prevent smokers from joining in a friendly game of dice with the cigar store clerk with the cigars at stake. This so shocked Nathan that he forgot to alter any more public records." "A motion was made after the rendition of the judgment [in Blumer v. Mayhew] to set it aside, but about that time Nathan Newby, of the legal firm of Valentine & Newby, caused the judgment on the records in the office of the county clerk to be mutilated and the satisfaction of the judgment wiped out."

As to the contents of the amended answer, we adopt the following statements from appellant's opening brief:

"The defendant denied the libelous character of the publications, and as to some pleaded the truth of the facts stated in justification, and as to others, pleaded that they were privileged as being fair, full, and impartial reports of public and judicial proceedings, or fair comment and criticism upon matters of public interest.

"The defendant, as separate and further defenses to each count of the complaint, and in mitigation of damages, pleaded all the facts surrounding the alteration of the public record by plaintiff on the 24th day of July, 1909, and the further fact that the defendant, after having made a fair and reasonable investigation of the facts did, on the 22d day of September, 1909, without malice or ill will towards plaintiff, print the article of September 22, 1909 (setting the same forth in full), which article was alleged to have been a full, true, and correct account of the entire transaction; that the cartoon and subsequent articles appearing in the defendant's paper all referred to the acts and occurrences as set forth in full in the publication of September 22d, and that it was not the intention of the defendant in any of its subsequent publications to charge the plaintiff with the commission of any acts other than those set forth fully in the article of September 22d, and that the readers of defendant's paper so understood the cartoon and subsequent articles, and did not attribute to them any meaning or significance other than as set forth so completely, fairly, and fully in the article of September 22d."

It is then stated in appellant's brief:

"To such special and separate defenses plaintiff demurred, which demurrer was overruled. Notwithstanding this, at the commencement of the trial, on plaintiff's motion and against defendant's objections, the said several separate defenses in mitigation of damages were stricken out by the court.

"During the trial the defendant endeavored, but was not permitted, to introduce in evidence the article of September 22, 1909, for the purpose of showing a lack of malice, and for the further purpose of explaining the subsequent articles and cartoon, as well as the understanding of the readers who saw and read the subsequent articles."

The first contention of appellant is that the court erred in striking from the answer said allegations and in refusing to admit evidence in support thereof.

[1] The pleadings and the issues presented and the facts of this case are essentially the same as those developed at the first trial hereof, except such evidence as might have been directly addressed to the first publication of the transaction whereby the plaintiff caused the record in the case of Blumer v. Mayhew to be changed, so far as was concerned the notation or entry satisfying the judgment therein. It follows that the rules and principles enunciated and applied in the decision of the case as presented on the former appeal bear directly upon the case as made at the second trial, of which the present appeal is the outgrowth, and that the decision on the previous appeal is therefore the law of the case. It is consequently conceived that it will clarify the discussion of the points presented by the present record and to be the orderly course before taking up for consideration the several contentions upon which the appellant relies for a reversal, to reproduce here the following extended excerpts from the opinion by Mr. Justice Shaw of the Supreme Court, filed in deciding the former appeal (see 173 Cal. 388, 392, 160 Pac. 233, 235 [Ann. Cas. 1917E, 186] et seq.):

"It would, perhaps, puzzle a person not familiar with the Penal Code to discover in the conduct of Mr. Newby, as detailed above, anything immoral or reprehensible, or other than a commendable zeal to protect his client against palpable fraud. But sections 113 and 114 of the Penal Code declare that it is a felony for any person to deface or alter a record or any part thereof kept officially in any public office. The marking out of the entry of satisfaction by drawing lines across it with a pen was done by the deputy clerk at the request of Newby, who is, consequently, equally responsible therefore with said deputy. It was defacement of a public record. It is clear from the facts stated that Newby was actuated solely by the praiseworthy purpose of frustrating the fraudulent acts of Mayhew in procuring the entry of satisfaction to be made without consideration, and that his intent was not in any wise criminal in character. It was but an irregular method of effecting a righteous result. Nevertheless, so great is the care of the state that the public records shall remain unchanged, except when changed in an authorized manner, the statute is so drawn as to make even such laudable defacement a felony. The intent is immaterial. The act itself without intent other than that of doing it, constitutes the offense, regardless of the object. This has been expressly decided in this state, and is the general rule in respect to statutory offenses of that kind. People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 175, 31 Pac. 45; People v. Tomalty, 14 Cal. App. 229, 111 Pac. 513. Therefore, although the plaintiff was guilty of no moral wrong or bad intent in the matter, it is technically true that he was accused of the commission of a felony. The answer alleges as a defense to the first count that the several matters complained of therein as libels upon the plaintiff were and are true, setting forth the particular facts, which it is claimed establish the truth of that charge. In so far as the publications assert that the plaintiff was accused of the commission of a felony, confined as they all are to the act of crossing out the entry of satisfaction of the judgment in Blumer v. Mayhew, the defense of truth is established by the evidence, although the offense was entirely technical, was without moral guilt, and was intended to bring about justice.

"The truth of this part of the matter complained of, however, does not establish a defense to the other libelous publications concerning plaintiff. With reference to the cartoon or caricature of plaintiff and others with certain inscriptions upon it, published in the Times of October 4, 1909, the defendant in its answer alleged it was made in the midst of a strenuous political campaign, in which the plaintiff was identified with and prominent in the party opposed by the Times newspaper, and known as the Good Government League, or reformers; that cartoons were frequently published by or in behalf of the respective parties in the conduct of the campaign; that in carrying on its part of the campaign the Times published said cartoon as 'a merry and harmless pictorial allusion to the leaders of said reformers as a political class, and not as private individuals, and merely by way of facetious rejoinder to many political criticisms and censures' of the party supported by the Times, made by said reformers in public speeches and newspapers. These facts could only be considered in mitigation of damages. They do not constitute a defense. The case does not come within the rule as to privileged communications, as laid down in subdivision 3 of section 47 of the Civil Code. In Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 382, the court said: 'Nor can a defamatory publication in a public journal be said to be privileged simply because it relates to a subject of public interest, and was published in good faith, without malice, and from laudable motives.' Edwards v. San Jose, etc., Soc., 99 Cal. 438, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70, 34 Pac. 128; Gilman v. McClatchy, 111 Cal. 606, 614, 44 Pac. 241. The duty of a newspaper to the public does not justify the publication of false and defamatory matter concerning a private citizen merely because he is active in promoting his own political views. A publication concerning such person, if libelous in its nature, cannot be excused on the ground that the occasion is privileged, and can be justified only by pleading and proving that it is true. And the fact that the matter published tends to cause merriment, or is a 'facetious rejoinder' to adverse criticisms made by other persons, does not justify the wrong. It is libelous per se to falsely charge that a person is a hypocrite.

"The answer does not allege that the imputation of hypocrisy to Newby, or the imputation that he was in the habit of altering public records, alleged to be the purport of said cartoon, were true, but denied that it was susceptible of that meaning. The court below, at the request of the plaintiff, instructed the jury that it should determine whether or not said cartoon would fairly represent to the ordinary reader that the plaintiff was a hypocrite and was in the habit of changing public records, and that if it was found to have that meaning the plaintiff would be entitled to recover on the second count, unless it was proved to be true that plaintiff was a hypocrite and was in the habit of changing public records. The verdict in favor of the defendant necessarily implies that the jury either found that the cartoon was not susceptible of the meaning imputed to it, or found that plaintiff was a hypocrite and was in the habit of changing public records. The plaintiff insists that the evidence does not support either of these findings, and this insufficiency is assigned as cause for a new trial.

"The instruction that the jury might find for the defendant if the imputation to Newby of hypocrisy and the habit of altering public records were proven was not properly within the issues, inasmuch as the answer does not aver the truth of these charges. As the plaintiff requested the instruction, he cannot complain that it was given, but he may make the point that the implied findings are not supported by the evidence.

"There was no evidence whatever to the effect that Newby was a hypocrite, or that he was in the habit of altering public records. The act of altering the entry in the case of Blumer v. Mayhew, when considered in the light of circumstances under which it was done, does not tend to show hypocrisy, or any sort of depravity in the character of Newby. It only shows that he was in error as to the lawful method of correcting the wrong attempted by Mayhew. Any finding that the charge of hypocrisy was true would be contrary to the evidence. It is therefore to be presumed that the jury did not find that charge to be true. The verdict can only be supported, so far as this count is concerned, on the theory that the jury concluded that the cartoon would not, to an ordinary reader, bear the meaning that the plaintiff was a hypocrite or was in the habit of changing public records.

"The evidence does not justify such conclusion. The heading to the cartoon, consisting of the phrase, 'And these are our leading "reformers,"' in itself implied that the persons pictured were not worthy to be called reformers, and were claiming a virtue they did not possess. The statement below, 'All hypocrites are sinners, but, thank God, all sinners are not hypocrites,' taken in connection with the admitted fact that these persons were generally known as 'reformers' in the pending political campaign, was nothing less than an indirect assertion that the persons whose pictures appeared above were both sinners and hypocrites, while their opponents might be sinners, but were not hypocrites. This meaning was also indicated by the fact that the four persons, other than Newby, shown in the cartoon, were each portrayed as engaged in transactions either disreputable, dishonest, or ridiculous, and, further, by the sinister expression on the face of Newby as given in the cartoon. All these circumstances may be considered. Bettner v. Holt, 70 Cal. 274, 11 Pac. 713. Newby was not named in the cartoon, but it is practically conceded that the picture was sufficiently like him to be readily recognized by all who knew him. No person of ordinary intelligence could fail to perceive that the cartoon was intended to suggest that the plaintiff was a hypocrite posing as a reformer. The verdict on this point is therefore contrary to the evidence. The plaintiff was entitled to recover on this count regardless of the weakness of his case on other counts.

"We do not mean to intimate that the other publications set forth in the complaint do not, in effect, assert that the plaintiff was addicted to the changing of public records and impute to him a moral obliquity or depravity which was not established by his conduct in the case of Blumer v. Mayhew, and which was no part of his character, or that they do not also impute to him hypocrisy and insincerity. These are, for the most part, questions of fact as to which, upon another trial, the result may be different. Our conclusion with regard to the second count makes it unnecessary to consider them further upon this appeal."

[2, 3] It is only necessary to look to the foregoing language of the Supreme Court to find an answer to the contention that error was involved in the action of the court in striking from the answer the allegations thereof, introduced therein as a special defense, reciting the fact of the alteration of the record as described by the plaintiff and the facts and circumstances attending that transaction. It will be noted that the Supreme Court, in referring to the part of the answer setting forth those facts, said:

"The truth of this part of the matter complained of, however, does not establish a defense to the other libelous publications concerning plaintiff."

But if the facts of that transaction were proper to be pleaded and proved as in mitigation of damages, then the reply is that said facts were not only pleaded in the answer and allowed to remain therein, not, however, as a "further and separate answer and defense," but the defendant was allowed to prove them. The affidavit of plaintiff, prepared and filed in a proceeding instituted in the superior court for the purpose of obtaining a decree setting aside the entry of satisfaction of the judgment in Blumer v. Mayhew, and which fully and in detail recited the facts and circumstances characterizing the transaction eventuating in the changing of the record in said case, was introduced in evidence by the defendant as part of the testimony of the defendant's witness, Samuel G. Austin, who was the reporter of the defendant, and as such interviewed plaintiff at the time the record was changed in regard thereto and prepared for the defendant the article first published by it concerning said transaction. Certain letters anent the judgment in Blumer v. Mayhew, over the signature of the law firm of which the plaintiff was then a member, were at the same time also introduced in evidence. Thus it is plain that the defendant got before the jury and so obtained whatever benefit there was in the facts and circumstances attending the transaction culminating in the changing or alteration of the record by the plaintiff.

It is next contended that error prejudicing the rights of defendant was committed by the refusal of the court to allow in evidence, at the behest of the defendant, the first article published by the defendant (on September 22, 1909), concerning the fact of the alteration of the record. That article, as above shown, was pleaded in the original complaint as the basis for the first count thereof, and which the plaintiff therein declared was libelous as against him. As is also likewise shown, the complaint as amended upon the return of the cause by the Supreme Court for a retrial eliminated there from said article, so that it no longer remained as one of the causes of action relied on against the defendant. The article is in the record, it having been offered in evidence and marked for identification. The purpose which it is claimed the article would subserve as evidence for the defendant is stated above.

[4] It was not error to exclude the article. Aside from the consideration that said article referred to the same transaction as that referred to by the publications declared upon by plaintiff, and was, indeed, the first appearing in the defendant's newspaper announcing and giving the details of the fact of the alteration of the record by the plaintiff, it had in a legal sense no necessary, or in truth any connection with the cartoon and other publications concerning that transaction appearing subsequently in defendant's newspaper and complained of here. It could not, therefore, be of any service in explaining the reasons for the publication of the cartoon and subsequent articles, or in any way tend to show that the later articles and cartoon were published without malice against the plaintiff. It is manifest that the cartoon and the other publications counted on by the plaintiff were published not as a mere matter of news relative to the plaintiff's act in altering the record in the case mentioned. The news feature of that transaction had already been given by the defendant in its newspaper; and the later publications were occasioned by the plaintiff's political activities in a movement to which the defendant was confessedly opposed, and their obvious design was to destroy that movement as a political force in the political affairs of Los Angeles. It was therefore evidently the immediate purpose of the publications complained of to degrade and belittle the plaintiff and his associates in the movement in the estimation of the local public, and thus interpose, if it could be done, an effectual handicap to the avowed purposes of the local political organization of which they were the prime promoters and through the medium of which the plaintiff and his associates, as they pretended, were attempting to accomplish certain reforms in the affairs of the city government of Los Angeles. On the other hand, the excluded article merely involved a recital as a matter of news, which was obviously of interest to the public, of the facts relative to the alteration of the record and the explanations of the plaintiff and others of the matters leading up to the changing of the record. There was absolutely nothing on the face of said article indicating in the slightest degree that it was published with the design of defaming or injuring the personal character of the plaintiff or of impairing his standing in the community either as a citizen or as a member of the legal profession. In fact, the portion of the article giving the plaintiff's version of how the record came to be altered was under the subhead, "A Clear Explanation," and gave, without in any manner questioning, either directly or by innuendo, the honesty of the plaintiff's statement of the facts of the transaction and the facts which he appeared to think justified his act, the full story of the affair as detailed by him. In brief, the article was one the publication of which is within the legitimate rights of the defendant as the publisher of a newspaper whose primary purpose is to chronicle and give to its patrons the current events and news, particularly those events or matters, such as the one which constituted the subject-matter of the article here, affecting the public interests and which the public are concerned with and entitled to know about. But, while this is all true, the purpose of the publication of said article and the evident purpose for which the cartoon and subsequent articles complained of were published were, as above declared, entirely disconnected, and it follows that, as before stated, the first or excluded news article could throw no light upon the question whether the cartoon and the subsequent publications concerning the plaintiff and based upon his act in causing the record to be altered, were published with or without malice or with or without a design by the defendant thereby to defame and destroy the reputation or the standing of the plaintiff in the community in which he resided and carried on his professional activities.

[5] Nor was the article of September 22, 1909, admissible, as is the contention, upon the theory that it would tend to show, as in mitigation of damages, that the publications complained of bore "a restricted meaning" and that it was in the sense of such meaning that all, "or a large portion of defendant's readers, understood to attach to the publications sued on." The meaning of the publications sued on seems to be clear and unmistakable. They are in ordinary language, easily and readily to be understood by the average person who might peruse them. They could have no "restricted meaning," if by that expression it is meant that they bore any other meaning than that the plaintiff was a hypocrite, and had habitually practiced and perpetrated the crime of altering public records. No one reading the articles and inspecting the cartoon with its accompanying words, which form the basis of this action by plaintiff, could but conclude that, if said articles and cartoon spoke the truth, then the plaintiff was a hypocrite and a criminal. Indeed, so unquestionably clear is the meaning of those publications that the Supreme Court, as has been shown, in the opinion on the former appeal, characterized them as libelous per se—that is, libelous in and of themselves, or upon their face, and further said, as will be observed from the above excerpt from its opinion:

"Newby was not named in the cartoon, but it is practically conceded that the picture was sufficiently like him to be readily recognized by all who knew him. No person of ordinary intelligence could fail to perceive that the cartoon was intended to suggest that the plaintiff was a hypocrite, posing as a reformer."

The publications upon which the charge of libel is here based speak for themselves. No extrinsic evidence was or is necessary to explain their meaning or the motive prompting them. The excluded article could neither have furnished an explanation which would have disclosed a different meaning to the language of the publications or to the cartoon sued on from that which their language and the representations contained in the cartoon naturally and plainly imply, nor have disclosed or tended to show that the latter publications were made without malice or were justified. It, in brief, was inadmissible as evidence for any purpose.

[6, 7] The rule is that evidence aliunde the publication sued on is admissible, as in mitigation of damages, only where it is manifest that such evidence can and will show or tend to show that the defendant, in making the publication complained of, acted in good faith and with honesty of purpose, and not maliciously. The defendant may show, if he can, that the remainder of the libel not set out in the pleadings modifies the words sued on, or other passages in the same publication qualify them. "But he may not put in passages contained in a subsequent and distinct publication, unless the words sued on are equivocal or ambiguous." Newell on Slander and Libel (2d Ed.) § 78. See, also, Wilson v. Pitch, 41 Cal. 363; Preston v. Frey, 91

Cal. 107, 110, 27 Pac. 533; Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 182, 116 Pac. 530.

[8] Of course, there can be discerned no distinction in principle between the disallowance as evidence of subsequent articles and of publications as evidence made previously to the publication sued on. The test of the admissibility or nonadmissibility of publications other than those complained of is whether such articles will or will not tend to show facts which should properly be considered as in mitigation of damages, or tend to show an absence of actual malice in the publication complained of.

There are some cases cited by appellant which it conceives justifies it in challenging the soundness of the ruling excluding as evidence the article in question. They are: Bettner v. Holt, 70 Cal. 270, 11 Pac. 713; Van Vactor v. Walkup, 46 Cal. 124; Rocky Mountain Printing Co. v. Fridborn, 46 Colo. 440, 104 Pac. 956, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 891; Gould v. Weed, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 12; Sanford v. Rowley, 93 Mich. 119, 52 N. W. 1119; Young v. Gilbert, 93 Ill. 595; Scripps v. Foster, 41 Mich. 742, 3 N. W. 216; McLean v. Caverne, 175 Ill. App. 273.

[9] It would subserve no useful purpose to enter herein upon an examination and such analysis of the decisions in the cases named as will readily show that they are to be distinguished from the present case upon their facts. Referring to them generally, however, it is to be remarked that it cannot be doubted that, as the cases named properly hold, where the meaning or sense of the publication pleaded and so complained of by the plaintiff cannot be apprehended or understood without reference to some other publication upon the same subject, and, having reference to the plaintiff, it is competent and proper to receive the latter publication in evidence. For instance, in the case of Rocky Mountain Printing Co. v. Fridborn, 46 Colo. 440, 104 Pac. 956, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 891, supra, the words relied upon as defamatory and libelous, and which were published under the heading, "Miss Fridborn a Mother," were: "Florence Fridborn, the girl who was assaulted by an unknown man in North Denver last New Year's Eve, became a mother yesterday." As showing that said item was published without malice and entirely from a news motive, the defendant pleaded the facts of a previous criminal assault upon the plaintiff and the killing of her brother at the same time by an unknown man at a "lonely spot" to which plaintiff, then aged 16 years, and her brother, then a little over 21 years, had repaired for the purpose of skating, and which facts had at the time of the occurrence been published in all newspapers of Denver, including the appellant's newspaper, the Rocky Mountain News. The trial court, upon motion, struck from the answer all those facts. That the publication made the basis of the plaintiff's cause of action in that case was libelous per se is an unquestioned proposition, since, from its face, and unexplained, the necessary implication was that the plaintiff, being an unmarried woman and having given birth to a child, had been guilty of fornication, and was therefore unchaste. But, inasmuch as the publication involved a statement of the direct result of a previous diabolical assault by a male upon the plaintiff, of the facts and circumstances of which assault the defendant had, as a matter of news, and legitimately as the publisher of a newspaper, made publication, it was eminently proper, and the Supreme Court of Colorado so held, that the matters stricken from defendant's pleading, involving the previous publication by it of the assault and the circumstances attending it, should have been allowed to remain, subject to be proved, if not as a defense, certainly to cut off any ground for the just infliction of punitive damages.

[10] And in any case of libel, where the words published and complained of are not clear and unambiguous in meaning, or where the publication sued on is so connected with a previous or subsequent one as that it is necessary to read them together to get the true meaning of the publication complained of, or where it appears that the true meaning of the latter may be in such language as to make it doubtful whether the true or intended meaning thereof may be grasped or understood by the average person, testimony extrinsic to the publication sued on, tending to show what its words mean or were intended to mean, may be received, and this for the purpose of removing from the publication the sting of malice if the words themselves are, upon their face, defamatory and libelous.

The other cases cited by appellant above named are likewise to be differentiated from this. In some of the cases certain portions only of the publication complained of were relied upon as the foundation for the cause of action pleaded, but it was held therein, and very properly so, that the defendant was entitled to have in evidence the entire article or publication upon the theory that, when the publication is considered in its entirety, the conclusion may be justified that there is either an entire absence of malice in the act of publishing the article or there appeared in the portions omitted from the complaint certain facts which might tend justly to minimize even compensatory or actual damages.

Counsel for the plaintiff, over objection by defendant, was permitted to ask Gen. Otis, president and general manager of the defendant at the time the publications complained of were made, whether he entertained ill feeling against the several persons caricatured and included in the cartoon other than the plaintiff, and this ruling is assigned as prejudicial error. The witness, in response to-questions on that line of cross-examination, stated that some of the persons included in the cartoon he was not personally acquainted with, that as to one of them he could say that he was unfriendly with, and that as to another he was politically not friendly with. Personally, he was not acquainted with plaintiff, he declared.

[11, 12] We are not prepared to say that the cross-examination thus challenged was not pertinent and proper. The object of the attack involved in the cartoon and the articles complained of was to destroy the force of a political organization of which the parties caricatured and included in the cartoon were the leading promoters, and to which the defendant appears to have launched a relentless opposition, and, in prosecuting such opposition with any hope of success the defendant seems to have conceived that the first and important requisite was to attack and so destroy the personal reputation of the individuals constituting the subjects of the cartoon. If the cause to crystallize which the persons referred to in the cartoon was for a bad purpose, or one not calculated to be the instrument for promoting the public welfare, or the parties prosecuting it were doing so to consummate some sinister personal purpose, which latter proposition seems to be the imputation against them as implied from the publications complained of, then the banding together of those persons for that purpose was, according to the fair and reasonable import of said publications, no less than a criminal conspiracy, or at least one whose ultimate mission was to perpetrate a political wrong of some sort upon the city and the county of Los Angeles. Hence, it would seem that, if for such reasons, the defendant's general manager, who controlled the policies of the defendant, entertained ill feeling, politically, against any of the parties associated by the defendant with the plaintiff in a cause which it opposed because either the purposes of the cause or those of its promoters were inimical to the best interests of the public, such ill feeling, if shown, would afford some inference that he entertained a like feeling, toward the plaintiff. It might be somewhat of a remote inference, but this goes only to the question of its evidentiary value, the determination of which was, of course, with the jury. Manifestly, the testimony sought to be elicited by the cross-examination would not be proper for the purpose only of showing that the defendant had been guilty of libeling the other parties associated with plaintiff in the cartoon, and, as we have shown, this was not its purpose, although, incidentally, it might have tended to show that to be the fact. The cases cited by appellant, therefore, are not applicable to the discussion. They are: Cochran v. Butterfield, 18 N. H. 115, 45 Am.

Dec. 363; Stowell v. Beagle, 57 Ill. 97; York v. Pease, 2 Gray (Mass.) 282. In those cases proof was offered and received or rejected whose effect would be to show either that the defendant had previously and in different articles published libels on other persons than the plaintiff, or that the defendant had previously had a personal difficulty with the plaintiff's father. The courts in those cases very properly held that such testimony would not tend to prove that defendant had maliciously made the publication complained of; that is, with malice against the plaintiff. But here the plaintiff is grouped in the same cartoon with others who are characterized either as dishonest or as prosecuting an usurious money-lending business, or as having been in a drunken condition while in the performance of some public function, whether official or otherwise, is not made clear, and the group is ironically referred to therein as "our leading reformers," of whom it is also said therein, "All hypocrites are sinners, but, thank God, all sinners are not hypocrites," and; as above stated, it is fair to infer therefrom that the same motive or the feeling actuating the publication of the cartoon and the words employed tending to interpret its meaning or purport cannot well be held to have been intended to be confined or limited in their application to any single one of the group, but that it must have been at the bottom of the publication as to all referred to therein.

[13-15] But, if we felt compelled to hold with appellant that the cross-examination was legally improper, we would still be of the opinion, in view of the record when considered as a whole, that the ruling permitting it was not productive of a miscarriage of justice. Const. art. 6, § 4½. As before declared, the publication involving the cartoon was libelous per se, and there was no showing by the appellant rebutting the implication of malice resulting from or attending such publication. Indeed, the presumption of malice from the publication of a defamatory article in and of itself libelous or actionable per se cannot be rebutted, and it is therefore the more correct to say that there was no showing by the defendant tending to mitigate damages—that is, a showing that there was in fact no express or actual malice.

In the present connection, we may consider the claim that the verdict is, under the evidence, excessive, and that but for the testimony brought out by the cross-examination of defendant's president and general manager, a verdict for a much less sum than that thus awarded would probably have been the result of the jury's deliberations. But we cannot perceive how it can consistently be held by this court that the damages awarded are, under the evidence, excessive.

It has been held:

"If the article is libelous per se, we see no reason why the law should not declare that upon its introduction in evidence a prima facie case of malice in fact is established, for, even though it be presumed malice, it is malice in fact, and has all the dignity and gravity of express or actual malice, proven aliunde. We conclude that presumed malice is equally a question of fact with actual malice, and upon being established equally forms the foundation for the recovery of exemplary damages." Childers v. Mercury P. & P. Co., 105 Cal. 284, 289, 38 Pac. 903, 904 (45 Am. St. Rep. 40); Civ. Code, § 3294.

In this case, as stated, there is no showing that the defendant had justification or excuse for publishing the plaintiff to the world as a hypocrite and a man who was in the habit of unauthorizedly altering public records, a crime under the laws of the state, and there is therefore no proof disclosing an absence of actual malice in the publications complained of; hence the malice implied or presumed from said publications because of their inherent defamatory and libelous character stands in the record as malice in fact.

[16] But, to the complaint against the size of the verdict, there is still another answer, to wit: That among the elements of actual damages which may be considered and made in part the bases of the actual detriment suffered by the plaintiff from the publications is not only the loss of reputation, but also the shame, the mortification, and injury to feelings, etc., and of these elements it has been said:

"While special damages must be alleged and proven, general damages for outrage to feelings and loss of reputation need not be alleged in detail, and may be recovered in the absence of actual proof; and to the amount that the jury estimates will fairly compensate plaintiff for the jury done. Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 386." Childers v. Mercury P. & P. Co., supra, 105 Cal. 289, 38 Pac. 903, 45 Am. St. Rep. 40.

[17, 18] The court in this case clearly instructed the jury as to the measure of damages in such a case, and also stated the elements which they were to consider in determining the damages which would compensate the plaintiff for the injury or damage he had suffered from the publication, and we do not see our way clear to declare, as a matter of law, that the award of the jury ($7,500), viewed even as involving only the allowance of compensatory damages, represents anything more than fair and reasonable compensation for the injury actually sustained. There is no scale or definite standard by which such wrongs as the one here complained of can be accurately measured and determined, and they must therefore be judged and appreciated by the view taken of them as they are made to appear by the circumstances of each particular case by fair-minded and impartial men, and the question of the amount of damages which would represent just compensation in this class of cases hardly admits of any other test than the intelligence of a jury, governed by a sense of justice; and, unless it clearly appears that the amount of damages allowed could only have been arrived at through passion or prejudice, it does not rest with the courts to set the verdict aside. If the verdict is to be construed as implying, as the jury were apparently warranted from the record before them in finding, that the publications declared upon were prompted by actual malice, then, obviously, the verdict may well be said to demonstrate on the part of the jury very liberal consideration of the defendant.

It is lastly contended that there was prejudicial error in the ruling disallowing the witness Austin to testify whether he, having as a reporter of the defendant written the article of September 22, 1909, had any malice against the plaintiff at the time of or in writing said article, or "if he at that time, or at any other time, had received any instructions from his superior officers in the defendant corporation to villify or persecute or libel, or do anything unfriendly to Mr. Newby."

[19] The ruling was not erroneous. As above shown, said article merely involved a recital or statement of the facts and circumstances leading up to and immediately attending the act of changing the record of the entry of the satisfaction of the judgment in the Blumer-Mayhew Case as they were admitted by the plaintiff to have occurred. There is no claim by the plaintiff that said article was published with malice, or that there was anything untrue in its statement of the facts of the transaction to which it related. It was, as before stated, nothing more nor less than a news article, giving the unexaggerated, uncolored statements of the parties to each side of the controversy arising out of a transaction, the truth of which, so far as was concerned the act itself of altering the record, was not disputed, but was admitted by plaintiff. The case of Brown v. Title Co., 151 Mass. 127, 23 N. E. 733, does not support the position of appellant upon the point under consideration. There the president and the vice president and general manager of the defendant were allowed to testify, over objection by plaintiff, that neither they nor any other officer or employé of defendant had any hatred or ill will or malicious intention towards the plaintiff in the publication of the alleged libel, and the court, on review, held that that testimony was competent and proper for the purpose of showing an absence of ill will or malice against plaintiff in the publication. There can be no just criticism of that ruling. The case here is different. A reporter of a newspaper, having no other connection therewith, is a mere employé, with no power or authority over the policies of the paper. He, as a rule, in the discharge of his duties as a reporter, must follow the established policies of the newspaper with which he is thus connected, and has nothing to do with the character of the publications made by the newspaper. And in the very case cited by appellant and above referred to (Brown v. Title Co., 151 Mass. 127, at page 129, 23 N. E. 733), it is said:

"If either witness [that is, either the president or the vice president and general manager of the defendant in that case] had nothing to do with the publication, his evidence would be immaterial; if it was claimed that either one made or authorized the publication, his evidence would be material."

And to the above we may add that the burden was upon the defendant to show that the witnesses named made or authorized the publication. So it is true in this case. No question was asked of the witness Austin the object of which was to show, nor was there otherwise any testimony showing or tending to show, that he (Austin) authorized or was in any way responsible for the publications complained of, or had any authority to control the policy of the defendant, or direct what publications should or should not be made by the defendant.

No other points are made.

In accordance with the views herein set forth, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

RECTOR v. LEWIS et al. (Civ. 3165.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 17, 1920.)

CROPS ~~2~~—EJECTMENT ~~132~~—CROPS HARVESTED WHILE WRONGDOER WAS IN POSSESSION HELD NOT RECOVERABLE AS DAMAGES.

Where possession of land is taken unlawfully, but not under circumstances justifying exemplary damages, the owner cannot recover as damages for the use and occupation of the land during the time of its unlawful detention the gross value of the crop raised thereon by the trespasser, but his damages are confined to the rental value of the land; for, although crops growing on the land when its possession is recovered by the owner go with the land to the owner, harvested crops belong to the trespasser.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by J. L. Rector against Wellington J. Lewis and another. From a judgment for defendants on their cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

N. B. Bachtell, of Lancaster, and Robert L. Hubbard, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George L. Sanders, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SLOANE, J. The parties to this action had entered into a contract for the exchange of lands. Plaintiff brought suit to enforce the execution of a deed to the premises which defendants had contracted to convey, and of which plaintiff was in possession. Defendants answered and filed their cross-complaint for a rescission of the contract and for recovery of possession of the land and certain personal property that went with it, as covered by the contract, together with damages for waste, the value of crops raised and harvested by plaintiff, and the rental value of the land.

The trial court, by an interlocutory judgment, denied plaintiff the relief sought under his complaint, and gave judgment for defendants on their cross-complaint, decreeing the rescission of the contract for exchange of properties, and awarding the return of possession, with damages to defendants, to be determined on an accounting and on further hearing in the suit. On an appeal to the Supreme Court (172 Cal. 1, 155 Pac. 75) the interlocutory judgment was affirmed, and the case remanded for the taking of further testimony as to damages. This appeal is by plaintiff from final judgment for defendants for damages arising from conversion of certain personal property and the use and occupation of defendants' premises.

The principal point of appellant's contention is upon a finding of the court that plaintiff had converted to his own use 144½ tons of hay, of the value of $2,890, the personal property of and belonging to defendants, and grown on said real property. It is contended that this finding is not supported by the evidence. The evidence discloses, accepting defendants' version of it, that there was on the premises, when plaintiff took possession, 11 tons of hay belonging to defendants; that plaintiff, during his possession, raised and harvested 180 tons, making a total of 191 tons; and that 46½ tons had been turned over to defendants, leaving 144½ tons unaccounted for, upon which the court fixed a valuation of $20 per ton, and gave judgment for defendants for that amount.

The legal question presented is whether defendants can recover as damages for the use and occupation of their land during the time it was unlawfully detained by the plaintiff the gross value of the crop raised thereon by plaintiff. It is insisted by appellant that in no event could the recovery be for more than the value after deducting the cost of growing and harvesting the crop, and that the true measure of damages is not the crops grown on the land, but the rental value of the premises. The trial court found that the plaintiff obtained possession of defendants' land "by seizing and taking it from defendants' possession, against their consent." We are not advised as to whether the evidence supports such finding; but, at the most, it obtains no support from defendants' pleadings. The cross-complaint contains the only reference to plaintiff's possession of the premises, as follows:

"* * * The possession of which Los Angeles County property these defendants had surrendered to plaintiff on his promise in said contract of January 11, 1912, contained that he would complete the terms and conditions of said contract."

It thus appears that possession was surrendered by defendants in pursuance of the contract afterwards rescinded. In any event, even under the findings of the court, the possession, though unlawful, was not taken forcibly or under such conditions of malice and oppression as would justify punitive damages, and the recovery must therefore be limited to compensatory damages.

Lightner Min. Co. v. Lane, 161 Cal. 689, 120 Pac. 771, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1093, and Avakian v. Noble, 121 Cal. 216, 53 Pac. 559, have been called to our attention as decisions laying down the rule of punitive damages. In the former case the punitive damages were not upheld as against the defendants; and in both cases the actions for damages were upon facts showing a willful, fraudulent, and forcible taking of property in the nature of chattels from lands in the actual possession of the plaintiffs. The rule applicable to crops grown and harvested upon land by a trespasser, or one in unlawful possession, not under circumstances to justify exemplary damages, would seem to be that, if the possession is recovered by the owner, he takes the growing crops with the land, but that crops harvested are the property of the one in unlawful possession, and the owner's remedy is to recover the rental value of his land. 12 Cyc. 977; Johnston v. Fish, 105 Cal. 420, 38 Pac. 979, 45 Am. St. Rep. 53; Sutherland on Damages, vol. 4, § 1023; Groome v. Almstead, 101 Cal. 425, 35 Pac. 1021; Huerstal v. Muir, 64 Cal. 450, 2 Pac. 33; Churchill v. Ackerman, 22 Wash. 231, 60 Pac. 406; Page v. Fowler, 39 Cal. 412, 2 Am. Rep. 462. In Page v. Fowler, supra, where the defendant, in wrongful and unlawful possession of plaintiff's land, raised crops which were severed from the realty before judgment for possession in favor of plaintiff was given, the court says:

"But no case has been cited in which this principle, right of recovery for mesne profits and waste, has been held to make the owner of the land out of possession, under such circumstances, the owner of the crops grown and actually harvested by the defendant. The very fact that he may recover the rents and profits of the land shows that he cannot recover the crops; for, as was well said in the case of Stockwell v. Phelps, 34 N. Y. 363, 90 Am. Dec. 710, the owner of the land, in such cases, does not recover the value of the crops raised and harvested, but the value of the use and occupation of the land; and the annual crops of grain and grass, which contain both the value of the use of the land and the labor of the farmer, do not, under such circumstances, belong to the owner of the land."

No brief has been filed in behalf of respondents on this appeal; and, although we have examined the transcript, and, to some extent, the bill of exceptions, we have largely assumed the correctness of the undisputed statement of the case by appellant as a basis for our conclusions. We are of the opinion that the allowance to cross-complainants of the gross market value of the hay harvested from the premises was erroneous. There is also an allowance of $25 for a wagon reach, under the findings, which under the evidence, was valued at $2.50. In view of these errors it is unnecessary to pass upon other minor points raised on the appeal.

Judgment reversed.

BUTLER v. SOLANO LAND CO. (Civ. 3254.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 18, 1920.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⇐519(1)—PLAINTIFF SUING ON CONTRACT EXECUTED BY PRESIDENT MUST PROVE AUTHORITY OF PRESIDENT OR ESTOPPEL OF CORPORATION.

In broker's suit for commission against corporation on written contract executed by its president, alleged to have been executed in excess of his authority, plaintiff, in order to recover, was required to prove that president was expressly authorized to execute contract, or that it was an act fairly within the implied powers incidental to his office, or that the corporation was estopped to deny his authority by reason of having accepted the benefit of the contract or otherwise.

2. TRIAL ⇐165—PRESUMPTIONS FOR PLAINTIFF ON MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

All presumptions are in favor of plaintiff on a motion for nonsuit.

3. CORPORATIONS ⇐432(12)—STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT TO BROKER HELD INSUFFICIENT TO GIVE PRESIDENT IMPLIED AUTHORITY TO EXECUTE BROKERAGE CONTRACT.

Statement by president of corporation that he was tired of paying interest on mortgage since death of his partner, and that "of course it is all left up to me," held insufficient to show that president had implied authority to execute written brokerage contract, under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 6, employing broker to sell the land.

1. CORPORATIONS — 404(2) — PRESIDENT WITHOUT POWER BY VIRTUE OF OFFICE TO ALIENATE CORPORATE PROPERTY.

The president of a corporation has no power by virtue of his office to alienate its property, which can only be done by the board of directors.

5. CORPORATIONS — 399(1) — IMPLIED AUTHORITY OF PRESIDENT MUST ARISE OUT OF DUTIES INTRUSTED OR ACQUIESCED IN.

Implied authority of the president of a corporation must arise out of the duties and responsibilities actually intrusted to him by the corporation or the duties assumed by him and acquiesced in by the corporation, and not upon his statements regarding such duties and responsibilities.

6. CORPORATIONS — 426(10) — CORPORATION, HAVING ACCEPTED BENEFIT OF CONTRACT EXECUTED BY PRESIDENT, CANNOT DENY PRESIDENT'S AUTHORITY.

Corporation, having entered into contract produced by broker, is estopped from denying the authority of its president to execute brokerage contract, having accepted the benefits of such contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by Harold W. Butler against the Solano Land Company. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

Melvin E. Van Dine and Oliver Dibble, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

C. W. Durbrow, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against him upon a motion for nonsuit. The action was for $8,457, alleged to be due plaintiff as commission for selling land of the defendant. Defendant answered, admitting a verbal contract with the plaintiff, but asserting that such contract was conditioned upon the full performance by the purchaser of his contract to purchase the land, and that the purchaser produced had performed none of the conditions of his contract, and further alleged that no written contract was ever entered into between the plaintiff and defendant, or between the plaintiff and any one authorized to act for the defendant. The plaintiff submitted his case upon his own testimony solely, and introduced in evidence a document reading as follows:

"San Francisco, Cal., April 12, 1917.

"This is to certify that H. W. Butler is entitled to 5 per cent. commission on sale made by him of what is known as the Barnhart tract, estimated to be 5,638 acres, at $30 an acre.

"Payment of this commission to be arranged between Mr. H. W. Butler and Mr. E. A. Bunker, president of the Solano Land Company; Solano Land Company,

"E. A. Bunker, President."

[1] As the plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon a written contract (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6; Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 6), the only question presented upon this appeal is whether or not the corporation is bound by the above-quoted writing. The record contains no proof of express authority of the president to make this contract; there is no seal affixed to the document to make it prima facie proof against the corporation. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove either that the officer executing the instrument was expressly authorized to execute the same, or that it was an act fairly within the implied powers incidental to his office, or that the corporation is estopped to deny his authority by reason of having accepted the benefit of the contract, or otherwise. There is no contention that the first of these requirements was met, and the argument of the appellant upon the second point is that, because the plaintiff stated in his testimony that the president of the defendant corporation, Mr. Bunker, told him in a conversation, "I have been paying out interest on the mortgage for a number of years since the death of my partner, and I am getting tired of it, and of course it is all left up to me," this establishes sufficiently broad general powers in the president to raise a presumption upon a motion for a nonsuit that he was authorized to execute the contract introduced in evidence.

[2-5] While it is true that all presumptions are in favor of the plaintiff upon a motion for a nonsuit, we do not think this testimony was sufficient to clothe the officer in question with implied authority. The president of a corporation has no power, by virtue of his office, to alienate its property. This can only be done by the board of directors. Black v. Harrison Home Co., 155 Cal. 121, 99 Pac. 494. Did he then, in this particular case, by reason of all the circumstances in evidence, have implied authority? Apart from the fact that we are of the opinion that the above-quoted statement made by him does not indicate authority broad enough to carry with it such implied authority, even though such statement be taken as evidence against the corporation, there is the further fact that the implied authority must arise out of the duties and responsibilities actually intrusted to him by the corporation, or the duties assumed by him and acquiesced in by the corporation, and not upon his statements regarding such duties and responsibilities. This is not a suit against an agent for breach of warranty of authority, and the representations of the agent are not of importance here.

[6] There remains for our consideration the remaining question of whether sufficient facts appear to raise an estoppel against the corporation upon a motion for nonsuit. The defendant did not present its case, and we have before us, upon the consideration of this motion, as before stated, merely the pleadings and testimony of the plaintiff, together with the writing signed by Mr. Bunker which appears herein. But it does appear, by the pleadings, and it is not denied, that the corporation did accept the purchaser produced by the plaintiff and entered into a contract with him for the purchase and sale of the real estate in question. The contract entered into between said purchaser and the corporation is set out as an exhibit to the complaint. This contract is signed by the president and secretary of the corporation on its behalf, and the corporate seal is affixed. It appears, therefore, that the corporation took the fruits of the work of the plaintiff. It accepted the benefit of the contract made by its president, purporting to be made on behalf of the corporation, and it is now estopped to deny his authority to execute the contract. Of course, the evidence of the defendant is not before us, and perhaps it may be able to prove that the contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, in accordance with which the purchaser was accepted, was a different one than that to which plaintiff has testified, and that its terms were as alleged in the answer. But before us now we have no such proof, and upon consideration of the motion for a nonsuit, with all presumptions in favor of the plaintiff, and upon the record before us, there appears to be sufficient evidence of estoppel to put the defendant to his proof. Indeed, in one of the cases cited to us by the respondent (Northwestern Packing Co. v. Whitney, 5 Cal. App. 105, 108, 89 Pac. 981, 982) the situation presented here is considered, for it is said that in that case "the doctrine of estoppel does not apply, because the corporation has not availed itself of any benefit in any way or manner by reason of the alleged contract." From the record before us, it appears that the corporation has availed itself of the benefits of the contract, the execution of which it seeks to deny. Under such circumstances the nonsuit order was improper.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to reopen the case and allow the defendant to put in its defense.

SLOANE, J. We are always anxious to get an appreciative understanding of appellants' troubles, whether real or imaginary; but it must be confessed that in this case we have studied the record on appeal—if such it may be termed—in vain to find any connected legal history of the transactions involved. The appeal is taken on the alternative plan, and the purported transcript contains motions, decrees, orders, and affidavits in indiscriminate order, some of them entitled in the principal case, some in other presumably related matters, and some not entitled in any action or proceeding. The notice of appeal is directed to a "minute order made and entered after final judgment, denying plaintiff's motion by reason of collusion and want of jurisdiction on the 18th day of January, 1917." The only order we find in the record meeting any of the characteristics of the notice of appeal—and that only by correspondence of the dates—is an order of January 18, 1917, wherein it is "ordered that the motion to set aside stipulation and judgment be and the same is hereby denied." This order apparently relates to proceedings on a notice of motion to vacate and set aside a judgment of the trial court, and a stipulation of counsel upon which the judgment was based; but we are unable to find either the judgment or stipulation in the transcript.

From data contained in affidavits of appellant contained in the transcript, from statements in his brief, and from decisions of the Supreme Court, cited by appellant, in former appeals growing out of the same case, we gather that originally one De Leonis, appellant's predecessor in interest, brought action against one Etchepare, for whose estate the respondent herein is administrator, to procure reconveyance of certain real property which had been deeded by De Leonis to Etchepare, and to recover certain moneys claimed to be due from Etchepare on an accounting as agent; and that it was found and decreed therein—and such decree affirmed by the Supreme Court (De Leonis v. Walsh, 140 Cal. 175, 73 Pac. 813)—that the deed was a mortgage, and that Etchepare held it as security for the sum of $2,444.09 due him from the plaintiff. There was another appeal before the Supreme Court in the same case, taken by the plaintiff (De Leonis v. Walsh, 145 Cal. 200, 78 Pac. 637), in which the plaintiff De Leonis took exceptions to the amount of credits allowed the Etchepare estate. In this appeal a new trial was granted; and it was on this new trial to ascertain the state of the account between De Leonis and Etchepare, constituting the lien for which the mortgage was held, that the attorneys for all parties entered into a stipulation that the deed, which had been held to have been executed as a mortgage, should be vacated and set aside, and that plaintiff De Leonis recover the sum of $4,834 from the Etchepare estate. It nowhere appears that counsel were without authority to enter into a stipulation for such a judgment; and neither does it appear why the appellant here, as successor in interest of De Leonis, is dissatisfied with the final result. The deed, which had been held valid to the extent of a mortgage security against De Leonis, was entirely wiped out; and, instead of a claim for $2,444.09, or any other sum, against the plaintiff, there was a judgment for $4,834 for the plaintiff against the Etchepare estate. We point out these conclusions merely to show appellant that the court has endeavored to reach an understanding of the merits of his claim.

However, the record is entirely insufficient to support any of the contentions attempted to be raised on this appeal. It would be about as difficult to point out why it is insufficient as to specify why the filing of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary would not be a sufficient pleading of the Declaration of Independence.

Furthermore, the transcript, which was, on the 27th day of December, 1917, certified by the trial judge, bears on its face an order, over the judge's signature, and dated the following day, vacating and setting aside the certificate, on the ground that it was inadvertently signed after an order refusing to sign the same. Such transcript, therefore, as is presented is not properly authenticated.

It may be said, in extenuation of this record, that appellant prosecutes the appeal in propria persona, and is himself not a lawyer. It is proverbially indiscreet for even one learned in the law to be his own lawyer. It is obviously an impossible condition for a layman, particularly in the intricacies of preparing a record on appeal.

The order appealed from stands affirmed.

(Civ. 2710.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 20, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, April 15, 1920.)

1. SALES ⇨52(7)—EVIDENCE HELD TO SUSTAIN FINDING AGAINST FRAUD IN OBTAINING DEFENDANT'S SIGNATURE TO SALES CONTRACT.

In an action for breach of a written contract to deliver 200 tons of scrap iron at a specified price, wherein defendant contended that the amount was 85 tons only, and that he had been imposed upon because of his ignorance and inability to understand English, evidence held to support a finding that defendant's signature had not been fraudulently obtained.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1010(1)—FINDINGS SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE CONCLUSIVE.

A conclusion of the trial judge upon a question of fact is conclusive upon an appellate court, where any evidence is exhibited by the record which furnishes substantial support to the finding.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Morris Himovitz and William Himovitz, doing business under the firm name and style of the Bakersfield Junk Company, against S. Silverman for breach of contract. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. J. Emmons, of Bakersfield, for appellant.
E. A. Klein, of Bakersfield, for respondents.

JAMES, J. Appeal by the defendant from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiffs for damages. The action was to recover for the breach of a written contract whereby defendant agreed to deliver to the plaintiffs a certain quantity of scrap iron. The contract as it was reduced to writing was expressed in the following terms:

"May 12, 1917, sold to Bakersfield Junk Company, by S. Silverman, 150 tons of scrap oil well iron at the price of $14.00 per ton f. o. b. Mariposa, Cal. All boilers must be cut not longer than that four feet long and two feet wide. Also fifty (50) tons of cast iron at $17.00 per ton f. o. b. Mariposa, Cal.

"Received in advance ($1,000.00) one thousand dollars, balance to be paid when all goods are delivered. No less than one carload a week to be delivered; cars should contain 25 tons each. [Signed] S. Silverman."

In addition to a denial of the allegations of the complaint, defendant alleged that his signature to the contract was obtained through plaintiffs' fraud, in that defendant could not read or write the English language, and that it was not understood that any specific quantity of scrap iron should be delivered by the defendant to the plaintiffs, but only a lot of iron then in the possession of defendant, the quantity of which was not accurately ascertained. Defendant did deliver 85 tons of iron, and it was his claim that that included the whole of the quantity intended to be sold. The contract, it will be observed, is specific as to the number of tons sold, and it contains no ambiguous term which would make proper any oral testimony as to what the intent of the parties was; hence the sole question presented turned upon the assertion on the part of the defendant that the plaintiffs had taken advantage of his ignorance and his lack of understanding of English, and so fraudulently obtained his signature to a contract which did not express the understanding or intent of the parties.

[1, 2] The court found the facts against the defendant and this finding is fully supported by substantial evidence. One of the witnesses who testified had been called in by the two parties to reduce the agreement to writing. He stated that plaintiffs and defendant took some time to agree upon what the contract should be, and that then he wrote down what they told him and put it in typewriting. He testified further that, after typewriting the contract, he read it to the parties, and that "both of them" said that it was all right. He testified that plaintiffs and defendant spent about an hour in talking over the terms of the contract, and that they argued between themselves about the tonnage to be specified, and that they finally reached an agreement; that he then prepared the document and read it over to them, as stated. It having appeared that there was direct and substantial evidence in opposition to the claim of the defendant that fraud had been practiced upon him, there is presented a condition which requires that the judgment of the court upon that matter be confirmed. We need only reiterate the invariable and established rule that the conclusion of the trial judge upon a question of fact is conclusive upon an appellate court, where any evidence is exhibited by the record which furnishes substantial support to the finding.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

As an order granting change of venue has all the characteristics of a final judgment and is appealable, plaintiff is estopped by such order from bringing another action upon the same facts in the county from which the first action has been transferred, after a dismissal of the first action.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by William M. Fitzhugh against the University Realty Company. From order denying defendant's motion for change of venue, it appeals. Reversed.

Frederick Schneider, of Palo Alto, for appellant.

Chas. S. Wheeler and John F. Bowie, both of San Francisco (Nathan Moran, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. [1] This is an action to recover $5,000 paid upon a contract of purchase of real property, which contract was afterward rescinded by the plaintiff because of alleged fraudulent representations made to him by the defendants, as agents for the owner of the land contracted to be purchased by him. The owner of the land consented to the rescission of the contract, and plaintiff then sued the University Realty Company to recover from it the initial payment which he had made on the land, a part of which, under the terms of the contract was to be retained by defendant as commission in the event a sale was not consummated in accordance with the conditions of the contract. The action was commenced in the city and county of San Francisco against the defendant corporation, which is a resident of the county of Santa Clara. After the service of summons upon defendant, it filed an affidavit of merits and demanded a trial in the county of Santa Clara. From the order denying a change of venue, this appeal is taken. As appears from the affidavits, the plaintiff contracted to buy certain real property owned by Peter and Laura E. Faber and situated at San Mateo. The sale was negotiated by Norwood B. Smith, the president of the University Realty Company. The contract, which is set out in the affidavits, acknowledged the receipt of $5,000 on account of the purchase price of the property, and contained the provision that the "deposit is received subject to the approval of the owner." It is alleged in the affidavit of plaintiff that the negotiations leading to the making of the contract and the alleged false representations took place in San Francisco, and that the contract was signed by him and by the University Realty Company at San Francisco. It is alleged in defendant's affidavit, however, and not contradicted, that the approval of the sale of the property, signed by the Fabers, was executed at Runnymede, San Mateo county, Cal. It appears from the face of the contract itself that it was not binding until such approval was indorsed thereon. The time and place for the consummation of a contract is when and where the last act necessary for its validity has been performed. Hammond v. Ocean Shore Dev. Co., 22 Cal. App. 170, 133 Pac. 978. It therefore appears upon the face of the affidavits that the contract was consummated at San Mateo county. The contract, according to its terms, was to be performed at the office of the defendant in Santa Clara county. It appears from the plaintiff's affidavit that he had rescinded the contract as between plaintiff and the defendant and as between plaintiff and Peter and Laura Faber. It further appears that the notice of rescission was served upon the defendant at its office in Palo Alto, Santa Clara county. The above facts stand uncontradicted in the affidavits.

[2, 3] The respondent seeks to uphold the action of the trial court by arguing that this is not an action which depends upon a rescission of the contract, or upon the contract in any way. It is asserted that a rescission of the contract was unnecessary for the maintenance of this action. The contract itself shows, and the affidavits of both parties agree, that the $5,000 was paid as a part payment upon a contract for the purchase of real estate. Upon discovering the fraud, the plaintiff had one of two remedies open to him: Either to affirm the contract and sue in tort for damages suffered by reason of the fraudulent misrepresentations, in which action he would not necessarily be limited in his recovery to the $5,000 initial payment; or, second to disaffirm the contract and recover what he had paid thereunder. Hammond v. Ocean Shore Dev. Co., supra, 22 Cal. App. 171, 133 Pac. 978. Obviously he has chosen to do the latter. This choice gives rise to a quasi contractual right. It does not sound in tort and arise upon the commission of the tort. It is true, as the respondent contends, that the action is not brought upon the original contract between the parties, and therefore the facts regarding the place where the original contract was consummated and the location of its subject-matter, etc., are not vital here, and we mention them merely in passing to indicate how the controversy arose. The right upon the part of the plaintiff to sue for money had and received grows out of a quasi contract between the plaintiff and defendant whereby, by a legal fiction, the defendant promised to pay to the plaintiff the amount for which he sues. The nature of the action is discussed in Hammond v. Ocean Shore Dev. Co., supra, and in numerous other cases in this and other states. Suffice it to say here that the original contract between the plaintiff and defendant was not void because of fraudulent representations. It was merely voidable at the election of the plaintiff. Until disaffirmed by the plaintiff, it was a valid and existing obligation against him, and the payment he has made was one called for by this contract. He has decided to disaffirm and demand a repayment of money under the contract by reason of alleged fraudulent representations. Upon making such demand the law creates an obligation upon the part of the defendant to repay the amount received, and introduces the fiction of a promise by said defendant to repay, and thereby builds up a quasi contract between the parties which is the basis of this action. That quasi contract went into effect instantaneously upon the service of the notice of rescission, and at the place where such notice was served, Santa Clara county, and upon this contract created by the law the plaintiff had the right to bring an action in general assumpsit for money had and received. Hammond v. Ocean Shore Dev. Co., supra. This he has done.

Section 16, art. 12, of the Constitution provides that a corporation may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed or where the obligation or liability arises, or the breach occurs, or in the county where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated. The quasi contract sued upon here was created by the law at Palo Alto upon the service of the notice of rescission. In the absence of other agreement, it will be assumed that it was to be performed where it was made. The liability arose in Palo Alto, and the principal place of business of the corporation defendant is situated in said place. It would appear, therefore, that there is no authority for the maintenance of this action in the city and county of San Francisco, and that the order must be reversed.

[4] While we have discussed this matter on the merits, it would appear that this is unnecessary for a decision of the question involved. The affidavit of the respondent states that another action upon these same facts and between the same parties was filed in the superior court of San Francisco prior to the commencement of this action; that a motion for a change of place of trial was thereupon made by the defendant and appellant, and said motion was granted, and an order made transferring said cause to Santa Clara county; that respondent was not represented at the hearing of said motion, and later moved the court to set aside its said order, which the court refused to do. Respondent thereupon dismissed said action and caused said dismissal to be entered upon the register of actions of the clerk of the court in and for the county of Santa Clara, and upon the dismissal thereof filed the present action involving the same parties and the same questions of law and fact. It has been recently held in the case of Karst v. Seller, 188 Pac. 298, that as an order of the court granting a motion for change of venue has all the characteristics of a final judgment, and an appeal would lie from such an order, the plaintiff is estopped by such order from bringing another action upon the same facts in the county from which said first action had been transferred, after a dismissal of said first action. It is true that the facts in Karst v. Seller, supra, appear to be somewhat different from the facts in the case at bar. If, however, the facts in the two cases are sufficiently unlike to make this rule inapplicable here, it still remains true that upon the merits of the motion the transfer should have been made.

The order denying the motion for a change of place of trial from San Francisco to the county of Santa Clara is reversed.

Under Const. art. 20, § 17½, providing that no constitutional provision shall limit the Legislature's authority to confer on a commission power to carry out legislation for the welfare of employés, and section 21 as adopted in 1911, authorizing provision for settlement by arbitration, by a board, or by the courts, of disputes involving the liability of employers, the Workmen's Compensation Act is not unconstitutional either as depriving parties of their right to trial by jury, guaranteed by article 1, § 7, or as depriving courts of their jurisdiction.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT §398—FAILURE TO GIVE NOTICE UNDER COMPENSATION ACT DOES NOT GIVE COURT JURISDICTION.

Though the failure to give notice of accident required by Workmen's Compensation Act, § 15, may deprive the Industrial Accident Commission of jurisdiction, such failure does not give the court jurisdiction of an action for damages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by Mary Dominguez and others against A. L. Pendola. From an order sustaining demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

B. F. Thomas, of Santa Barbara, for appellants.

Carroll S. Bucher, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for respondent.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, amicus curiæ on behalf of Industrial Accident Commission.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer to a complaint, without leave to amend. The action was brought by the widow and minor children of Alfredo Dominguez, deceased, to recover damages for the death of said deceased, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. The complaint alleged that on the 4th day of February, 1918, the deceased was in the employ of the defendant, who was constructing a water reservoir for the city of Santa Barbara; that the defendant furnished transportation to his employés engaged in working on said reservoir to and from their homes in said city to said reservoir by means of a truck automobile driven by an employé of the said defendant, which automobile had not any means by which one riding on said automobile, when driven rapidly over rough roads or roads having short turns, could prevent himself from being thrown from said automobile; that on the morning of the accident, while the deceased with other employes of the defendant was being transported in defendant's automobile from Santa Barbara to said reservoir to engage in work for the defendant on the reservoir, the driver of the automobile, willfully, negligently, and without proper care, drove said automobile at the rate of about 25 miles an hour around a very short and dangerous turn in the road to said reservoir, and the deceased and two other employes of the defendant were thrown from the automobile with great force and violence, whereby the deceased was instantly killed.

The defendant urged as ground of demurrer that the superior court of Santa Barbara, in which court the complaint was filed, was without jurisdiction of the said action, and that the Industrial Accident Commission of the state of California had sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the same.

[1] The first question to be disposed of upon the appeal is: Do the facts stated in the complaint bring the action within the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of this state (St. 1917, p. 831), so as to give the Industrial Accident Commission jurisdiction? We are of the opinion that they do. Where transportation is furnished by an employer, as an incident of the employment, to convey an employe to and from the place of employment, an injury suffered by the employe going or coming in the vehicle so furnished by the employer, and under the control of the employer, arises out of and is in the course of the employment within the meaning of the compensation act. In re Donovan, 217 Mass. 76, 104 N. E. 431, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 778; Matter of Littler v. Fuller Co., 223 N. Y. 369, 119 N. E. 554; Bradbury's Workmen's Compensation (3d Ed.) pp. 480-484, and cases there cited; Judson Mfg. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 184 Pac. 1; Starr Piano Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 184 Pac. 860.

It is true the case of Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corp. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 173 Cal. 313, 159 Pac. 1041, L. R. A. 1917B, 336, which was based upon the English decisions, contains the statement that an employe going to and from his place of employment is not rendering any service, and begins to render such service only when he arrives at his place of employment and proceeds to use some instrumentality provided by means of which he immediately places himself in a position to perform his tasks. But nowhere in that decision is the legal situation discussed which is presented when an employe, as a part of his contract of employment, is proceeding to his work in a conveyance furnished by his employer and driven by the employer's agent. The appellant argues that the ownership of the conveyance can have no bearing upon the question involved, and in this we disagree with counsel. The logical difference between a situation where the employe is proceeding to work in a conveyance or by a means used by the general public, and where he is proceeding to work by means of an instrumentality furnished to him as an employe, by his employer, is indicated in one of the English cases discussed in the Ocean Accident Case, supra (Leach v. Oakley Street & Co., 4 B. W. C. C. 91). In the quotation from this English case which is inserted in the Ocean Accident decision, it is indicated that, in order to recover under the Workmen's Compensation Act, it is necessary for the employe to have suffered his injury, not because of a danger to which he was exposed as a member of the general public, but by reason of a danger to which he was exposed as an employe in his particular employment. And it seems to us that this is not only the logical dividing line, but it is the dividing line contemplated by the very purpose of the compensation laws in their effort to place upon an industry the burdens of injuries directly due to the hazard incidental to the industry. In the present case, if deceased had been riding upon a public conveyance, although he was on his way to his work, he would have been subject to the same dangers as any other member of the general public, and if he suffered an accident it would be as a member of the general public and due to a risk which he, in common with other members of the public, ran. But when he enters a vehicle provided by his employer for the purpose of conducting him to the place of his employment, he enters that vehicle, not as a member of the public, but as an employe of the defendant. In other words, the danger to which plaintiffs' decedent was exposed in riding in this automobile, alleged to have been unprotected, and without guards or rails, and driven by a negligent driver, was a danger to which he was exposed, not as a member of the public, but because, and only because, he was an employe of the defendant. This danger was an incident to his employment; it arose out of his employment, and was within the scope thereof.

The Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act gives the Industrial Accident Commission exclusive jurisdiction of actions arising out of injuries under the circumstances presented here, and the superior court of the county of Santa Barbara was without jurisdiction.

Appellant seeks to avoid the force of these facts by attacking the constitutionality of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act. It is asserted that the act is unconstitutional because it divests an injured employe, or the representatives of a deceased employe, of the right of trial by jury in violation of section 7, art. 1, of the Constitution of this state; that the act is also unconstitutional because it deprives the superior courts of this state of the jurisdiction conferred upon them by section 5, art. 6, of the Constitution.

[2] While these precise points were not urged, apparently, in the case of Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 151 Pac. 398, the court in that case commented upon the objection raised in other states that similar acts were unconstitutional because they deprived both employer and employé of the right to trial by jury, saying that this objection had no application to the law in this state, "for although our Constitution has always contained a provision securing the right of trial by jury (article 1, § 7), the Legislature is, as we have already pointed out, expressly authorized by section 21 of article 20 to provide for the settlement by arbitration, by a board, or by the courts, of disputes involving the liability of employers. This section, adopted in 1911, worked a repeal pro tanto, of any conflicting provision which may have been in force theretofore." The language above quoted, in connection with the language of sections 17½ and 21 of article 20 of the Constitution of California, is a complete answer to both contentions of the appellant upon this question.

[3] We may very briefly dispose of the only other point raised by the appellant, which is that as section 15 of the Workmen's Compensation Act provides that no claim to recover compensation under the act shall be maintained unless within 30 days after the occurrence of the injury notice in writing shall be served upon the employer, etc., and, as the complaint in this case does not allege that such notice was served, it does not appear that the Industrial Accident Commission had jurisdiction. Appellant argues that if, by reason of the omission of notice, the Industrial Accident Commission had no jurisdiction, then the superior court would acquire jurisdiction. In the first place, the requirement of written notice contained in section 15 is not absolute, and facts may appear which would make the written notice unnecessary to the jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Commission under the express language of the section. But be that as it may, it is certain that even though the appellant had by her omissions forfeited her rights before the Industrial Accident Commission, that in itself could not confer jurisdiction upon another tribunal. Under the Workmen's Compensation Act, the Industrial Accident Commission is vested with exclusive jurisdiction of actions such as the one here under consideration, and no neglect or failure upon the part of the employé or his dependents to comply with any provisions of the act can vest the superior court with jurisdiction.

The judgment is affirmed.

EILERS MUSIC CO. v. MATHE et al.

(Civ. 2680.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 20, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ¶757(3) — BRIEF MUST STATE MATERIAL PORTIONS OF THE EVIDENCE.

A brief complaining of insufficiency of evidence to sustain findings is manifestly incomplete, where it shows on its face that material parts of the evidence are omitted.

2. PLEADING ¶381(3) — DEFENDANT'S EVIDENCE OF WANT OF CONSIDERATION OF BILL OF SALE INTRODUCED BY PLAINTIFF HELD ADMISSIBLE, THOUGH NOT PLEADED.

In action to recover personal property, where the complaint did not refer to bills of sale, which were introduced by plaintiff at the trial to aid in establishing proof of its title and right of possession, defendant's evidence of want of consideration for the bills of sale was admissible, although defendant did not plead such want of consideration; defendant not being required to plead as to items of evidence offered by plaintiff in support of the ultimate facts pleaded in its complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the Eilers Music Company against J. J. Mathe and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Bryant, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bertin A. Weyl and Clarence E. Fleming, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover possession of personal property alleged to be unlawfully withheld from plaintiff by the defendants. Judgment in favor of defendants, from which the plaintiff appeals.

We first call attention to two statements in the brief for appellant which should not have been made, as they are wholly unjustified by the record. These statements are: That the defendant Mathe by his answer pleaded a general denial as his only defense, and that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment, because they consist wholly of conclusions of law and make no finding of fact. There is thus imposed upon the court a useless labor, whereby it is ascertained that the complaint is in the usual form of actions of this class; that the defendant filed a verified answer, specifically denying in due form each and every allegation of the complaint; and that the findings of fact respond in detail to every issue raised by the pleadings.

The only other points suggested in support of the appeal are: That the findings are "wholly unsupported by the proofs," that the court erred in admitting evidence tending to show failure of consideration for the execution of two bills of sale, and that the court erred in admitting evidence of another transaction between the parties not referred to in the pleadings.

[1] Under the claim that the findings are unsupported by the evidence, no specification is made of any particular in which the evidence is insufficient to support any fact found. The evidence to which our attention has been directed in the briefs for appellant is manifestly incomplete, in that on its face it shows that important parts of the evidence are omitted. We conclude that the evidence is sufficient in every particular.

[2] Taken together, the two bills of sale included the property of which plaintiff sued to recover possession. They were executed by defendant J. J. Mathe on January 26, 1916, and purported to transfer the property to F. W. Schubert. Indorsed on each document there was an assignment by Schubert, dated January 29, 1916, transferring to plaintiff all of his interest in the property described in the bills. They were introduced in evidence by the plaintiff to aid in establishing proof of plaintiff's title and right of possession. Schubert was an employé of the plaintiff. The evidence introduced by defendants, which appellant claims was erroneously received, was offered for the purpose of proving that the bills of sale were really obtained by Schubert on behalf of the plaintiff, and that their execution was procured without any consideration therefor.

Appellant contends that this evidence should have been rejected, for the reason that defendants' answer did not set out the facts showing a failure of consideration for said bills of sale. The authorities cited are decisions in cases where the plaintiff's cause of action was founded upon a written instrument, the execution whereof was alleged by the plaintiff. In such cases it was held that it was the duty of the defendant to plead want of consideration, if he desired to make that defense. But in the case at bar the complaint did not refer to any bills of sale, and did not warn the defendants that such bills of sale were relied upon as a part of the plaintiff's cause of action. It is clear that under such circumstances, and where the defendants were not called upon to give attention to the bills of sale until they were offered in evidence, the defendants had neither the opportunity nor the duty to defend against them, except as items of evidence offered by the plaintiff in support of the ultimate facts pleaded in its complaint.

The evidence of "another transaction," referred to in the last point suggested by appellant, was evidence connected with said bills of sale, and was a part of the evidence appropriately offered for the purpose of showing that they were executed without consideration. We find no error in the ruling of the court thereon.

The judgment is affirmed.

NEW YORK LIFE INS. CO. v. DUNN et al.
(Civ. 3240.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Feb. 19, 1920.)

INSURANCE — 587 — CHANGE OF BENEFICIARY CANNOT BE ATTACKED FOR UNDUE INFLUENCE.

The beneficiary named in an insurance policy which authorizes insured to change the beneficiary cannot, in the absence of a contract with insured or any special equities depriving him of the right to make such change, attack his change of beneficiary for undue influence on the part of the new beneficiary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Suit of interpleader by the New York Life Insurance Company against Lilian S. Dunn, May Cline Smith, and another, in which each of the defendants named filed cross-complaints. From a judgment in favor of cross-complainant Smith, cross-complainant Dunn appeals. Affirmed.

A. G. Allen and Elvon C. Musick, both of Pasadena (Theo. Church, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

W. W. Webster and Leonard L. Riccardi, both of Pasadena, and W. N. Goodwin and Goodwin & Morgrage, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Smith.

Meserve & Meserve, of Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

A. I. McCormick, of Los Angeles, for defendant Georgie June Dunn.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff, New York Life Insurance Company, brought this action in interpleader to compel the defendants to litigate among themselves their various claims to the proceeds of an insurance policy upon the life of John T. Dunn. Judgment was in favor of cross-complainant and respondent, May Cline Smith. Lilian S. Dunn, also a cross-complainant, appeals.

It appears that John T. Dunn, on December 13, 1906, took out a life insurance policy in the New York Life Insurance Company in the sum of $10,000, naming Lilian S. Dunn, his wife, beneficiary thereunder. Under the terms of the policy Dunn had the right to change the beneficiary named therein. During his lifetime, on or about the 24th day of March, 1916, Dunn requested the insurance company to change the beneficiary named in said policy, and directed that May Cline Smith be named therein to the extent of $6,500, and Georgie June Dunn, his daughter, to the extent of $3,500, which changes were made.

Dunn died on the 26th day of October, 1916. Thereupon Lillian S. Dunn, the wife, notified the insurance company that she was still the beneficiary named in the policy. She claimed there had been no legal or valid change therein, and that she was entitled to the proceeds of the insurance. May Cline Smith and Georgie June Dunn also demanded of the company the payment to them of the respective amounts already noted. The insurance company then commenced this action in interpleader.

Lillian S. Dunn filed her cross-complaint. She did not plead any contract with her deceased husband, or any special equities which would deprive him of the right to make a commutation of beneficiary in the insurance policy, but stood upon the ground that she might contest because the change was procured by fraud and undue influence. In that behalf she alleged the marriage of herself and Dunn; that up to the time of his death she continued to be his lawful wife, and that the policy of insurance was taken out as a protection and source of provision for her in the event of the death of her husband and for her and such children as might be born to her and her husband; that May Cline Smith, by craftiness, flattery, coaxing, and other overt and sly ways, and means on the part of said May Cline Smith toward John T. Dunn, caused him to neglect his wife and daughter to the extent that said May Cline Smith became the mistress of said John T. Dunn; that she exercised her influence unduly over him to such a degree that about the middle of March, 1916, he was not capable of acting freely and voluntarily; that at that time and because thereof he attempted to cause the beneficiary named in said policy to be changed; that said act was exercised and induced by the fraud and undue influence of said May Cline Smith while she and Dunn were living together in adulterous relationship.

May Cline Smith filed her answer, denying the allegations of the cross-complaint, and prayed that the court decree that she was entitled to $6,500 because of such policy and the assignment.

At the trial it was admitted by the cross-complainant, Lillian S. Dunn, that her husband was of sound mind at the time of executing the change of beneficiary. She then attempted to introduce evidence upon the issues of fraud and undue influence. The defendant and cross-complainant, May Cline Smith, objected to this testimony upon the ground that, inasmuch as the decedent had the right to change the beneficiary named in the policy, and there not being any contract between the claimant and the decedent, or any special equities depriving the decedent of the right to make such change, any testimony tending to support the allegations of the complaint was inadmissible. The court sustained the objection and subsequently dismissed the cross-complaint. Its action in this regard is the object of attack upon this appeal.

The ruling of the lower court was correct. The precise question we are here considering was the basis of the discussion in Hoelt v. Supreme Lodge, Knights of Honor, 113 Cal. 91, 96, 45 Pac. 185, 33 L. R. A. 174. The court there decided that under the state of facts pleaded by the cross-complainant in the case at bar, and upon which she elected to stand, no cause of action existed in her favor; she having no vested right in the premises, but, at most, only the mere expectancy of an incompleated gift, revocable at the will of the insured. Waring v. Wilcox, 8 Cal. App. 317, 96 Pac. 910, New York Life Ins. Co. v. Daley, 25 Cal. App. 376, 143 Pac. 1033, and Supreme Council Am. Legion of Honor v. Gehrenbeck, 124 Cal. 43, 56 Pac. 640, are decisions holding to the same effect. Without further citation of authority, suffice it to say that these cases decide every point worthy of consideration in the present appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

VISSCHER et al. v. DIXON et al.
(Civ. 3046.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Feb. 19, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, April 15, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨110—APPEAL FROM ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL DISMISSED.

Since an order denying a new trial no longer is appealable, an appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⇨1011(1)—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE CONCLUSIVE.

Findings of fact of a trial court upon conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.

3. CORPORATIONS ⇨80(11)—FINDING OF NO FALSE REPRESENTATIONS AS TO FINANCIAL CONDITION ON SALE OF STOCK SUSTAINED.

In an action to rescind a contract whereby plaintiffs purchased corporate stock, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that defendants did not make false representations concerning the financial condition of the corporation.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR 1072—DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL FOR NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE HARMLESS IN VIEW OF DETERMINATION.

Where trial court found there were no representations concerning the financial condition of a corporation in an action to rescind a sale of corporate stock for fraud, there was no error in denying a motion for a new trial based on the ground of newly discovered evidence, to the effect that items in the books of the corporation were correct, defendants having surprised plaintiffs on the trial by testifying that certain items of indebtedness appearing in the books were incorrect, after admitting in their answer that the books were correct.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Wilhelmine E. Visscher and another against E. M. Dixon and others. From judgment for defendants and an order denying plaintiffs' motion for new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Appeal from order dismissed, and judgment affirmed.

Frederick Gros and C. E. McDowell, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. S. Bicksler, Bicksler, Smith & Parke, and Arthur G. Baker, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. [1] Plaintiffs sued to rescind a contract whereby they had purchased 924 shares of the capital stock of the Brinks Express Company, a corporation. The asserted right to rescind is based upon alleged fraudulent representations. Judgment passed for defendants. Plaintiffs moved for a new trial, which was denied. Thereafter plaintiffs appealed from the judgment and likewise from the order denying their motion for a new trial. Since the order denying a new trial no longer is appealable, the appeal therefrom must be dismissed.

The Brinks Express Company owns a number of auto vehicles, which it uses in the freighting business. It likewise hauls mail for the government, for which it is paid $15,000 per year. Plaintiffs, Wilhelmine E. Visscher and Hugo K. Visscher, are, respectively, mother and son. It was the mother's money that bought the stock. The son represented her in all her dealings with defendants and the corporation. The defendants Henry H. Dixon and E. M. Dixon are husband and wife. About December 1, 1913, Mrs. Dixon bought the 924 shares from former stockholders for $10,000. At the time when plaintiffs bought the stock, 921 shares stood in Mrs. Dixon's name, 2 shares in her husband's name, and 1 share in the name of defendant Whittier. About February 26, 1914, Mrs. Visscher put $5,000 into the business of the company, by loaning that sum to the corporation, and receiving from it its promissory note for that amount, due on or before February 26, 1915, indorsed by Whittier as an accommodation indorser, and further secured by a chattel mortgage. As additional consideration for this loan, Mrs. Visscher's son, Hugo, was elected a director and vice president and employed as assistant manager in charge of the automobile drivers and the machine shop, at a salary of $100 per month. He continued thus connected with the corporation until April 23, 1914, when, according to the minutes of that date, he was discharged for incompetency and inattention to business. During the time Hugo was in the company's employ, and thereafter until he and his mother purchased the stock on June 19, 1914, he often spoke to others of buying Mrs. Dixon's stock in order that he and his mother might thereby acquire the control of the company, and upon several occasions evinced a lively inclination to succeed Mrs. Dixon in the management of the business and the ownership of her controlling interest. About June 12, 1914, Hugo went to the office of Mr. Amend, Mrs. Dixon's personal attorney, for the purpose of settling a claim against the company for wages claimed to be due him. The interview that took place on that occasion between Hugo Visscher and Mr. Amend led to the negotiations that eventuated in plaintiffs' purchase of the 924 shares on June 19, 1914, for $5,000, payable as hereinafter stated, and the release of defendant Whittier from all liability as an indorser on the note that the company had given Mrs. Visscher on February 26th next preceding. Pursuant to this sale Mrs. Dixon transferred to plaintiffs the 921 shares that stood in her name, the 2 shares that stood in her husband's name, and the 1 share that stood in Whittier's name. In consideration thereof plaintiffs agreed to and they did pay Mrs. Dixon $50, by giving a check for that amount, and likewise executed to Mrs. Dixon two promissory notes, payable to her order, one for $200 and the other for $4,750. At the same time Mrs. Visscher released and discharged Whittier from all liability as an indorser on the note for $5,000 that the company had given her on February 26, 1914, as evidence of its indebtedness for the $5,000 that she had loaned the company on that date. The only persons who participated in any of the conversations that preceded the consummation of plaintiff's purchase of the stock were Hugo Visscher, representing himself and mother, Mrs. Dixon, representing herself and codefendants, and Mrs. Dixon's attorney, Mr. Amend. Neither Mr. Dixon nor Whittier took any part in the negotiations.

The complaint alleges that, to induce plaintiffs to make the agreement of June 19, 1914, whereby they purchased the 924 shares for $5,000 and released Whittier as an indorser on the company's notes, the defendants, through defendant E. M. Dixon and her attorney Amend, represented: (1) That, at the date of the purchase of the stock, the Brinks Express Company was not indebted in a sum to exceed $11,295; (2) that the gross income of the company for the month of April, 1914, was $3,749.37, and for the month of May, $3,846.37; and (3) that in each of the months of April and May the company had made a net profit of between $600 and $700, and that the business for those two months represented about the average monthly business of the company. Other alleged misrepresentations are set forth in the complaint, but as they were not pressed at the trial we have not deemed it necessary specifically to refer to them. It is alleged that the particular representations above specified were false in that: (1) At the date of the sale of the 924 shares to plaintiffs, the company was indebted in a sum in excess of $18,473; (2) that the gross income for the months of April and May, 1914, did not exceed $2,642.77, and $2,739.67, respectively; and (3) that during the months of April and May the business of the company was prosecuted without any profit whatever. Hugo Visscher testified that immediately after he and his mother purchased the stock he caused an examination of the books of the corporation to be made, that the books showed the indebtedness of the company to be at least $18,473, and the income for the months of April and May to be $2,642.77 and $2,739.67, respectively, and that the corporation was not making any profits.

The court found that defendants did not make any of the alleged representations, and likewise found against the falsity of each and every representation. Indeed, the findings of the court were wholly against plaintiffs on all the controverted matters, and were equally comprehensive upon the question of defendants' good faith and fair dealing.

[2, 3] Appellants earnestly argue that the evidence does not support the court's findings. It is the province of an appellate court to decide questions of law. Findings of the trial court upon conflicting evidence are conclusive here. Though appellants avow full acquiescence in the well-established rule that an appellate court has not the right to disturb a finding if there is any substantial evidence to support it, their argument, nevertheless, is but a thinly veiled effort to induce this court to substitute its inferences of fact for those drawn by the trial court. This we may not do. That there was ample evidence to support the finding that defendants did not make any of the representations alleged in the complaint, is, we think, clearly shown by the record, as a few excerpts will suffice to establish.

Mrs. Dixon describes as follows her connection with the negotiations that preceded the consummation of the sale of the stock:

"I made no arrangement about the purchase at all. I did not talk with Mr. Visscher from the time I told him to leave [referring to the date of his discharge on April 23, 1914] until he came to the office to look the books over. I did not make any statements to him as to the condition of the company with reference to his purchase prior to that time, except what was talked over when he was there working. I never instructed anybody to deliver to him any message. Mr. Amend was my personal attorney. * * * I did not instruct Mr. Amend to tell Mr. Visscher anything about the business. Mr. Visscher came down June 18, 1914, the day before he purchased. Mr. Amend and I were also there, all the time. There was no one else in the upstairs office. Mr. Amend and Mr. Visscher came into the office and spoke to me. 'Good morning,' Mr. Amend says, 'Mrs. Dixon, Mr. Visscher would like to look over the books and see what he wants to know.' I said: 'Very well; the books are here. What is it you wanted to know, Mr. Visscher?' And he said: 'Oh, I understand the business, you know, Mrs. Dixon, but I wanted to know what was the April charges and the May charges [meaning, as we understand the witness, the amount charged to customers for hauling done for them during the months of April and May]?' And I said: 'All right, I will get them for you.' I went into the bookkeepers' room and brought out the charges and turned the book leaf—turned the last leaf over, and in the books the last leaf of the full month's charges were there, the total amount for the month, to post into the ledger. Those charges consisted of duplicates turned over to customers. I showed him the amount to copy it off on a bit of paper he had in his pocket. I let him copy it from the books himself. * * * He had a chair at my desk and was taking it off; I was standing up beside Mr. Amend, by his side. * * * He took that amount, and he said, 'Now, I want to know the cash.' I opened the cashbook and pointed to the revenue column and said, 'There, you know, is the amount for the month.' * * * I says, 'Now, don't you want to know about the accounts?' And he said: 'No; I guess I know all about the accounts.' And that was all that was said. * * * When he came to the June charges, I had only written them up as far as about the 11th, because I was so swamped with work I hadn't gotten down to date with them, and he said, 'That is a small amount for June.' I said, 'Yes; it is, but remember, this is only for about eight or nine days, and you have still the government check to count on [referring to the sum paid by the government at the end of each month for hauling mail]. There was no remark made about the government check for April or May, and he asked for no other information about the business or concerning the books that day, or at any other time before he purchased. I offered to show him the books, or anything he wanted to know. He was not there more than 10 to 15 minutes. * * * I made no statement as to the value of the stock. * * * Nothing was said at the time about the indebtedness of the company at all."

The witness also testified that she did not represent that the gross income of the corporation for the month of April was $3,749; that she did not represent that the gross income for the month of May was $3,846.37; that she did not make any statement other than what she already had testified to; that she did not make any statement that the business for the months of April and May netted it a profit of between $600 and $700, or that that was the average business of the company for each month.

Mr. Amend, in describing his connection with the transaction, testified as follows:

"I told Mr. Visscher that Mrs. Dixon was a business woman, but that I didn't think she was a good woman to run a business of that kind, because she was too impulsive, and she might offend a great many customers on that account. I told him at that time [referring to the conversation which took place between the witness and Hugo Visscher in the former's office on June 18, 1914] if the company had proper management I thought the business was able to pay $500-$700 a month. I never told him the profit for April and May had been $700 for each month, or any statement similar to that, except in the general conversation as I have just testified. I don't know whether the company was making money or not. * * * I made no statement to Mr. Visscher regarding the expense account or the income of the company or regarding the accounts due. He did not ask me what the monthly income was, or anything about the income. At his last visit to my office regarding the purchase of the interest he obtained on the 19th of June, we went to the Brinks Express Company. Mr. Visscher and I came into the office, and I told Mrs. Dixon Mr. Visscher came down to look over the books. Mr. Visscher said that he wanted to know what the accounts receivable or the income for May was, and Mrs. Dixon said, 'All right,' and she went over and got the book. She got the book and laid it on the table. Mr. Visscher copied them out of the book. We were only there from 10 to 12 minutes. Mr. Visscher went over the items in the back of the book, and he asked Mrs. Dixon if the items for June had been entered up, and she turned and showed him where the items for June were entered, and he remarked that the revenue for June had fallen off over May and April, and she said that the government account had not been entered on that item, and he said, 'Oh, well, that just brings it up to all the other months.' It was not discussed whether the government account had been added in the April and May figures. He got these figures from a book. I did not know what kind of a book it was. I think it came out in part of the conversation whether he wanted to look at all the books, and he said, 'No,' he wanted to know what the revenue was for May and April. The books were in the safe, and the safe door was open. He did not ask for any other information in my presence. I was in their presence all the time he was there."

The testimony of Mrs. Dixon and Mr. Amend amounts, substantially, to this: No representations of any kind were made by either to Hugo Visscher; he wanted to see the books; his request was complied with; he was shown such books and documents as he asked for; he asked only for an inspection of the books, and was given only that for which he asked—the books.

Plaintiffs make no claim that the books were false, or that they did not correctly show all the debit and credit items. Indeed, plaintiffs say that it was from the books themselves, when examined by an expert bookkeeper, that they were able to, and, shortly after they took possession, did, discover the true situation with respect to the company's financial condition. It was upon the books that plaintiffs relied to prove the falsity of the alleged representations.

We think that, from evidence adduced by defendants, the trial court was warranted in inferring that Hugo Visscher, a young man just out of college, densely ignorant of book-keeping, but possessed of abundant self-confidence, cherished the belief that, unaided and uninformed by others, he could form his own judgment of the actual or potential value of the business from an inspection of the books, coupled with such general knowledge of the business as he already possessed from his previous connection with the company, and that he rushed in with the impetuosity of youth only to discover later that his business acumen did not measure up to his own self-appraisal.

[4] Finally, it is contended that the court erred in not granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. At the trial plaintiffs sought to prove the actual indebtedness of the corporation from the company's books. Plaintiffs entered upon the trial believing that the books contained full and correct entries of all debit and credit items. Mrs. Dixon testified that at the date of the sale of the stock to plaintiffs the company's indebtedness was not as great as the books showed—that certain items that appeared in the books as debts of the company were incorrect—that they were not lawful charges against the company. Appellants claim that this testimony took them by surprise, for the reason that defendants, in their answer, had admitted the books to be correct. On their motion for a new trial plaintiffs filed the affidavits of certain persons for the purpose of showing that the items of indebtedness in question were lawful charges against the company. Even so, we see no reversible error in the refusal to grant the new trial. The court had found that defendants did not make the representations which plaintiffs claim were the inducements to purchase the stock. This finding, as we have seen, is supported by evidence sufficient to preclude a reversal upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. If the alleged representations were not made, it matters not what the actual indebtedness of the company may have been.

The appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial is dismissed; the judgment is affirmed.

FISHER v. EXCHANGE NAT. BANK OF LONG BEACH. (Civ. 2079.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 19, 1920.)

PLEDGES ¶31(4) — AGREEMENT THAT ALL PLEDGED PROPERTY BE SOLD WHEN ANY DEBT IS DUE HELD TO WAIVE STATUTE AUTHORIZING.

Under Civ. Code, § 3268, authorizing the waiver of statutory benefits if not against public policy, parties to a pledge may waive the provision of section 3000 authorizing sale of part of pledged property to pay part of debt then due, and where the pledged agreement expressly authorized sale of all if any liability was unpaid, such sale was not a conversion, though the greater part of debt secured by the pledge had not become due.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Walter H. Fisher against the Exchange National Bank of Long Beach. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Oliver O. Clark, George M. Pierson, and Claud B. Andrews, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Eugene C. Campbell, of Long Beach, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was to recover damages for the alleged conversion of oil stock, and the appeal is from a judgment of nonsuit in favor of defendant. On March 16, 1914, plaintiff borrowed $7,700 from defendant, and executed his promissory note therefor, payable 90 days after date, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, payable quarterly. To secure the payment of said liability, plaintiff pledged 100 shares of oil stock and executed a contract of pledge, which is a part of said promissory note. The material portions of said contract of pledge are as follows:

"I hereby deposit with said bank as collateral security for the payment of this or any other liability or liabilities of mine to said bank, due or to become due, or that may be hereafter contracted, the following property, viz.: 95 shares United Petr. Co., 5 shares Union Oil Co., * * * with this condition, viz., * * * and on the nonperformance of this promise, or on the nonpayment of any liability or liabilities above mentioned to said bank, its president or cashier * * * is and are hereby given full power and authority to sell the whole or any part of the above-named securities * * * at public or private sale, at any time or times hereafter, without any demand or advertisement or notice, such demand, advertisement, and notice being hereby expressly waived, * * * and, after deducting all legal or other costs or expenses for collection, sale, or delivery, may apply the residue of the proceeds of such collection, sale or sales, to pay any or either or all of said liabilities as said Exchange National Bank of Long Beach * * * shall deem proper, returning the overplus to the undersigned; and the undersigned agrees to pay the holder thereof any deficiency upon demand. The maker and indorsers of this note hereby waive demand, presentment for payment, protest, and notice of protest."

On January 26, 1916, defendant collected a dividend of $150 on said stock, which it credited on the principal of said note, thereby reducing the principal to $7,550. Only a small part of the interest was paid, and from time to time as said interest accrued plaintiff gave to defendant promissory notes to cover it. The first one, payable on demand, was given on August 19, 1914. The second, payable on March 16, after date, was given on March 5, 1915; the third, payable on demand, was given on July 8, 1915; the fourth, payable on demand, was given on October 6, 1915; the fifth, payable on demand, was given on December 6, 1915; the sixth, payable 90 days after date, was given on May 9, 1916. On August 7, 1916, plaintiff executed a new note dated June 16, 1916, payable 90 days after date, for $7,550. This last note was given as a renewal of the former note for $7,700, and defendant indorsed on said original note of March 16, 1914, the following words:

"Paid August 7, 1916, Exchange National Bank of Long Beach, California."

On August 22, 1916, defendant sold the said 100 shares of stock at $85 a share, and received therefor $8,498.10. A contract of pledge identical with that made on March 16, 1914, is contained in each of said six interest notes as well as in the last note of $7,750. None of these contracts of pledge was ever rescinded or modified, and the shares of stock pledged thereunder remained in the possession of the defendant bank from March 16, 1914, until sold by it on August 22, 1916.

It is not disputed that the said six interest notes were past due on August 22, 1916, when said sale of the stock was made. But it was expressly agreed between the parties that, if a single liability was unpaid, the pledgee might sell the whole or any part of said securities. The condition therefore existed upon the happening of which the sale of a portion or of the whole of the stock was authorized, and we do not see how it can be held that, by compliance with the terms of the contract, respondent violated said contract, and therefore converted the stock; there being no contention that the sale was not fairly conducted or that the proceeds were not applied as provided in said agreement. If the contract between the parties did not authorize the course that was pursued, then we must admit our inability to comprehend the simple language which they seem to have adopted to express their intention.

Appellant attaches importance to section 3000 of the Civil Code, providing:

"When performance of the act for which a pledge is given is due, in whole or in part, the pledgee may collect what is due to him by a sale of property pledged, subject to the rules and exceptions hereinafter prescribed."

The contention is that thereby the defendant was limited to the right to sell only what was sufficient to pay the debts that had matured; that is, the amount represented by the notes for the interest. But it was competent for the parties by their contract to waive this limitation. The statute provides the rule that would apply in case there was no agreement to the contrary, but there is nothing in the law to preclude parties from agreeing that, where property is pledged to secure the payment of several obligations, it may be sold to satisfy all of them, although only a portion has matured. In fact, section 3268 of the Civil Code provides that parties may waive the benefit of any statute in reference to their rights and obligations "unless such waiver would be against public policy." We may add that no contention is made that the present case comes within said exception.

Certain decisions are cited by appellant, but, as we read them, they involve a different situation and require no specific attention.

The judgment is affirmed.

46 Cal. App. 178

MAYBORNE v. CITIZENS' TRUST & SAVINGS BANK. (Civ. 2110.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 19, 1920.)

1. WORK AND LABOR §4(1)—SERVICES PRESUMED NOT TO BE RENDERED GRATUITOUSLY.

When services are rendered by one person from which another derives a benefit, although there is no express contract or agreement to pay for the services, there is a presumption of law which arises from the proof of services rendered that the person enjoying the benefit of the same is bound to pay what they are reasonably worth, but this presumption may be rebutted by proof of a special agreement to pay therefor a particular amount, or in a particular manner, or by proof that the services were intended to be gratuitous, or even by particular circumstances from which the law would raise the counter presumption that the services were not intended to be a charge against the party benefited.

2. WORK AND LABOR §7(1) — PRESUMPTION OF INTENT TO PAY NOT REBUTTED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS MEMBER OF HOUSEHOLD.

The fact that one suing for services rendered a deceased performed such services as a member of the household does not destroy the presumption that it was intended that deceased should pay therefor, but only strengthens or diminishes an implication that the services were acts of gratuitous kindness, according to the degree of the relationship.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §221(5) — EVIDENCE HELD TO SUSTAIN FINDING THAT SERVICES BY MEMBER OF THE HOUSEHOLD WERE TO BE PAID FOR.

In an action against a decedent's estate to recover for services rendered by one largely treated as a member of the household, evidence held sufficient to sustain finding that the services were performed in the expectation of both parties that plaintiff would be rewarded in a pecuniary manner.

4. WILLS §114—TYPEWRITTEN INSTRUMENT MUST BE WITNESSED.

An instrument intended as a testamentary disposition of property cannot be probated where the body of it is typewritten and it is not witnessed.

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §221(3) — INSTRUMENT INSUFFICIENT AS WILL ADMISSIBLE AS RECOGNITION OF VALUE OF SERVICES RENDERED DECEASED.

An instrument intended as a will, but insufficient, was admissible, in an action by the intended beneficiary against the estate of deceased to recover for services rendered during his lifetime, as a recognition by deceased of the value of the services of plaintiff and as a declaration of his purpose and intention to pay her for the same.

6. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS §221(5) — INSTRUMENT INTENDED AS WILL RAISED NO PRESUMPTION OF PRIOR INTENT TO PAY FOR SERVICES.

An instrument executed many years after personal services began, but insufficient on account of its form as a will, could not give rise to any presumption that there was a purpose at the beginning of rendition of services to pay therefor, but, where the instrument stated that the property attempted to be devised was in recognition of services rendered, tended to strengthen an inference arising from other facts and circumstances of the existence of such purpose, or at least to rebut any inference or presumption that the parties contemplated that the services should be gratuitous.

7. WORK AND LABOR §1 — THAT PAYMENT WOULD BE EQUITABLE CONSIDERED IN DETERMINING INTENT TO PAY.

In an action against the estate of a deceased person to obtain value of services rendered, it was proper for the trial court, in determination of intention of parties, to weigh the circumstance that it would be just and equitable for plaintiff to be rewarded for her services.

8. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS §50(2)—STATUTE DOES NOT RUN AGAINST ACTION FOR SERVICES UNDER CONTRACT FOR INDEFINITE TIME.

Where a contract to pay for services, express or implied, is for an indefinite time, and no time for payment is specified, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the services end.

9. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §44(3) — NOT APPLICABLE TO CONTRACTS FOR SERVICES FOR INDEFINITE TIME.

Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 1, which requires an agreement that by its terms is not to be performed within a year to be evidenced by writing, does not apply to contracts, either express or implied, for the rendition of services for an indefinite time, payment to be made at the termination of relationship.

10. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §138(4)—QUANTUM MERUIT FOR SERVICES RENDERED DECEASED NOT AFFECTED BY STATUTE.

Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7, requiring a writing for the validity of an agreement "which by its terms is not to be performed during the lifetime of the promisor, or an agreement to devise or bequeath any property," does not apply to an action against the estate of a deceased to recover upon a quantum meruit for services rendered deceased during his lifetime.

11. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF §122—INEFFECTIVE AS TO AGREEMENTS MADE PRIOR TO ENACTMENT.

Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7, requiring writing for the validity of an agreement "which by its terms is not to be performed during the lifetime of the promisor, or an agreement to devise or bequeath any property, or to make any provision for any person by will," has no application to a contract entered into prior to 1905, when such section was first incorporated into the statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Robert M. Clark, Judge.

Action by Etta Irene Mayborne against the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred Wright, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Goodwin & Morgrage, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. There is no substantial conflict between the parties as to the facts of the case, but in our statement we shall resolve whatever minor differences there may be, as far as justified by the record, in favor of respondent. The appeal is from a judgment in favor of plaintiff on a claim against the estate of C. P. Dutton, rejected by his administrator, for the reasonable value of personal services rendered the decedent over a period of more than 20 years, terminating in his death in 1915. Mr. Dutton was formerly a prominent well-to-do resident of the city of Aurora, Ill. In 1873 he married a woman 15 years his junior and three sons were born of the marriage. In 1894, after some years of estrangement, he and his wife finally separated, and after the separation, at the invitation of Mr. Mayborne, an old friend and acquaintance, Mr. Dutton took up his residence in the Mayborne home in Geneva, Ill., a town some nine miles distant from Aurora. The family consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Mayborne, Miss Grace Mayborne, an elder sister, more or less of an invalid, and Miss Etta Mayborne, the plaintiff. Due to the age of her parents and the sickness of her sister, plaintiff was the housekeeper and had general charge of the affairs of the home. The situation was agreeable and satisfactory to Mr. Dutton, and he soon came to be treated as a member of the family. All of his wants were supplied and he entertained his old friends at his new home as though it were his own residence. Changes took place in the family. Mr. Mayborne died, later Mrs. Mayborne, and an elderly uncle was given a home until he, too, passed away. Mr. Dutton, however, remained, asking and receiving increasing care and attention. Mr. Dutton and the two Mayborne sisters began going to California, spending several winter months in each year in Los Angeles. Finally, in 1905, Mr. Dutton erected a house, known as "Redwood Lodge," at Hollywood, near Los Angeles, which served as their California home, and finally became their permanent residence. He died in May, 1915. At many times and to many persons, after becoming a member of the Mayborne family, Mr. Dutton expressed the greatest satisfaction with and the highest appreciation of the care, attention, and services he received from plaintiff, and several times expressed his intention of remunerating plaintiff for her services to him. There is no doubt that the closest friendship existed between plaintiff and Mr. Dutton, and they were received by their mutual acquaintances upon a plane of social equality, but no improper relations existed between them, plaintiff acting in the capacity of housekeeper and nurse for him. After his death an instrument purporting to be a will was found among his papers by which he expressly recognized his obligations to plaintiff and attempted to devise to her all his estate in California. The instrument, however, was ineffective as a will. The claim of plaintiff having been rejected, an action was brought, and the court found:

"That for 20 years continuously prior to and including May 26, 1915, plaintiff, at the special instance and request of C. P. Dutton, rendered constant service to said C. P. Dutton in maintaining a home for him; in caring for him and administering to his comfort therein; in looking after and caring for his clothes and linen; and in supervising and performing all of the duties of conducting, managing, and carrying on a home for said C. P. Dutton; that all of said services were rendered during all of said time by plaintiff, with the understanding and agreement between plaintiff and said C. P. Dutton that he would compensate her for said services in money or property to the amount of the reasonable value of said services upon the termination of said services at or before his death; that said services were not terminated before the death of said C. P. Dutton."

It is further found that said Dutton did not compensate plaintiff to any extent for said services, and that the reasonable value for them is $18,000.

The only serious contention by appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to support that portion of the findings to the effect that the services were performed with the understanding and agreement that plaintiff was to be compensated therefor. It is not disputed that plaintiff served the decedent as claimed by her. Indeed, there is no conflict in the evidence as to that, and the allegation of the complaint in that respect was not denied in the answer. The position of appellant is that there is no evidence of an express agreement for compensation, and that there is no rational ground for the inference that it was the understanding and expectation of the parties that plaintiff should be paid for her services. It may be admitted that there is no direct evidence of any such express agreement, but it is the contention of respondent that from the evidence the trial court was warranted in concluding that the parties contemplated and understood that she was to be paid the reasonable value of her services, and that such understanding was sufficient to impose a legal liability therefor.

[1-3] Appellant does not dispute the general rule, as stated in Moulin v. Columbet, 22 Cal. 509, that, when services are rendered by one person, from which another derives a benefit, although there is no express contract or agreement to pay for the services, there is a "presumption of law which arises from the proof of services rendered that the person enjoying the benefit of the same is bound to pay what they are reasonably worth."

It is, though, justly contended that this is a mere presumption and "liable to be rebutted by proof of a special agreement to pay therefor a particular amount or in a particular manner, or by proof that the services were intended to be gratuitous, or even by particular circumstances, from which the law would raise the counter presumption that the services were not intended to be a charge against the party who was benefited thereby." Appellant goes further in the claim that this case is an exception to the general rule in that plaintiff performed the services as a member of the household, and therefore could not claim the advantage of said presumption or implication of law. Decisions are cited to the effect that under such circumstances the presumption is, rather, that the services are gratuitous, and that the burden is upon the claimant to overcome this presumption. We need not review these various decisions, as we find a sufficient guide for our purpose in the declarations of the Supreme Court in Crane v. Derrick, 157 Cal. 667, 109 Pac. 31, as follows:

"It has been said many times that the question is one that must be determined on the circumstances of the particular case, the question in each case being whether it can reasonably be inferred that pecuniary compensation was in the view of the parties at the time the services were rendered or the support was furnished. See 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 1061; Murdock v. Murdock, 7 Cal. 513; Friermuth v. Friermuth, 46 Cal. 42, 45. In the consideration of such circumstances, the degree of the relationship may strengthen or diminish the implication that the services are acts of gratuitous kindness and affection according to its proximity or remoteness. 1 Beach on Law of Contracts, § 653. Our own decisions support the doctrine that to authorize compensation in such cases the circumstances must be such as to warrant the inference that it was the expectation of both parties that compensation should be made. Murdock v. Murdock, 7 Cal. 513; Friermuth v. Friermuth, 46 Cal. 42. And it is emphatically declared in Murdock v. Murdock that it is the expectations of the parties existing while the relation continued that is to control, and that no circumstance occurring afterwards can convert that into an implied contract, that was not so before."

Under this test the claimant is not required to prove any express contract, but it is sufficient if from the facts and circumstances it reasonably can be inferred that compensation was in the view and contemplation of the parties. Even assuming that said presumption in the instance of a family applies to this case by reason of the fact that plaintiff was treated largely as a member of the household, yet we are satisfied that a careful reading of the testimony would convince any disinterested mind that it is not an irrational conclusion that said services were performed in the expectation of both parties that Miss Mayborne would be rewarded in a pecuniary manner. We are required, of course, to go no further than to say that such conclusion of the trial court is not unreasonable, although, we may believe that a finding the other way would be amply supported. Moreover, under the peculiar circumstances herein, although in a limited sense the parties lived together as a family, the industry, fidelity, and self-denial of plaintiff in the services she performed would indicate quite an unusual and extraordinary person if she had no expectation of such reward and reason to believe that it would be realized. The more rational inference would seem to be the other way, if we take into view the ordinary tests and motives of human conduct. Mr. Dutton's wants were thoughtfully supplied, he was carefully nursed in illness, and, as he grew old and feeble, he received increasing care and attention. Since there is no claim of any meretricious or improper relations between the parties, why should any one suppose that she would so deport herself without expectation of substantial compensation?

And as to Mr. Dutton, would it not be doing rather an injustice to his memory to assume or to infer that he, an elderly man of means and somewhat infirm, would willingly be the mendicant recipient of such solicitous and laborious attention from a young woman to whom he was not related by blood or consanguinity? The cases wherein such services are presumed to be gratuitous rest upon some natural or conventional obligation of mutual care and consideration, and the present instance hardly belongs to that class. Plaintiff was under no legal or moral duty to render services to Dutton. In contemplation of law they were strangers to each other, and as between such the law says that beneficial services rendered and accepted must be paid for. McFarland v. Holcomb, 123 Cal. 84, 55 Pac. 761; Estate of Rohrer, 160 Cal. 574, 117 Pac. 672, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 479.

In the Estate of Rohrer, the plaintiff who was the niece of decedent through marriage, presented a claim for services rendered in nursing the deceased for a period of 19 months prior to his death. The Supreme Court, through Mr. Justice Melvin, said:

"There was no such relationship between Mr. Rohrer and Mrs. Follmer as would raise any presumption that the services were gratuitous. The facts that she was the wife of Mr. Rohrer's nephew and that she and her husband resided in Mr. Rohrer's home do not raise any presumption that she nursed the sick man without expectation of reward."

In this connection it is well to remember that when Miss Mayborne began to serve Mr. Dutton, and for some time thereafter, it is fair to assume that there was no such intimacy as developed in subsequent years. It is to this earlier period that we must look for evidence of an understanding as to remuneration, and upon the most liberal construction in favor of appellant it cannot be held that in consequence of the character of their relations at that time the presumption would be that the services were gratuitous.

Many witnesses testified as to the daily life and conduct of these parties and as to the nature of the services performed by plaintiff; and, to indicate and illustrate its general scope and intent, we quote the testimony of Clara B. Wells, who resided in the Mayborne family as a roomer and boarder from 1898 to 1905, as follows:

"Miss Mayborne did everything about the house. She would contribute to Mr. Dutton's board and to his care. She did everything about him—his personal affairs. I was with her much of the time. We were very companionable and I had a chance to be with her much. She did everything such as taking care of his linen, packing, and unpacking, and much of the time Mr. Dutton was not well and she took care of him. He was never strong, and when he was well and went to business she always called for him—went to the train with him in the morning and called for him in the evening. It was a long mile, I should say, from the Mayborne home to the train. She conducted the house and was at its head, and when he had no cook she did the cooking and dishwashing and harnessed the horse and looked after the hay for him. It was Miss Mayborne's house. I should say it was the house which her father and mother lived in before their death. I think Miss Mayborne was born in the house. During that time I had many conversations with Mr. Dutton. I had conversations with him relative to the time that he had gone to this home, and he told me that he came there during the lifetime of Miss Mayborne's father. I think he was associated with her father in the law. They were friends, or they were together much, and seemed to live at her home during the lifetime of her father and mother. The father and mother were not living when I went there, and I never met them. He continued from the time that I met him there and during the seven years that I was there to remain in that house. Mr. Dutton told me that he went to Miss Mayborne's house almost a physical wreck. He had been slightly injured in the Civil War, and he came out of the Civil War not very robust, and I think he was suffering from either acute or nervous indigestion. I saw, during my stay there, that he was troubled with vertigo and acute attacks of indigestion. I don't know that he spoke of it often, but he was free in his expression that he was quite a wreck when he went to Miss Mayborne's home, and it was almost entirely due to her care and comfort that he was kept alive. He confided in me that it was his regret that he hadn't an incontestable provision for Miss Mayborne in the way of annuity for life insurance of some nature, and at the time he spoke of it I said, 'Why don't you, now?' He said, 'Well, the trouble is I am too old; I have passed my sixty-first birthday,' and that at the age of 61 the insurance companies wouldn't take him, or that the price was prohibitive. I don't recall, but what he said he was past 61 and couldn't arrange for straight life insurance which would be incontestable. He was driving in the country, and he was in a reflective mood, and finally he said, 'I will make it all right, because I own several farms,' and then he spoke of some stock he owned at that time. At that time he was interested in National Biscuit. This conversation was in Illinois, but having failed in making the definite provision for her it would all be arranged because he had some interest in farms, and he also owned some stock in the National Biscuit and Westinghouse, I think, and he spoke of some other interests which I don't recall. He said he wanted an incontestable provision because he knew the money he left to Miss Mayborne, his heirs would contest it, even if it was a shoestring. This was in autumn, probably nearer 1905 than 1900."

Describing a later conversation held with Mr. Dutton, the witness said:

"I had another conversation with him with reference to the services or compensation that had been made or would be made. This was about the year following my first conversation. I should say now it would be about 12 or 13 years ago and that it took place at Ottawa, Ill. Q. What did Mr. Dutton say in that conversation, Mrs. Wells? * * * Mr. Dutton spoke about some farms he had lately acquired in Kane county and spoke about his holdings in farm lands in Kane county, and also spoke about some National Biscuit stock and some Diamond Match stock, which, together with the farming interests and the Diamond Match and National Biscuit stock, would go to Miss Mayborne as compensation for the care she had given to him. Q. Was anything said in that conversation by Mr. Dutton with reference to whether or not he had expressed his intention to Miss Mayborne? * * * Yes; he said that Etta would be well provided for, and that it was necessary she know how she stood, because in all probability she would have to take care of Grace. I don't recall that he said in so many words that he had said this to Miss Etta Mayborne. No; he didn't speak of any definite conversation he had with Miss Mayborne, but he spoke about having made the arrangement."

Still later Mr. Dutton again spoke of these matters:

"On one of our summer visits to Evergreen Lawn on Sunday afternoon Mr. Dutton described the home they were planning; in fact, it was then building here in California. He said it was Etta's. That was in the summer of the year the house out there was built. It was the summer they were building the bungalow. They called it Redwood Lodge."

The facts and circumstances detailed by this and other witnesses were as strongly indicative of an understanding that plaintiff should be rewarded as was the showing of an understanding that the earnings of the wife were to be her separate property in the case of Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 145 Cal. 596, 79 Pac. 272, to which we may refer for an interesting discussion of a kindred subject.

[4] This view is strengthened by a consideration of the abortive will of the deceased. Of course, he intended it to be effective as a testamentary disposition of the property therein mentioned, but the body of it was typewritten, and it was not witnessed.

Therefore it could not be probated, but it was signed by Dutton and was in the following form:

"Redwood Lodge, Hollywood, California, May 21st, 1915. In case of death, I give to Etta Irene Mayborne, all real estate and personal property, of which I may die seized, found in the state of California. Also all shares of stock in my name, in the American Chiclé Company, and in the Westinghouse Air Brake Company. This I give to Etta Irene Mayborne, for care and faithful services rendered."

[5, 6] Said instrument, while insufficient as a will, was clearly admissible as a recognition by Dutton of the value of the services of plaintiff and a declaration of his purpose and intention to reward her for the same. The significance of such evidence is indicated in the Rohrer decision, supra. Coming, as it does, many years after the services began, said instrument does not, of course, give rise to any presumption that the same purpose existed in the beginning, but it tends to strengthen the inference from other facts and circumstances of the existence of such purpose, or at least to rebut any inference or presumption that the parties contemplated that the services should be gratuitous.

[7] We may add that it was entirely proper for the trial court in the determination of the intention of the parties to weigh the circumstance that it would be just and equitable for plaintiff to be rewarded for her services. The average person is supposed to be influenced by such considerations, and it would be natural to suppose that Mr. Dutton was not insensible to their controlling force and would entertain a corresponding purpose to reward Miss Mayborne.

In this connection we may call attention to the following additional authorities cited by respondent: Gall v. Gall, 27 App. Div. 173, 50 N. Y. Supp. 563; Clark v. Gruber, 74 W. Va. 533, 82 S. E. 338; Morrissey v. Faucett, 28 Wash. 52, 68 Pac. 352; Ellis v. Cary, 74 Wis. 176, 42 N. W. 252, 4 L. R. A. 55, 17 Am. St. Rep. 125; Heffron v. Brown, 155 Ill. 322, 40 N. E. 583; Briggs v. Estate of Briggs, 46 Vt. 571; Wainwright Trust Co. v. Kinder (Ind. App.) 120 N. E. 419.

In the last of these the claimant was an adult child living with her father, and the court, in affirming a judgment in her favor, held that, while there was a prima facie presumption that the services were not to be paid for, it was also held that the intention to pay and expectation of compensation, raising an implied contract, could be inferred from the circumstances and conduct of the parties, and that it was not necessary to show, either directly or through others, any communication by parent to child. In the discussion of the facts the court declares that attention may be given to the justice or injustice of the claim, for the purpose of determining what was the intention of the parties in relation to the question of compensation for the services in controversy—citing 9 Cyc. 242, 243.

That is a recent decision, and in the character of the services performed quite similar to the case at bar, although the evidence herein in favor of the claimant is stronger than it was in that.

In the Briggs Case, supra, the Supreme Court of Vermont said:

"In all the cases in which it has been held that the law will not imply a promise to pay for valuable services rendered with the knowledge of the recipient such a relation has existed between the parties before the rendering of the services that the defendant was not bound to pay for the services. This relation is usually that of parent and child. When the child arrives at majority, but remains with or returns to the parent, or when the parent goes to live with the child, the law presumes the parties have retained or returned to the relation that once existed between them, and will not presume that they thereby assumed the relation of debtor and creditor, unless it is shown that they mutually understood that they came together with their relation changed from what it formerly had been to that of debtor and creditor."

In the Ellis Case the Supreme Court of Wisconsin held that, by reason of the fact that the claimant was a stepdaughter, it was incumbent upon her to show that she was to be remunerated for her services. The court said:

"To meet this obligation she proved the express parol agreement for compensation. True, such agreement is void as a contract for the reasons stated, and hence cannot be enforced specifically, nor constitute the basis of an action for damages."

The said agreement, it may be stated, was in part for the devise of land, and therefore void under the statute of that state. The court, however, held that said agreement was admissible to rebut the presumption that Mrs. Ellis rendered the services in question gratuitously.

The other cases are in harmony with these, nor do we find the cases cited by appellant to be inconsistent with the views herein expressed when the peculiar facts of each are considered.

[8] We think there is no merit in the contention that the claim is barred by the statute of limitations. The services were continuous for a period of 20 years, and it is a fair inference that it was the intention or expectation that they should be rewarded when terminated. They did not cease until the death of Mr. Dutton. The case falls clearly within the rule announced in Krumb v. Campbell, 102 Cal. 370, 36 Pac. 664; Hagan v. McNary, 170 Cal. 141, 148 Pac. 937, L. R. A. 1915E, 562; Furman v. Craine, 18 Cal. App. 41, 121 Pac. 1007; Clark v. Gruber, supra; Morrissey v. Faucett, supra. They are all to the effect that, where the contract is for an indefinite time, and no time for payment is specified, the statute does not begin to run until the services end. Of course, the same rule applies to an express contract and to one implied by law.

There is also force in the claim of respondent that said will contains a "direct, distinct, unqualified, and unconditional admission of the debt" sufficient to meet the requirements of the decisions in this state, and thus to take the case without the statute of limitations, but we do not deem it necessary to decide this point.

[9] We think there is no more merit in the contention that the contract herein was invalid by reason of subdivision 1 of section 1624, Civil Code, which requires "an agreement that by its terms is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof" to be evidenced by a writing "subscribed by the party to be charged." This rule does not apply to contracts, either express or implied, for the rendition of services for an indefinite period of time and payment to be made at the termination of the relationship. Dougherty v. Rosenberg, 62 Cal. 32; Kutz v. Fleisher, 67 Cal. 93, 7 Pac. 195; Osment v. McElrath, 68 Cal. 466, 9 Pac. 731, 58 Am. Rep. 17; Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 307, 13 Pac. 866; Bank of Orland v. Finnell, 133 Cal. 475, 65 Pac. 976; Stewart v. Smith, 6 Cal. App. 152, 91 Pac. 667. To fall within the condemnation of the statute the contract must be such as to be incapable of performance within one year. Manifestly we have no such situation here.

Indeed, the proper view of this case, as we understand it, is that the services were performed without any express agreement as to compensation, but with the expectation and understanding that at some time in the future, probably on the death of Mr. Dutton, the plaintiff would be paid the reasonable value of her services.

[10, 11] Nor do we think that subdivision 7 of said section, requiring a writing for the validity of an agreement "which by its terms is not to be performed during the lifetime of the promisor, or an agreement to devise or bequeath any property, or to make any provision for any person by will," applies to a case like this for recovery upon a quantum meruit. Hagan v. McNary, supra; Wallace v. Long, 105 Ind. 522, 5 N. E. 666, 55 Am. Rep. 222. Besides, said section was first incorporated into the statutes in 1905 and it would not control in a case originating before said date. Keefe v. Keefe, 19 Cal. App. 310, 125 Pac. 929.

Certain objections were made to the admissibility of evidence, and they are briefly referred to in the written argument of appellant, but we do not understand counsel to contend that the rulings are sufficiently grave to justify a reversal of the judgment. At any rate, we have examined them and find therein no prejudicial error.

As we must view the record, we cannot escape the conclusion that the claim of respondent was just and reasonable and established by legal evidence to the extent that an appellate tribunal is not warranted in interfering with the judgment of the lower court.

The judgment is affirmed.

MONTEZUMA IMPROVEMENT CO. v. SIM-MERLY et al. (S. F. 8522.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 19, 1919.
Rehearing Denied Jan. 15, 1920.)

1. Animals ⌘49—Common-law rule as to running at large in force.

The Estray Act of 1915 gave every county in the state the common-law rule, and all the countries, except the six expressly named, have been excepted from the operation of the so-called Fence Law of 1850, the Estray Act of 1851, and the successors of those statutes, notwithstanding the new Trespassing Act of 1907, which declared it unlawful for any person in possession of any animal to permit it to enter upon the lands of another in all cases where such land is planted with growing crops and is at the time entirely inclosed by a substantial fence, and an owner of cattle is required to keep his animals from his neighbors' lands, fenced or unfenced.

2. Injunction ⌘48 — Repeatedly permitting cattle to run at large restrained.

One raising stock on a large tract of land in Mendocino county may restrain others occupying a large neighboring ranch and raising large numbers of cattle and hogs from permitting their stock from entering upon his unfenced lands, where the repeated trespassing of cattle and hogs, if permitted to continue, will compel the bringing of numerous suits, etc.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by the Montezuma Improvement Company against John Simmerly and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Charles Kasch, of Ukiah (J. E. Pemberton, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Robert Duncan and W. S. Van Dyke, Jr., both of Ukiah, for respondents.

MELVIN, J. Plaintiff and appellant owned unfenced lands in Mendocino county. Plaintiff sought by this suit to obtain damages for trespass upon his land of animals owned by defendants, and also prayed for an injunction to prevent further incursions of defendants' cattle. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and the plaintiff appeals from the judgment which followed.

Two questions are presented. The first is whether or not the common-law rule requiring the owner of cattle to keep his animals from his neighbors' lands, fenced or unfenced, is in operation in Mendocino county. The other relates to the sufficiency of the complaint to state a proper case for injunctive relief.

[1] It is now settled law in California that the common-law rule applies in those counties which have been excepted from the operation of the so-called Fence Law of 1850 (Stats. of 1850, p. 131), the Estray Act of 1851 (Stats. of 1851, p. 299), and the successors of those statutes, notwithstanding the new Trespassing Act of 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 999), which declares it unlawful for any person in possession of any animal to permit it to enter upon the lands of another "in all cases where such land is planted to growing crops," etc., and "is at the time entirely enclosed by a substantial fence or other inclosure." Actions similar to the one at bar commenced in the counties of Colusa and Los Angeles have been sanctioned by the District Court of Appeal and this court has approved the judgments. Blevins v. Mullally, 22 Cal. App. 519, 135 Pac. 307; Hicks v. Butterworth, 30 Cal. App. 562, 159 Pac. 224. The case of Hahn v. Garratt, 69 Cal. 146, 10 Pac. 329, applied the common-law rule to Santa Clara county because of a special act concerning estrays found running at large upon lands in that county, whether said land was fenced or unfenced.

It is true that by a dictum in Blevins v. Mullally, supra, the learned court declared that its members were "not impressed with the suggestion" that the estray law of 1901 (St. 1901, p. 603) or the amendment of 1909

(St. 1909, p. 1079) had the effect of reviving the common-law rule as to trespassing animals in California. But this language was not necessary to the decision, as the conclusion reached by the court rested upon the statute of 1877-78 (St. 1877-78, p. 176), as interpreted in the light of earlier decisions. Moreover, the language just quoted does not apply to the act of 1915, for reasons which we shall discuss.

Appellant insists that under these authorities the Estray Act of 1915 gave to every county in the state the common-law rule, except the six counties expressly named. That act (Stats. 1915, p. 636) was, in terms, an amendment to the act of 1901 relating to estrays. It gave to the owner, or to the person entitled to possession of land, the right to take up estray domestic animals found upon his premises and to have a lien upon such animals for the expenses incurred in keeping them, provided, however, that in six counties, namely, Trinity, Shasta, Del Norte, Siskiyou, Lassen and Modoc, this right was extended only to the possessors of premises "entirely enclosed with a good and substantial fence." Two methods of giving notice of the taking up of such animals are provided in the statute. One is by filing a prescribed written statement with the recorder or poundkeeper, and, in certain cases, by publishing said statement in a newspaper. The other which applies only to cases in which the finder knows the owner or person having charge of the animal or animals, requires the statement to be served upon the owner or custodian. In this particular the act differs essentially from the act of 1901 and its predecessors, which either applied only to "estrays," properly speaking (that is, animals without known owners), or to estrays and trespassing animals with known owners, treating all alike and providing for no special notice to known owners. By the tenth section of the statute it is provided that:

"Nothing herein contained shall be held, deemed or construed to repeal an act, entitled 'An act concerning lawful fences, and animals trespassing upon premises lawfully inclosed,' passed March 30, 1850, nor to repeal an act, entitled 'An act concerning lawful fences in the counties of San Bernardino, Colusa, Shasta, Tehama and Placer,' approved April 18, 1859, in so far as the provisions of said acts, and each thereof, apply to or affect the counties of Trinity, Shasta, Del Norte, Siskiyou, Modoc and Lassen, but as to said counties, and each thereof, said acts are hereby expressly continued in force, it being hereby determined that the present conditions prevailing in said counties last named are such as to justify and demand the continued application of said statutes to said counties."

Appellant's argument is as follows: Hahn v. Garratt, supra, construed a statute that merely gave to the owner of unfenced land the same remedy against trespassing animals of known ownership that had theretofore been given only against estrays of unknown ownership. The court construed this as abolishing the fence law and establishing the common-law rule in Santa Clara county. That case, and its construction of the law, has been followed in the two other cases cited supra. Those authorities represent the settled law upon the subject, in which the Legislature has long acquiesced, and the statute of 1915, to which we have referred, was passed in view of such legislative sanction. Estate of Carraghar, 183 Pac. 161. And say counsel:

"In the instant case we have much more than the mere silent acquiescence by the legislative department. In the so-called estray law of 1915, just as in the statute construed in Hahn v. Garratt, supra, without express repeal of fence laws, or express approval of the common-law rule, the identical remedy formerly given the owner of unfenced lands only against estrays of unknown ownership was given against trespassing animals of known ownership; but, showing conclusively, demonstrating absolutely, that the Legislature knew and assented to the rule laid down in Hahn v. Garratt, supra, it took the pains to expressly retain the fence laws, and give the remedy only to owners of fenced lands in six certain counties where it found conditions to justify the distinction. Now, it is of no interest to us whether or not the Legislature made a mistake in referring to the wrong statute as a fence law which it desired to remain applicable to those six counties. We are only interested in knowing what it did in the rest of the state, and the exception clauses in the statute showed what it was trying to do therein, and show that it was expecting and intending that the court should apply the rule of Hahn v. Garratt, supra, to the statute, so far as all the counties of the state were concerned, other than the excepted six."

Respondents insist that there never has been any common-law rule in this state with reference to trespassing animals because the Lawful Fence Act of March 30, 1850 (Stats. 1850-53, p. 793), preceded the adoption of the common law as the rule of decision in California unless inconsistent with statutes. Stats. 1850-53, p. 186. This contention is answered by the cases cited above adversely to the contention of respondents.

Our attention is called by counsel for respondents to the fact that the statute of 1901 and the amending statute of 1915 both fail to prescribe any damages which may be collected for injury done by animals, but merely provide for a certain scale of payment to the taker of trespassing animals. On the contrary, we are told that such acts as that of March 23, 1907 (Stats. 1907, p. 909), providing for the recovery of damages where animals break into inclosures planted to growing crops, are of an entirely different class. But, granting this classification to be sound, we do not see how it prevents one victim of this sort of trespass from seeking to enjoin recurrences thereof while extending that remedy to the other.

Appellant also calls attention to the fact that the act of 1850, specified in the tenth section of the act of 1915, as quoted above in this opinion, was repealed by the act of April 27, 1855, which defined lawful fences in greater detail than the earlier statute (Stats. 1855, p. 154), and that on March 31, 1855, an act was passed substantially identical with the act of March 30, 1850, providing for the recovery of damages for trespassing animals only when the lands were inclosed by a lawful fence (Stats. 1855, p. 70). It is argued that this statute, never having been in terms repealed or kept in effect only in certain counties, is still in existence, and inhibits the application of the common-law rule to Mendocino county. Indeed, say counsel, the act of 1915 contains no repealing language whatever. In answer to both of these arguments we are constrained to hold that the statute of 1915 which we have been considering does, by the very force of its terms, in view of the cited authorities, repeal all "fence laws" in the counties of this state, including Mendocino county, except in the six counties specified.

[2] The complaint states a proper case for injunction. According to the averments, plaintiff is raising stock on a large tract of land. Defendants, who are occupying also a large neighboring ranch, are raising large numbers of cattle and hogs. There are elaborate allegations not only with reference to the repeated trespasses of the stock of defendants, but plaintiff avers, among other things:

"That plaintiff has repeatedly driven the stock of defendants from its said real property, and has repeatedly requested of defendants that they properly care for their stock and keep the same from trespassing upon the lands of plaintiff, but all to no avail, and defendants, despite the remonstrances of plaintiff and despite the fact that plaintiff has repeatedly driven said stock from its aforesaid land, continue to allow and cause, and threaten to continue to allow and cause said cattle and stock and hogs to enter upon said premises described herein, and thereby tramp, tear up, and injure the soil, and destroy the feed growing and grown upon said premises, and injure the same for the growing grasses in the future; that the repeated trespasses of the cattle and hogs of said defendants, if permitted to continue, will compel plaintiff to bring numerous suits against the said defendants for damages, and will compel plaintiff to repeatedly take up said cattle under the estray act, all of which remedy is wholly inadequate, and will not cause said defendants to desist from said acts described herein."

Taken all together, the averments are sufficient.

No other matters contained in the briefs require further analysis.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the superior court, with directions to proceed in accordance with the conclusion herein expressed.

In re SOBERANES' ESTATE. (S. F. 9171.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1920.)

1. Wills §324(3)—Evidence of undue influence held insufficient for submission to jury.

In contest of a will for undue influence, where there was affirmative proof that no undue influence was exercised, and where the evidence showed that the testatrix was acting under independent legal advice, there was nothing to submit to the jury, and the court properly sustained a nonsuit.

2. Wills §400—Exclusion of testimony of undue influence held harmless in view of other testimony given.

In son's contest of mother's will on ground of undue influence, his mother having given all of her property to a daughter, the exclusion of testimony as to the friendly relation between the mother and the children held harmless on appeal from judgment of nonsuit where there was testimony that such relations were friendly, such testimony being binding upon the court on a motion for nonsuit.

3. Wills §326—Contestant's testimony binding on court on motion for nonsuit.

Testimony in favor of contestant is binding on the court on a motion for nonsuit.

4. Wills §164(7)—Weakness of mind admissible on issue of undue influence.

Contestant of will on ground of undue influence had a right to show the weakness of mind of the testatrix upon the issue of undue influence.

5. Evidence §471(14)—Question held to call for conclusion of witness as to mental capacity.

Question, "From your association, knowledge, and acquaintanceship with Mrs. S. [testatrix] in 1901, was she competent to transact business for herself and understand business dealings?" held improper as calling for a conclusion of the witness.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Benj. K. Knight, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Ysabel Boronda de Soberanes, deceased. Proceedings to contest will by Porfirio Soberanes. Judgment of nonsuit, and contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Z. B. Stuart, C. W. Byrer, and J. W. Hocker, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. F. Lacey, of Salinas, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is a contest of the will of Ysabel Boronda de Soberanes, within one year after probate, by Porfirio Soberanes, her son, upon the grounds that the will was not properly executed, that the testatrix was of unsound mind, and that the will was executed under undue influence. The first ground of contest was withdrawn, and a motion of nonsuit was sustained as to the others. The contestant appeals from the judgment, claiming that the evidence was sufficient to establish a prima facie case for the jury. The testatrix died February 19, 1916, aged 84 years. By the terms of her will she left all of her property to her daughter Clotilda, with whom she was residing at the time of the execution thereof. The husband of testatrix died in 1887. Thereafter the testatrix deeded her inheritance to her son Abel. These transfers were unsuccessfully attacked by the other children (Soberanes v. Soberanes, 97 Cal. 140, 31 Pac. 910; Id., 106 Cal. 1, 39 Pac. 39, 527), acting through Isabel Soberanes as guardian ad litem for the mother. In 1886 Abel died, devising the land so conveyed to his sister, Clotilda, subject to an annuity of $3,000 in favor of the mother. A general guardian was thereafter appointed for testatrix in 1896, and she remained under such guardianship until April 13, 1901, when the guardian was discharged and she was restored to capacity. Shortly thereafter the will under attack was executed (November 23, 1901). About a year later the testatrix waived the annuity in favor of the daughter Clotilda by instrument executed August 13, 1902, recorded September 3, 1902, and by a deed of the same date, recorded September 10, 1902, the testatrix conveyed to the same daughter her interest in certain real property. Thus the only estate left by the testatrix was $372.70. The surviving children of the testatrix were Benito A. Soberanes, a son 65 years of age, the contestant, Porfirio, a son 58 years of age, Josefa Soberanes de Boronda, a daughter 55 years of age, and Clotilda Soberanes, a daughter about 50 years of age. There were also three children of a deceased son, Jose Feliciano Soberanes. The son Benito contested the will before probate. Without quoting the will in full, it states that the testatrix leaves all her property to her daughter Clotilda, with whom she is living and expects to live until her death; that since the death of her son Abel this daughter is the only member of the family with whom she has been happy; that the daughter and her husband have "spared neither time nor money to make life pleasant and agreeable to me, * * * often receiving little or no pecuniary compensation for money and labor expended in my behalf, and by reason of their kindness to me drawing upon themselves the hatred of my other children." Testatrix gives as a reason for disinheriting her other children the fact that by "their unfilial conduct by continually harassing me in the courts year after year, suit following suit, willing to squander their own fortunes in attempting to deprive and for several years depriving me of the control of mine, causing me great financial loss, ungrateful to me when I have helped them, those whom I have helped the most being, if possible, the most violent toward me, heedless and thoughtless of me in my loneliness, with never a kind or loving word or act for me in my old age and double bereavement of husband and son, and apparently at least without ever a thought for my happiness or welfare they have filled my life with bitter sorrow which time cannot efface." The will was drawn by an attorney, in accordance with the instructions of the testatrix, and was signed in the presence of three witnesses. The only connection of the daughter Clotilda or her husband with the transaction was that they brought her to the attorney's office and paid his fee for drawing the will; the mother having declared her intention of making a will and leaving to them her property. So far as appears from the evidence, they had no conversation with the attorney. The will was executed out of their presence. Subsequently the attorney showed them the will, but retained possession of it until the death of the testatrix, thereupon producing it for probate. The statements in the will concerning litigation among members of the family is substantiated by the testimony; the first litigation being an effort to set aside the deed from the mother to the son Abel of property which Abel subsequently bequeathed and devised to his mother. Soberanes v. Soberanes, supra. For the last 16 years of testatrix's life the son Benito did not call upon the mother. Clotilda testified that the will was made by the mother of her own motion and in accordance with her own wishes, without any suggestion from herself or her husband, and that the mother frequently expressed a desire to leave the property so that there would be no further trouble. No witness testified that the testatrix was of unsound mind. The son Benito stated that he did not claim and never had claimed that his mother was insane, and that he so testified at the trial of his own contest, "but I declared that she was incompetent." In response to a question, "What do you mean by that?" he replied, "She could not read or write or count or calculate in any shape or form." He further testified, "She had no knowledge of business, could converse intelligently, but when it came to business she couldn't count ten." There was also testimony by the contestant and some of the other members of the family that the relations of the mother and the children were friendly.

[1] Appellant claims that, under the circumstances, a presumption of undue influence arose against the will which necessitated a submission of that question to the jury. This matter is so fully discussed in two comparatively recent cases involving the relation of mother and son (In re Kaufman, 117 Cal. 288, 49 Pac. 192, 59 Am. St. Rep. 179; Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 460, 117 Pac. 532) that we deem further discussion unnecessary. Suffice it to say that in this case, where there was affirmative proof that no undue influence was exercised, where the evidence shows that the testatrix was acting under independent legal advice, there was nothing to submit to the jury, and the action of the court in sustaining a nonsuit was proper.

[2, 3] The appellant makes various assignments of error in the rejection of testimony. These assignments are grouped in the brief under two heads: First, rulings excluding certain evidence bearing upon the friendly relation between the mother and children. As they had testified that such relations were friendly and such testimony was binding upon the court upon a motion for nonsuit, the appellant was not prejudiced by these rulings. The other rulings are grouped under the claim that they were erroneous for the reason that contestant had a right to show the weakness of mind of the testatrix upon the issue of undue influence.

[4, 5] There is no doubt of the correctness of the rule invoked, but an examination of the specific questions asked and objections made show that most of them called for conclusions, which were not proper to be offered in evidence. No effort was made to prove by intimate acquaintances the unsoundness of mind of testatrix, and the specific questions to which objections were sustained were not proper, such, for instance, as the following:

"From your association, knowledge, and acquaintanceship with Mrs. Soberanes in 1901 was she competent to transact business for herself and understand business dealings?"

This question called for a conclusion of the witness, and the objection thereto was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

Proc. § 338, subd. 2, for maintenance of an action for trespass upon real property applies only where there is an actual entry upon the premises, or direct or intentional injury amounting to trespass, and does not apply to actions in which the injury is consequential only, in which case the two-year period fixed by section 339, subd. 1, applies.

2. Municipal corporations ⇨663(1)—Abutting owner is presumed to own to center of street.

Under Civil Code, § 831, an owner of land bounded by a road or street is presumed to own to the center of the way, but the contrary may be shown; hence in the absence of evidence abutting owner will be presumed to own to the center of the street.

3. Municipal corporations ⇨663(1)—One interfering with highway except to use or repair it a trespasser.

A public highway is a mere easement, and the owner of the soil over which it passes has an action of trespass against any person who interferes with it for any purpose but to use or repair it.

4. Municipal corporations ⇨404(6)—City presumptively has authority to excavate tunnel in street.

In a suit by an abutting owner, who claimed that her property subsided as result of city's negligence in constructing a tunnel in a street, held, in the absence of averment or proof to the contrary, it will be assumed the city had authority to construct the tunnel.

5. Municipal corporations ⇨394(6)—City constructing tunnel in street must use care not to remove support of abutting property.

Where a city undertakes to construct a tunnel in a street the fee of which is in the abutting owners, it must use ordinary skill and care to sustain the land of the abutting owners, the rule announced by Civil Code, § 832, applicable to coterminal owners being applicable to the case of the city, even though the city and the abutting owner were not coterminal owners.

6. Limitation of actions ⇨32(1)—Municipal corporations ⇨394(6)—City building tunnel in street liable to abutting owner whose land subsided; three-year limitations applicable.

Where a city, in constructing a tunnel in a street the fee of which belonged to the abutting owners, failed to use ordinary skill and care to sustain the abutting land, and it subsided to the injury of the owners, the city, although it was within its authority in constructing the tunnel, is liable to the abutting owners for trespass, and hence the three-year period described by Code Civ. Proc. § 338 is applicable.

Olney, J., dissenting in part.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by Eugenia D. Porter against the City of Los Angeles and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

W. Ona Morton, of Los Angeles, and J. T. Moriarity, Behymer, Craig & Salzman, Behymer & Craig, and Robert F. Shippee, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles S. Purnell, Jess E. Stephens and Wm. P. Mealey, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner of certain land fronting on Hill street in the city of Los Angeles upon which she was erecting an apartment house, and had proceeded so far as to put in the foundations thereof; that the city of Los Angeles entered into a contract with the defendants Spicer & Wattson for the construction of a tunnel beneath the street along the line thereof in front of plaintiff's land; that in constructing the tunnel the defendants negligently failed to support the soil and earth above and adjacent thereto while performing the work, and that for want of such support the earth above the tunnel caved into the tunnel, and caused the settling and cracking of the surface of the earth above and along the course of the tunnel and the cracking of said foundation; that said settling and cracking was not due to the weight of any building upon the premises, or any act of the plaintiff, and that by reason of said caving of the earth plaintiff was damaged in a large sum of money, for which she claimed damages.

The answers of the defendants, among other things, pleaded as a defense that the action was barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, fixing two years as the limitation on actions upon a liability not founded upon an instrument in writing. The action was begun on September 7, 1915.

When the cause came on for trial the parties stipulated that the tunnel which caused the caving of the earth and consequent damage to the plaintiff was completed on August 16, 1913. This was more than two years, but less than three years, before the beginning of the action. Thereupon, without further evidence or proceedings, the parties agreed that the question whether the action was barred should be submitted to the court for decision and judgment. The court decided in favor of the defendants, and gave judgment accordingly. From this judgment the plaintiff appeals.

It does not clearly appear whether the settling of the plaintiff's land took place during the construction of the tunnel or not, but the parties have assumed that the same were coincident in point of time, and we will consider the case upon that basis.

[1] Subdivision 2 of section 338 provides that "an action for trespass upon real property" is not barred until three years from the time the cause of action accrued. If this is an action of that character, the statute of limitations had not run when the action was begun, and the judgment was erroneous. If, however, it comes within the class specified by subdivision 1 of section 339 the action was begun too late, and the judgment was correct. It is the settled law in this state that the three-year period of limitation for an action for trespass upon real property applies only where there is some entry upon the premises of the plaintiff or direct or intentional injury thereto, amounting to a trespass thereon, and does not apply to actions in which the injury caused to the plaintiff's real property is consequential only and arises from some lawful act of the defendant not done upon the plaintiff's property, but committed elsewhere, and causing as a consequence thereof some injury to plaintiff's property not arising from an entry thereon by the defendant or his agencies. Hicks v. Drew, 117 Cal. 305, 49 Pac. 189; Daneri v. Southern C. R. Co., 122 Cal. 507, 55 Pac. 243; Crim v. San Francisco, 152 Cal. 279, 92 Pac. 640. The decisions in other states having a similar statute of limitations are to the same effect. Welch v. Seattle, etc., Co., 56 Wash. 97, 105 Pac. 166, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1047; Denney v. Everett, 46 Wash. 342, 89 Pac. 934, 123 Am. St. Rep. 934; Roundtree v. Brantley, 34 Ala. 554, 73 Am. Dec. 470; Eagle, etc., Co. v. Gibson, 62 Ala. 369; Platt, etc., Co. v. Waterbury, 80 Conn. 184, 67 Atl. 508, 125 Am. St. Rep. 111.

The defendant contends that the present case falls within the rule established in the cases just cited.

[2, 3] We are of the opinion that this position is not correct. "An owner of land bounded by a road or street is presumed to own to the center of the way, but the contrary may be shown." Civ. Code, § 831. In the manner in which the case was tried it must be determined upon the theory that the allegations of the complaint, supplemented by the stipulation as to the time when the tunnel was completed, constitute the facts of the case. The complaint shows that the plaintiff's land was bounded by Hill street, and nothing appears in the record to show that the presumption that she owns to the center of the way is not correct. We must therefore presume that she was the owner of the title to the center of Hill street. "A public highway is a mere easement, and the owner of the soil over which it passes has * * * an action of trespass against any person who interferes with it for any other purpose but to use or repair it." Starr v. Camden, etc., Co., 24 N. J. Law, 592. "I hold it to be clear that the public have no other right but that of passing and repassing, and that the title to the land, and all the profits to be derived from it, consistently with, and subject to, the right of way, remain in the owner of the soil. The owner may maintain trespass for any injury to the soil, which is not incidental to the right of passage acquired by the people." Stackpole v. Healy, 16 Mass. 33, 8 Am. Dec. 121. The owner of the easement "cannot commit a trespass upon the servient tenement beyond the limits fixed by the grant or use." North Fork W. Co. v. Edwards, 121 Cal. 666, 54 Pac. 70. The county authorities cannot bore wells along the public highway and take water therefrom without the consent of the owner of the land through which the highway runs. Wright v. Austin, 143 Cal. 236, 76 Pac. 1023, 65 L. R. A. 949, 101 Am. St. Rep. 97. These principles are thoroughly established by the authorities. Gurnsey v. Northern Cal. P. Co., 160 Cal. 705, 117 Pac. 906, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185; Pol. Code, § 2631; Dill. on Mun. Corp. § 1076; Carl v. Sheboygan, etc., Co., 46 Wis. 628, 1 N. W. 295; Bingham v. Doane, 9 Ohio, 168.

[4-6] For the purposes of this action we must assume that the city of Los Angeles was acting in pursuance of its legal rights and powers in causing the tunnel to be constructed under the surface of Hill street. The defendant city refers to another case decided by this court, wherein it was held that said city had no power to construct such a tunnel under a public street solely for the purposes of public travel under the provisions of the state improvement act known as the Vrooman Act. St. 1885, p. 147. We cannot import into the record in this case the facts shown in the record in that case. Nothing appears here to the effect that the tunnel referred to in the complaint was made for the purposes of public travel. There are provisions in the Vrooman Act and in other laws conferring upon the city power to construct tunnels for other purposes, and, as we cannot presume, in the absence of averment, that the city is acting unlawfully, it must be assumed for the purposes of this decision that the construction of the tunnel in a proper and careful manner was an act within the powers of the city.

It appears from the complaint that the tunnel embraced land in the part of the street which belonged to the plaintiff as owner of the abutting lot. The plaintiff was therefore the owner of the soil in that portion of the street, subject to the public easement to use the same for all purposes incident to its character as a public street. This would include its use for the construction of any tunnel authorized to be made in public streets for municipal purposes. The city, so long as it acted within the powers given to it by law, was not a trespasser upon the soil. It was occupying the same by authority of law, but its rights were subject to the rights of the owner of the soil to this extent, that any act done by it not authorized by law or in a manner not sanctioned by the law, although done in the construction of the tunnel, would be a trespass upon the soil, and an action for resulting injury to the land would be an action for trespass upon real property, within the meaning of section 339. While the city had power, as we must assume, to construct the tunnel, it was under a legal obligation, in so doing, to use reasonable care to avoid injury to the plaintiff's land in which the tunnel was being constructed. Section 832 of the Civil Code provides that—

"Each coterminous owner is entitled to the lateral and subjacent support which his land receives from the adjoining land, subject to the right of the owner of the adjoining land to make proper and usual excavations on the same for purposes of construction, on using ordinary care and skill, and taking reasonable precautions to sustain the land of the other."

Within the meaning of this section the defendants for all purposes properly connected with the use of the land as a street were coterminous owners with the plaintiff as to the portion of her lot situated immediately adjoining the street. They were therefore under obligation in constructing the tunnel to use ordinary care and skill and take reasonable precautions to sustain the land of the plaintiff as a coterminous owner. While this is the rule with respect to coterminous owners under the Code, it is clear that a similar rule must apply with respect to the construction of the tunnel in that part of the street belonging to the plaintiff. As they occupy such mutual relations to each other with respect to the soil of that part, the defendants would be under the like obligation to use ordinary care and skill and take reasonable precautions to avoid injury to that part of the land of the plaintiffs in which they were constructing the tunnel. With respect to the parcel of the land situated in the street, therefore, if the defendant failed to use such care and skill and take such precautions, it would be acting beyond its authority, and would be, with respect to the injury caused by such neglect, a trespasser upon the real property of the plaintiff. The complaint alleges that the defendants did fail to take such precautions or to use such care, and that as a result thereof the earth above caved into the tunnel, and caused the settling and cracking of the surface of the earth above whereby she suffered the damage complained of. It states a cause of action for trespass upon the real property of the plaintiff; consequently the action was not barred by the two-year limitation, but comes within the provisions of section 338, fixing three years as the period of limitation. The court below erred in holding, upon the facts before it, that the defendant was entitled to judgment.

The case was not tried on the merits. It is obvious that upon a new trial other questions may arise which are not presented by the record here. The complaint shows that the cracks in the surface above the tunnel occurred within the street lines, and extended therefrom to the part of the lot outside of the street, injuring the ground both within and without the street, and that it also caused injuries to the foundation walls of the building in course of construction by the plaintiff. The evidence may develop conditions which we have not considered. The cracking of the surface within the street would be a direct actionable injury thereto and to the plaintiff's interest therein, if caused by unskillful construction of the tunnel. It would therefore be a trespass on the land of plaintiff, although the damage might be only nominal. If the damage claimed, or a part of it, arises from the injury to the foundation walls, or to the part of her lot outside the street lines, in consequence of the unskillful construction of the tunnel, the question will arise whether or not such injury constitutes the foundation of an action for trespass upon that real property, barred only after three years by section 339, or is merely a consequential injury of the character considered in Hicks v. Drew, supra, and the other cases cited, to which the two-year limitation of section 338 applies. As the complaint is now framed, the necessity for considering such distinction, or whether there is any, does not arise. We have not considered it and express no opinion regarding it.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; KER-RIGAN, Judge pro tem.

OLNEY, J. I concur in the result and the main opinion, with the single exception of its acceptance of the rule of Hicks v. Drew, 117 Cal. 305, 49 Pac. 189, as the settled law of this state. This rule, to which I strongly except, is that subdivision 2 of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure, when it provides a period of limitation of three years for "An action for trespass upon real property" refers only to what were strictly actions for trespass at the common law, and excludes actions for invasions of rights in real property for which at common law the remedy was not trespass, but trespass on the case. The construction so put upon the section has the remarkable result that, although one of the primary purposes of our reformed procedure was to do away with the refined and frequently illusory distinctions of the common law between forms of action, although the fundamental theory of our law is that it is one of substantive rights for whose breach there is in all cases but one form of action, while the common law was essentially a law of remedies, and forms of action were all important, yet the distinctions of the common law between forms of action are imported into our law and still maintained. This is done, furthermore, not in connection with the form of the particular action, but in a purely incidental connection, that of the period of limitation. No reason whatever can be assigned why such distinctions should be preserved. They are an anachronism in our law, alien to its fundamental theory. They make the rights of the parties to turn, as in this case, not upon the merits, but upon refined and subtle distinctions, whose perpetuation makes the rights of the parties in many cases, as here, difficult of ascertainment without any necessity for such difficulty. I believe that upon this point Hicks v. Drew should be overruled, and the Code section construed to mean that by trespass is meant any wrong to or invasion of rights in real property. Such is the usual meaning of the word "trespass," and such the meaning which has been given to it when used in similar statutes elsewhere. Cahn v. Bonnett, 62 Tex. 674; Bear v. Marx, 63 Tex. 298; Kelly v. Moore, 51 Ala. 364. A reading, also, of this particular provision in connection with the other Code provisions concerning the period of limitations indicates that this was the sense in which the word was used.

I would not take the view that Hicks v. Drew should be overruled if its overruling would have the effect of cutting off any existing right of action. But the only effect of overruling it would be to extend, not to limit, the time within which certain actions may be brought. This being the case, I think it should be overruled in the interest of the administration of justice by as plain and simple rules as possible.

SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. v. OWENS et al.
(L. A. 5316.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1920.)

Deeds § 166—Right to forfeit conveyance for violation of liquor restriction held not waived.

The right of grantor to enforce a forfeiture reserved in a deed if intoxicating liquors were sold on the premises is not waived by grantor's consent that the town in which the premises were situated might issue liquor licenses, so that evidence of such consent was immaterial and properly excluded in an action to enforce the forfeiture.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company against Sallie Owens and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Rowen Irwin, of Bakersfield, and H. A. Ingalls, of Waco, for appellants.

Frank McGowan, Frank Thunen, and Wm. M. Singer, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment for the plaintiff in an action to declare a forfeiture of the defendants' interest in certain real property. Findings were waived, and there is no dispute as to the facts.

On February 1, 1910, the plaintiff corporation entered into an agreement with defendant Sallie Owens for the sale to her of lot 10 in block 4 in the town of Moron, Kern county. The price agreed to be paid for the lot was $400, and the purchaser paid down one-third of the purchase price; the remainder was paid in two deferred payments. This contract contained a clause as follows:

"Provided, however, that this agreement is on and subject to condition that as a part of the consideration hereof, no wines, beers, or other spirituous, vinous, malt or alcoholic liquors or beverages of any description shall ever be sold or kept for sale or given away upon said premises upon penalty of forfeiture of all right, title and interest in and to said premises and the immediate reversion thereof and the reversion of the title thereto in said railroad company, its successors and assigns. * * *"

And the contract further provided that:

"All of the said foregoing exceptions, reservations, conditions, and limitations shall be written into the deed of said land, herein provided for, and shall run with the land, and all holdings by, through, or under purchaser are subject thereto."

Subsequent to the execution of said contract, defendant Owens sold and assigned her interest therein to defendant A. I. Scott, who expended about $2,500 in the fitting up of a saloon upon the premises, the purchase of stock, and the payment of rents and of a license fee to the city of Taft. In February, 1911, Scott opened up a retail liquor business on the place, and has been conducting it ever since. On September 20, 1911, plaintiff commenced this action against defendants to declare a forfeiture of the premises under and by virtue of the antiliquor clause above quoted. The action proceeded to trial, and the court adjudged that the defendants, by reason of the violation of the said condition in the contract, had lost and forfeited all right, title, and interest in and to the premises, and decreed that—

"The plaintiff is the owner in fee and entitled to the immediate possession of lot 10 in block 4 in the town of Moron (now Taft). * * *

Appellants' contention is that the saloon was opened and conducted with the consent of plaintiff, and there was a waiver of the condition in the contract of sale by B. A. McAllister, "land commissioner, Southern Pacific Railroad Company." In support of this contention appellants attempted to prove by one Harry Hopkins, a trustee of the city of Taft, that, at a conference held in the city of San Francisco prior to the breach of the condition, McAllister orally consented to the issuance of liquor licenses in Taft to conduct saloons. The following question was put to this witness:

"State the conversation that was had between you and Mr. McAllister with regard to the issuing of liquor licenses; that is, the city of Taft issuing liquor licenses at that time."

The objection was interposed that the question was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and that "Mr. McAllister had no authority * * * to in any way bind the plaintiff in this action by any such declaration or conversation."—The objection was sustained, and it is upon this ruling that the appellants rely for a reversal of the judgment.

The testimony sought would not tend to prove that McAllister, acting for the plaintiff, waived the breach of the condition in the contract set forth in defendants' answer or condoned the forfeiture as was alleged therein, although appellants' argument seems to assume that such would be the effect. We think that the testimony was properly excluded. The question put to the witness was not answered, but appellants' counsel made the following statement as to what he intended to prove:

"I offer to show by this witness here that the licenses were issued by and with the consent of the plaintiff, acting through its land commissioner, and who * * * executed the very contract upon which it is now suing; that they [the plaintiff] consented to the issuing of liquor licenses on behalf of the city of Taft; that the same were issued in pursuance of their consent and with their knowledge."

The issuance of liquor licenses in the city of Taft, based upon such an understanding, could not affect the plaintiffs' right to claim a forfeiture in the event of a breach of the conditions contained in the contract of sale. Even if McAllister acquiesced in the issuance of saloon licenses in Taft, this would not constitute a consent to the defendants' opening a saloon on the particular lot involved here. Adopting this view, it is unnecessary to discuss whether plaintiff would have been estopped to insist upon a forfeiture if McAllister—who, it appears, had acted as "land commissioner, Southern Pacific Railroad Company," one year before, when the contract was executed—had in fact informed the defendants that they might open a saloon on the premises and the defendants had acted in reliance thereon.

Judgment affirmed.

MYERS v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 3289.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. Feb. 19, 1920.)

1. Constitutional law ☞83(3)—Order committing debtor unable to satisfy judgment held imprisonment for debt.

Where judgment debtor on supplementary proceedings denied that he had money or other property out of which he could pay the judgment, and testified that bonds owned by his wife were held as collateral security by a bank, and where such evidence was the only evidence taken on the supplementary proceedings, the court was without jurisdiction to order that defendant satisfy judgment, and to be confined in the county jail until he complies with such order, under the state and federal Constitutions prohibiting the imprisonment of any person for a debt in a civil action; there being no evidence to support any finding upon which to predicate an order for contempt.

2. Execution ☞418 — Order of commitment held defective for failure to state facts showing contempt.

Order committing judgment debtor to custody of sheriff until he shall have complied with order requiring him to satisfy judgment, without stating that judgment debtor could pay but had refused to comply with court's order, held defective under Code Civ. Proc. § 1209, subd. 5, and section 1219, in failing to show willful disobedience of court's order.

3. Contempt ☞64—Requirements as to warrant of commitment stated.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1209, subd. 5, and section 1219, a warrant of commitment must show that the thing ordered to be done is within the power of the person committed, and that such person has disobeyed the court's lawful order.

4. Contempt ☞40—Charge, finding, and judgment in contempt proceeding to be construed in favor of defendant.

A proceeding to punish a defendant for contempt is in its nature a criminal proceeding, and the charge and finding thereon and the judgment of the court are to be strictly construed in favor of the defendant.

Application for writ of review by B. Myers, also known as Boris Myers, against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Los Angeles, and the Honorable Grant Jackson, Judge thereof, to review an order of commitment. Writ granted.

Willedd Andrews, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Frank S. Hutton and Schweitzer & Hutton, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an application for a writ of review. It is alleged in the petition:

That on the 27th day of December, 1918, one A. L. Gofe recovered judgment in the superior court of Los Angeles county, in a civil action on a certain promissory note, against petitioner herein. That said judgment is legal and valid. That petitioner has not appealed therefrom or made any motion to set the same aside, and that it is in full force and effect. That on April 14, 1919, pursuant to an order for his appearance in a supplementary proceeding in said case, before Hon. Grant Jackson, judge, petitioner appeared and testified in behalf of the plaintiff in that action. That said proceeding was continued from said day to November 18, 1919, when he again testified on behalf of said plaintiff—transcript of which latter testimony is set out in full in the petition—and that thereafter the court made the following order:

"This supplemental proceeding came on regularly to be heard the 18th day of November, 1919, and thereafter regularly continued from time to time until February 5, 1920, Messrs. Schweitzer & Hutton and H. L. Widman, Esq., appearing as counsel for plaintiff, and Willedd Andrews, Esq., as counsel for defendant, and after full and complete examination of said defendant as to any property or money in his hands or control which said defendant refuses to apply to the satisfaction of said judgment, the court finds,

"That said defendant now has in his possession and under his control, $15,000.00 in cash and securities in the form of Canadian war bonds and sufficient to satisfy said judgment, and has sufficient property out of which he is able to pay the judgment herein.

"Now therefore on motion of said plaintiff

"It is ordered that said defendant forthwith pay to the clerk of this court so much of the money in his possession as aforesaid as necessary to satisfy said judgment, and

"It is further ordered that until said defendant so apply said money to the satisfaction of said judgment, that he be committed to the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county, California, and that he be confined in the county jail until such time as he complies with the order of this court.

"Dated: February 6, 1920.

"[Signed] Grant Jackson, Judge."

That said superior court has exceeded its authority and had no jurisdiction to make said order. That petitioner has no appeal from said order, and has no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy other than by writ of review. That he is beneficially interested in this proceeding, and that pending another proceeding in this court he was ordered released from the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county upon his depositing the sum of $1,000 with the clerk of court as bail. Following this is a prayer for the writ that the said order of commitment might be reviewed by this court, and thereupon that said order might be adjudged void and of no effect.

[1] The only evidence taken on the supplementary proceedings was the testimony of petitioner herein, which testimony was either true or false. If true, then, after having read the entire record, the evidence shows that petitioner had no money or other property belonging to him with or out of which he could pay the judgment against him. If false, then there is absolutely no evidence before the court. In either case, the court was without jurisdiction to make the order in question.

There is nothing in the record showing that defendant was the owner, possessor, or had under his control any cash, except the sum of $1.67, which the trial judge himself found in a purse that petitioner had in his pocket at the time of the supplementary proceedings. The Canadian war bonds referred to in the order of commitment were, according to the record, purchased with the $15,000 referred to in said order, and the evidence shows conclusively that they are on deposit as collateral security with the Home Savings Bank of Los Angeles, Cal., placed therein by petitioner's wife, who according to the testimony, was the owner thereof; she having purchased certain real estate with money borrowed from said bank, and to secure the payment of which said bonds were so held. The evidence further conclusively shows that petitioner was unable to procure the bonds in question, for reasons which must now be obvious. This being true, the order of commitment was made without authority of law. To permit the imprisonment here imposed, under the facts disclosed by the record before us, would be to sanction a violation of the state and federal Constitutions prohibiting the imprisonment of any person for a debt in a civil action (Knutte v. Superior Court, 134 Cal. 660, 66 Pac. 875; In re Cowden, 139 Cal. 244, 73 Pac. 156); and this is particularly true when it appears that the petitioner has been ordered by the court to do something which it is conclusively shown to be out of his power to do (Ex parte Cohen, 6 Cal. 319; Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 176; Galland v. Galland, 44 Cal. 475, 13 Am. Rep. 167; Ex parte Overend, 122 Cal. 201, 54 Pac. 740; In re Cowden, supra; In re Garner, 177 Pac. 162; Egilbert v. Superior Court, 6 Cal. App. 190, 91 Pac. 748; People v. Forester, 29 Cal. App. 460, 155 Pac. 1022).

[2-4] Even although it be conceded that the evidence disclosed facts which would authorize the making of such an order, still it will be seen from the order itself that it is fatally defective, in that it fails to find as a fact that petitioner, having property from which the judgment could be paid, had refused to comply therewith by applying such property, or any portion thereof, to the payment of said judgment. Section 1219 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"When the contempt consists in the omission to perform an act which is yet in the power of the person to perform, he may be imprisoned until he has performed it, and in that case the act must be specified in the warrant of commitment."

Section 1209 enumerates the various acts and omissions in respect to courts of justice and proceedings therein that are contempts of the court's authority, providing, in subdivision 5, that "disobedience of any lawful judgment, order, or process of the court" is such contempt. These two Code provisions therefore, call for two facts which must appear in the "warrant of commitment": (1) That the thing ordered to be done must be within the power of the person so ordered to perform; and (2) that such person, although he has it within his power so to do, has disobeyed the court's lawful order. The order made does not measure up to these requirements. "The statute says the facts showing the contempt must appear upon the face of the order." Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 280, 63 Pac. 372. "A proceeding to punish a defendant for contempt is in its nature a criminal proceeding, and the charge and finding thereon, and the judgment of the court, are to be strictly construed in favor of the accused." Schwarz v. Superior Court, 111 Cal. 106, 43 Pac. 580. We have no hesitancy in saying that from the record before us it conclusively appears that petitioner was ordered to appear in supplementary proceedings; that he did appear; that he testified; that he told the court of his doings, etc.; that the money and bonds referred to were not his, but were the property of his wife; that he was ordered to bring said bonds into court; that he did not do so, but showed that the same were held by the bank referred to as collateral, and that said bank would not give them up; and that for this reason it was physically impossible for him to comply with the court's order. There is no evidence in the record, therefore, to support any finding upon which to predicate an order for contempt.

It therefore results inevitably from these considerations that the record discloses a case where the court had no power to proceed and punish the petitioner as for a contempt, and its judgment accordingly must be annulled.

It is therefore ordered that the writ issue.

SADICOFF v. JACKSON. (Civ. 2720.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 21, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 15, 1920.)

Trial ~~395~~395(8)—Signing of findings within five days after service does not affect judgment.

Code Civ. Proc. § 634, providing that a copy of findings prepared by a party by the court's direction shall be served on all the parties at least five days before the findings are signed, is merely directory, and the fact that findings were signed less than five days after they were served on defendant did not impair the validity of the judgment.

Action by Harry G. Sadicoff, a minor, by H. C. Morton, his guardian ad litem, against C. E. Jackson. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

CONREY, P. J. Defendant appeals from a judgment for $389.02, damages for wrongful conversion of personal property of the plaintiff. We have before us the judgment roll, without any bill of exceptions.

No attempt is made by appellant to present any point on the merits of the case. He merely suggests that the findings of fact were served on his attorney on February 20, 1918, and were signed and filed on the 25th of that month, which he says was one day before expiration of the period of time prescribed by section 634, Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore claims that the judgment is "void."

The cited Code section is merely directory, and even if it appeared by the record (in fact it does not so appear) that the findings had been prepared by a party under an order directing him so to do, and findings were signed less than five days after proposed findings were served on defendant the validity of the judgment would not be impaired thereby. Amundson v. Shafer, 36 Cal. App. 398, 172 Pac. 173.

The point presented by appellant is truly mathematical, since it has no dimensions. It is plain that the appeal has been taken for purposes of delay. Therefore it is ordered that the judgment be affirmed, and that the plaintiff recover from defendant, besides costs, the additional sum of $50 damages.

TRAVIS GLASS CO. v. ROBBINS.
(Civ. 2754.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 20, 1920.)

1. Sales § 273(3)—Seller of milk bottles held not to have warranted bottles to withstand special method of sterilization.

Where milk company sterilized bottles by special method with commercial soda, seller of bottles, having delivered bottles corresponding in shape and finish with the sample bottle, was not liable for breach of warranty under Civ. Code, § 1770, because such sterilization spotted the bottles, where seller had no knowledge of the method by which buyer sterilized its bottles; the use of the word "certified" as part of the milk company's name being insufficient to charge seller with knowledge thereof.

2. Trial § 404(1)—Finding as to goods sold being without value construed.

In seller's action for purchase price of bottles sold to milk company defended on ground that bottles being spotted by special method of sterilization were worthless to buyer and that seller by reason thereof had breached warranty of suitability, finding that the bottles were worthless for use in defendant's business, "and are of no value whatsoever," held not a determination that bottles were worthless generally for the purpose of containing milk; such finding having reference merely to milk company's method of sterilization.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by the Travis Glass Company against Edward F. Robbins, doing business under the fictitious firm name of Arden Dairy, Certified. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James E. Kelby, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. W. Falkner, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff sued to recover the purchase price of a certain lot of glass bottles. Judgment was in its favor, and the defendant appeals from the judgment and also from an order made denying his motion for a different judgment upon the findings of fact.

Plaintiff at the time material to this controversy was engaged in the manufacturing of glass articles in the state of West Virginia, and was represented in Los Angeles by a sales agent. Defendant was engaged in the business of conducting a dairy, which included the delivery of milk to customers in glass bottles. In May, 1916, defendant placed an order with the local agent of the plaintiff for a large quantity of bottles, aggregating in price the sum of $1,021.48. The contract for the bottles was in form a written order, specifying the quantities and sizes of the bottles desired, and this order was signed by plaintiff's agent, and also by the agent of the defendant. Upon the face of the order appeared the statement: "Sample bottles showing exact finish wanted is being sent by express." The bottles were manufactured and shipped to defendant, were received by him, but he found them unsuited to his use, and attempted to rescind the contract and demanded back the amount of freight charges which he had paid. In the answer filed, as one of the defenses to the action, defendant alleged in substance the following facts: That he was, at the time the order for bottles was given, engaged in selling and delivering "certified" milk; that said milk was largely supplied for the use of invalids and children; that by reason of its special use the milk was required to be absolutely pure and delivered in clean and sanitary bottles; that in the business in which defendant was specially engaged the usual and ordinary method of sterilizing bottles was to place them in a heated solution of commercial washing soda; that when defendant attempted to use the bottles received from the plaintiff and sterilize them in the usual manner "spots and patches" appeared over the inner surface, and "to such an extent that the interior surface presented in such spots a frosted appearance; that such frosted appearance could only be removed by scraping, and that when removed, left the surface of the bottle in an etched and roughened condition, which could not be cleansed thoroughly or properly or at all; that such frosted appearance developed immediately upon said bottles being put into use"; that a chemical examination showed that the frosting so appearing consisted of "silica, alumina, and lime, and indicated a chemical decomposition or breaking down of the constituents of the glass." There were the further allegations that in defendant's business it was only possible to use smooth, glazed bottles which might be thoroughly cleansed and sterilized, and that the condition which developed on the bottles in question gave the appearance that such bottles were not clean, and that for such reason they were wholly worthless, "valueless, and unfit for use in defendant's business, and * * * of no value whatsoever." Defendant also alleged that the order was given for bottles for the particular purpose of being used as containers for certified milk,

"and that the same was well known to plaintiff and to plaintiff's said agent." There was also a cross-complaint filed, claiming damages by reason of loss suffered by defendant in this business because of the attempted use of the bottles.

The court made findings determining the facts generally to be as set out in the answer of the defendant as to the condition of the bottles after sterilization; found that "by reason of such condition of said bottles, and all of them, they were and are wholly worthless, valueless, and unfit for use in defendant's business, and are of no value whatsoever." The court affirmatively found, however, as follows:

"The said bottles were desired by the defendant for the particular purpose of being used as containers for certified milk, but that was not well known to plaintiff, although it may have been to plaintiff's soliciting agent. * * * The shipment of bottles corresponded in shape and finish with the sample bottle that had been forwarded to plaintiff, and that was all that defendant stated to plaintiff that the sample bottle was sent for."

It may be added that the written order designated the purchaser as "Arden Dairy, Certified."

[1] It is the contention of appellant in the main that the bottles were manufactured under special order for a special purpose, to wit, to be used as containers for "certified" milk, and that the plaintiff under the circumstances should be held to warrant that the glass in the bottles was so constituted as to be able to withstand the chemical used in the sterilization process. It is claimed that by the use of the word "certified" the plaintiff was charged with knowledge of the fact that the bottles required a special method of sterilization such as was employed by the defendant. The appeal is presented on the judgment roll; hence we have not the evidence before us. While the trial court found that the use which defendant desired to make of the bottles involved the use of commercial soda as a cleansing agent, it does find that the particular purpose was not "well known to plaintiff, although it may have been to plaintiff's soliciting agent." This finding negatives knowledge on the part of the plaintiff of the fact adverted to. There is nothing in the findings to show that by the mere use of the word "certified" it was indicated to the manufacturer of the bottles that it would be necessary in sterilizing the containers to use a caustic chemical which might have a deteriorating effect upon the glass. The contract stated that the sample bottle showed the "finish wanted," and the court found that the bottles delivered corresponded "in shape and finish with the sample bottle." Section 1770 of the Civil Code does provide that—

"One who manufactures an article under an order for a particular purpose, warrants by the sale that it is reasonably fit for that purpose."

Under the findings of the court it cannot be said either that the manufacturer knew that a special method of sterilization was to be used, or that the bottles were not generally suitable for the purpose of the dairy business.

[2] Aside from the proposition discussed, it is argued that a failure of consideration was shown under the finding made by the trial judge when he determined that by reason of the condition of the bottles they were worthless for use in defendant's business, "and are of no value whatsoever." It is urged that this finding had the effect of deciding that, irrespective of the special use to which defendant desired to put the bottles, they were valueless—in other words, valueless generally for the purpose of containing milk. We do not so construe the finding. The finding followed the allegations of the answer, the whole text of which plainly indicates that it was the purpose to allege a special contract for the manufacture of bottles for a special purpose, and that the bottles as manufactured did not suit the purpose intended. The last phrase, that the bottles were of no value whatsoever, should, we think, be construed with what immediately precedes it, and be qualified by the language there used.

The judgment, in our opinion, upon the record presented, should be sustained.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a different judgment upon the findings of fact are affirmed.

L. B. Stanton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment rendered against it for balance of the purchase price owing to the plaintiff on a contract for potatoes sold and delivered.

The following facts were found by the court, all of which were established by the evidence: On June 6, 1917, defendant agreed to buy from plaintiff two carloads of potatoes of 270 sacks each, to be delivered f. o. b. cars at Anaheim, Cal., at the price of 3 cents per pound. The first carload was delivered and paid for. On the 16th day of June the plaintiff tendered for delivery a second carload of potatoes weighing 30,975 pounds. Defendant inspected the potatoes and found that some of them were sunburned. Thereupon, as a condition of acceptance of those potatoes, the parties entered into a written modification of their contract in the following terms, signed by the plaintiff:

"I hereby accept one-half payment for 270 sacks potatoes 30925 lbs. at $3.00 cwt. $464.63 and agree to stand behind the shipment and get the balance as soon as returns come."

Thereupon, defendant paid to plaintiff said sum of $464.63 on account of said carload of potatoes and thereafter shipped them and caused them to be sold at El Paso, Tex. At that place it was found that some of the potatoes had spoiled and were unfit for sale, and the sale was of the remainder of the lot.

Responding to an allegation of the answer that said carload of potatoes was accepted by the defendant and delivered by the plaintiff upon consignment, the court found that said allegation that they were on consignment was not true. Nevertheless, the court found that by said modification of the contract the plaintiff agreed that defendant should sell or cause to be sold the said 270 sacks of potatoes and be entitled to deduct from the proceeds the value of any potatoes which should be found to be spoiled upon such sale and delivery and pay the balance of the proceeds, less said sum of $464.63, to the plaintiff. The court further found that there is due, owing, and unpaid from defendant to plaintiff for said carload of potatoes the sum of $271.55, with interest at 7 per cent. from June 16, 1917. Judgment was entered accordingly on February 28, 1918, for said principal and interest, making at that time a total sum of $283.06.

The defendant moved for a new trial upon which the court announced its decision that the motion be granted, unless the plaintiff consent to a reduction of the judgment from the sum of $283.06 to the sum of $225.42, with interest from July 26, 1917. The plaintiff filed such written consent, and thereupon the court ordered that the amount of the judgment be reduced to the sum of $225.42, with interest then amounting to $12.27, making a total of $237.69, and the motion for a new trial was denied.

Appellant contends that it was obligated to account for the actual proceeds of the produce after credit for all its expenses in disposing of the unspoiled potatoes, and that the net proceeds were only $471.85, so that the balance due plaintiff was only the sum of $7.22, which amount was tendered by the defendant.

It was shown by uncontradicted evidence that the defendant paid out for freight $232.98, for weighing $4, for drayage $1.50, for storage $4, for sorting potatoes at El Paso $22.75, and that the loss in spoiled potatoes was 7,013 pounds, which, at $3.20 per hundredweight, would amount to $224.40. These sums, together with said sum of $464.63, amount to $954.26. The defendant, in its account of sales as rendered to the plaintiff, arrived at the balance of $7.22 by deducting an aggregate sum of $953.36, from the sum of $960.58, which it charged to itself as for 30,018 pounds of potatoes (being 30,925 pounds less "loss by evaporation") at $3.20 per hundredweight. It will be seen from the findings that the court formally rejected the theory of a delivery of the potatoes to the defendant on consignment. In this we think the court was right. This being so, it should follow that the goods were sold and delivered to the defendant on the contract as modified, the same being treated as a contract of sale. But the court then proceeded to charge defendant with the gross proceeds at the rate received for the potatoes at El Paso, instead of the contract rate. This resulted in an excessive judgment, partly right in its announced theory, and wrong in partly basing its computation upon the wrong theory. On the facts as shown by the evidence, the plaintiff was entitled to receive payment for 30,925 pounds of potatoes, less 7,013 pounds of spoiled potatoes, and less the further sum expended by defendant for sorting potatoes at El Paso; this process being required by the fact that a part of the potatoes was spoiled. The actual price of 23,912 pounds at 3 cents per pound is $717.36. Deducting the sum of $22.75 for sorting and the $464.63 paid on account left a balance due to plaintiff in the sum of $229.98, the sum which, under the evidence, the court should have found to be due and unpaid. On this state of the record, and excluding from consideration the proceedings subsequent to the original entry of judgment, defendant's motion for a new trial should have been granted.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that on this record the court was not authorized to escape the necessity of granting a new trial by reducing the amount of the judgment; that this is not the ordinary case of remission of damages as a condition to the denial of a new trial. The argument is that the "amended" judgment substitutes a new theory and undertakes to change the findings of fact, a thing which, after judgment, the court cannot do. We think that this argument is sound, and conclusive in its application here. The "amended" judgment is in conflict with the court's finding that appellant was bound to pay "the balance of the proceeds" less the amount previously paid. That was an erroneous finding, but it cannot be corrected after judgment, except by granting a new trial.

The judgment is reversed.

PATRICK v. TETZLAFF. (Civ. 2772.)

1. Evidence — 376(6) — Oath that original books regularly kept are correct not required.

Where the original character of the books of a tradesman or shopkeeper is proved, and it is shown that they have been regularly kept following the usual course of business of the person producing them, an affirmative oath on the part of the tradesman or shopkeeper keeping them that they are absolutely correct is not required to render them admissible in evidence and prima facie proof of the items disclosed thereby.

2. Evidence — 355(1), 383(7) — Cards on which workmen entered time and from which account was made up constituted prima facie proof.

Where under the system employed in a repair shop workmen entered the time they were employed on particular jobs on cards over their signatures, and the bookkeeper made up the total charge from such cards, the cards constituted original memoranda of the items of the account for the amount of labor performed and were prima facie proof thereof.

JAMES, J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment entered in defendant's favor.

This action, as formulated by the complaint, was one of claim and delivery, wherein it was alleged that the defendant "wrongfully" took from the possession of the plaintiff a certain automobile and continued to retain possession of the same after demand made. The usual judgment in the alternative was asked for. The defendant filed what he designated as a cross-complaint, wherein it was set up that the automobile in question was delivered to him for the purpose of having many repairs made, and that he was entitled to payment of his repair bill, which amounted to the sum of $454, before relinquishing possession of the machine to the plaintiff. The trial judge determined the facts to be as alleged in the cross-complaint, and, it evidently being made to appear that plaintiff had taken possession of the machine as a right preliminary in his action of claim and delivery, it was ordered that the defendant recover possession, and that, in case delivery could not be had, "defendant and cross-complainant recover from plaintiff and cross-defendant the sum of $454." As to whether the filing of such a cross-complaint is appropriate to an action of replevin may be doubted, but, as that question is not at all involved in the argument upon this appeal, we leave it undecided.

[1, 2] The only matter urged as ground for reversal is that the trial judge erred in admitting in evidence certain shop cards showing the time devoted by several of the employees of the defendant to the work of repairing plaintiff's automobile. There were materials furnished, but the correctness of those items was admitted by the plaintiff. The bookkeeper of the defendant testified as to the system employed in the shop of defendant by which the time charge against any particular job was made up. This system consisted first in original memoranda made by the individual workmen wherein the items of the hours employed were set down over the signatures of the workmen, and these cards were turned in to the bookkeeper, who made up his total charges by aggregating the figures shown on all cards. The bookkeeper identified the several signatures attached to the cards as being those of the workmen employed in making the repairs in question. The bookkeeper further testified that under the system employed each job as it was entered upon was given a certain number and the cards which were turned in identified the work under the number selected. No witness testified in words that the charges were correct. It was agreed, however, that the total number of hours shown on the cards was the number charged; but the plaintiff objected to the evidence on the ground that no proper foundation was laid therefor, and that the same was incompetent and hearsay. It seems to be well established that the books of a tradesman or shopkeeper, when it is shown that they have been regularly kept following the usual course of business of the person producing them, are admissible in evidence and are prima facie proof of the items disclosed thereby. Pertinent to this question, in Ruling Case Law, vol. 10, § 377, "Evidence," it is declared:

"Entries in books, in order to be admissible, ordinarily must have been made in the regular course of business and as a part of the party's system of keeping his accounts. The fact that the entries are made by clerks in the regular routine of their employment, and under the natural impulse of an employé to perform his duties accurately, is the safeguard of the accuracy of the entry. Indeed, under the systems of bookkeeping in modern business houses the mechanical precision with which numerous employés record various transactions, together with the absence of any personal motive to misrepresent the facts of the transaction, makes the modern book of accounts a very high form of evidence in respect of transactions that are the proper subject-matter for a book of account."

It would be to impose a most difficult rule upon the commercial world to hold that, notwithstanding ample proof as to the original character and regularity of the keeping of accounts, there must be in addition an affirmative oath on the part of the tradesman or shopkeeper producing them that they are absolutely correct. In large establishments employing a great multitude of clerks this proof would be in many cases beyond reach. We think that the cards offered in evidence constituted original memoranda of the items of the account for the amount of the labor performed, and that they were prima facie proof of the fact. White v. Whitney, 82 Cal. 166, 22 Pac. 1138; Carroll v. Storck, 57 Cal. 366. It would seem further that a transcription from the cards regularly made upon the books would also constitute an original entry within the meaning of section 1947, Code of Civil Procedure.

Considering the one question which is submitted for determination on this appeal by the plaintiff, we think that no error is shown.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Corporations — § 80(5), 90(1)—Misrepresentation that corporate stock is nonassessable is one of fact.

Representation that stock is nonassessable is assurance that the company has taken all CONREY, P. J. Action to recover on a subscription contract whereby the defendant agreed to take and pay for shares of stock of plaintiff corporation. The defendant claimed the right to rescind the contract upon the ground that the agents of the corporation in their negotiations with the defendant, which resulted in the contract, falsely and fraudulently represented to the defendant that the capital stock of the corporation was nonassessable; that the defendant signed the contract in reliance upon said statements which he believed to be true and without which he would not have entered into such contract. At the trial the court overruled plaintiff's objections to the defendant's offer of evidence proving that such representations were made by plaintiff's agents. The facts were proved as alleged by the defendant, and judgment was rendered in his favor, from which judgment the plaintiff appeals.

It is conceded by appellant that the rule of law by which the decision of the trial court on the question at issue must be tested was determined adversely to appellant in the case of Browne v. San Gabriel River Rock Co., 22 Cal. App. 682, 136 Pac. 542, 544, which decision was rendered by this court and rehearing thereof denied by the Supreme Court. It was said therein that—

"A representation that the stock of a corporation is nonassessable should be held to be an assurance that the corporation has taken whatever steps that are necessary to effectually waive its right to levy the assessments provided for by the statute, and this representation would be one of fact and not of law. If untrue, it would be actionable and entitle the purchaser to rescind his contract."

See, also, Carr v. Sacramento Clay Products Co., 35 Cal. App. 439, 445, 170 Pac. 446, where the same principle was applied, although relating to a different class of facts. The cases relied upon by appellant, such as Haviland v. Southern California Edison Co., 172 Cal. 601, 608, 158 Pac. 328, Champion v. Woods, 79 Cal. 17, 21 Pac. 534, 12 Am. St.

Rep. 126, and McCarter v. Zeller, 35 Cal. App. 593, 170 Pac. 636, were cases in which the alleged misrepresentations included mere opinions on questions of law and did not include or imply any representation of fact. We are satisfied that the ruling made in Browne v. San Gabriel River Rock Co., supra, should be adopted as the rule of decision in this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division Two, California, Feb. 26, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 20, 1920.)

1. Brokers ⇐86(4)—Evidence held to warrant finding for broker as procuring cause of sale.

Evidence held to warrant finding that plaintiff's assignor, a broker, was the procuring cause of the sales made by defendant, and thus defendant was liable for commissions.

2. Appeal and error ⇐1010(1)—Finding supported by evidence not disturbed.

Finding supported by evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Brokers ⇐56(3)—Broker need not personally conduct negotiations.

Where broker was the procuring cause of a sale of cauliflower made by a California shipper to a Chicago buyer, the fact that the broker did not personally conduct the negotiations and was not present in California, it appearing after broker called the matter to the attention of the Chicago buyer its representatives negotiated with the shipper, will not deprive broker of rights to commission.

4. Partnership ⇐64—Brokerage firm held not doing business in California so as to require registration.

Where a firm of Chicago brokers interested a Chicago buyer in defendant's cauliflower, and after the broker's negotiations for sale for a few carloads the buyer's representative made a contract in California for further shipments, the brokers, who were the procuring cause of the contract, cannot be deemed to have been doing business in California, and so failure to register the names of the members of the firm in accordance with Civ. Code, § 2466, although the firm name did not disclose the individual names, will not preclude recovery.

5. Appeal and error ⇐1071(6)—Failure to find on issues not ground for reversal unless evidence was submitted.

Failure to find on some issues made by the answer, a finding upon which would merely have the effect of invalidating a judgment fully supported by the findings made, will not be held ground for reversal unless it is shown by statement or bill of exceptions that evidence was submitted in relation to such issue.

6. Brokers ⇐85(7)—Correspondence between purchaser and broker admissible to show procuring cause.

In an action by assignee of brokers for compensation for selling numerous cars of cauliflower, correspondence between purchaser and the brokers is admissible to show that the brokers were the procuring cause.

7. Interest ⇐19(1) — Not allowable before judgment in favor of broker for commissions.

In an action on the quantum meruit for broker's commissions for sales made, interest cannot be allowed before judgment.

Geo. H. Wilson and J. W. Hocker, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hollzer & Greenberg, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant J. J. Rosenmayer from a judgment against him alone in the sum of $3,534.96 for commissions upon the sale of goods. The plaintiff is the assignee of Sutphen & Co., a copartnership engaged in business as brokers and manufacturers' agents in the city of Chicago. The defendant was engaged in Los Angeles in the business of buying cauliflower from the farmers and packing the same in barrels and then selling in the Eastern markets in carload lots. The defendant paid commission to the plaintiff's assignor upon a sale of 5 carloads to Libby, McNeill & Libby, a Chicago buyer, and the dispute is over the commission upon an additional 80 cars sold to the same purchaser a day or so later. The appellant attacks the finding of the trial court to the effect that the plaintiff's assignor rendered services to the defendant as a broker in securing the purchaser for these additional 80 cars of cauliflower. This finding is based upon the correspondence between the parties, which is set out in the record. It can serve no useful purpose to quote that correspondence in full here, and in the interest of clarity we shall merely call attention to those portions which justify the conclusion of the trial court. On November 18, 1916, following up other correspondence, the brokers telegraphed the defendant as follows:

"Have buyer several cars cauliflower seven dollars shipping point. Will inspect, accept and pay for flower Los Angeles. Wire number of cars and where inspector now at San Francisco can meet you. If only one car let Budlong have it, terms sight draft. If more wire us."

To this defendant replied on November 19:

"Am able to load two cars a week at eight dollars per barrel subject to changes. Will ship Budlong one car also at eight dollars. Demand big, market higher. If inspector comes to Los Angeles will make arrangements."

On November 19, 1916, the brokers telegraphed to the defendant that they had—

"sold Libby McNeill five cars or more if available same price and terms. Their Mr. Eustace now California will see you early part week."

To this telegram defendant replied:

"Will ship Budlong car next week. Will be able to ship later all you can sell. Too early yet, don't guarantee future prices."

On November 21, 1916, Sutphen & Co. wrote the defendant:

"Referring to the Libby, McNeill & Libby cauliflower deal, they will buy five cars at $8 Los Angeles, if you can supply them or they will take one car this week at $8.00, then wire us price on balance. Their man will be with you today or tomorrow. In your telegram you say that you can give us all the cauliflower we can sell and that it is too early yet to quote price. * * *

Libby, McNeill & Libby wired their agent at Los Angeles on November 21:

"Rosenmayer quotes thro Sutphen fortyfive gallons cauliflower in brine eight dollars Los Angeles, need badly, see Rosenmayer today, inspect cauliflower, buy all possible if good color. * * *

On November 22, 1916, Mr. Beilfus, the Los Angeles agent of Libby, McNeill & Libby, in accordance with these instructions, called on the defendant and bought 5 cars at $8; on November 23 he bought 30 cars at $8.25; and on November 24 he bought 50 cars at $8.50. On November 23 Sutphen & Co. wrote to the defendant:

"Libby, McNeill & Libby have sent a man to see you. They will buy five cars, more if you have them at the same price. Both Budlong and Libby have agreed to have the cauliflower shipped at once."

On November 27, 1916, Sutphen & Co. wrote defendant again:

"We are pleased to learn that you are able to supply Libby, McNeill & Libby with 70 or 80 cars cauliflower. They have informed us over the phone of the terms and conditions as set forth in the attached sales ticket. Presume they have cleaned up everything you have outside of the order for Budlong. * * *

The defendant paid the commission upon the first 5 cars only and refused to pay the commission on the 80 cars sold subsequently. The complaint was in two counts: First, upon an express contract and agreed commission of 5 per cent; and, second, for the reasonable value of the services rendered.

[1-3] The contention of the appellant that this evidence does not show the plaintiff's assignor entitled to commissions upon the 80 cars of foodstuff is without merit. It is admitted that Sutphen & Co. negotiated the sale of the first 5 carloads to Libby, McNeill & Libby. It also appears that there was a prospect then of selling more goods to this same purchaser, and that Sutphen & Co. advised the defendant that the negotiations would be carried on by the representative of the purchaser, who was then in California. These negotiations were carried on and a sale consummated by said representative. It therefore appears that, while the details of the sale were arranged between the representative of the purchaser and the seller in Los Angeles, the transaction was made possible by the efforts of the brokers in Chicago in negotiating with the buyer, and the buyer's direction to its agent to arrange the details of the transaction with the seller was in accordance with its arrangement with the broker. It therefore appears that the findings of the trial court upon this question find abundant support in the evidence, and they cannot be disturbed by us. It is not necessary that a broker should personally conduct negotiations between his principal and the purchaser or that he should be present when the bargain is completed; it is sufficient that his efforts are the producing cause of the sale, and that through his agency the purchaser is brought into communication with the seller, although the parties then negotiate in person. Pierce v. Nichols, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 443, 110 S. W. 206, 208; Keys v. Johnson, 68 Pa. 42; Hill v. McCoy, 1 Cal. App. 159.

166, 81 Pac. 1015; Levy v. Wolf, 2 Cal. App. 491, 495, 84 Pac. 313; Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. 519, 522, 117 Pac. 575.

[4, 5] Defendant also alleges as a defense to this action that plaintiff's assignor is a copartnership, doing business under a firm name and style which does not disclose the names of the several partners; that such a designation constitutes a fictitious name, and that the partnership failed to file a certificate with the county clerk of Los Angeles county showing the names in full and places of residence of all the members of the partnership, as required by section 2466, Civil Code, and that the transactions sued upon occurred in the county of Los Angeles; that therefore the plaintiff is barred from maintaining the action. The section of the Code referred to expressly applies to "every partnership transacting business in this state under a fictitious name." The trial court found, and the evidence clearly was to the effect, that the plaintiff's assignor did not transact business in this state. The testimony of the members of the firm of Sutphen & Co. was that that company never had an office in California, and that the company transacted business in Chicago for packers in California; they had no agents in the state of California, and their orders from people in Chicago were mailed to packers in California. The appellant complains that the court did not find expressly upon this special defense because it did not find whether or not Sutphen & Co. were doing business under a fictitious name. The trial court found that the services for which recovery is sought in this action were rendered outside of the state of California. The record contains no evidence that we could discover which would support a finding upon this issue in favor of the appellant. The only evidence in the record upon the subject is the evidence above referred to which is contrary to the contention of the appellant. It is said in People v. McCue, 150 Cal. 195, 200, 88 Pac. 899, 901:

"It is well settled that a failure to find upon some issue made by the answer, a finding upon which would merely have the effect of invalidating a judgment fully supported by the findings made, will not be held ground for reversal, unless it is shown by statement or bill of exceptions that evidence was submitted in relation to such issue."

It is true that the business of closing the contract between the defendant and the purchaser was done at Los Angeles; but the business of securing the purchaser, which is the service for which the suit is brought, and the business in which Sutphen & Co. was engaged, was done in Chicago.

[6] Appellant objects to the introduction in evidence of certain correspondence between the purchaser and the broker, which correspondence clearly shows that the purchaser was secured by the broker. The objection to this evidence is that it was not binding upon the defendant. Similar objection is made to the introduction of a telegram by the purchaser to its agent, stating that the defendant had quoted prices to it through Sutphen & Co. It is urged that, as there is no evidence that the agent told defendant that he had been sent by Sutphen & Co., this evidence of that fact is inadmissible. The objections made in these connections are answered by the language of the case of Sussdorff v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 319, 323, where it is said that, if the broker was the producing cause of the sale, his right to compensation would not be affected by the circumstance that the defendants were ignorant of it at the time. This rule has also been stated by the appellate court of our state in the case of Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. at page 522, 117 Pac. at page 576.

[7] The other errors urged by appellant we consider to be without merit, except the contention that the trial court erred in allowing interest upon the judgment from June 1, 1917. The judgment was rendered on July 23, 1918. A finding was made that the reasonable value of the services rendered by the plaintiff's assignor is $3,378.55. Judgment is given for this amount plus interest from June 1, 1917, upon the second count of the complaint, which is a count in quantum meruit. It has been expressly decided in the case of American-Hawaiian, etc., Co. v. Butler, 17 Cal. App. 764, 768, 121 Pac. 709, that this is improper. The reasons therefor are set out in that opinion. In the present case the allegation regarding the reasonable value of the services was controverted as in the case of American-Hawaiian, etc., Co. v. Butler, supra, and the reasoning of that case applies here. The allowance of interest before judgment was therefore erroneous.

The judgment is modified so as to eliminate the interest from June 1, 1917, until date of judgment. When this amount is deducted the judgment will be for $3,378.55, the reasonable value of the services, together with interest thereon from date of judgment until paid at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, together with the necessary costs and disbursements incurred in this action, amounting to the sum of $36.70. As so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

AUENER v. SUITER et al. (Civ. 2084.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 24, 1920.)

1. Husband and wife ⇨262(2)—Burden on husband to show that lands conveyed to wife belonged to community; "presumption."

Under Civ. Code, § 164, declaring presumption that property conveyed to a married woman is her separate property, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1959, 1961, declaring that a "presumption" is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts, a husband asserting that property conveyed to his wife during marriage was community estate which she could not dispose of has the burden of proving that fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Presumption.]

2. Husband and wife ⇨131(3)—Evidence held insufficient to show that property conveyed to wife was not her separate estate.

Where a husband after death of his wife attacked her conveyance of property which she acquired under deed direct to her, held, that the evidence was insufficient to rebut the presumption that the property was her separate estate.

3. Husband and wife ⇨131(3)—Presumption that property belongs to separate estate may outweigh positive testimony.

The presumption declared by Civ. Code, § 164, that property conveyed in writing to a married woman is her separate estate, while not conclusive, may outweigh the positive testimony of witnesses.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1010(1)—Finding supported by evidence not disturbed.

Finding of trial court supported by evidence will not be disturbed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by August Auener against Martha Jane Suiter and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Palmer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walter F. Dunn, of Monrovia, and John P. Dunn, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. The plaintiff brought this action to quiet title to certain lots in the town of Monrovia, Los Angeles. The complaint is in the usual form, merely alleging the plaintiff's ownership and that defendant, without right, claims an interest in the property. The answer consists of a denial of the allegations of the complaint and of a claim of ownership in the defendant. The findings of the court were to the effect that the plaintiff is not the owner of the property. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, from which the plaintiff appeals.

The evidence shows that the plaintiff was the husband and the defendant the mother of Osa W. Auener. Osa W. Auener died June 16, 1916. For some time prior to her death Osa W. Auener held the legal title to the lots in question; they having been deeded to her by Mrs. Marsh and her husband by a grant, bargain, and sale deed. Just prior to her death Osa W. Auener executed a grant, bargain, and sale deed of the lots to her mother, the defendant herein, and it is under this deed that she claims.

It is the plaintiff and appellant's position that, while the record title to the lots was in his wife, they were community property, having been purchased with money the community property of himself and wife. The finding in favor of the defendant is an implied finding that the lots, at the time of the transfer to the defendant, were the separate property of the deceased spouse.

[1] The only point raised on the appeal is that the holding of the court that the lots were the separate property of the deceased spouse is not sustained by the evidence.

Section 164 of the Civil Code provides:

"Whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property."

"A presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts," and unless controverted the finding must be according to the presumption. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1959, 1961.

"By reason of the deeds the wife became presumptively the owner of the lands therein described as her separate property. It was therefore incumbent on plaintiffs to overthrow this presumption by sufficient and proper evidence. The burden was upon plaintiffs to show by sufficient evidence that the lands so conveyed to the wife were community property. This evidence must have been sufficient to justify the court in finding as a fact that the lands were community property. * * *

"Here all presumptions are in favor of the conveyances to the wife. They are presumed to have been made for a consideration paid by the wife, or, if we concede that the consideration was paid by the husband, it will be presumed that the property was intended as a gift to the wife as her separate property. The law will not allow idle presumptions to be indulged in as against a deed delivered and recorded. Facts must be proved from which it is clearly made to appear that the property in such case is community property, or the deed will be given effect according to its terms."

Alferitz v. Arrivillaga, 143 Cal. 648, 649, 77 Pac. 657, 658.

Tested by the principles extracted from the above decision, we are of the opinion that the finding of the court to the effect that the lots in question were the separate property of the deceased spouse cannot be disturbed.

[2] Briefly stated, it appears that the plaintiff and Osa, his wife, were married October 6, 1905, in Indiana, and lived continuously as husband and wife until her death. When married, appellant was a millinery traveling salesman. He owned some lots and was earning $150 per month. His wife had neither money nor property. Appellant traded lots and some cash for a building and sold the same so as to have $2,000. That fall he became sick, was in the hospital six weeks, and ever since has been crippled and walks with great difficulty. He afterwards lived in different cities of Colorado, California, Washington, Oregon, and Nevada. The wife was employed at times as a milliner, and earned from $20 to $35 per week, and off this they lived.

In 1911 they had accumulated some $2,414.21; out of this he paid $1,700 on some Tulare county lands, and the contract to purchase them was taken in their joint names. The wife took some of the money left after making the payment on the Tulare land and opened a millinery store at Redlands. Out of the money she earned in the Redlands business she paid $122.50 interest and $500 principal on the Tulare lands. At the time she paid the $500 on the Tulare lands she told the grantor that all the money paid on it was hers and demanded a deed in her name alone. The deed was so executed. Appellant was then in the East and knew nothing about the deed being made to his wife until he returned in August or September, 1912. Subsequently, the Tulare lands were exchanged for the lots in dispute and the deed therefor made to her alone. Without going into more details of the life and business affairs of the parties, it is sufficient to say that from all the evidence in the case it must be held that the property in dispute was bought with community property and funds.

As to the naming of the wife alone in the deed to the lots in controversy, the appellant testified that he first became aware of the fact that only his wife's name appeared in the deed after it was executed and sent to Santa Barbara:

"I knew she wanted it in her name. Q. Did you have any conversation in reference to it? A. Well, just in a general way. Q. What was said by yourself and wife at that time? A. Well she always contended that in the condition I was in that I would pass away first; in other words, she told me if the property was in her name it would save some possible trouble and expense. This was before the deed was executed."

The appellant also testified he did not make a gift of this property to his wife.

We have, then, a case where the wife held a grant, bargain, and sale deed of the property executed to her as sole grantee. This is strong evidence in favor of the respondent's case and must prevail unless overcome by other evidence.

[3] "It is true that the presumption established by section 164 of the Civil Code is not conclusive, but may be disputed and overcome by other testimony. Nevertheless, however, the presumption is itself evidence which may outweigh the positive testimony of witnesses against it, and will stand as evidence in the case until it is overcome by other testimony." Volquards v. Myers, 23 Cal. App. 500, 138 Pac. 963.

The other evidence in the case showing the community source of the purchase price, the testimony of the plaintiff that he did not give the property to his wife, only raises a conflict of evidence upon the issue, and the force of it as tending to overcome the presumption was somewhat weakened by the appellant's testimony to the effect that before the deed was made he and his wife had talked it over and she wanted it in her name because she thought he would die first and such a deed would cause her less expense and trouble.

"The presumption declared in section 164, although disputable, is itself evidence, and it is for the trial court to say whether the evidence offered to overthrow the presumption has sufficient weight to effect that purpose." Pabst v. Shearer, 172 Cal. 239, 156 Pac. 466; Gilmour v. N. Pasadena Land, etc., Co., 178 Cal. 6, 171 Pac. 1066.

[4] Treating the presumption as evidence, we have a case wherein the trial court has made a finding upon conflicting evidence. It has found that the presumption has not been overcome. Its finding has evidence to support it. We see no legal cause to interfere with its conclusions.

The judgment is accordingly affirmed.

BISHOP v. DESCALZI et al. (Civ. 2544.)

(District Court of Appeal. Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 20, 1920.)

1. Sales ◊181(12)—Evidence held to sustain finding that oranges met prescribed test.

In an action for breach by the buyer of a contract for the purchase of oranges of a prescribed government test, conflicting evidence held to justify finding that the fruit tendered by plaintiff conformed to the test.

2. Sales ◊179(4)—Acceptance of fruit damaged by frost after examination, waives that defense.

Where the buyer of oranges while they were on the trees was notified by the seller that they had been damaged by frost, but, after examination by his agent, directed the seller to deliver the fruit, he could not defend an action for the purchase price on the ground of damage by the frost.

3. Sales ◊384(1)—Buyer's refusal to accept fruit makes him liable for that thereafter destroyed before resale.

A buyer who wrongfully refused to receive the oranges he contracted to purchase is liable for the price of oranges destroyed thereafter by frost before the owner could resell them, regardless of whether the title to the oranges had passed or not.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by D. O. Bishop against John B. Descalzi and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

D. E. Perkins, of Visalia, for appellants.

Middlecoff & Feemster, of Visalia, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Action by plaintiff to recover the sum of $590, balance due on a contract for oranges sold and delivered; also to recover the further sum of $1,100 damages for breach of the same contract by refusal of defendants to receive a part of the oranges sold and to pay for same. Judgment in favor of plaintiff on both demands, from which judgment defendants appeal.

The terms of the contract were as follows:

"Lindsay, California, October 21, 1916.

"This is to certify that the Descalzi Fruit Company, of Pittsburg, have bought of D. O. Bishop his entire crop of Washington navel oranges at 2 cts. per lb. delivered at the packing house, said crop to be merchantable fruit, free from splits and to conform to the government test of 8-1. $500.00 to be advanced; balance payable as cars are loaded."

Appellants claim: (1) That the evidence is insufficient to sustain that portion of the findings which found the oranges in question to be "merchantable fruit, free from splits and to conform to the government test of 8 to 1"; (2) that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the last paragraph of finding X, which is as follows:

"That on or about the 27th day of November, 1916, the defendants, through their agent, inspected said plaintiff's crop of Washington navels mentioned in said contract of October 21, 1916, and accepted all the oranges in the lower 10 acres of said grove consisting of about 109,500 pounds as complying with said contract of October 21, 1916, and instructed plaintiff to pick and deliver the same to defendants at the packing house in Lindsay; that immediately thereafter plaintiff commenced to pick said crop on said lower 10 acres, and deliver it to the said defendants at said packing house in Lindsay, and continued to so pick and deliver until on or about the 4th day of December, 1916, by which time plaintiff had picked and delivered 54,500 pounds of said oranges, when said plaintiff was stopped and delayed in said picking and delivery by the acts of said defendants, and thereafter, on the 6th day of December, 1916, said defendants notified said plaintiff that defendants refused to accept any more of said crop of oranges or to pay for the same, and demanded of plaintiff that plaintiff return said $500 advanced to him; and that thereafter, on the morning of the 8th day of December, 1916, and before defendants had retracted said notice of refusal to accept said oranges, and before said plaintiff could, with reasonable diligence, have effected a resale thereof, said 55,000 pounds of said crop of oranges still remaining on the trees unpicked were destroyed by frost without any fault on the part of the plaintiff."

At the date of the contract the crop of oranges referred to in the contract was on the trees in a 20-acre orchard of the plaintiff. In the evidence the orchard is referred to in three sections respectively as the upper 10 acres, the south 5 acres, and the middle 5 acres. The oranges which were delivered and for which compensation is sought in the first cause of action in the complaint were taken from the lower 5 acres. The oranges which were not delivered and for which compensation is sought in the second cause of action were grown on the middle 5 acres. No recovery is sought on account of oranges grown on the upper 10 acres.

At the time when the contract was made the defendants paid to the plaintiff the sum of $500 as provided in the contract. Defendants' answer contains a counterclaim for said sum of $500.

On the 13th and 14th days of November a frost occurred in plaintiff's orange grove whereby the fruit in the lower part of the grove was damaged. Plaintiff gave information of that fact to Mr. A. E. Walkden, who represented the defendants in all of these transactions, and Mr. Walkden stated he would go out and look at the fruit. Plaintiff said to Walkden that if they did not want the fruit he would pay them back their deposit.

Within about three days after the date of the frost Mr. Walkden went through the orchard with the plaintiff and made some examination, but reached no conclusion. He came again on November 26th and made a more careful examination. Thereupon, according to plaintiff's testimony, Walkden stated to plaintiff that the upper 10 acres was not damaged at all, that the second 5 acres was very slightly damaged, and that the lower 5 acres was considerably damaged. Walkden stated that he would telegraph to the defendants, who were at Pittsburg, Pa., and would then report to the plaintiff.

By the government test of 8 to 1, as mentioned in the contract, it was intended that the juice of the oranges should contain soluble solids equal to or in excess of eight parts to every part of acid contained in the juice, the acidity of the juice to be calculated as citric acid without water of crystallization. On November 27th the plaintiff took sample oranges, in the manner described in his testimony, from the lower 5 acres and separately took samples from the middle 5 acres, and took them to the Hillside packing house to be tested. This was the packing house at which the oranges were to be delivered. It was admitted at the trial that those tests were made and that they resulted as follows: "One tested 8.1 to 1, and the other test shows 9 to 1." On November 28th the plaintiff had certain tests made of the oranges from the upper 10 acres, with results of 7 to 1 and of 7 and a fraction, but with no results coming up to the standard of 8 to 1. It should further be stated that in going through the grove Mr. Walkden cut a great many oranges for the purpose of ascertaining their condition with respect to the effect of frost. On the evening of November 28th, according to plaintiff's testimony, Mr. Walkden called plaintiff on the telephone and stated that he had got a message that they had accepted the fruit, and he wanted plaintiff to go to picking the next morning; that they did not want to pick the damaged fruit until the last, but wanted him to pick the upper fruit first. Plaintiff stated to him: "That fruit won't test up. What are you going to do about that?" Walkden replied: "Well, go to picking down below there, then."

Between November 29th and December 4th plaintiff picked and delivered at the packing house the quantity of oranges referred to in the first cause of action stated in his complaint. On the evening of December 3d Walkden called plaintiff on the telephone and stated that the manager of the packing house would not pack or ship that fruit for him because it was badly frozen. On December 4th plaintiff and Walkden met at the packing house. Walkden stated that he could not ship that fruit. Plaintiff inquired if he meant to pay him for it. Walkden stated he would not answer that question. Walkden did not at that time say anything about the fruit not testing 8 to 1. On December 6th the defendants at Pittsburg telegraphed to the plaintiff at Lindsay, Cal., as follows:

"We hereby demand immediate return of five hundred dollars advanced you account your failure deliver oranges as required."

That telegram was the only reply which plaintiff received to his question put to Walkden as above stated.

George Sparks, a witness for defendant, and who had been many years in the orange business, testified that he saw the fruit that was delivered by plaintiff at the packing house; that it was somewhat frozen and was not up to the 8 to 1 test. He further stated that fruit changes in regard to that test after being picked and brought to the warehouse; that is, it improves and the solid content increases; that all fruit is improved in its test from the time it is brought in until several days after. Mr. Walkden testified that he declined to receive the fruit on account of the test and damaged stock; that he understood that it did not test up to the 8 to 1 test; that when he told plaintiff to pick his fruit he asked him to pick off all sunburned and outside fruit and damaged fruit and throw it on the ground and not deliver it. On this last point plaintiff testified as follows:

"Q. Don't you remember, when he was there in the orchard on one occasion, before you commenced picking, that you and he were talking about the frozen fruit, and that he told you that when you picked the fruit you should not take the outside fruit or the sunburned fruit, but should pick the inside fruit only; that is, the fruit on the inside of the tree, which was not likely to be so badly frozen? A. No, sir. I will tell you, he did talk some about me culling out; that is, not taking the fruit that is outside, the most exposed fruit; we did talk about that; but I didn't agree not to take that; I wouldn't agree to not putting that fruit in. But I did take the fruit off and throw it on the ground. I hired two men. I put two men in there and had them pick off the outside fruit and throw it on the ground, and instructed the picker boss to tell them not to pick that fruit. I done that voluntarily, though, not that I had any understanding with him that I should not do it. Q. Didn't you have an understanding with him, and didn't he tell you that he wanted the frozen fruit culled out? A. No, sir; he never told me he wanted it, because the understanding was that they should take all the fruit there was. That was the understanding right there in the orchard; and if they didn't want it all I would pay them their money back. He said he didn't want their money back; they wanted the fruit. Q. Well, this fruit that you delivered there at the Hillside packing house was badly frozen, wasn't it? A. Yes, sir; it was damaged fruit. It was understood; and we both understood and agreed and admitted that it was damaged fruit, Mr. Walkden and I both."

There is other testimony stating that tests of the delivered fruit were made on or about December 11th, which came up to the standard of 8 to 1, and that, in the opinion of the witnesses, it was merchantable fruit.

On the 8th of December, 1916, there came a second freeze which damaged the remainder of the fruit on the lower 10 acres of plaintiff's grove so that its value was entirely lost. According to plaintiff's testimony, he could have delivered all of that fruit before the second freeze came on December 8th if his deliveries had not been interrupted by the circumstances above stated. He further testified that between the 6th day of December, when he received the telegraphic demand from the defendant company, and the 8th day of December, when the second freeze came, he could not have disposed of the remainder of the fruit that was on the lower 10 acres. The amount of this undelivered fruit, being the fruit involved in the second cause of action, is well established by the evidence. If the plaintiff is entitled to recover anything at all, it cannot seriously be contended that the amount of the judgment is excessive.

[1, 2] Notwithstanding some conflict in the evidence concerning some facts, it is plain from the testimony which we have outlined that there is in the record sufficient evidence to justify the finding that the fruit in question was merchantable, free from splits, and it conformed to the 8 to 1 test. Admitting that there was some damage by frost, the extent of that damage was not such that at the time of picking and delivery of the delivered fruit, and at the time when the remainder would have been delivered if the deliveries had not been interrupted by defendants, the oranges were not of merchantable quality. This fact was determined by the defendants themselves, by their authorized representative. Being satisfied on that point by his own investigations, his instructions to pick and deliver constituted an acceptance, subject to no condition except that the oranges should comply with the 8 to 1 test. And since, as upon sufficient evidence the court found, all of the fruit for which compensation is sought in this action did at that time conform to the required test, there remained no fact on which refusal to accept and pay for it can be justified.

[3] The question whether or not title to the fruit on the middle 5 acres had passed to the purchaser is immaterial, because the destruction of that fruit on the trees, by the second frost, was caused by the defendants, and was a loss due to their own acts by which the picking and delivery was delayed.

The judgment is affirmed.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of having committed a lewd and lascivious act on the body of a female child under the age of 14, in violation of Pen. Code, $\S$ 288.

2. Criminal law $\S$ 742(1)—Truth of testimony of prosecutrix for jury.

In prosecution for committing lewd and lascivious act on body of female under 14 in violation of Pen. Code, $\S$ 288, there being no inherent improbability in her recital on the stand, it was solely for jury to determine whether her testimony was truthful.

3. Infants $\S$ 20—Rape $\S$ 54(1)—Prosecutrix need not be corroborated.

Testimony of prosecutrix in a rape case is not required to be corroborated to justify conviction, nor is it in a prosecution for commission of lewd and lascivious act on body of female under 14.

4. Criminal law $\S$ 1153(2)—Competency of infant under 10 question for court.

When judge examines witness under age of 10 before permitting him or her to testify, and it appears witness can relate facts intelligently, and appears to understand obligation of oath or consequences of giving false testimony, decision of judge that he or she is competent to testify is conclusive on reviewing court, unless record clearly shows abuse of discretion.

5. Witnesses $\S$ 77—Competency of child under 10 must be investigated.

Under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1880, subd. 2, it is not only proper, but necessary, that before permitting a child under 10 to testify such investigation should be made of question whether child is competent witness as will enable court to determine matter properly and justly.

6. Witnesses $\S$ 77—Showing of competency of 9 year old witness.

In prosecution for committing lewd and lascivious act on body of female under 14, examination of the 9 year old child by the court as to her competency as a witness, despite Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 1880, subd. 2, held sufficient to justify decision she was competent.

7. Criminal law $\S$ 406(4)—Testimony of defendant on preliminary examination admissible to show admission of presence at scene of crime.

In prosecution for committing lewd and lascivious act on body of female under 14, testimony given by accused before committing magistrate on preliminary examination of charge held admissible to show admission by defendant, not of his guilt, but that he was present where crime was alleged to have been committed at time of commission.

8. Criminal law $\S$ 539(2)—Testimony of accused on preliminary examination admissible.

Where an accused under a felony charge voluntarily becomes a witness at preliminary hearing under circumstances rendering it clear that his testimony is purely voluntary and free from restraint or undue influence, testimony may be given in evidence against him on his trial.

9. Criminal law — 406(5)—Statements of defendant to arresting officer as to presence at scene of crime, admissible.

In prosecution for lewd and lascivious act on body of female under 14, testimony of officer who arrested defendant, giving his extrajudicial statements as to what occurred between him and prosecutrix, held admissible to show defendant was where it was claimed acts were perpetrated, at time they were alleged to have taken place.

10. Infants — 20—Question as to reputation of defendant, accused of lewdness with infant, should have been confined to time prior to offense.

In prosecution for lewd and lascivious act on body of female under 14, question to female residents of town as to whether they knew defendant's general reputation for morality should specifically confine knowledge of witnesses to time prior to date of alleged offense.

11. Criminal law — 1036(1) — Failure to object to testimony on trial a waiver.

When defendant makes no objection on trial to any testimony offered against him, presumption is, if such testimony is legally improper and objectionable, that he waives any objection he might have interposed, and he cannot make it for the first time on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

Charles Thourwald was convicted of having committed a lewd and lascivious act upon the body of a female child under fourteen, and from the judgment and an order denying new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

James D. Fairchild, of Yreka, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. By an information filed by the district attorney in the superior court of the county of Siskiyou, defendant was charged with having committed a lewd and lascivious act upon and with the body of one Gladys Jackson, a female child of the age of 9 years. A jury found the defendant guilty of the crime charged, and he prosecutes this appeal from the judgment of conviction pronounced upon him.

The information is based upon section 288 of the Penal Code, which, in substance, provides that any person willfully committing any lewd or lascivious acts upon or with the body of a child under the age of 14 years, with the intent of arousing, appealing to, or gratifying the lust or passions or sexual desires of such person or such child, shall be guilty of a felony, for which the guilty party shall be imprisoned in the state prison for not less than one year.

[1,2] The point first urged by the appellant for a reversal is that the evidence is wholly insufficient to have justified the verdict. The point is without merit, as the following synoptical statement of the facts, as developed by the evidence, will show:

Defendant is a painter and paper hanger and, on the 13th day of May, 1919, was engaged in painting an unoccupied house in Dunsmuir adjoining the residence of Mrs. Mabel Neusse, mother of the prosecuting witness, Gladys Jackson. Mrs. Neusse testified that at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon of said day she and a Miss Vera Volenti, who was temporarily stopping with her, went to the vacant house to see how near finished it was. As they stepped onto the porch they looked through a window and saw defendant rising from a bed. They went into the house and witness testified that Gladys Jackson "came running out of the bedroom and grabbed on to me, just shaking all over, and started crying." The child was taken home and, after considerable urging, told her mother that defendant had put his hands under her clothes and pinched and hurt her and put his hands on her privates. Mrs. Neusse discovered a mark or scratch where the girl said defendant had pinched her.

Miss Volenti corroborated Mrs. Neusse as to seeing defendant spring from the bed and as to the subsequent occurrences. She also said she saw red marks rather high up on the inside of the leg of Gladys.

Gladys Jackson testified that she went to the house where defendant was working and that he asked her what her name was; that they were in the front room and that defendant picked her up, took her into the bedroom, set her on the bed and put his hands between her legs. She was asked whether he unbuttoned his pants and replied, "Yes, sir," and she made the same reply to the question: "Did he lay on top of you, or do you know?" she said: "Then he heard my mother coming, then he got up."

It is urged that the testimony of the prosecutrix is not of such a character as to justify the conclusion, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant committed upon and with her body lewd and lascivious acts, and this argument seems to be based upon the proposition that the child's testimony consisted almost entirely of monosyllabic answers to categorical questions propounded by the district attorney. But this objection constitutes no valid reason for holding, as a matter of law, that the prosecutrix did not tell the truth about the defendant's conduct towards her. There was no objection made by defendant to the method of examining the little girl by the district attorney, and, so far as the record, as we have it here, discloses, her story appears to have been straightforward and truthful. At any rate, there being no inherent improbability in her recital of the story, it was solely for the jury to determine whether her testimony was truthful or otherwise, and the verdict is conclusive of the proposition that her testimony was entitled to and given full credit. If there were shown, by cross-examination or otherwise, some inconsistencies in her statement of the facts of the malodorous transaction (and such certainly was if it occurred as detailed by the infant), it was for the jury to consider such inconsistencies and determine whether they were such as to justify the repudiation of her testimony in its entirety. The jury appear to have found no such inconsistencies in her testimony as to warrant them justly in concluding that her testimony, in the main, did not involve a truthful representation of what actually occurred between her and the defendant at the time of the alleged commission of the lewd and lascivious acts.

[3] The testimony of the prosecutrix in a rape case is not required to be corroborated to justify a conviction, and this is true as to a case of the character of the one now before us. Upon her testimony alone, a verdict of conviction may securely rest, it being entirely the province of the jury to decide whether such testimony is true or false. It is not necessary to cite authorities in confirmation of so well-settled propositions as these. In this case, however, it will be noted, the testimony of Gladys Jackson, the prosecutrix, is not entirely without corroboration. The testimony of her mother, and that of the witness, Miss Volenti, corroborate the child's story to some extent.

[4-6] It is next objected that the court erred in permitting the prosecutrix, Gladys Jackson, to testify as a witness in the case, the claim being that she was, by reason of her immature years, incompetent to testify as a witness under the terms of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Said section (subdivision 2 thereof) provides that "children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly," cannot be witnesses.

It will be observed that the section does not provide unqualifiedly that children under the age of 10 years shall not be witnesses, but those children only under the age mentioned "who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly," thus leaving it to the court before which such children are called as witnesses to determine, upon an examination into the question of their competency, whether they are intellectually capable of giving testimony or becoming witnesses. And when the judge examines a witness under the age of 10 years before permitting him or her to give testimony in the case, and it appears to the judge from such examination that such witness is capable of relating intelligently the facts respecting which he or she is about to be examined, and that the witness appears to understand the obligations of an oath or the consequences following the giving false testimony, the decision of the trial court that he or she is competent to testify as a witness is conclusive upon a reviewing court, unless the record clearly shows an abuse of discretion in the decision of the question. People v. Baldwin, 117 Cal. 244, 256, 49 Pac. 186. We think that there can be no doubt that it is not only proper, but necessary, under the terms of the second subdivision of the Code section above named, that, preliminarily to permitting a child under the age of 10 years to testify in a cause before a court, such investigation should be made of the question whether such child is a competent witness as will enable the court to determine the matter properly and justly (People v. Bernal, 10 Cal. 67), and in this case such an investigation appears to have been given that question. The record shows that, preliminarily to the examination of the prosecutrix, defendant's counsel objected to her testifying on the ground that she was not of sufficient age to comprehend the sanctity of an oath. In reply to questions by the court, she testified that she was 9 years old, that she lived in Dunsmuir and went to school; that she knew what it meant when she held up her hand and was sworn to tell the truth; that she was going to tell the truth, and she knew it would be wrong if she did not tell the truth; that if she did not do so she would be punished. We cannot say that that showing was not sufficient to justify the court in deciding that the prosecutrix was competent to testify in the case as a witness.

[7, 8] It is urged that the court erred in allowing, over objection by the defendant, the district attorney to introduce in evidence at the trial the testimony given by the accused before the committing magistrate at the preliminary examination of the charge stated in the information.

It appears that the defendant, at the trial, did not take the witness stand in his own behalf. One of the specific objections to that testimony was, at the trial and is here, that it was offered by the district attorney and allowed by the court "as admissions against interest," whereas, so the argument goes, the testimony so given by the accused did not contain "a single admission against interest." This position of the defendant as to the testimony furnishes a reason why the error of admitting it, if error it was, should be held to be innocuous in its effect upon and without prejudice to the rights of the accused. And it is true that the testimony involved a denial by the defendant of doing anything wrong with the prosecutrix, and nowhere contains any statement of an incriminatory character, except the mere fact that the child was in the building where the accused was at work, and that they were the only persons in the building until the mother of the child and Miss Volenti made their appearance there. Moreover, the officer who arrested the defendant testified to a statement made to him by the accused which involved substantially all the facts to which the defendant himself testified before the committing magistrate. We do not, however, consider the act of allowing said testimony to go into this record as error, for it was admissible for the purpose of showing that the defendant was present at the place where the crime is alleged to have been committed at the time of its alleged commission. The rule in this state is, and has been ever since the early case of People v. Kelley, 47 Cal. 125, that, where an accused under a felony charge voluntarily becomes a witness at the preliminary hearing of the charge before a magistrate under such circumstances as to render it clear that his testimony so given was purely voluntary, and free from restraint or undue influence, such testimony may be given in evidence against him on his trial for the offense in the superior court. See, also, People v. Sexton, 132 Cal. 37, 64 Pac. 107. While the rule, so far as it requires as a test of the admissibility of such testimony that it shall have been given voluntarily, refers to testimony in which the accused has either directly or indirectly confessed his guilt of the charge, still, in this case, although the accused did not in his testimony confess his guilt, it clearly enough appears that the defendant, voluntarily and of his own volition, took the witness stand and testified in his own behalf before the committing magistrate, and not under pressure of any description. But counsel for appellant makes the further point that the testimony given by the accused at the preliminary hearing of the charge could not, in any event, be admissible in evidence at the trial of the accused, except under the conditions set forth in subdivision 3 of section 686 of the Penal Code, and that the conditions rendering the testimony admissible were not shown to exist in this case—to the contrary, they were, it is said, shown not to exist. The section named provides, as an exception to the general rule that a defendant in a criminal case is entitled to be confronted with the witnesses against him, in the presence of the court, that where the charge has been preliminarily examined before a committing magistrate and the testimony taken down by question and answer in the presence of the defendant, who has, either in person or by counsel, cross-examined or had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness; or where the testimony of a witness on the part of the people, who is unable to give security for his appearance, has been taken conditionally in the like manner in the presence of the defendant, who has likewise cross-examined or had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness—the deposition of such witness so taken may be read upon its being satisfactorily shown to the court that he is dead or insane, or cannot with due diligence be found within the state. The testimony of the defendant in this case was obviously not admitted upon the theory upon which said section is framed, nor, obviously, could it be. That section has reference entirely to witnesses in a criminal case other than the defendant, who, of course, could not be put upon his trial for a felony in his absence or if he were insane. As above explained, the testimony was offered and received and was admissible for the purpose of showing the admission by him not of his guilt, but of the material fact in the people's case that he was present at the place where and when it is claimed the crime charged was committed. It was, in brief, offered and received upon the theory that it involved an admission against interest.

[9] It is claimed that the testimony of the witness Sam Fiske, who arrested the accused upon the charge alleged in the information, giving the extrajudicial statements of the accused relative to what occurred between him and the prosecutrix in the building in which it is claimed that the crime charged was committed, was incompetent and immaterial, and that the allowance of it by the court against the objection of the accused was improper, and that its effect was prejudicial to the accused. Like the testimony of the defendant given at the preliminary hearing, the testimony of the officer of the statements of the accused at the time of his arrest relative to the occurrences between him and the prosecutrix was proper for the purpose of showing that the defendant was where it was claimed that the lascivious acts were perpetrated at the time they were alleged to have taken place. The officer's testimony, other than showing that fact, carried with it nothing of an incriminatory character, and could not have tended to prejudice the defendant in the slightest degree. The extrajudicial statements of the defendant so presented to the jury did not involve a confession, but a positive denial of guilt, and were corroborative only of the evidence of the prosecutrix, of her mother, and of Miss Volenti that the defendant and the child were together and alone in the building wherein it is claimed that the crime charged was committed at the time of its alleged commission.

[10, 11] Three female witnesses, residents of Dunsmuir, where the crime charged is alleged to have been committed, were introduced by the district attorney for the purpose of testifying, and they did testify, that the defendant's general reputation for morality in Dunsmuir, where he had resided for a number of years, was bad. This testimony was offered as in rebuttal of testimony submitted by the defendant that his general reputation for morality in Dunsmuir was good. The form of the question put to each of the said witnesses by the district attorney, after each had said that she had known the defendant in Dunsmuir for a number of years, was as follows: "Do you know his general reputation in the town of Dunsmuir for morality?" The witnesses each answered that she knew his reputation in the particular referred to, and said, in reply to the further question as to what that reputation was, that it was bad. The attorney for the appellant now makes the point that the first question should have specifically confined the knowledge of the witnesses of the general reputation of defendant for morality to a time prior to the date of the alleged commission of the crime charged, and that, the question not having been so framed, the statement of the witness that his general reputation for morality was bad might have reference to the time subsequent to the commission of the offense, and based solely upon the fact that defendant was accused of and arrested for committing said alleged crime. There is much force in counsel's criticism of the question referred to, but the difficulty that confronts him in attempting to make the point available to his client on this appeal is that, at the time the question was asked of each of the people's rebuttal witnesses on character, he did not object to said question, or in any form raise before the trial court the point that the question was improper and calculated to bring forth improper testimony. When a defendant in a criminal case makes no objection at the trial of the charge against him to any testimony offered against him, it is to be presumed that, if such testimony is legally improper and objectionable, he waives any objection he might have interposed thereto. He certainly cannot make his objection for the first time on appeal. Undoubtedly, if, at the trial, objection had been made to the question complained of here, and thus the attention of the trial court directed to it, the latter would readily have perceived the impropriety in the form of the question, and have required the district attorney so to frame it as to have obviated the objection here made against it. Obviously, appellate courts are in no position to do that.

There are no other points made.

The judgment and the order appealed from are affirmed.

WELLMAN v. FORSTER et al. (EMIL OLCOVICH CO., Intervener). (Civ. 3266.)

1. Stipulations $\hookrightarrow$ 18(1) — Waiving claim to property precludes question of ownership.

In an action of replevin, where plaintiffs recovered judgment for possession of property and damages for its detention, and appellants by stipulation waived all claim to the property, the appellate court is bound by the stipulation and cannot consider any question relating only to plaintiff's right to possession.

2. Replevin $\hookrightarrow$ 72 — Evidence held to support finding of damage for detention.

In replevin of bar fixtures, testimony by witness as to the rental value of fixtures, and by other witnesses to the value of the property, held to sustain a judgment allowing damages for detention less than the rental value testified to.

3. Appeal and error $\hookrightarrow$ 1011(1) — Findings on conflicting testimony as to damage cannot be set aside.

Where the testimony of witnesses given in open court was sharply conflicting, the trial court's determination cannot be disturbed on appeal.

4. Evidence $\hookrightarrow$ 543(4) — Witness held competent to testify to rental value of bar fixtures.

The general manager of a company dealing in bar fixtures, who had been engaged in that business for 25 years, and had handled 90 per cent. of that business in the community immediately preceding the trial, was sufficiently qualified so that it was not an abuse of the court's discretion to permit him to state his opinion of rental value of fixtures replevied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Replevin by John H. Wellman against George H. Forster and others as defendants and the Emil Olcovich Company, intervener. From a judgment awarding plaintiff the property not claimed by intervener, and giving judgment for damages for its detention, the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Davis & Rush and Edward F. Wehrle, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Roy V. Rhodes, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Loeb & Walker, of Los Angeles, for intervener.

BRITTAIN, J. The defendants appealed from a judgment against them in a suit in replevin for certain bar fixtures and furnishings installed in a saloon in Los Angeles under a contract between one Conroy and the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, the plaintiff's assignor. The judgment was for the return of the property claimed, except a small part concerning which there is no dispute and which the trial court determined could not be removed from the saloon without injury to the realty. The holder of the lease of the realty from whom Conroy and his successors in interest rented the saloon intervened in the action and is satisfied with that part of the judgment protecting the realty from injury.

After the installation of the property Conroy became financially involved, and with the consent of the plaintiff's assignor he assigned all his rights under the contract in question to Forster & Stoner, copartners. They in turn approached the brink of bankruptcy, and a meeting of their creditors was called. A transfer of the partnership property was made to three trustees, of whom one was M. L. Cruse, who was an employé and who described himself as the credit manager of the plaintiff's assignor. In violation of instructions given him by the manager of the corporation, he signed the name of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company to the assignment, which was also signed by other creditors. The defendants and appellants, other than Forster & Stoner, are creditors claiming under the assignment and the three trustees to whom the assignment was made. By stipulations between the parties subsequent to the entry of the judgment, the appellants waived all claim to the property, which has been delivered to the plaintiff.

[1] The only question to be determined on this appeal, therefore, is whether or not the judgment can be sustained in so far as it awards to the plaintiff the sum of $1,526 as damages, computed at the rate of $2 a day during the period of the detention of the property. In the absence of any showing or contention to the contrary, it must be assumed in support of the judgment that there was no consideration for the waiver of claim to the property other than the recognition of the right of the plaintiff to have it in accordance with the provisions of the judgment. If the stipulations showed that possession of the property only had been given to the plaintiff, reserving to the defendants their claim of ownership, some of the questions argued by the appellants might have been material on this appeal, but the stipulations have answered all questions concerning the nature of the contract between Conroy and the plaintiff's assignor, all questions regarding the authority of Cruse and the effect of payments after the assignment, adversely to the appellants. This court is bound by the answers to which the appellants assented on entering into the stipulations. In this view of the case the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the property at the date of his demand, and possession was wrongfully withheld by the defendants thereafter until the judgment was entered. The court found that the plaintiff was thereby injured to the extent of $2 a day during the intervening period, and the determination of the aggregate of $1,526 at that rate was merely a matter of computation.

The appellants contend the evidence was insufficient to support the finding in regard to damages. Witnesses for the defendants testified the property had no rental value, and that some of the large brewing concerns had in storage similar equipment they would gladly have loaned to any one who would undertake to sell their beer. As against this evidence, a witness for the plaintiff testified that the reasonable rental value of the withheld property was $250 per month. This evidence was introduced over the objection of the defendants on the ground that the witness' qualification to give opinion evidence on the subject had not been shown. It is contended that the admission of the statement was reversible error, and that in any event the evidence is overcome by that on the part of the defendants' witnesses; also that it does not sustain a judgment for $2 a day.

[2] Disposing of these contentions in their inverse order, it appears that injury was caused by the wrongful withholding. From the evidence before him, the trial judge was justified in assessing damages at any reasonable sum less than the highest sum stated as the rental value. There was evidence that the property, if removed at the time of the demand, was worth $5,000. The estimates of the defendants' witnesses were, respectively, $500 and $1,000, although one of them stated that in place the property was worth $7,000 to $9,000. It was property subject to abuse and rapid deterioration. If the trial court adopted the estimate of value of the plaintiff's witness, as he had a right to do, under the circumstances and conditions existing, the award of $2 was supported by the evidence.

[3] In view of the sharp conflict of evidence, this court can give no consideration to the argument dealing with the weight of the evidence or the credibility of the respective witnesses. They were seen and heard by the trial judge, and he was best qualified to determine those matters.

[4] Concerning the qualifications of the plaintiff's witness to testify in regard to value and rental value of the property, it was shown that he was the general manager of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company; that he had been in the business of buying, selling, and dealing in fixtures of the character involved in this suit for a period of 25 years, and that he had handled 90 per cent. of the bar fixture business in Los Angeles and its vicinity for 5 years immediately preceding the trial. It does not appear that there was error or abuse of discretion in permitting him to testify on the subject of rental value or of value of the property from which the court was to determine the amount of damages for the deprivation of the plaintiff of the use of his property.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Civ. 3263.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Feb. 25, 1920.)

1. Parties $\S$ 95(4)—Refusal of amended answer showing plaintiff's true name, held not abuse of discretion.

In an action to rescind a contract of sale, where plaintiff sued in the name by which he made the contract, it was not an abuse of court's discretion to refuse, at the opening of trial, defendant's request for leave to file an amended answer, alleging that that was not plaintiff's true name.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 1041(3)—Refusal of amended answer harmless, where evidence to show facts was admitted.

Defendant was not prejudiced by court's refusal to allow an amended answer, alleging that the name under which plaintiff was suing was not his true name, where all evidence offered as to plaintiff's name was admitted.

3. Names $\S$ 20 — Person may change name without court action.

Under the common law, a man may change his name at will without court proceedings therefor, and may sue or be sued in any name by which he is known and recognized.

4. Names $\S$ 10—Name by which plaintiff was generally known is not "fictitious name."

Where plaintiff had been generally known for years by the name in which he made the contract and brought the action, though it was not his birth name, it was not a fictitious name within Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468, as amended in 1911, requiring every person transacting business under a fictitious name to publish and file a certificate.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fictitious Name.]

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 719(8), 1011(1)—Findings not attacked or based on conflicting evidence are controlling.

Findings of trial court not attacked by appellant or based on conflicting evidence are controlling on appeal.

6. Sales $\S$ 170—Date for performance immaterial where performance was refused for unreasonable time.

In an action to rescind a contract for the purchase of an organ, where it appeared that defendant had refused to make any effort to put the organ in condition, and it was useless at time of trial, it was immaterial whether defendant had agreed to install the organ on a date a year before the trial, or had merely agreed to use every effort to do so, since the delay in performance was unreasonable.

7. Pleading $\S$ 237(1)—Amendment to conform to evidence proper.

It was proper to permit plaintiff at the close of the trial to amend his complaint to correspond with the evidence.

8. Principal and agent $\S$ 171(4)—Acceptance of payment to agent ratifies promise by agent on receipt.

Where the principal accepted the payment to his agent and retained it, he ratified a promise by the agent to place the organ for which the payment was made in satisfactory condition, which promise the agent wrote on receipt.

9. Sales $\S$ 121, 126(3)—Rescission not waived by extending time at request of other party.

A buyer does not waive his right to rescind a contract for the purchase of an organ by making payments induced by promise to fix the organ and by delaying rescission at the request of seller.

10. Appeal and error $\S$ 664(1)—Court's findings cannot be impugned by judge's oral statements.

The findings of the trial court cannot be impugned by oral and perhaps slightly considered statements of the judge on a single question arising during the trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by Carl Ray against the American Photo Player Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

G. C. Ringole, and H. A. I. Wolch and Martin L. Haines, both of San Francisco, and Andreani & Haines, for appellant.

Allison & Dickson, of San Bernardino, and Fred W. Morrison, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BRITAIN, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment against it by which a contract for the sale of an organ with piano attachment was declared rescinded. The plaintiff was also given judgment for money he had paid on account of the stipulated purchase price of the instrument.

At the opening of the trial the defendant's request for leave to file an amendment to its answer was denied, and this is assigned as error. The defendant had dealt with the plaintiff as Carl Ray. The suit was brought in that name. By the proposed amendment the defendant sought to set up a special defense in the nature of a plea in abatement, alleging in substance that Carl Ray was not the real name of the plaintiff. Notwithstanding the ruling on the motion to amend, during the cross-examination of the plaintiff, he was asked, "What is your real and true name?" He stated that it was Melvin Barringer. He was then asked, "The name of Ray is not your real name?" He replied that it had been for 14 years. Later, being interrogated further on the subject, he said he had used the name of Ray for 14 years, and during that time he had never used the name of Barringer for any purpose whatever, "only in marriage." He was married under that name "years ago"—"several years ago." He was asked if he was not divorced under the name of Barringer, but, objection being made, he was not permitted to answer. There was no attempt to show that at the time the contract in suit was made or during the period between that date and the time of the trial the plaintiff had ever passed or was known to any one under any name but that of Ray. A number of witnesses were called on both sides of the case, and all referred to him as Mr. Ray. One of them was Mrs. Ray. Another had known him for 10 years, and had been employed by him before the plaintiff came to California.

[1] The matter of permitting amendment at the opening of the trial was one largely within the discretion of the court, and upon the record it cannot be said this discretion was abused.

[2] If there was error in the ruling, it does not appear that the defendant was injured, for it was afforded an opportunity to go into the matter of the plaintiff's name. In the absence of other evidence on the subject, it is bound by his answer that Ray had been his name for 14 years. The statement that he had been married under the name of Barringer a number of years before is not necessarily at variance with the direct statement. He may not, and probably did not, have any decree of court changing his name, and it is not strange that in marrying he used his former name under the belief that this was necessary. There is no evidence that he was known by any other name than Ray, or transacted any business, or used in any way either before or after his marriage any name different from that in which he contracted with the defendant and in which he sued.

[3] Under the common law a man may change his name at will and sue or be sued in any name by which he is known and recognized. Linton v. First Nat. Bank (C. C.) 10 Fed. 894; Graham v. Eisner, 28 Ill. App. 269; Emery v. Kipp, 154 Cal. 83, 86, 97 Pac. 17, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983, 129 Am. St. Rep. 141, 16 Ann. Cas. 792. "The name is not the person, but only the means of designating the person." Blinn v. Chessman, 49 Minn. 140, 51 N. W. 666, 32 Am. St. Rep. 536. "A man may lawfully change his name, without resorting to legal proceedings, but for all purposes the name thus assumed * * * will constitute his legal name, just as much as if he had borne it from birth." Christianson v. King County (D. C.) 196 Fed. 791, 799.

[4] The defendant contends that by the amendment of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code in 1911 this rule of law has been modified in California. Those sections are in that part of the Code dealing with partnerships. Before the amendment of 1911 a partnership doing business under a fictitious name or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners was required to publish and file in the office of the county clerk a certificate showing the names of the partners, and, failing in this, they were not permitted to maintain a suit on the partnership's account. The reason for this regulation is plain, and it has been pointed out in a number of cases where the statute has been applied. By the amendments of 1911 the words "every person transacting business in this state under a fictitious name and" were inserted in section 2466 before the words "every partnership," and a corresponding change was made in section 2468 relating to the maintenance of suits by those who failed to make the certificates in accordance with the provisions of section 2466. The purpose of these provisions is to prevent fraudulent trading. If a man, for instance, living in a community under the name of John Smith and known to his neighbors by that homely name, should make a single contract or carry on a business under another name, he would be using a fictitious name within the meaning of the statute, and might not be permitted to maintain an action on any transaction undertaken in the fictitious name without compliance with the requirements of the Code. On the other hand, those sections add nothing to the requirements of the common law regarding a man taking a new and genuine name. If he changes his name and uses and is known by the new name in all his affairs, it becomes his legal name, and it follows that it is not then fictitious.

[5] It is said in the appellant's brief that there is some evidence to sustain the greater portion of the findings. From those which are unattacked, or which are based on conflicting evidence, it appears that when the instrument was installed it could not be operated because of defects in its construction; that since July 23, 1917, the defendant has failed and refused to place it in a condition to be operated, and refused to do any more work or make any repairs upon the instrument, and that at the time of the trial it was not in a condition to be played or operated. These findings are controlling upon appeal.

[6] The court found that the contract provided, among other things, that the defendant should install the instrument by March 17, 1917. It was also found that it was not installed until May 14, 1917, but the further finding was made that the delay in installation between these dates was not unreasonable. The appellant rightly maintains that the contract only provided that the defendant should "make every effort to have the organ completely installed by March 17." The evidence showed that it was intended that the installation should take place by March 17. Even under the technical contention of the appellant the contract required installation within a reasonable time, and the findings show, not only that it was not installed in a condition to be operated at the time of the trial, which opened March 5, 1918, but that after July 23, 1917, the defendant refused to do anything toward fulfilling the obligations of the contract binding on it. The statement concerning the date when performance was promised is immaterial in a case where performance of a contract is refused and the refusal is persisted in for an unreasonable period.

[7] At the close of the trial the plaintiff was permitted to amend his complaint to correspond with the evidence. The findings are in accord both with the amendment and the evidence. Such amendments of pleadings are proper.

[8] On April 2, 1917, the plaintiff paid to an agent of the defendant $500, the principal of a note given in part payment for the instrument. At that time, in response to notice given by the plaintiff that it was unsatisfactory, the agent of the defendant promised that the instrument should be placed in a condition satisfactory to the plaintiff. This promise was evidenced by a statement written in the receipt for the $500. The appellant contends the authority of the agent to make the promise was not shown. The promise was but a reaffirmance of what the defendant was obligated to do. The defendant received the money, and by this appeal is resisting its repayment. A principal may not take the benefit of a transaction of his agent on behalf of the principal, and deny the authority of the agent. The retention of the benefit constitutes a ratification of the act of the agent.

[9] The appellant contends that the plaintiff waived his right to rescind by making the payment he was induced to make by the new promise, and by failing to rescind more promptly. The defendant cannot rely upon delays which have been the result of indulgence it induced the plaintiff to extend to it. Woodard v. Glenwood Lumber Co., 171 Cal. 513, 153 Pac. 951; Owen v. Pomona Land & Water Co., 131 Cal. 530, 63 Pac. 850, 64 Pac. 253.

[10] The appellant lastly contends that from remarks made by the judge before whom the case was tried, at the time the amendment of the complaint was under consideration, it may be deduced he could not have believed certain of the findings of fact he subsequently signed. In the first place, there appears nothing inconsistent in the two statements when the entire record is considered, and in the second place the findings of the court cannot be impugned by reference to oral and perhaps slightly considered statements of the judge upon a single question arising during the progress of a trial. Wilson v. Wilson, 64 Cal. 92, 27 Pac. 861; Shively's Estate, 145 Cal. 400, 78 Pac. 869; Estate of De Laveaga, 165 Cal. 607, 133 Pac. 307; Spencer v. McCament, 7 Cal. App. 84, 93 Pac. 682; O'Connell v. Behan, 19 Cal. App. 111, 124 Pac. 1038.

Notice of rescission was given on September 11, 1917, and under the circumstances disclosed by the record it was given with reasonable promptitude. The judgment was for the money paid on account of the purchase price. Damages sought by the plaintiff were not allowed. The judgment is affirmed.

GEORGE RICE & SONS v. COWAN.
(Civ. 2767.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 20, 1920.)

Limitation of actions § 29(2)—Loan properly included in book account.

Where an open book account existed between a corporation and defendant who was a stockholder, director, and employé and while the account was running defendant borrowed a sum of money from the corporation, intending to pay interest thereon, and such amount was entered in the books of accounts without any objection on defendant's part, defendant cannot, in an action on the account, maintain that such loan was not the subject of an open book account, and hence barred by the two-year statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 339), instead of section 337, subd. 2, the four-year statute, although the business of lending money was not one of the purposes for which the corporation was organized.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Dana R. Weller, Judge.

Action by George Rice & Sons against Park W. Cowan. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Milton K. Young and Will Hays, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Samuel H. Pardue, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in its favor for the sum of $68.58, with interest, and which excluded an item of $600 and interest for money loaned by plaintiff to defendant and included in an open book account. The appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the court's finding to the effect that the cause of action on said item of $600 is barred by subdivision one of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That money was loaned by the plaintiff to the defendant more than two years and less than four years from the date of commencement of this action. The cause of action therefore was not barred, unless such item was not capable of being included in an open book account. Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 2.

The defendant was a stockholder and director of plaintiff corporation, and was also an employé of the plaintiff. That an open book account did exist between them, consisting of various items, is a fact beyond controversy. While the account was running and unsettled, the defendant found it necessary to borrow the sum of $600 to enable him to make a payment on account of the purchase by him of certain real property. As shown by his own testimony, he obtained the money from the plaintiff for the purpose above stated. He did not ask the plaintiff to charge the item on the books, but did not object to it so doing. "I had been having items charged to me on the books of account there for some time. I was familiar with the facts that an account was kept. * * * I expected it to be charged to me. I expected it, made a loan of it. I didn't know whether it would be charged in that book account or not. They would have to make a record of it. I didn't know of any place else they would make a record of it." Defendant further testified that "there was nothing said about paying it back, in any way, shape or form; as I remember it, there was nothing said about interest." The plaintiff's witness, Irwin H. Rice, through whom the loan was made, testified that the defendant said that he needed $600 and thought it would be just as well if he would take it out of the company and pay the company interest on it at the rate of 6 per cent. On this evidence the court found that the defendant agreed to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and that said loan and interest so agreed to be paid was not a proper subject of book account, although the same was regularly entered in said open book account. In rendering judgment the court's theory apparently was that, because the transaction was a loan upon a direct promise to pay the same with interest, and because the business of lending money was not one of the purposes for which plaintiff corporation was organized, therefore this transaction could not be the subject of open book account between the plaintiff and defendant.

In Mercantile Trust Co. v. Doe, 26 Cal. App. 246, 253, 146 Pac. 692, 694, the court quotes 1 Ruling Case Law, p. 207, as follows:

"The expression 'outstanding and open account' has a well-defined and well-understood meaning. In legal and commercial transactions it is an unsettled debt arising from items of work and labor, goods sold and delivered, and other open transactions, not reduced to writing, and subject to future settlement and adjustment. It is usually disclosed by the account books of the owner of the demand, and does not include express contracts or obligations which have been reduced to writing, such as bonds, bills of exchange, or promissory notes."

In Schneider v. Oakman Consolidated Mining Co., 176 Pac. 177, the defendant claimed that a certain item charged in an open book account of plaintiff's assignor, one Dillon, against the defendant, could not be charged against defendant in that account because it was due upon a "special contract." But the court said that it could see no reason why the item was not properly so charged. "Oakman, the president of the company and its responsible directing officer, wrote Dillon telling him not to worry about this $1,500, and assuring him that it would be paid. It was somewhat irregular to enter it upon the books as late as August, 1914, but it made a part of the transaction between the parties and was properly included in the account between them. The justice of the claim is not denied, and the only defense set up thereto is the statute of limitations, and that it was not properly included in the proofs to sustain the account." On the facts thus existing the court sustained the claim as one properly included in the book account. The defense in that action, as in the case at bar, was that the item was barred by subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We think that the court's decision upon the point at issue was erroneous.

That part of the judgment from which plaintiff appealed is reversed.

WOOD et al. v. MESMER. (Civ. 2750.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 21, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ¶761—Points should be presented in briefs in regular order.

Points made by appellant should be presented definitely and in regular order in briefs, and should not be scattered through argument to impose on appellate court unnecessary labor of searching them out and numbering them before they can be stated in appropriate order.

2. Trial ¶404(2)—Finding in action on account that defendant became indebted not conclusion of law.

In action on account for services rendered and materials furnished, finding by trial court that defendant became indebted to plaintiff in stated sum on open book account, or that defendant became indebted to plaintiff for work and labor performed, materials furnished, etc., at and within a stated period of time, is a finding of fact, and not a mere conclusion of law.

3. Contracts ¶349(7)—Evidence of printers' prices admissible in action for printing newspapers.

In action by printers on account for services rendered and materials furnished to defendant in printing his newspapers, evidence as to prices charged by printers' board of trade, and evidence showing that plaintiffs' charges were in accordance with that schedule, held admissible, plaintiffs claiming they were to be allowed reasonable profit under schedule of the printers' board of trade, defendant claiming he was to pay on cost basis.

4. Contracts ¶221(3)—Printers entitled to hold issue of paper because not paid on delivery, and yet to recover.

Plaintiffs, who had been printing defendant's newspapers for him, on printing the last issue of a paper when there was a balance due them from defendant on account of previous business, were not bound to deliver such issue without concurrent payment, and could hold issue, failing to receive payment, and recover for its printing.

CONREY, P. J. Action to recover upon an account for services rendered and materials furnished by the plaintiffs to the defendant at his special instance and request. There was a counterclaim by the defendant. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs for $490.44, balance found due to plaintiffs, with interest and costs. The counterclaim was in part on a demand for rent and in part for damages for breach of contract.

[1] As is far too common in the briefs which come to this court, the points made by appellant in support of his appeal are not presented definitely and in regular order. They are scattered through the argument, so that there is imposed upon the court the unnecessary labor of searching them out and numbering them before they can be stated in appropriate order. Under such circumstances, if the court should fail to notice any point intended to be made, the omission would easily be justified.

[2] Appellant contends that the findings do not sustain the judgment. His claim seems to be that certain of the findings are wholly conclusions of law and omit to find upon the ultimate facts. There is no merit in this claim. The seventh cause of action stated in the complaint declares upon an open book account for an amount covering plaintiff's entire demand. The previous causes of action are separate statements of account on which it is alleged that defendant became indebted to plaintiffs for work and labor performed, materials furnished, and moneys paid out for defendant at his special instance and request. The findings respond directly to these allegations as contained in the seventh cause of action and in each of the others. They likewise respond directly to the affirmative allegations of the answer. In an action of this kind a finding by the court that the defendant did become indebted to the plaintiff in a stated sum upon an open book account, or that the defendant became indebted to the plaintiff for work and labor performed, materials furnished, etc., at or within a stated period of time, is a finding of fact, and not a mere conclusion of law. Appellant cites no authority in support of his stated theory.

[3] Between the 24th day of November, 1915, and the 1st day of January, 1916, the plaintiffs occupied certain premises of the defendant in the city of Los Angeles and used a printing plant of the defendant therein under an agreement to pay rent therefor. The defendant was the owner and publisher of two weekly newspapers. It was a part of the contract that the plaintiffs would print these newspapers for the defendant and receive compensation therefor. The principal part of plaintiffs' cause of action is for recovery of that compensation. In this connection the defendant claimed that he was to pay for those publications on an actual cost basis, not exceeding a certain sum for each issue of the papers. The plaintiffs' claim was that they should be allowed a reasonable profit figured under a schedule known as the schedule of the printers' board of trade. Appellant claims that the court erred in allowing the plaintiffs to introduce evidence as to the prices charged by the organization known as the printers' board of trade. In support of this claim he prints in his brief (from the typewritten transcript) certain testimony of M. L. Helpman, Jr., the agent of defendant through whom the negotiations were had with plaintiffs which resulted in their contract with defendant. Counsel for appellant states that this evidence was the only statement directly upon the foregoing question as to the terms of the contract, and that this evidence without contradiction shows that defendant's contention is correct, and that there was no agreement for a standard of charges upon a basis established by the printers' board of trade. It appears, however, from testimony printed in the brief for respondents that the plaintiff Earl C. Wood testified that in the conversations between himself and defendant's agent, Mr. Helpman, and which resulted in the transactions covered by this action, it was stated that plaintiffs were to charge for the printing work which they would do for him "on the uniform standard cost basis"; that he showed to Mr. Helpman the system of charges as used in his office, which was on the schedule made out by the printers' board of trade and according to the uniform standard cost system. With this evidence before the court, it follows, of course, that the court did not err in receiving the evidence which it did receive as to the prices charged by the printers' board of trade, or in receiving the evidence which proved that plaintiffs' charges were in accordance with that schedule.

Appellant contends that the court's finding that none of the allegations contained in paragraphs 3 and 4 of the counterclaim of defendant are true is contradictory to other findings of the court, and that this finding as to paragraphs 3 and 4, if a true finding, negatives plaintiffs' right to recover. Said paragraphs 3 and 4 are not complete in themselves and refer back to the two preceding paragraphs of the counterclaim. So read, it is perfectly clear that the finding in question is consistent with the other findings of the court. The findings, without contradiction or inconsistency, establish the amount of plaintiffs' demand as controlled by a standard of charges that is sustained by the evidence, and allow to the defendant as an offset to plaintiffs' demand the full sum of rent proved to be due, as well as an additional sum of $35 which he did not claim.

[4] We think that the court did not err in allowing plaintiffs compensation for printing the last issue of the paper called the Jeffersonian. The plaintiffs printed that edition and informed defendant's agent that he could have it, but would have to pay for it when delivered. As there was then a balance due to plaintiffs from defendant on account of the previous business and there was nothing in the contract which entitled the defendant to claim a further extension of credit, plaintiffs were not bound to deliver these last papers without concurrent payment therefor, and they were entitled to recover in this action for that item of work done by them for the defendant. It further follows that defendant was not entitled to recover damages for expenditures made by him in reprinting the said issue of the newspaper.

The judgment is affirmed.

KERFOOT et al. v. SCHUTZ. (L. A. 5330.)(Supreme Court of California. March 31, 1920.
Rehearing Denied April 29, 1920.)1. Contracts §322(1) — Unserviceable condition of well must have been due to contractor's breach.

In an action for breach of contract to drill a well on the ground that the well was so crooked as to make it impossible to insert pumping machinery, plaintiffs could not meet the burden of proof resting upon them by merely showing that after a certain lapse of time following the completion of the well it was not in serviceable condition; it being essential that they should show that such condition was the result of breach by defendant of his contract.

2. Contracts §354—Cause of crooks in well casing held within issues in action for breach.

In an action for breach of contract to drill a well, plaintiffs alleging that the well was so crooked that pumping machinery could not be installed, and the issue being as to whether there were any crooks in the well casing, and, if so, whether they were caused by unworkmanlike construction of the well, a finding that the manner in which defendant filled and tamped the earth in digging the well "did not bring about or cause the bends or crooks in said casing" held within the issues.

3. Contracts §322(3) — Evidence held to show that unserviceable condition of well was due to owner's fault.

In an action for breach of contract to drill a well wherein plaintiffs contended that the well was so crooked that pumping machinery could not be installed, evidence held to support a finding that the well was originally straight, and that the crooks in the casing were caused by the acts of plaintiffs in taking out a pump.

4. Appeal and error §1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence not disturbed.

A decision of the trial court on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

5. Appeal and error §1071(5)—Unnecessary finding unsupported by evidence will not justify reversal.

That a finding of fact not necessary for the judgment is not supported by evidence will not justify a reversal.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by A. J. Kerfoot and another against H. H. Schutz for damages for breach of contract. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. W. Kaye and Kaye & Siemon, all of Bakersfield, for appellants.

E. F. Brittan and Anderson & Barton, all of Bakersfield, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant. The action was for damages on account of the alleged failure of the defendant to perform a contract for the drilling of a water well.

On the 18th day of August, 1914, plaintiffs were the owners of certain land which they desired to bring under cultivation for horticultural purposes by the development of water wells. At that time the defendant had been engaged in the business of drilling water wells in Kern county for a number of years. With a view to carrying out the plans of the plaintiffs relating to the improvement of the land mentioned, the defendant entered into a contract in writing with the plaintiffs for the drilling of one well, which contract is set forth as an exhibit attached to the complaint in this action. The agreement shows that it is one by which defendant agrees to drill a water well upon land belonging to plaintiffs and to sink such well in a workmanlike manner. It was stipulated that plaintiffs might make tests to determine the water producing capacity of the well, and a limited time was fixed for the completion of the work.

The only specification of breach upon which appellants rely in their printed brief is alleged in the complaint as follows:

"The said well for the depth of about 115 feet is crooked, and the casing inserted therein varies from a perpendicular position to such an extent that it is impossible to insert pumping machinery in said well for the purpose of pumping water therefrom."

On this appeal it is contended: (1) That the findings of fact made by the trial court are outside of the issues; and (2) that there is no evidence to support the findings. Findings 8 and 12 are respectively that the manner in which the defendant filled and tamped the earth in digging the well "did not bring about or cause the bends or crooks in the casing of said well," and "that the careless and reckless acts of plaintiff * * * in installing and removing said pump were the sole cause of such bends and twists in the casing in said well."

[1, 2] It was not enough to meet the burden of proof resting upon plaintiffs to show merely that after a certain lapse of time following the completion of defendant's work the well was not in serviceable condition. It was essential that plaintiffs should show this condition to be the result of a breach by the defendant of the terms of his contract. The allegation of the complaint quoted above, upon which plaintiffs rely, was denied by the defendant. The issue was thus joined as to whether there were any crooks or bends in the well casing, and, if there were, whether they were caused by an unworkmanlike construction of the well. Finding 8 was directed clearly to this issue. It is not necessary to decide whether finding 12 is outside of the issues presented by the pleadings because it was not essential to the judgment. So much for the issues in the pleadings.

[3, 4] Appellants also attack these findings upon the ground that they are unsupported by the evidence. One A. G. Miller, an agent of the corporation which undertook in behalf of plaintiffs to install a pump in the well after the completion thereof by defendant, was called by the plaintiffs, and testified in part as follows:

"We made an examination or test before we put the pump down, to determine whether the well was plumb, only by a mirror. We noticed the well was straight as wells ordinarily are before we put the pump in."

This testimony was elicited on cross-examination, and was not controverted. Plaintiffs were suing defendant for breach of contract. Their witnesses testified that the well, shortly after being completed by defendant—after plaintiffs had inserted and operated their pump—was not in proper and workmanlike condition. The defendant offered the above-quoted testimony to prove that this condition was not the result of any breach by him of the contract. The plaintiffs introduced other testimony to show that the improper manner in which the earth was tamped and filled in by defendant was the cause of the defects in the well. The issue of responsibility was thus presented, the court decided it upon conflicting evidence, and the finding will not therefore be disturbed.

[5] Appellants' chief point is that there is "not a shred of evidence" to support finding 12 that the unserviceable condition of the well was the result of the plaintiffs' negligence. Even if this were true, it would not justify a reversal of the judgment, which, as we have said before, rests upon finding 8 that the defects were not the result of negligence on the part of defendant.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1920.)

1. Executors and administrators — 21(1) —
Daughter of widow's husband held entitled to administer widow's estate.

Under Civ. Code, § 1310, giving a devise or legacy to a beneficiary who predeceased testator to the beneficiary's descendants, if any, section 1386, subd. 8, providing that the estate or portion of a widow who dies without issue which was common property, or which she received from her husband, shall go to his issue, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1350a, 1365, the daughter of the deceased husband of testatrix, who willed her property to her husband, is entitled to letters of administration with the will annexed, rather than the public administrator.

Petition and proof for letters of administration with the will annexed to the daughter of testatrix's husband, which showed that the husband died before testatrix, leaving her an undivided half of almost his entire estate, and that she died within 9 months of the decree of distribution, and among the property listed as her estate was that coming from her husband, held to show that a portion of her estate was derived from her husband, so as to entitle his daughter to administration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Maria C. Wyman, deceased. From a judgment denying her application for letters of administration with the will annexed, and granting such letters to Amos O. Williams, as public administrator, Nettie Neff appeals. Reversed.

J. A. Olson and Ira S. Lillick, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

A. M. Free and F. H. Bloomingdale, both of San Jose, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from the order granting the petition of the public administrator of Santa Clara county for letters of administration with the will annexed in the estate of Maria C. Wyman, deceased, and is taken by one Nettie Neff, claiming to be entitled to have issued to her such letters of administration, and whose petition in that behalf was denied.

Maria C. Wyman died on the 5th day of January, 1919, leaving a will dated March 31, 1900. By the terms of this will she bequeathed a small legacy to a nephew residing in Florida, and all the rest, residue, and remainder of her property to her husband, Charles F. Wyman, who was also nominated executor of the will. Her husband however, died on the 3d of April, 1917. By his will the bulk of his estate, which consisted of real and personal property, was devised and bequeathed to his said wife and to Nettie Neff, his daughter by a former marriage, to be shared equally between them. It is to be noted that Mrs. Wyman left no child surviving her, nor lineal descendant, nor brother, nor sister, and that a part of her estate consists of property received by her under the terms of the will of her deceased husband. It also appears as a fact in the case that Mr. and Mrs. Wyman were first cousins.

Under these facts the question arises whether Nettie Neff, the daughter of the predeceased spouse of the decedent, is entitled to letters of administration with the will annexed upon her estate in preference to the public administrator.

[1] The right to appointment as administrator with the will annexed follows the same order as that prescribed for the appointment of an administrator of the estate of a person dying intestate (Code Civ. Proc. § 1350a), and that order we find laid down in section 1365 of that Code. Therein it is provided:

"Administration of the estate of a person dying intestate must be granted to some one or more of the persons hereinafter mentioned, the relatives of the deceased being entitled to administer only when * * * entitled to succeed to his personal estate or some portion thereof; and they are, respectively, entitled thereto in the following order:

"1. The surviving husband or wife, or some competent person whom he or she may request to have appointed;

"2. The children; * * *

"7. The next of kin entitled to share in the distribution of the estate.

"8. The public administrator. * * *

"This section shall apply to the relatives of the previously deceased spouse of decedent when entitled to succeed to some portion of the estate under subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code."

Turning to subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, its language is in part as follows:

"If the deceased is a widow, or widower, and leaves no issue, and the estate, or any portion thereof, was common property of such decedent and his or her deceased spouse, while such spouse was living, such property goes in equal shares to the children of such deceased spouse and to the descendants of such children by right of representation. * * * If the estate, or any portion thereof, was separate property of such deceased spouse, while living, and came to such decedent from such spouse by descent, devise or bequest, such property goes in equal shares to the children of such spouse," etc.

From the statement of the facts in this case as set forth above it is seen that the appellant comes within the class of persons upon whom are conferred rights of succession by said subdivision 8 of section 1386, Civil Code, and consequently would, in case of the intestacy of the decedent, be entitled to succeed to a portion of her estate. While she is thus given the status of an heir, her right to letters of administration is conditional—as indeed is that of relatives of a decedent qualified to administer upon the estate—upon whether or not she is entitled to succeed to the estate or any portion thereof. Estate of Crites, 155 Cal. 392, 101 Pac. 316. She is so entitled by virtue of section 1310 of the Civil Code. Being a lineal descendant of a relative of the deceased (for it will be remembered that Mrs. Wyman's husband was also related to her by consanguinity) to whom was devised or bequeathed a part of her estate and who died before the testator, she comes within the terms of that section, which provides that in the case described such lineal descendant takes the share of the estate given to the ancestor.

It follows from the foregoing that the court erred in granting the petition of the public administrator for letters of administration upon the estate of the decedent in preference to that of the appellant unless, as claimed by the respondents, it nowhere appears in this proceeding, either by her petition or any adequate proof upon the hearing, that appellant comes within the classes of persons enumerated in said section.

[2] In this connection it is urged by the respondents that there is no averment or adequate proof that any property owned by decedent at the time of her death constituted common property of Mrs. Wyman and her deceased spouse, or that any of such property came to her by descent, devise or bequest from such spouse. We are of the opinion that the record fails to bear out this contention of the respondents. We think that it sufficiently appears therefrom that a part of the estate of the decedent consists of property owned by Charles F. Wyman at the time of his death, either separately or in common with his wife, and bequeathed to her by him. Thus, it appears from the record that the decree of distribution of his estate was made on April 19, 1918, under which his surviving wife received an undivided one-half interest in almost the entire estate. She died within nine months of the making of this decree, and in the petition for letters of administration by which the present proceeding was instituted much of the identical property is set out as forming part of the estate of the decedent which came to her under and by virtue of said decree of distribution. This contention of the respondents is therefore not well founded.

It follows from what we have said that the trial court committed error in granting the petition of the public administrator as against that of the appellant, and that the order appealed from should be reversed. It is so ordered.

ESCOBAR v. ROGERS et al. (Sac. 2828.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 3, 1920.)

1. Sales ⇨483—Property of conditional seller, though in buyer's possession, is subject to execution.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 688, 698, relating to execution, the property of a seller who had delivered possession under an agreement that default should entitle him to retake the articles and declare forfeited installments paid is subject to execution, though in possession of the conditional buyer.

2. Sales ⇨483—Conditional buyer may waive right to possession as against judgment creditor of seller.

A conditional buyer, in possession under an agreement giving the seller the right to retake the property on default, etc., may, under Civ. Code, § 3513, where execution on a judgment against the seller is levied on the property, waive his right to possession as against the judgment creditor.

3. Sales ⇨483—Conditional buyer is entitled to property as against seller's judgment creditor.

One in possession of property under an agreement giving the seller right to rescind in event of default, etc., is entitled to possession of the property as against a judgment creditor of the seller.

4. Sales ⇨467—Title held to remain in seller until payment of entire purchase price.

Under a conditional sale agreement, held that the title remained in the seller until payment of all installments of the purchase price; the seller having right to rescind for default, etc.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by Joseph Escobar against Manuel Rogers and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

L. C. Pistolesi, of San Francisco (O. F. Meldon, of Sausalito, of counsel), for appellants.

D. M. MacLean, of Modesto, and Leon R. Yankwich, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for the partition of certain personal property consisting of 65 head of cows and other live stock, hay, wagons, plows, a tank, a separator, a gas engine, and a cultivator, of which, plaintiff alleged in his complaint he and defendant Rogers were joint owners, each having an undivided one-half interest in such property. Defendants Manuel Rogers and C. H. Kemp answered separately. The former set out in hæc verba the contract, the particulars of which are hereinafter summarized, between himself and the plaintiff for the sale of the subject-matter of this action, and both defendants alleged that all right, title, and interest in or to the said property had passed out of plaintiff by virtue of the sale thereof to defendant Kemp in execution of a judgment, hereinafter discussed, against the plaintiff.

There is practically no dispute as to the facts. On October 30, 1912, Escobar, Rogers, and two others were conducting a dairy in the county of Marin, each owning an undivided one-fourth interest therein, part of which was the property we have already mentioned. On October 30, 1912, Escobar and Rogers entered into the agreement set out in the latter's answer, the validity of which agreement is admitted by the plaintiff. By the terms of the contract, plaintiff's interest in the property described in the complaint was sold to the defendant Rogers for the sum of $3,700. The purchase price was to be paid in four installments, the last installment of $1,000 to become due and payable on the 1st day of September, 1915, and title was to remain in the vendor until payment in full should have been made. The property was, however, to be in the possession of the vendee, Rogers, from and after the execution of the agreement. It was further provided that, in the event of the failure of the vendee to pay any of the installments as they fell due, the vendor might elect either to treat the transaction as a completed sale and sue for the whole of the purchase price, or to rescind the agreement, reclaim his interest in the property, and retain as liquidated damages all payments previously made by the vendee. Pursuant to these provisions, the vendee entered into the exclusive possession of the property, and subsequently removed the greater portion thereof to a ranch in Merced county. The first three installments under the contract were met, but the last payment of $1,000 was never made. The vendor chose to rescind the contract, and instituted this action on January 30, 1916, praying for a partition of the property. It further appears that a default judgment for $107.50 was entered against the vendor herein on May 11, 1914, in an action between him and one R. B. Williams in the justice's court for Sausalito township, Marin county. After due proceedings an execution was issued to the sheriff of Merced county, who, on April 21, 1915, levied upon "the entire interest of Joseph Escobar in the stock under the control and possession of Manuel Rogers at the Bates ranch, i. e. 45 head of cows, 3 horses, 15 calves, 15 head of dry cows and heifers, and two bulls. And sold the whole of same in one parcel to C. H. Kemp. * * *

The case was tried before the court without a jury. The court found:

"That on the 29th day of January, 1916, plaintiff, Joseph Escobar, and the defendant Manuel Rogers were, ever since have been, and now are, owners as tenants in common, each owning an undivided one-half interest in and to" the property described in the complaint. "That said C. H. Kemp has no right, title, or interest in the property hereinbefore described acquired through said sale under execution" above mentioned.

Judgment was entered, directing the sale of the personality in question, and an equal division of the proceeds between Escobar and Rogers. The appeal is by both defendants from the judgment.

Arguments of the appellants are grouped under three main contentions: (1) That the findings of the court in respect to the legal effect of the sale on execution "are inconsistent, conflicting, and contrary to law"; (2) that the findings are contrary to the evidence in so far as it is found that the plaintiff is the owner of one-half of the property in controversy; and (3) that the findings are contrary to the evidence, in that it is found that the plaintiff has any interest in the hay or in the gas engine described in the complaint. It will not be necessary to discuss the two last points raised by appellants, for the reason that the judgment must be reversed on the grounds stated in the first point.

[1, 2] The question presented for decision is thus stated in respondent's brief:

"Did the fact that the title remained in Escobar under the terms of the contract of conditional sale give him a leviable interest in the personal property above mentioned on the date of the levy, the 21st of May (April?) 1915?"

In our opinion Escobar, the conditional vendor and judgment debtor, had a leviable interest. It was not for him, but for Rogers, the vendee, who had the right to the possession of the property, to object to the taking of the possession and custody thereof by the sheriff, and it does not appear that Rogers has ever questioned the right of the sheriff to make the levy.

In the case of Remington v. Cady, 10 Conn. 44, the fundamental principle was laid down that "all of the property of a man shall be liable to the payment of his debts." Such is the policy and the law of this state as expressed in section 688 of the Code of Civil Procedure:

"All goods, chattels, moneys, and other property, both real and personal, or any interest therein, of the judgment debtor, not exempt by law, * * * are liable to execution. * * *"

And section 698 of the same Code provides that a certificate of sale delivered by the officer making the sale "conveys to the purchaser all the right which the debtor had in such property on the day the execution or attachment was levied." While no case in this jurisdiction has been cited, and we are aware of none, where this question has arisen as between the conditional vendor and the purchaser at an execution sale under a judgment recovered against such vendor, we think it plain that the title of Escobar to the personal property described in the complaint was a leviable interest within the meaning of section 688 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is not the law that, where A. and B. are tenants in common, A. can defeat the right of his creditors to levy upon the property merely by transferring the possession to B. under a conditional contract of sale, for this would tend to encourage practices in fraud of creditors. We quote from Humphreys v. Hopkins, 81 Cal. 551, 553, 22 Pac. 892, 893 (6 L. R. A. 792, 15 Am. St. Rep. 76):

"A debtor cannot, by placing or allowing his property to be in the possession of a third party, screen it from attachment. However lawful the possession of the bailee, the property is still subject to attachment or garnishment at the suit of a creditor of the owner. Such rights as the bailee may have to the use or possession of the property * * * will of course be protected, but, saving the rights of the bailee, the creditor may take it." (Italics ours.)

As we have seen, it is not shown that the vendee, Rogers, offered any objection to the seizure or sale of the interest of his vendor, Escobar, although at the time he (Rogers) was not in default under the contract of sale and had the right to receive full title to the property upon complying with the conditions of payment. If he had chosen to assert his rights under the agreement, he could have retained the possession of the property as against the creditors of his vendor, but this was under a law intended solely for the benefit of a conditional vendee which he might waive under section 3513 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"Any one may waive the advantage of a law intended solely for his benefit."

The vendee, Rogers, having waived his right to the possession of the property as against Kemp, the purchaser at the execution sale, the vendor, Escobar, cannot claim with reason that said execution sale passed no title in the property. The vendor and judgment debtor will not be heard to complain of an act which affected only the rights of his vendee.

[3] Respondent's brief quotes Freeman on Executions, section 121, as follows:

"If a bailee has against the owners the right to retain possession of the property a specified time, he has the same right as against an officer proceeding under a writ against the owner. The officer cannot in such case lawfully seize the property."

The correctness of this statement may be conceded, but we agree with appellants' contention that the rule "is intended for the benefit and protection only of the bailee or person having the right to the undisturbed possession of the personal property." On this question there can be no difference in principle between the position of a pledgee and that of a conditional vendee, and as to the former the same authority says (section 120):

"If a pledgee chooses to waive his rights there is no impediment to the levy upon and sale of pledged property under a writ against the pledgor."

As we have pointed out, the vendee, Rogers, offered no objection to the seizure of the property. He thereby waived his right to retain the possession thereof under the agreement. None of the cases cited by respondent in support of his view is in point, inasmuch as they involve controversies, not between the conditional vendor and his judgment creditor, but between an attaching creditor and a bailee, a prior equitable mortgagee, a lessee, a cestui que trust, or a vendee, respectively.

[4] The only other contention raised by respondent is that the sole interest which Escobar had in the property at the time of the levy "was a lien for the payment of the final installment." This cannot be sustained. By the terms of the agreement between Escobar and Rogers, as we have seen, the former was to retain the legal title until full payment of the purchase price had been made. It was this legal title that defendant Kemp acquired by his purchase at the execution sale.

The judgment is reversed.

COON v. SONOMA MAGNESITE CO.
(S. F. 8347.)(Supreme Court of California. April 3, 1920.
Rehearing Denied May 3, 1920.)1. Easements — 14(2)—Indefinite right of way may be reserved.

A right of way may be reserved in a deed by a description which would be too indefinite to be a valid exception of the fee from the conveyance, such easement giving the owner of the servient estate the right to designate a reasonable way, and, if he fails to do so, the owner of the dominant estate may.

2. Deeds — 140—Indefinite exception for a road construed as valid easement rather than invalid exception of fee.

Under Civ. Code, § 1069, requiring an exception to be construed most strongly in favor of the grantor, an exception of a strip of land for a road, the description of which is too indefinite to be a valid exception of the fee, will be construed as a reservation of an easement, which need not be described with certainty.

3. Easements — 50—Reserved easements for road cannot be used for railroad.

A grantor who reserved an easement for a road across the land conveyed cannot authorize another to construct across the strip a private railroad, which would be a detriment to the land rather than a benefit as a road might be.

4. Deeds — 138—Reservation of easement or exception of fee to be determined from whole instrument.

Though there is a well-defined difference between reservations and exceptions, the use of the word "excepting" or "reserving" in a deed does not necessarily determine whether there is an exception or reservation, but that must be determined by a construction of the whole conveyance to ascertain the real intention of the parties.

5. Deeds — 140—Exception held to be reservation of easement, not exception of fee.

Where grantor conveyed a tract "saving and excepting therefrom" a strip for a road to be built, the phrase "for a road" modifies the whole clause and indicates an intention to reserve an easement for a road, rather than to except from the conveyance the fee to the strip.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Action by J. T. Coon against the Sonoma Magnesite Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

U. S. Webb and W. H. Cobb, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. R. Leppo and Kellogg & Kyle, all of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff claims title to 160 acres of land across which the defendant was constructing a railroad and telephone line at the time of the commencement of the action, under a claim of ownership of a strip 40 feet wide. The action was to enjoin the further construction of the railroad. The trial court granted the relief prayed for and adjudged that the plaintiff was at the time of the commencement of the action the owner in fee simple of the entire quarter section and that the defendant had no interest therein, and enjoined the defendant from constructing said railroad. Both plaintiff and defendant claim under conveyances from a common grantor, one M. C. Meeker. Meeker conveyed the quarter section to the plaintiff by deed containing the following clause:

"Saving and excepting therefrom a strip of land forty feet wide along the banks of the east fork of Austin creek all the way across the said land, for a road to be built at some future time."

Subsequently Meeker entered into a contract with A. B. Davis, in which it was recited that Davis was desirous of securing transportation facilities for the transfer of the Sonoma Magnesite Company's material from their quarries to the Northwest Pacific Railroad at a point at or near Watson, Sonoma county, Cal., and desired the right of way for the construction of a road from said quarries to Watson, "which road over the land described herein shall be for the exclusive use of the parties hereto, and the Sonoma Magnesite Company," and then declared that Meeker "does hereby grant to the party of the first part a right of way not to exceed forty feet in width through his land for the construction of said road, it being understood and agreed that said road shall, as far as practicable, follow the meanderings of East Austin creek." The defendant claims that the above-mentioned clause in the deed from Meeker to Coon was an exception so that the fee was retained in Meeker to the 40-foot strip along East Austin creek, and that, as Meeker was thus the owner of the fee, he had a right to grant a right of way for the railway in question to Davis for the defendant. Plaintiff's claim is that the description contained in the above-mentioned clause is so indefinite and uncertain as to be void, and that therefore the plaintiff took title to the entire 160 acres described in the deed from Meeker to him. The trial court took the view that the description was void for uncertainty and found that the title to the entire 160 acres was in the plaintiff and granted relief accordingly, enjoining the defendant.

The first question requiring solution is as to the effect of the clause in the deed from Meeker to Coon. The phrase "saving and excepting therefrom a strip of land forty feet wide," etc., is apt in its phraseology for an exception of the fee in the land, and if there was no further provision in the clause it should undoubtedly be construed as an exception rather than a reservation. But the clause "for a road to be built at some future time" makes it necessary to consider whether or not it was the purpose of the parties merely to reserve a right of way for a road.

[1] If we construe the clause as a reservation of a right of way, the objection that the description is too uncertain to be valid would be overcome by the rule which permits the delimitation of the right of way subsequent to the conveyance. As was said in Ballard v. Titus, 157 Cal. 673, 683, 110 Pac. 118, 122: "It is settled law that where an unlocated right of way is granted or reserved, the owner of the servient estate may in the first instance designate a reasonable way, and if he fails to do so, the owner of the dominant estate may designate it. Jones on Easements, § 337; Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 62, 65 [11 Pac. 879]; Blum v. Weston, 102 Cal. 362, 369 [41 Am. St. Rep. 188, 36 Pac. 778]." See, also, Messer v. Oestreich, 52 Wis. 684, 10 N. W. 6.

[2] Under our Code, which establishes a different rule from that of the common law, an exception is construed most strongly in favor of the grantor. Civ. Code, § 1069; Martin v. Lloyd, 94 Cal. 195, 29 Pac. 491; Sears v. Ackerman, 138 Cal. 583, 72 Pac. 171; Ballard v. Titus, supra. If the clause is so uncertain as to be void when construed as an exception, but is valid when construed as a reservation of an easement, this rule of construction would require us to construe the clause as a reservation of an easement for a road, as most favorable to the grantor, and the conclusion of the trial court that the defendant had no interest in the 160 acres of plaintiff, because of the uncertainty in the conveyance, was erroneous for the reason that the grantor Meeker at least retained a right of way for a road, and the conveyance by Meeker to Davis for the construction of the road for the benefit of the defendant authorized the construction of a road along the right of way so reserved and designated by the defendant, provided such designation was a reasonable one. See Pollard v. Madrox, 28 Ala. 321.

[3] While it is true that the deed from Meeker to Davis purported to grant a right of way "across my land," the purpose of the instrument shows that it was to secure to the defendant a road for the transportation of its materials from their quarries to the railroad near Watson, Sonoma county, along East Austin creek, and would therefore authorize the construction of a road along the strip so reserved by his grantor Meeker. But the right of the defendant to construct a railroad instead of a wagon road is predicated upon the theory that the fee of the 40-foot strip is "excepted" from the operation of the deed from Meeker to the plaintiff, for only on this theory is the conduct of defendant authorized, because an easement for a wagon road would not justify the construction of a railroad along such strip. We will therefore further consider the question as to whether or not the 40-foot strip referred to in Meeker's deed to plaintiff is an exception of the fee.

[4] While the difference between reservations and exceptions is well defined (Lange v. Waters, 156 Cal. 142, 103 Pac. 889, 19 Ann. Cas. 1207), it is universally held that the use of the word "excepting" or "reserving" is not alone determinative of the question, but that the effort of the court should be to construe the whole conveyance for the purpose of ascertaining the real intention of the parties and give it effect accordingly, regardless of the use of the appropriate terms "reserving" or "excepting" (Painter v. Pasadena L. & W. Co., 91 Cal. 81, 27 Pac. 539; Devlin on Deeds, vol. 2, §§ 980, 980a). The only language in the clause under consideration which indicates that the intent of the parties was to reserve the fee is the provision for the "exception" of a strip of "land."

[5] The fact that this is a strip 40 feet wide which meanders a stream, and is to be used for a road, is, however, an indication that the parties contemplated an easement rather than an exception. It is evident that the parties had in mind the construction of a road which would be beneficial to both parties. Until such road was constructed, the grantee would have the right to use this strip as well as the balance of the land for any suitable purpose, and thereafter for any purpose not inconsistent with the easement. The phrase "for a road" modifies the whole clause. Similarly in construing contracts and deeds for railroad rights of way such deeds are usually construed as giving a mere right of way, although the terms of the deed would be otherwise apt to convey a fee. Abercrombie v. Simmons, 71 Kan. 538, 81 Pac. 208, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 806, 114 Am. St. Rep. 516, note, 6 Ann. Cas. 243, note. It is true that there are cases holding that apt words for the conveyance of a fee will vest the fee in the railroad company, but the same reasoning which would justify a conclusion that unless it is exceptionally clear in the conveyance that a fee is intended, a right of way only is conveyed, would lead to the conclusion that the clause with reference to the 40-foot strip in the deed from Meeker to plaintiff merely reserved a right of way for a road. If we should construe the deed as excepting a fee in the land of a 40-foot strip along the East Austin creek, such exception would be valueless to the defendant, unless it is also held that it had a right to locate its railroad or road upon a grade and in places where it would be possible to construct such a railroad or road. It is true that there are decisions that, under certain circumstances where a fee is excepted or granted by indefinite and uncertain description, the grantor has a right to elect where he will locate the land thus imperfectly described (Smith v. Furbish, 68 N. H. 123, 44 Atl. 398, 47 L. R. A. 226; Simpson v. Blaisdell, 85 Me. 199, 27 Atl. 101, 35 Am. St. Rep. 348; 13 Cyc. 679; Benn v. Hatcher, 81 Va. 25, 59 Am. Rep. 645); or such deed may be treated as an agreement to convey (Louisville R. R. v. Boykin, 76 Ala. 560; Hoard v. Huntington, 59 W. Va. 91, 53 S. E. 278, 8 Ann. Cas. 929). Under these decisions, if applicable—and on this point we express no opinion (see Lange v. Waters, 156 Cal. 142, 103 Pac. 889, 19 Ann. Cas. 1207)—defendant would have a right to locate the 40-foot strip of land, but the appropriate location for a wagon road might not be at all practicable for a railroad. On the whole, therefore, we conclude that it would be contrary to the intention of the parties to the deed from Meeker to Coon to use the strip in question for a private railroad, which is a great disadvantage to the land of the plaintiff, rather than an advantage, and that the deed should be construed as reserving a right of way for a wagon road. In view of the conclusion that the defendant is entitled to use a 40-foot right of way to be located as stated in Ballard v. Titus, supra, for a wagon road, and is not entitled to use the strip for a railroad, it is necessary to reverse the case in order that further proceedings may be had in accordance with this opinion. In view of our conclusion that the appellant is entitled to a right of way for a road and to a reversal of the judgment, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the points advanced by it concerning the form of the action.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

PACIFIC MUT. LIFE INS. CO. OF CALIFORNIA v. PACIFIC SURETY CO.
(S. F. 8433.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1920.)

1. Insurance §679 — Reinsurer held liable notwithstanding insurer's failure to send reinsurance advices.

Under reinsurance contract making reinsurer's liability commence simultaneously with that of insurer provided that, upon insurer's failure to send reinsurance advices to reinsurer within 10 days "after receipt * * * of advice of the issuing of the policy or renewal receipt," such liability shall commence from the moment of the dispatch of reinsurance advices, reinsurer was liable notwithstanding insurer's failure to send reinsurance advices, where such failure was due to ignorance that any reinsurance had arisen because of advices received that a second policy was issued in lieu of a previously issued policy, since the advice of the issuing of the policy requiring insurer to send reinsurance advices must be one showing existence of reinsurance.

2. Pleading §205(1)—Reinsurer held not entitled to attack on general demurrer settlement of claim by insurer.

Reinsurer, having by reinsurance contract authorized insurer to bind it by a settlement, could not, in insurer's action on the reinsurance contract, attack the settlement of a claim upon general demurrer.

Action by the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company of California against the Pacific Surety Company. From judgment sustaining demurrer to complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

R. S. Gray, of San Francisco, for appellant.
Denson, Cooley & Denson and Cooley & Lachmund, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, J. This is an action for money claimed to be due under a reinsurance contract. The general demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiff appeals from said judgment.

Plaintiff and defendant entered into a reinsurance contract whereby defendant reinsured the "second excess" of $5,000 on accident insurance policies written by the plaintiff where the principal sum exceeded $10,000. In other words, if the plaintiff issued one or more policies to one person, and the total insurance exclusive of accumulations amounted to $20,000 or over, plaintiff carried the first $10,000 of the risk, another reinsuring company carried the risk for the next $5,000, and defendant assumed the risk for the second excess of $5,000. The companies were to share proportionately in any accumulations which should arise under these policies. There was a provision that plaintiff was to have the right to settle disputed claims and bind the defendant thereby. The Chicago office of the plaintiff in April, 1914, issued a policy of accident insurance for $10,000 to Dr. Steere. The following June a second policy for the same amount was issued to said Dr. Steere, and the advices received at plaintiff's home office in Los Angeles stated that this second policy was issued in lieu of the first policy. On July 13, 1914, Dr. Steere was murdered, and July 17 plaintiff received word that the widow of Dr. Steere claimed both policies were in force; this being the first knowledge on the part of plaintiff of the possibility of such claim being made. On the day following the receipt of this information, plaintiff notified defendant of the issuance of the two policies and the claim that both were in force at the time of the death. The widow commenced suit against plaintiff for $30,000. Plaintiff concluded that under all the circumstances it was advisable to settle the claim, and did so for $17,000. This suit is for the alleged proportionate liability of defendant under its contract.

The portions of the reinsurance contract which are of importance for the purposes of this case are as follows:

Article I. "4. Whenever the 'Pacific Mutual' has issued on one life several policies the reinsurance shall extend proportionately under each policy; and in the event of a claim arising it shall be construed that the 'Reinsurance Company' has assumed a proportionate risk in each of such policies, and in each and every provision and condition of such policies."

Article II. "2. The liability of the 'Reinsurance Company' for each risk shall commence simultaneously with that of the 'Pacific Mutual,' provided only that the 'Pacific Mutual' shall dispatch the reinsurance advices to the office of the 'Reinsurance Company' within ten (10) days (Sundays and holidays excepted) after receipt at its home office in Los Angeles, California, of advice of the issuing of the policy or renewal receipt by the 'Pacific Mutual.'

"3. All liability of the 'Reinsurance Company' shall cease when the risk terminates under the respective policy or renewal. If the 'Pacific Mutual' shall neglect to advise the 'Reinsurance Company' within the above ten days, then the liability of the 'Reinsurance Company' in respect to the reinsurance so omitted to be advised shall commence from the moment of the dispatch by the 'Pacific Mutual' of such advice."

The sole question presented to the court for determination is one of the construction of the terms of a written contract, i. e., whether the reinsurance company is absolved from responsibility by the failure of the insuring company to dispatch reinsurance advices when such failure was without fault on the part of the insuring company and due to ignorance that any reinsurance had arisen. From a careful reading of the contract it is apparent that the precise contingency now presented was not in the minds of the parties at the time the contract was drawn and, consequently, was not provided for, namely, the case where a claim is brought within the reinsurance agreement without knowledge until after the death of the insured that the policy was within the agreement. It remains, therefore, to determine the general intent of the parties from the contract as a whole. As was said in Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Eastern Ry. Co. of Minnesota, 121 Fed. 609, 613, 57 C. A. 635, 639:

"To the counsel of each of these parties this contract seems plain and unambiguous, and its meaning certain, and yet it has an entirely different signification to the representatives of each of these corporations. This fact, repeated perusals, and a careful study of the writing present very convincing evidence that its terms are not altogether clear, that they were well calculated to raise this controversy, and that they are susceptible of two constructions. It remains to determine which is the more natural, probable, and rational interpretation. There is no evidence in the record that either of the two interpretations urged upon our consideration would have deterred either of the parties from entering into the agreement. What they intended to stipulate, what they understood the contract to mean, and what they would have done if their interpretation of it had been different, can be deduced only from the contract itself, the situation of the parties, and the circumstances surrounding them when they made it."

It is contended in support of the judgment that the contract plainly requires that the defendant should be promptly advised of the issuance of any policy by which it incurred a liability under its reinsurance agreement. This contention is made and based upon the theory that the provision in paragraph 3 of article 2 of the reinsurance agreement was inserted in the contract with this object in view and renders the giving of reinsurance advices a condition precedent to the liability of defendant. From this it is argued that, if the plaintiff at its home office in Los Angeles received erroneous information from its Chicago office which operated to prevent it from giving to the defendant the reinsurance advices by virtue of which the defendant's liability would have commenced to run concurrently with that of the plaintiff, it is the misfortune of the plaintiff, from which it alone must suffer.

[1] We cannot accede to that interpretation of the contract. The contract plainly provides that the liability of the reinsurance company commences simultaneously with that of the Pacific Mutual Company and arises automatically without notification of any kind. The one proviso attached to the existence of the liability is that reinsurance advices must be sent by the insuring company within 10 days "after receipt at its home office in Los Angeles, California, of advice of the issuing of the policy or renewal receipt." In case of a failure to send reinsurance advices under those circumstances, and only in case of such a failure, the liability of the reinsurance company does not commence until the advice is actually sent. The liability of the reinsurance company comes into existence, then, on the issuance of the policy by the insuring company, and the only contingency that can relieve the reinsurance company is the failure of the insurance company to dispatch reinsurance advices after receipt at its home office of advice of the issuance of the policy. Clearly the advice of the "issuing of the policy" within 10 days after the receipt of which plaintiff is to send reinsurance advices can only mean advice of the issuing of such a policy as the parties had in contemplation, that is, one showing, either by itself or in connection with one or more others, the existence of such "reinsurance." Any other interpretation would be unreasonable, for a requirement that "reinsurance advices" be sent after the receipt of advices of the issuance of any policy would be purposeless, inasmuch as "reinsurance advices" can only be sent where a policy has been issued upon which reinsurance has arisen, and it is only with "reinsurance" that the contract deals.

When, therefore, plaintiff receives word that a second policy is not within the agreement for the reason that it is issued in lieu of the first, no occasion has arisen for sending reinsurance advices. If it later turns out that a claim is presented within the reinsurance agreement by reason of both policies being in force at the same time, according to the contract the liability of the reinsurance company arose when the second policy was issued and the only contingency which could have absolved it from liability has not arisen, namely, neglect on the part of the insuring company to send reinsurance advices after receipt of the advice of the issuance of the policy, for the insuring company has never received any advice of the issuance of a policy upon which reinsurance has arisen. It will be noted that the contract provides that "if the Pacific Mutual shall neglect to advise the 'Reinsurance Company' within the * * * ten days" after receipt at its home office in Los Angeles of advice of the issuance of the policy, the liability of the reinsurance company shall not commence until the actual moment of the dispatch of the reinsurance advices. If the Pacific Mutual has never been advised at its home office of the issuance of a policy within the reinsurance agreement, there is no time from which the 10-day period began to run against the Pacific Mutual and, consequently, nothing to prevent the liability of the reinsurance company from arising and continuing in existence from the time of the issuance of the policy upon which the claim is being made.

While it is true that the contract shows that it was intended that the defendant was to be promptly advised of the issuance of any policy by which it incurred a liability under its reinsurance agreement, there was nothing in the contract limiting its liability only to cases where it had been so notified; the only limitation on liability was in the case of neglect by plaintiff to send such notification within 10 days after receipt of advice of the issuance of the policy, and, where plaintiff received no advice of the issuance of a policy within the contract, it was under no obligation to send reinsurance advices. This was the only protection afforded defendant, and, in view of the fact that the contract seems to have been carefully drawn to cover a most important branch of the business of plaintiff and defendant, the court is not at liberty to imply an obligation in favor of defendant that it should only be liable when notified by plaintiff irrespective of the knowledge of plaintiff that the policy was one on which reinsurance had arisen. Such an obligation is one so absolute in nature that, if intended to be imposed on plaintiff, it should have been clearly set forth in the contract. As the contract stands, not only is no such intention expressed, but a contrary intent appears, namely, that defendant is to be bound unless plaintiff fails to forward information received by it at its home office that reinsurance has arisen. Of course, any claim of fraud or negligence would place a different aspect upon the case. The facts are now being considered only for their sufficiency upon general demurrer.

[2] The defendant is not in a position, upon general demurrer, to attack the settlement of the claim between plaintiff and the widow of the insured, in view of the power given plaintiff by the contract of making settlements binding upon defendant.

The complaint does not fail to state a cause of action under the contract, and the demurrer should have been overruled.

The judgment is reversed.

ST. JOHN v. CONSOLIDATED CONST. CO.
(L. A. 5230.)(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 6, 1920.
Rehearing Denied Feb. 5, 1920.)1. Judgment $\hookrightarrow$ 590(2)—Record held to show judgment was not upon matters adjudicated in former action.

Record upon appeal from judgment upon an open book account held to show that the items upon which judgment was rendered were not included in a former judgment which had been paid, so that the matter was open for adjudication in this action, and was not res adjudicata.

2. Pleading $\hookrightarrow$ 323(4)—Permitting the filing of bill of particulars after statutory time within the discretion of court.

An exception that the court erred in permitting plaintiff to serve and file his bill of particulars more than the five days after demand therefor as required by Code of Civ. Proc. § 454, is not well taken, since it was within the court's power to relieve the plaintiff of his default and permit him to file a bill of particulars at the opening of trial, and, it not appearing that such action was prejudicial to the defendant upon the merits of the case or upon presentation to the court, no abuse of discretion appears.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by A. C. St. John against the Consolidated Construction Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Weller, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. The appeal is from the judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $3,000 found by the court to be due the plaintiff from the defendant in an action on an open book account for cement furnished.

The complaint, after alleging the corporate existence of the defendant, merely alleges:

"That said defendant is indebted to plaintiff on an open book account for cement furnished to said defendant within four years last past at the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, state of California, in the sum of $3,000."

It is then alleged that no part of this sum has been paid, but that the whole thereof is still due, owing, and unpaid.

In its answer the defendant denied the indebtedness, and alleged that prior to the commencement of this action plaintiff had assigned and transferred all claims held by him against the defendant to the Riverside Portland Cement Company, a corporation, which commenced an action against the defendant in the superior court of Los Angeles county, and judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff therein, which was paid and satisfied by this defendant, and that all rights and claims of the plaintiff herein were adjudicated in that action.

The court found that the defendant was at the time of the commencement of the action, and still is, indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $3,000, and that no part of the sum has been paid; that prior to this action the plaintiff had assigned all claims held by him against the defendant to the Riverside Portland Cement Company, a corporation; that the said Riverside Portland Cement Company did commence an action against the defendant entitled "Riverside Portland Cement Company, a Corporation, Plaintiff v. Consolidated Construction Company, a Corporation, Defendant, No. B-1098"; that said action was tried and judgment therein rendered in favor of the plaintiff therein and against the defendant herein; that said judgment has become final and has been fully paid and satisfied by the said defendant; that the said sum of $3,000 sued on in plaintiff's complaint herein was not included in the judgment in the said action No. B-1098; that the court in that action did not adjudicate the question of the indebtedness of the defendant to the plaintiff in this action; that the claim of the plaintiff herein was in no way passed upon or adjudicated in the former action, and that that action is not a bar to the recovery of the plaintiff herein; that before the commencement of this action the Riverside Portland Cement Company had reassigned to "A. C. St. John, the plaintiff herein, all right, title, and interest to it assigned in said demand of $3,000 by the said A. C. St. John; and that at the time of the commencement of this action" the plaintiff was the owner of the claim against the defendant. Judgment was thereupon entered for the sum of $3,000, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. from the date of the commencement of this action.

[1] 1. The principal point relied on by appellant as ground for reversal of the judgment herein is the claim that the matter in controversy was adjudicated in the former action in which the Riverside Portland Cement Company had judgment against the defendant, and that therefore the matter is res judicata. As we have indicated above, the court found specifically that "the court in that action did not adjudicate the question of the indebtedness of the defendant to the plaintiff in this action; that the claim of the plaintiff herein was in no way passed upon or adjudicated in the former action." An examination of the record in the former case shows that this finding was fully justified. It appears that the cement company refused to sell cement to the defendant, whereupon it was arranged that the cement company should sell to St. John, the plaintiff here, who was a stockholder of the defendant, upon his personal credit, and that St. John would then resell to the defendant. This was done. On account of cement so sold St. John paid the cement company $3,000, and the defendant paid $2,000. There was a considerable balance still due the cement company, and for this it brought suit against the defendant, the complaint containing two different sets of counts, so to speak—one set on the theory of a sale by St. John to the defendant and an assignment by St. John of his claim to the plaintiff; and the other on the theory of a sale direct by the cement company to the defendant. The balance sought to be recovered in both sets of counts took no account of the payment of $3,000 by St. John. The court found the facts as stated above, and also that St. John was acting throughout for the defendant and as its agent, and gave judgment against the defendant, but only for the balance due the cement company after the payment of $3,000 by St. John was taken into account. In other words, the judgment gave to the defendant the benefit of the $3,000 paid by St. John. This is the $3,000 which St. John seeks to recover in the present action. It is perfectly plain from the foregoing statement that the defendant in all justice still owes St. John the $3,000 which he paid for it and of which it got the benefit, and that its defense here is an unconscionable one. It is also apparent that the action by the cement company was decided exclusively upon the basis of determining merely what was due the cement company on its own account, and not as assignee of St. John, and without any determination whatever as to the obligations between St. John and the defendant. There was, therefore, no adjudication as to such obligations, and they were open for adjudication in this action.

[2] 2. The only other point urged by appellant is "that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to serve and file his bill of particulars more than five days after demand therefor, as required by section 454 of the Code of Civil Procedure." It appears that the demand was served more than a year and a half before the trial, and subsequently called to the attention of plaintiff's attorney by counsel for the defendant, and that no attempt was made to comply with the demand prior to the day of the trial. At the opening of the trial, however, the court allowed the plaintiff to file the bill of particulars over the objection of counsel for the defendant, offering to allow a continuance of five days in order to give counsel time to examine the bill and prepare for trial. This offer of the court was refused by counsel for the defendant, who reserved an exception to the ruling of the court.

It was within the power of the court to relieve the plaintiff of his default and permit him to file a bill of particulars; and it not appearing, and it not being claimed, that the action of the court in so doing was prejudicial to the defendant upon the merits of the case, or upon their presentation to the court, no abuse of discretion appears.

The judgment is affirmed.

SUTTER BUTTE CANAL CO. v. AMERICAN RICE & ALFALFA CO. et al.
(Sac. 2817.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1920.)

1. Waters and water courses ☞258—Evidence of effect on crop of delay in furnishing water in action to enforce water lien admissible.

In actions by irrigation company to foreclose liens securing notes given by rice company in payment for water, evidence as to effect upon rice crop of delay in furnishing water was admissible to show it was proximate cause of rice company's loss set up as counterclaim.

2. Waters and water courses ☞258—Evidence held to show defendant ready to receive water before available.

In actions by irrigation company to foreclose liens securing notes in payment for water given by a rice company counterclaiming for damage through failure to furnish water evidence that defendant rice company was ready to receive water before date when it was available held sufficient to sustain verdict for it on its counterclaim.

3. Appeal and error ☞699(4)—Record should show whether instructions were given at request of party complaining.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 609, it is important for record to show whether or not instructions complained of are given at request of party complaining, which should be made clear by judge, as, in default of such explanation, party complaining may find objection precluded by rule favoring regularity of trial proceedings.

4. Appeal and error ☞1064(2)—Assumption on instruction of breach of contract by plaintiff not misleading.

In action by irrigation company to foreclose liens securing notes in payment for water given by a rice company which counterclaimed for failure to furnish water, in view of opening statement of counsel, course of evidence, other instructions, and argument before jury, assumption in instruction that there had in fact been a breach of contract by plaintiff irrigation company held not to have misled jury.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by the Sutter Butte Canal Company against the American Rice & Alfalfa Company and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, and Henry Ingram, of Gridley, for appellant.

Elston, Clark & Nichols, of Berkeley, and G. F. Jones, of Oroville, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. Plaintiff brought two actions to foreclose liens to secure promissory notes, made in payment for water, given it by the defendant corporation, which will be hereafter referred to as the defendant; the other defendants being joined solely because of their interest in the land upon which plaintiff claims a lien. The defendant filed counterclaims for damages alleged to have been suffered because of the partial failure of a rice crop alleged to be due to the delay of the plaintiff in furnishing irrigating water. The issues raised in these actions on these counterclaims were consolidated and tried before a jury, and verdict was rendered thereon in favor of the defendant for $20,000. The court decided in favor of plaintiff's right to recover upon the promissory notes and therefore deducted the amounts thereof from the counterclaim found by the jury, and judgment was rendered against the plaintiff for the balance of $14,051.10. Plaintiff appeals.

Two contracts in writing granting a water right were executed by the parties, both dated May 9, 1914. By one of these contracts plaintiff agreed to furnish the defendant irrigating water for 400 acres of land; by the other, for a tract of 560 acres. The former called for 2½ cubic feet per second normal rate, and, upon demand, for 5 feet additional. The contract for the 560 acres called for 3½ cubic feet per second normal rate, and, upon demand, for 7 feet additional. The plaintiff charged not only for the normal quantity of water, but also for such additional water required by defendant for raising rice, and these actions were to recover on the promissory notes given in payment therefor. If we were called upon to construe these contracts between the parties to determine whether or not the plaintiff was obligated to furnish such additional water for the season of 1914, a difficulty arises because they provide that, when the additional water is required, notice to that effect shall be given in January of each year. As the contracts were executed in May, no notice could have been given thereunder for the additional water in 1914, as required by the terms thereof. The delay of which the defendant complains was in the failure to furnish water before June 5, 1914, immediately upon the execution of the contracts. It is unnecessary to determine this question on this appeal, for the reason that in the trial court no distinction was made between the normal and "additional" requirements as to water. The former was provided for in paragraph 1, and the latter in paragraph 11, of the contract. The court interpreted the contract in its instructions to the jury, and no complaint thereof is made on this appeal. This instruction is as follows:

"The jury is further instructed that, by the language of the contract in evidence, the Sutter Butte Canal Company, plaintiff herein, agreed to furnish water from and after May 9, 1914, and if you find that the defendant, American Rice & Alfalfa Company, was ready in the year 1914 to receive said water at such time or later for the purpose of making valuable use thereof in the raising of rice, the obligation rested on the plaintiff to supply such water."

"The jury is instructed that, under the terms of the written contract between the canal company and the rice company, the rice company was entitled to have the water called for by the contract delivered to the land described in the contracts after May 9th, the date of those contracts."

Upon this interpretation of the contract the issues of fact were presented to the jury, plaintiff contending that water was in its canal on and after May 24, 1914, and that the defendant was not ready to use such water and did not use it before the 5th day of June, 1914. If plaintiff's contention was correct, the defendant would not be entitled to damages, and the court so instructed the jury. The defendant claimed that it was ready to use water as early as May 5th, and that, although it needed water daily after May 9th, the canals necessary for furnishing such water were not yet completed by the plaintiff, and even when completed no water was available to defendant therein until after June 1, 1914. The distinction between the plaintiff's duty to furnish the "additional" water and the normal supply was first referred to during the argument in this court. Even in its petition for a hearing in this court no such distinction was made. This petition states:

"It (the contract) does not specifically state the date upon which the furnishing of water shall commence each and every year. Of course, it is to be furnished only during the irrigating season, and not all the time. And the true and obvious construction to be given to this paragraph (1) would be that the water should be furnished when respondent was ready to receive and take the same upon its land. No other construction can be reasonably given it. * * * Under that contract and upon the theory upon which the case was tried and necessarily had to be tried, at least within a reasonable time after its execution, or at least some time thereafter, if respondent was ready to receive the water on its land, appellant would be required to furnish it. * * *

The errors complained of by appellant are confined to objections to that portion of the evidence of the defendant tending to prove that water on or prior to May 15th was essential to maturing a crop of rice; that the delay in flooding its land was caused by the plaintiff; and that the court improperly instructed the jury, in this, that the instructions assumed that there had been a breach of the contract by the plaintiff.

[1] The testimony of the witnesses as to the effect upon a rice crop of the delay in furnishing water was clearly admissible for the purpose of showing that such delay was the proximate cause of defendant's loss. As stated, the jury were instructed that the obligation of the plaintiff to furnish water dated from May 9th, and, under such instruction, if any damage resulted from a failure to furnish water before that time, defendant was not entitled to recover therefor. The objection to this line of testimony was properly overruled.

[2] The appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict because there is no evidence that the defendant was ready to receive the water before May 24th, when such water was available. The evidence on this question is conflicting. Mr. Yoakum, the defendant's superintendent, testified that on May 9, 1914, the 400 acres was ready for the first application of water; that within two days thereafter 160 acres of the 560-acre tract were ready for water; that by May 14th all but 60 acres of the 560-acre tract were ready for the first application of water; and that the 60 acres were ready for water May 16th at 10 o'clock. The witness further testified that he made use of all the water furnished by the plaintiff, and that using all such water it required 20 days to complete the first flooding, which should have been done in 8 days if there had been sufficient water. In view of this and other evidence to the same effect, it cannot be said that the verdict in this regard is not supported by the evidence. The appellant complains that under the instructions the court assumed that there had in fact been a breach of contract by the plaintiff. Two instructions were given covering substantially the same ground in almost the same language. In the first the court, after stating in a general way the nature of the case and that the defendant alleged and the plaintiff denied damages by reason of the failure to furnish water, instructed the jury as follows:

"The plain issues before you and which you, gentlemen of the jury, have been sworn to determine the facts upon the evidence adduced on the trial and under the instruction of the court as to the law of the case, are:

"First, whether there is anything due the plaintiff for the furnishing of the water in the year 1914, and

"Second, whether there is anything due defendant for the breach of the two contracts, that is, if you find there has been a breach, for the furnishing of the water to the 400-acre and the 560-acre tracts in the year 1914." (Italics ours.)

In the next instruction the issues are again stated in a somewhat different language, and the court concluded the instruction as follows:

"By stipulation of counsel, the issues you are to determine are: First, whether there is any sum due to the plaintiff for the furnishing of water in the year 1914; second, whether there is anything due to the defendant for the breach of the two contracts for the furnishing of water to the 400-acre tract and the 560-acre tract in the year 1914."

[3, 4] It is as to this latter portion of the instruction that the appellant objects. It is proper to say in this connection that there is a conflict between the clerk and the reporter's record (both certified to by the trial judge) as to the first instruction. The phrase, "that is, if you find that there has been a breach," is interpolated in the instruction as given in the reporter's transcript, but is not contained in the clerk's transcript. Appellant apparently does not dispute the correctness of the instruction as set forth in the reporter's transcript and printed in respondent's brief. There is nothing, however, in either transcript to show whether or not this instruction was given by the court of its own motion or at the request of the plaintiff or the defendant. As to the other instructions, each indicates whether or not it is given at the request of the plaintiff or defendant as set forth in the clerk's transcript. It is important for the record to show whether or not instructions complained of are given at the request of the party complaining, and this should be made clear by the judge. Section 609, Code Civ. Proc. In default of such explanation, a party complaining of such an instruction may find its objection precluded by the rule which favors the regularity of the proceedings in the trial court. Gray v. Eschen, 125 Cal. 5, 57 Pac. 664. We are satisfied, however, that the jury were not misled by the assumption in the instruction of which appellant complains. It must have been apparent to the jury that the main contention in the case was as to whether there had been a breach of the contract. The opening statement of counsel, the course of the evidence, and no doubt the argument of counsel before the jury, were largely directed to that question, nor does a consideration of the instructions as a whole lead to the conclusion that this issue was withdrawn from the jury. The jury was instructed that the defendant was required to prove its allegation that water was not received until a date so late in the season that it became and was impossible for the rice crop to mature in order to recover from the plaintiff; and, again, it was instructed that, if the plaintiff had water available for the defendant before defendant had its land in condition to use the same, then the plaintiff was not in fault, and the verdict must be in favor of the plaintiff. It is clear from these and other instructions that the jury could not have been misled by the instructions complained of into believing that they were instructed as a matter of law that the plaintiff was guilty of a breach of its contract.

Judgment affirmed.

In re JOHNSON'S ESTATE. (L. A. 6226.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 7, 1920.)

1. Executors and administrators §17(3)—Husband entitled to preference as administrator.

A surviving husband is entitled to preference as to letters of administration on the estate of his wife, unless incompetent on some statutory ground.

2. Appeal and error §1010(1)—Finding of fact supported by evidence not disturbed.

A finding of fact by trial court supported by sufficient evidence will not be disturbed on the ground that it was contrary to the preponderance of the evidence.

3. Appeal and error §1010(1)—Executors and administrators §20(7) — Presumption of capacity merely throws on party asserting incapacity burden of proving same.

The presumption of capacity merely throws on one asserting the incompetency of the surviving husband to act as administrator the burden of showing such husband's want of capacity, and does not change the rule that the appellate court will not disturb the finding of the trial court on question of want of capacity if supported by sufficient evidence.

4. Executors and administrators §20(7)—Evidence held to warrant finding of surviving husband's want of capacity.

On appeal by a surviving husband from an order refusing his application for letters of administration, evidence held sufficient to warrant the finding of his want of capacity.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Mary Jane Webster Johnson, deceased. From an order of the superior court appointing Mary T. Hiatt as administratrix with will annexed, the surviving husband appeals. Affirmed.

Hutton, Fogel & Coffin, Hutton & Fogel and Kennicott & Williams, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Manning, Thompson & Hoover, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. [1] This is an appeal from an order appointing one Mary T. Hiatt as the administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of the decedent. The appeal is taken by the surviving husband of the decedent, who himself had petitioned for letters, and whose petition was denied. As the surviving husband of the decedent he was entitled to letters in preference to any one else, unless he were incompetent on a statutory ground of incompetency. One such statutory ground is a "want of understanding," and the lower court found that the appellant was incompetent on this ground. The sole point presented on appeal is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain this finding.

[2, 3] We have stated that the sole question is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding mentioned. This perhaps is not an exactly accurate statement of the position of appellant's counsel. That position, as stated by counsel, is that the sole question is as to whether or not appellant's lack of understanding was established by a preponderance of the evidence. But the question of preponderance of evidence is one exclusively for the tribunal whose function it is to try and to determine the question of fact. It is not a question for the appellate tribunal. If there was sufficient evidence to justify the finding, it cannot be overturned on appeal, no matter what the views of the appellate court may be as to what conclusion it would have reached as to the preponderance of evidence if it had been trying the fact. Counsel for appellant seem to have the impression that this is changed by the circumstance that there exists a prima facie presumption of mental capacity. But this presumption merely operates to throw on the party claiming that mental capacity is lacking the burden of proving that fact. It does not change the rule that if the trial tribunal, court, or jury, as the case may be, finds that the fact is proven, such finding cannot be disturbed on appeal unless there is no evidence to support it, or it is plainly contrary to the evidence.

[4] Looking at the matter as one of the sufficiency of the evidence there can be but little question. It appears that at the time of the hearing the appellant was some 83 years of age. About a year before he had had a severe fall, and according to his own testimony for some time thereafter was subject to hallucinations. Several witnesses, whose association with him was sufficient to warrant them in forming an opinion as to his mental capacity, testified that he was subject to hal-lucinations; that he was exceedingly forgetful; that his mind wandered; that he was apt to be imposed upon. It is objected that the observations of all the witnesses so testifying had entirely ceased three months before the date of the trial, and that for this reason their testimony should not be accepted. A situation could easily be imagined where observations as to a person's mental condition, made three months before, would be of little value, but such is not the case where, as here, the person whose capacity is in question is of exceedingly advanced years, so that his mentality is naturally growing weaker rather than stronger, and where the observations have extended over a considerable period and there is nothing to indicate that the lack of capacity observed was of a temporary character. In addition to the testimony mentioned is the fact that the appellant himself was on the stand, and was carefully examined by the court at length. His testimony is a little wandering and uncertain at times. For example, the appellant had been married twice, but did not seem to be certain whether he was married the second time in 1893 or 1903. It would not be fair to say, however, that the written record of his examination affirmatively shows mental weakness. But, on the other hand, it does not negative it, and the trial court had the very great advantage of actually seeing and observing the appellant. Estate of Munroe, 161 Cal. 10, 118 Pac. 242, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1161; Estate of Wright, 177 Cal. 274, 170 Pac. 610. His appearance, his demeanor, his manner of answering questions, all the small but significant indicia of rationality or its lack, may have made it quite apparent to the trial court that he was genuinely mentally incompetent, and yet not appear in the written record at all. In view of the direct testimony mentioned and the advantage which the trial court had of personal observation of the appellant, it is impossible for us to say that its conclusion was not justified.

Order affirmed.

CHUNG SING v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
(L. A. 5293.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 6, 1920.)

1. Railroads — 310—Kicking of car uncontrolled across street negligence.

The kicking of a car uncontrolled across a public traveled street in a large city when it is dusk permits a justifiable inference of negligence.

2. Railroads — 348(6) — Contributory negligence of traveler not shown.

In an action for injuries to a wagon driver struck by a car kicked uncontrolled across the street, evidence held to warrant finding that he was not guilty of contributory negligence.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Chung Sing against the Southern Pacific Company and others and William D. O'Hare. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants first named appeal. Affirmed. See, also, 178 Cal. 261, 172 Pac. 1103.

Henry T. Gage and W. I. Gilbert, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Waldo M. York and Harry M. Irwin, both of Los Angeles, and William D. O'Hare, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff for $13,000 for personal injuries found to have been suffered by the plaintiff because of the negligence of the appealing defendants. The sole point urged for reversal is that the verdict and consequent judgment for the plaintiff are not supported by the evidence. There are a number of contentions made by the respondent to the point that the verdict and judgment are not open to review in the particular urged by the appellants; but, since we are of the opinion that the appellants' contention must in any case be overruled, there is no occasion for considering these contentions of the respondent.

The defendant railroad corporation operates a railroad having tracks on Violet street in Los Angeles crossing Santa Fé street. The other defendants were members of a switching crew employed by the railroad company. At the time of the accident they were engaged in switching freight cars across Santa Fé street and one of the cars struck the plaintiff, who was coming along the street, and severely injured him. It is evident that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict, unless: (a) It fails to show any negligence on the part of the defendants toward the plaintiff contributing to the accident; or (b) shows affirmatively that the plaintiff was himself guilty of contributory negligence.

[1] As to the first point, there was evidence showing that the car which struck the plaintiff had been "kicked" across the street; that is, given a strong push by the locomotive, and then uncoupled and allowed to proceed under the impetus so given it. There was evidence also to show that there was no one on the car to stop or control it. It hardly needs argument to the point that if these were the facts, as the jury was upon the evidence entitled to find them to be, the jury was justified in concluding that the conduct of the defendants was negligent. Kicking a car uncontrolled across a public and traveled street in a large city at least permits a justifiable inference of negligence, if nothing more.

[2] As to the second point, that of contributory negligence, it appears that the accident occurred on an evening in November when it was beginning to get dusk. The train crew already had their lanterns lit. The plaintiff was coming along Santa Fé street, driving a two-horse wagon. The contention of the defendants is that the plaintiff could and should have seen the car coming as he approached the crossing in ample time to stop, and that one of the switchmen was protecting the crossing and signaling to traffic to stop. The testimony of the plaintiff is, however, direct that he approached the crossing slowly, and saw the car standing still, at least as he supposed, and then suddenly it came at him from across the street. If this be true, and the jury was entitled to believe it, there was no negligence on his part in attempting to cross, unless he disregarded the warning of the switchman. But as to such warning there is a decided conflict, and the jury were entitled to find against the defendants on this point as well. It follows that it cannot be said that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence. Judgment affirmed.

BARLOTTI v. LYONS, Registrar of Voters.
(L. A. 6219.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1920.)

1. Constitutional law § 10—Provisions of federal Constitution relating to amendments thereof controlling.

In so far as the Constitution of the United States provides for the amending thereof, it controls, and any provision of a state Constitution in conflict therewith must be held as naught.

2. Constitutional law § 10 — "Legislatures" which ratify federal constitutional amendments are the representative bodies.

Within Const. U. S. art. 5, requiring proposed amendments thereof to be ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the states, the word "Legislatures" is used in its ordinary meaning as the representative body invested with the lawmaking power of the state, as is its obvious meaning in other provisions of both state and federal Constitutions.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Legislature.]

3. Constitutional law § 10—Provisions of federal Constitution as to amendments have same meaning as when adopted.

The provision of the federal Constitution requiring ratification of proposed amendment by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the state has the same meaning at the present time as when it was adopted, notwithstanding changes introduced by referendum provisions in the lawmaking bodies of the states.

In Bank.

Petition by J. A. Barlotti for writ of mandate against D. B. Lyons, as Registrar of Voters of the County of Los Angeles. Alternative writ discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

Theodore A. Bell and Sloss, Ackerman & Bradley, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. J. Hill and Robert B. Murphey, both of Los Angeles, U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert W. Harrison, Chief Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is a proceeding in mandamus, the object being to procure a writ requiring respondent to file in his office for examination and transmission to the secretary of state a referendum petition for the submission to the electors of the state, for their approval or rejection, of the joint resolution of the Senate and Assembly ratifying for the state of California what is known as the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, relating to intoxicating liquors. Two questions are presented; one being whether, in view of the provisions of article 5 of the Constitution of the United States, the question of the ratification of the proposed amendment by the state was not finally and conclusively determined by the adoption of the joint resolution of ratification by the Legislature, utterly regardless of the construction to be given to the provisions of our own Constitution, and the other being, whether the referendum provisions of our state Constitution (section 1, art. 4) may be construed as intended to be applicable in the case of a resolution of the character of the one here involved.

[1] With reference to the former of these questions, it is conceded, as necessarily it must be conceded, that in so far as the Constitution of the United States speaks upon the matter of amendments thereto, it controls, and any provision of a state Constitution in conflict therewith must be held as naught. Article 5 of that Constitution, relative to amendments, in so far as is material here, provides:

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several states, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several states, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress. * * *

The italics are ours.

In the case at bar the amendment was proposed by the Congress of the United States, and the joint resolution of proposal declared that the amendment would "become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the Legislatures of the several states as provided by the Constitution." The effective words of ratification of the joint resolution of our Legislature were:

"Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the Legislature of the state of California, jointly, at its forty-third session, * * * that the said proposed amendment be and the same is hereby ratified by the Legislature of the state of California."

[2] The question we have in this connection is a very narrow one, being simply one as to the meaning of the word "Legislatures" as used in the clause "when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several states" of article 5 of the Constitution of the United States. If by those words was meant the representative bodies invested with the lawmaking power of the several states, which existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, under one name or another, in each of the several states, and which have ever since so existed, as distinguished from the lawmaking power of the respective states, there is nothing left to discuss; for with that meaning attributed to the term "the Legislatures" the constitutional provision is so plain and unambiguous as not to admit of different constructions. The situation would then be that the people of the United States, in framing and ratifying the Constitution in the manner provided therein—

"have excluded themselves from any direct or immediate agency in making amendments to it, and have directed that amendments should be made representatively for them, by the Congress of the United States, when two-thirds of both houses shall propose them, or where the Legislatures of two-thirds of the several states shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, become valid, to all intents and purposes, as a part of the Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several states, or by conventions in three-fourths of them, as one or the other modes of ratification may be proposed by Congress." Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. 331, 348 (15 L. Ed. 401).

As further suggested in this connection in the case just cited, the Constitution of the United States is supreme in the matter of amendments, regardless of whether or not the method prescribed thereby "be right or wrong politically."

It certainly is not in consonance with the ordinary acceptance of the term "Legislature" to take it as meaning otherwise than a representative body selected by the people of a state and invested with the power of lawmaking for the state, whatever be the power reserved to the people themselves to review the action of that body or to initiate and adopt laws. Our own Constitution, notwithstanding its provisions in regard to the initiative and referendum, could not be more explicit than it is in its use of the term as meaning such a representative body, and while, in view of the initiative and referendum provisions, the people of the state may constitute a part of the lawmaking power of the state, they certainly are not a part of "the Legislature" within the meaning of that term as used in our Constitution. By section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution it is declared that the representative bodies designated as the Senate and Assembly, concerning the membership of which and the method of selecting the members article 4 makes provision, shall be designated "the Legislature of the state of California," and over and over again, wherever in the Constitution the Legislature is referred to, it obviously and necessarily means this representative body provided for therein, which is made up of the Senate and Assembly, designated as above stated. The initiative and referendum provisions constitute simply a reservation of power in the people to propose and enact laws independent of "the Legislature," and to adopt or reject any act of "the Legislature." This has always been the meaning ordinarily attributed to the term in this country, and it is difficult indeed to conceive that the makers of the Constitution of the United States, in providing for ratification "by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several states or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by Congress," intended by the words "the Legislatures" anything other than the representative lawmaking bodies of the several states. At the time of the adoption of the federal Constitution, as is shown by the brief of learned counsel for petitioner, every state had such a body, existing under one name or another, and, of course, it was to be assumed that, in accord with our guaranteed republican form of government, each state would always have such a body. Just what this body should be, what called, how constituted, whether bicameral in form or not, was a matter for each state to determine, but the essential characteristic of the thing was that it was a representative official body invested with the functions of lawmaking, the legislative official body of the state. That this conception of the meaning of the term was in the minds of the framers of the Constitution is shown by other provisions. Section 2 of article 1, providing that the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen by the people of the several states, provided that the electors thereof in each state "shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state Legislature." Obviously there can be no question as to the meaning of the term as here used. Section 3 of article 1 provided that the Senate of the United States "shall be composed of two Senators from each state, chosen by the Legislature thereof," etc., and in subdivision 2 of the section it was provided that, "if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any state, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies." Obviously here again the term meant the official representative lawmaking body. In article 4, § 4, it is provided the United States shall, "on application of the Legislature, or of the executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened)," protect any state against domestic violence. Subdivision 3 of section 1 of article 6 provides that the Senators and Representatives, "and the members of the several state Legislatures," etc., shall be bound, by oath or affirmation, to support the Constitution. In all these five instances it indubitably appears that by the term "the Legislature" was meant this representative body. In various other instances, exclusive of its use in article 5, was the term used by the framers in the Constitution with apparently no other meaning, and it has never been held by the United States Supreme Court that in any case where used in the Constitution does it mean anything other than this representative body. In subdivision 2, § 1, art. 2, it was provided that "each state shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct," electors of president and vice president. The word "Legislature" here has been universally recognized to mean this representative body, and we have sustaining this construction the decision of the United States Supreme Court in McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 869. In the course of his exhaustive opinion in that case Chief Justice Fuller said:

"The Constitution does not provide that the appointment of electors shall be by popular vote, nor that the electors shall be voted for upon a general ticket, nor that the majority of those who exercise the elective franchise can alone choose the electors. It recognizes that the people act through their representatives in the Legislature, and leaves it to the Legislature exclusively to define the method of effecting the object."

The one exception, in so far as any state courts are concerned (we are speaking of its use outside of article 5) appears to be with reference to the words "the Legislature thereof" in subdivision 1 of section 4 of article 1 which provides:

"The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each state by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators."

The decision of State v. Polley, 26 S. D. 5, 127 N. W. 848, was put upon two grounds, the first being based upon the theory that this provision of the Constitution did not delegate power to the Legislature or the state to provide for the election of representatives, this power being one reserved by necessary implication to the various states, and that the whole purpose of the provision was simply to grant to the Congress the power to supersede by law enacted by Congress any state regulations on the subject. The second ground was, however, that the words "the Legislature thereof" did not mean simply the representative body we have spoken of, but the "lawmaking power" of the state as established by the state Constitution, and including the people of the state when authorized to act in view of referendum provisions contained in the state Constitution. The same conclusion was reached by the Supreme Court of Ohio in State v. Hildebrant, 94 Ohio St. 154, 114 N. E. 55, but the decision in that case was also based on another ground, viz. the supremacy of an act of Congress which made the old districting act in Ohio the only effective method of electing members of Congress "until such state shall be redistricted in the manner provided by the laws thereof." It was held that the Congress in enacting its paramount law on the subject (subdivision 1, § 4, art. 1) intended to provide that the old districting act of the state should remain in force until a redistricting was had in all respects as contemplated by the laws of Ohio, and that the insertion of the words we have italicized was for the very purpose of authorizing a resort to the referendum which was provided for in the Constitution of Ohio, as seemed apparent from the debates in Congress on the adoption of the act. It was on this ground alone that the decision of the Ohio court was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. State v. Hildebrant, 241 U. S. 565, 36 Sup. Ct. 708, 60 L. Ed. 1172. That, in view of that part of subdivision 1 of section 4 of article 1, clothing the Congress with paramount power to make regulations in this matter, the act of that body was a valid enactment unless to include the referendum in the scope of legislative power was a violation of the guaranty of a republican form of government, appears to have been conceded, and the suggestion that it was beyond the power of the Congress in that it disregarded this constitutional guaranty was disposed of under the settled rule that such a question presents no justiciable controversy, but involves the exercise by Congress of the authority vested in it by the Constitution.

Pacific States Telephone Co. v. Oregon, 223 U. S. 118, 32 Sup. Ct. 224, 56 L. Ed. 377.

The alternative method of ratification which the Congress was given power by article 5 to provide implies that in the use of the words "the Legislatures," etc., in the same article, these representative bodies were meant. The ratification was to be "by the Legislatures," etc., or "by conventions [necessarily representative bodies] in three-fourths," etc., "as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress." In each case it was a ratification by a representative body which, it was assumed, would correctly express the desire of the people of the state as to approval or rejection of the proposed amendment, that was apparently contemplated. The use of the words "by the Legislatures of three-fourths," etc., itself implies this meaning. The words imply some official body of a state as distinguished from the state itself or the people of the state or the whole lawmaking power of the state. If anything differing from the ordinary conception of the term had been intended, or anything different from its plain and obvious meaning as used elsewhere in the Constitution in many instances, and so far as we can see in every other instance, it seems fair to assume that words indicating that meaning would have been used. It was said in McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. at page 27, 13 Sup. Ct. at page 7, 36 L. Ed. 869:

"The framers of the Constitution employed words in their natural sense; and where they are plain and clear, resort to collateral aids to interpretation is unnecessary and cannot be indulged in to narrow or enlarge the text."

It is true enough that with regard to proposed amendments the idea was that each state should speak for itself in the matter of ratification by voting yea or nay thereon. But the further question considered by the framers of the Constitution was in what manner the state should give its vote, for that, after all, is what the state is doing when it joins in the ratification of a proposed amendment to the federal Constitution, and, as in the case of the selection of Senators from each state, the people of the United States saw fit to provide that the vote should be given by "the Legislature" of the state, doubtless concluding, whether correctly or not, that in this way the real desire of the people of the state would be correctly expressed. The adoption during recent years in many states of the initiative and referendum of course implies, as did the amendment of the federal Constitution with relation to the selection of United States Senators, a conclusion on the part of very many people that the representative body known as the Legislature cannot always be relied on to express the real desire of the people of a state, but this view, in so far as it finds expression in Constitutions or statutes, is certainly a matter of comparatively recent origin. We must continually bear in mind that our sole question in this connection is: What did the framers of the Constitution intend by the term "the Legislatures of * * * the several states" in article 5?—and that if by the term they intended the representative official bodies to which we have referred, as we think must be held, a state has no power to prescribe for itself a different ratifying power. All questions as to the good policy of such a provision, or whether it is in accord with the view entertained by very many to-day that the people of a state should have a vote on such a matter, are beside the question. The people of the United States in framing and enacting the Constitution have ordained in article 5 thereof, in language that we think admits of only one reasonable construction, that in the matter of ratifying a proposed amendment the people of the respective states shall speak on the question of ratification solely and finally through their official representative legislative bodies, where the Congress in submitting the amendment proposes that method of ratification.

Our conclusion in this matter is in accord with that reached by the Supreme Court of Maine on this very question. See In re Opinion of the Justices (Me.) 107 Atl. 673. It is opposed to the conclusion of the Supreme Courts of Washington and Ohio. State v. Howell (Wash.) 181 Pac. 920; Hawke v. Smith (Ohio) 126 N. E. 400. In each of these cases there was a dissenting opinion. In the Washington case the prevailing opinion, written by Mr. Chief Justice Chadwick, exhaustively and forcefully presents the argument for a contrary conclusion. It seems to us, and we say it with the utmost respect for the learned judges who have reached a conclusion differing from ours, that the argument in support of their conclusion is, in the final analysis, based more upon some present day conceptions of what the law in this regard ought to be than upon the intention of the framers of the Constitution as expressed therein, and, to our mind, expressed so clearly as to preclude any other conclusion than the one we have reached.

[3] Of course, all will admit that, in so far as the question before us is concerned, the words of article 5 here involved must be taken to-day to mean exactly what they meant when originally written into the Constitution, regardless of any change in view as to the wisdom of the policy of such a provision. In other words, if they then meant the official representative lawmaking body of the state, they mean the same thing to-day, with the result that a change in the method can properly be accomplished only by amending the law.

In view of our conclusion on the question we have discussed, we deem it unnecessary to discuss the other question presented.

The alternative writ heretofore issued is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

SUMMERS v. L. F. S. SYNDICATE et al.
(Civ. 2693.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 21, 1920.)

1. Limitation of actions §24(1)—Action on contractor's bond held not barred by limitations.

An owner's action on a contractor's bond commenced within four years from the time when the cause of action accrued was not barred by limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 339, being an action founded upon a contract in writing.

2. Principal and surety §155—Complaint on contractor's bond held to allege damages with sufficient particularity.

In owner's action on contractor's bond, complaint fixing the total amount of damages without segregating the various items of damage according to the amounts of damage severally caused by the items stated, constituting the various imperfections in the buildings, held to allege damages with sufficient particularity.

3. Principal and surety §155—Complaint in action on contractor's bond held to allege immediate notice to sureties.

In owner's action on contractor's bond requiring owner to immediately notify sureties of contractor's default, complaint alleging that owner notified sureties of the default of the contractor concerning the matters in question, and that owner has performed all of the conditions of the bond to be performed by her, held to sufficiently allege that immediate notice of contractor's default was given as provided in bond, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 457.

4. Principal and surety §118—Contracts §304(2)—Notice of completion held not to release contractor and sureties from liability as to certain defects.

The filing of notice of completion by owner under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, with the distinct understanding that there was no acceptance as to certain defects, held not to release contractor and his sureties from liability for such defects or defects not then apparent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Susan S. Summers against the L. F. S. Syndicate and others. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

M. M. Meyers, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Bryant and R. L. Horton, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Following an order which sustained the demurrer of defendants to the second amended complaint without leave to amend, the court entered judgment dismissing the action, from which judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

On the 4th day of February, 1914, the plaintiff, Summers, as owner, and the defendant L. F. S. Syndicate, as contractor, entered into a contract for the construction of a two-story residence building and a cottage on two adjoining lots of the plaintiff in the county of Los Angeles. On the same day the contractor, as principal, and the defendants McLeod and Elliott, as sureties, executed a contractor's bond to secure the faithful performance of its agreement by the contractor. It was provided in the bond:

"That if said principal shall in any manner default in the performance of any matter or thing in said contract specified to be by said principal performed, or in the event of said principal abandoning the work provided by said contract to be done by said principal, the obligee shall immediately so notify the sureties, and thereafter the sureties shall have the right at their option to assume and sublet said contract and to proceed thereunder as if no default or abandonment had occurred."

In this action the plaintiff seeks to recover on the bond in the sum of $1,800 damages suffered by plaintiff by reason of failure of the contractor to comply with the terms of the contract. The complaint duly sets forth the execution of the contract and undertaking. It is then alleged that in constructing said buildings the contractor did not furnish the quality and quantity of material provided for, and did not construct the buildings in a good, substantial, and workmanlike manner, and did not perform the contract according to agreement in sundry particulars which are set forth in detail. These details include many items which amount to more than trifling imperfections in the structure and which necessarily imply substantial defects in the buildings as constructed. It is then alleged that on or about April 27, 1914, the contractor represented to the plaintiff that the buildings were completed and requested the plaintiff to file the notice of completion provided for in section 1187, Code of Civil Procedure; that plaintiff informed the defendant that there appeared to be some imperfections and some things lacking of the completing of said buildings, and the defendant thereupon represented that said imperfections were but trivial, and agreed that the said imperfections should and would be corrected by the defendant with due diligence, and that the filing of such notice of completion would not be deemed an acceptance of the buildings as to such trivial imperfections, nor as to any defects or imperfections which might thereafter appear; that plaintiff relied upon such representations by the defendant and the agreement aforesaid, and did on the 1st day of May, 1914, cause the notice of completion to be filed of record; that all of the imperfections and defects set forth in the complaint appeared after the filing of the notice of completion; that by reason of these facts the defendants are estopped from claiming or asserting that the filing of the notice of completion was an acknowledgment of the full performance of the contract or that plaintiff had accepted said buildings as fully completed according to the terms and conditions of the contract; that none of the imperfections and defects above set forth have been corrected and the same continue to exist. The contract provided that if, at any time, the owner shall be dissatisfied with any particular feature of the work done upon the buildings, "she shall report the same to the contractor, and any payment thereafter due and paid under the terms hereof to said contractor shall not be construed as an acceptance of such portion of said structures, or either of them, as may not conform to the plans and specifications." It is alleged that from time to time plaintiff was dissatisfied with the portions of said work as specified in the complaint, and did report the same to the contractor. Paragraph X alleges:

"That plaintiff notified the defendants H. W. McLeod and W. H. Elliott, sureties upon the said bond, of the default of the defendant L. F. S. Syndicate concerning the matters and things in said paragraph V hereof, set forth as provided in said bond, and has done and performed all of the terms and conditions of the said bond upon her part to be done and performed."

Finally it is alleged that there is $1,800 difference between the value of said buildings as actually constructed and as they should have been constructed pursuant to said contract and the drawings and specifications aforesaid, and that by reason of the failure of the contractor to comply with the terms of the contract as set forth in the complaint the plaintiff has suffered loss and damage in said sum of $1,800, no part of which has been paid.

The demurrer was upon the grounds that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, that the action appears to be barred by section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the complaint is uncertain in certain particulars to which we shall refer.

[1] The action is founded upon a contract in writing and therefore is not barred by the provisions of said section 339, Code of Civil Procedure, since it was commenced within four years from the time when the cause of action accrued.

[2, 3] Respondents claim that the complaint is uncertain in that it does not attempt to segregate the various items of damage according to the amounts of damage severally caused by the items stated constituting the various alleged imperfections in the buildings; that it merely fixes the total amount of damages without indicating the process by which the plaintiff arrives at that amount of damages. We think that the damages are alleged with sufficient particularity. In Long Beach, etc., District v. Dodge, 135 Cal. 401, 67 Pac. 499, the action was to recover on a bond given by the contractor for the construction of a high school building. The court held that it was not necessary to state in the complaint a cause of action as to each of the defects in the building on account of which the plaintiff sought to recover; that the Code of Civil Procedure, in section 454, has provided against surprise by requiring the plaintiff to furnish, when demanded in writing, a copy of the account; that the words "the account" in that section include such damages as those stated in the case. See, also, Jensen v. Dorr, 159 Cal. 742, 746, 116 Pac. 553. Another ground of demurrer for uncertainty upon which respondents rely is that the undertaking required that upon any default by the contractor in the performance of the contract the owner must immediately notify the sureties thereof, and that the complaint does not show that sufficient notice was given to the sureties of the alleged defects and imperfections when they occurred. But it will be noted that the complaint alleged not only that the plaintiff notified the sureties of the default of the defendant concerning the matters in question, but also alleged that the plaintiff "has done and performed all of the terms and conditions of the said bond upon her part to be done and performed." This was a sufficient allegation to carry the necessary implication that immediate notice was given as provided in the bond. Code Civ. Proc. § 457.

[4] Respondents further claim that, by accepting the buildings, the plaintiff released them from further liability upon the contract or undertaking. That the filing of the notice of completion, if voluntarily and unconditionally done, would have constituted an acceptance of the buildings and would have operated to release defendants from liability, may be conceded. Sirch E. & T. Laboratories v. Garbutt, 13 Cal. App. 435, 110 Pac. 140, was an action by a contractor to recover on a construction contract, in which action the defendant sought to establish a counterclaim which included items for loss occasioned by delay in the work and by failure to complete some parts of the contracted work. There had been an acceptance, and, on account of such acceptance, the defendant's claim was disallowed. The judgment was affirmed, the court saying:

"The defendant, with full knowledge of all the defects in the work, accepted and paid for it, and he thereby waived his claim for damages."

So in Mannix v. Wilson, 18 Cal. App. 595, 601, 123 Pac. 981, 983, it was said:

"Moreover, the acceptance of the building, in the absence of fraud or mistake, neither of which is urged, implies a waiver of any claim for damages on account of nonperformance in any particular."

But, under the allegations of the complaint in the case at bar, it appears that at least some of the defects in question were not apparent at the time when the notice of completion was filed, and that the notice of completion was given under a distinct understanding that, as to the defects referred to in the complaint, there was no acceptance. This is sufficient to take the case out of the general rule above stated. According to various authorities cited in 9 Corpus Juris, p. 802:

"A mere acceptance, without more, does not preclude the owner from showing that the work was done in an unworkmanlike manner and from maintaining an action for damages or recouping damages therefor, especially where the defects were latent, or where the owner could not reasonably do otherwise than accept the situation in which the contractor had placed him; and in such cases the owner may recover notwithstanding he has paid the contract price; and of course, if the acceptance of the work is expressly on condition that the builder remedy certain defects therein, the owner is not precluded from claiming damages for such defects."

The brief for respondents is incumbered by sundry references to another action said to have been prosecuted by the plaintiff against the defendants and on account of which respondents claim that the plaintiff is bound by her election of remedies and should not be permitted to maintain this action. Since none of these matters appear in the record of this action, counsel have only succeeded in creating difficulties for the court in the consideration of their argument. Necessarily these impertinent matters have to be disregarded, except for the purpose of criticizing counsel for presenting them.

The judgment is reversed.

GORDON v. TEJUNGA WATER & POWER CO. (Civ. 2069.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 26, 1920.)

1. Master and servant §80(4)—Complaint for wages held to allege employment at agreed compensation.

Complaint, alleging that defendant employed plaintiff to do certain work at a salary of $5 per day, that he began work under said employment on a certain day, and continued to work up to a certain other day, is a sufficient allegation of employment at an agreed compensation of $5 per day.

2. Master and servant §80(4)—Complaint for wages held to aver nonpayment.

Allegation of complaint to recover agreed compensation under contract of employment that there is now unpaid from defendant to plaintiff for the labor performed the sum of $1,900, is a direct averment that the amount is unpaid.

3. Sales §353(1)—Complaint in action for price of goods held good against general demurrer.

Complaint, averring that between certain dates plaintiff furnished material for repair of a water system to the extent of $187.48 at the special instance and request of defendant, no part of which has been paid, though defendant has often been requested so to do, is good against a general demurrer.

4. Trial §397(1)—Finding of certain amount due disposes of answer that all claims were paid.

Finding that there is unpaid a certain amount disposes of allegation of answer that all the claims sued on were paid prior to the beginning of the action.

5. Appeal and error §1071(6)—Failure to find on unsupported defense immaterial.

Failure to find on a defense, in support of which no evidence was given, was not harmful to defendant.

6. Appeal and error §1071(6) — Defendant not prejudiced by failure to find on a cause of action in complaint.

Defendant is not injured by failure to find on a cause of action in the complaint on which no recovery was granted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Action by J. R. M. Gordon against the Tejunga Water & Power Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. E. Davis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
James Donovan, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. The complaint is in four counts. In the first count, after stating the corporate capacity of the defendant, it is alleged:

"That the defendant employed the plaintiff to superintend and take charge of the management of the irrigation plant of the defendant at a salary of $5 per day, and the plaintiff began under said employment on February 23, 1914, and continued to work for the defendant up to and including May 1, 1915.

"That for said labor so performed by the plaintiff for the defendant, the defendant has failed and neglected to pay any part thereof, though requested often so to do.

"That there is now due, owing, and unpaid from the defendant to the plaintiff for the labor performed as aforesaid by the plaintiff for the defendant the sum of $1,980, less $70 credit thereon for 14 days absence from said work."

In the second count it is alleged:

"That for a period of 90 days between the dates of February 23, 1914, and May 1, 1915, the plaintiff furnished a team and wagon for hauling pipe materials and other supplies used in the care and management of the defendant's water system, and that the reasonable value of the services of said team is $2 per day.

"That no part of said sum has been paid, though the plaintiff has repeatedly requested the defendant to pay the same, and that the sum of $180 is now due, owing, and unpaid from the defendant to the plaintiff for said services."

In the third count it is alleged:

"That between July 9, 1914, and May 1, 1915, the plaintiff furnished the defendant tires, oils, and grease for machines, amounting to $226.30, which said sum was the reasonable price for the tires, oils and grease so furnished, and that the same was furnished at the special instance and request of the defendant.

"That no part of said sum has been paid, though the plaintiff has repeatedly requested the defendant to pay the same, and that the sum of $226.30 is now due, owing, and unpaid from the defendant to the plaintiff for said materials aforesaid."

And, in the fourth count it is alleged:

"That between February 23, 1914, and May 1, 1915, the plaintiff furnished other materials and supplies for the repair and improvement of the conduits of the water system, taps, and meters, to the extent of $187.48 at the special instance and request of the defendant, no part of which has been paid, though the defendant has been often requested so to do."

There was a general demurrer filed to the complaint, which was overruled, and the defendant answered, denying all the allegations of the complaint, except the incorporation of the defendant. And by amendment to the answer it was alleged that each, all, and every of the claims sued upon in said action and set forth in plaintiff's complaint were fully paid, satisfied, and discharged by the defendant. It is also alleged in the said amendment that at the time of the commencement of the alleged services set forth in the plaintiff's complaint the plaintiff was, and had been, indebted to the defendant in excess of the total amount sued for in the complaint for money loaned, water sold and delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff, money had and received by plaintiff belonging to defendant, goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered by defendant to plaintiff, and notes and mortgage held by defendant against plaintiff. And that, at the time of the commencement of said services, it was understood and agreed that, with the exception of small amounts to be paid in cash from time to time, the earnings of the plaintiff under said employment were to be applied by the defendant in payment and liquidation of the said indebtedness of plaintiff to defendant. It was then alleged that the defendant did, from time to time, credit said plaintiff on said indebtedness with various sums of money as earned by, or that for any reason become due, the plaintiff for services or any other reason, and that by reason of such application of payments and credits any and all claims of the plaintiff against the defendant had prior to the commencement of the action been liquidated, paid, satisfied, and discharged.

As to the first cause of action stated in the complaint, the court found, as alleged in the complaint, that the defendant employed plaintiff to superintend and take charge of the management of its irrigation plant at a salary of $5 per day; that he began work February 23, 1914, and continued to May 1, 1915; that the defendant had failed and neglected to pay any part thereof; and that there is due and unpaid for said labor the sum of $1,910.

On the second cause of action the court found, as alleged in the complaint, that the plaintiff furnished a team and wagon that was used in the service of the defendant, and that the reasonable value thereof was $2 per day, and that there was due and unpaid to the plaintiff for the use of said team the sum of $180.

The court failed to make any finding upon the third cause of action alleged in the plaintiff's complaint.

Upon the fourth cause of action the court found that the plaintiff furnished supplies and materials for the repair and improvement of the conduits of the water system, taps, and meters to the extent of $187.48, and that no part of it had been paid, and that it was all now due and unpaid.

And the court ordered judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff for $2,277.48. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

The points raised upon the appeal are mainly technical, and attack the sufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action and assign as error that the court failed to find upon some material allegations of the complaint and also of the answer.

[1] The defendant claims that the first cause of action does not state a cause of action because there was no allegation of promise or agreement on the part of the defendant to pay the plaintiff $5 per day for his work, and no allegation that such was the reasonable value thereof; that it does not allege when the salary was to become due and payable, nor that the same was done within the time agreed upon.

We think there is no merit in any of these contentions. The action is not upon a quantum meruit, but the complaint alleges the defendant employed the plaintiff to do certain work for it at a salary of $5 per day, and that he began work under said employment on February 23, 1914, and continued to work up to the 1st day of May, 1915. This is a sufficient allegation of employment at an agreed compensation of $5 per day.

[2] It is next claimed that there is no allegation that the amount due for the work under said employment has not been paid, and in support of this position counsel cites the case of Poetker v. Lowry, 25 Cal. App. 617, 144 Pac. 981. The only allegation of nonpayment in that case was "that the defendant has failed and neglected to pay any part thereof, though often requested." But in the complaint in this case there is the direct allegation in paragraph 4 thereof that "there is now unpaid from the defendant to the plaintiff for the labor performed the sum of $1,900." This is a direct averment that the amount is unpaid.

The same criticisms are aimed at the second count of the complaint, but, we think, for the reasons stated, that said count states a cause of action.

We need not consider the sufficiency of the third count to state a cause of action, because the court failed to make any finding thereon.

[3] We think the fourth count of the complaint is good as against a general demurrer.

[4] The findings are attacked because they follow the language of the complaint, and, as contended by counsel, the complaint not stating a cause of action, the findings are insufficient. This objection is disposed of by what we have already said as to the sufficiency of the complaint. Complaint is made because the court failed to find upon the allegation in the answer to the effect that each and all and every claim sued upon in this action, and set forth in the plaintiff's complaint, were paid prior to the beginning of the action. The finding of the court that there is unpaid a certain amount of money disposes of the allegation in the answer.

[5] Complaint is made that the court failed to find upon the special matters alleged in the answer that at the time of the commencement of the alleged services the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant in excess of the amount sued for, and at the time of the commencement of the services it was understood and agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that with the exception of small amounts to be paid in cash from time to time, the earnings of the plaintiff under said employment were to be applied by the defendant in payment and liquidation of said indebtedness; and for failure to find that, pursuant to said understanding and agreement, the defendant did, from time to time, credit the plaintiff with money due him upon his salary on the indebtedness due by him to the defendant. There was some evidence introduced in the record to the effect that such an agreement was made, which evidence, however, was denied by the plaintiff.

As to this omission to find, it is sufficient to say that there was no evidence introduced tending to show or to the effect that the defendant had ever given the plaintiff credit upon any indebtedness that he may have owed it, and it certainly was not entitled to a credit in this action unless the credits had been given; there being no counterclaim or cross-complaint set up in the pleadings.

"When a defense is tendered by a party upon which no evidence is offered at the trial, and upon which there is no finding, the issue will be deemed immaterial, and the cause will not be reversed for want of * * * a finding which * * * must have been adverse to appellant." Senter v. Senter, 70 Cal. 628, 11 Pac. 786.

[6] The defendant complains that the court did not find on the third cause of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint that he had sold and delivered tires, oils, and grease in the sum of $226.30. For this omission the defendant cannot complain. The court has not found that it owes anything upon that cause of action, and, therefore, it is not injured by the failure to find upon it.

The findings of the court are fully sustained by the evidence, and the failure to find upon certain allegations of the complaint and answer in no wise injured the defendant.

Finding no reversible errors in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

EDDY v. HUNTER. (Civ. 2757.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Feb. 27, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error $\S$ 417(1)—Notice of appeal held insufficient.

The notice filed by appellant with the clerk of the superior court entitled "Notice of Appeal and Request for Transcript under Section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure," stating that appellant "has appealed," etc., from the judgment and requesting a transcript of the evidence, held not to constitute a notice of appeal under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 941b, since such notice must be in words expressive of a present act.

2. Appeal and error $\S$ 417(1)—Notice of intention to move for new trial not notice of appeal.

Plaintiff by serving and filing a notice of intention to move for new trial, which proceeding ended by operation of law under Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 660, did not give the notice of appeal required by section 941b.

3. Appeal and error $\S$ 417(1)—Notice filed in lower court held not notice of appeal.

Notice filed in the office of the clerk of the lower court entitled "Notice of Appeal," and stating that "plaintiff will appeal," held not to constitute a notice of appeal required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 941b, requiring a notice that appellant "does hereby appeal," since the required notice of appeal must be in words expressive of a present act.

4. Appeal and error $\S$ 430(1)—Filing of notice of appeal jurisdictional.

The filing of the notice of appeal required by Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 941b, is jurisdictional.

Action by Laura S. Eddy against Ben S. Hunter. On motion to dismiss plaintiff's appeal from judgment rendered. Appeal dismissed.

Henry K. Norton and Roy V. Rhodes, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Oliver O. Clark, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Respondent objects to the consideration of plaintiff's appeal from the judgment herein, and suggests that the appeal should be dismissed upon the ground that no notice of appeal was ever served or filed. The judgment was entered on the 4th day of February, 1918. On the 7th day of March, 1918, the plaintiff filed in the office of the clerk of the court below a document addressed to H. J. Lelande, county clerk, entitled "Notice of Appeal," the terms of which notice were in the following language:

"You will please take notice that the plaintiff will appeal to the District Court of Appeal of the state of California from the judgment"—describing the judgment.

At the same time the plaintiff served and filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial, which proceeding is conceded to have ended by operation of law (Code Civ. Proc. $\S$ 660) on the 8th day of June, 1918, the same having never been acted upon by the court. On the 14th day of June, 1918, the plaintiff filed with the clerk of the superior court a document entitled "Notice of Appeal and Request for Transcript under Section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure." This notice stated that the plaintiff "has appealed," etc., from the judgment, and requested a transcript of the evidence.

[1, 2] As we understand the decisions of the Supreme Court upon the point in question, it must be held that neither of said notices constitutes a notice of appeal within the terms of section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure, by which the point in question is controlled. That section requires that a notice of appeal given thereunder "shall state that the person giving the same does thereby appeal" from the judgment or order. Section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, under which an appellant requests the preparation of a type-written transcript of the evidence, etc., does not provide for a notice of appeal. Its purpose is to provide a method of preparing the record on appeal. The proceedings therein prescribed are not jurisdictional to the appeal. A notice given under it in the form there prescribed, reciting that the person giving the notice desires to appeal, or that he intends to appeal, or that he has appealed from the judgment, is not a good notice of appeal. Marcucci v. Vowinkel, 164 Cal. 693, 130 Pac. 430.

"We do not think that a notice which is a literal and proper compliance with section 953a, and which merely initiates the statutory proceeding there prescribed for making up the record, should be turned by construction into a notice of appeal and held to be good, as such, under a section with which it does not comply." Boling v. Alton, 162 Cal. 297, 122 Pac. 461.

In Lent v. California Fruit Growers' Association of Los Angeles, 161 Cal. 719, 121 Pac. 1002, it was ordered that the appeal be dismissed for failure to give the notice contemplated by section 941b of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court made no statement of facts, but we have examined the record in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court. It there appears that the only notice given was a notice for transcript under section 953a, in which it was recited that defendants "intend to appeal" from the judgment. In Michelson v. City of Sacramento, 173 Cal. 108, 159 Pac. 431, the appeal was dismissed because the only notice of appeal was a notice to prepare a record under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, wherein it was stated that the defendant "desires to appeal," but nowhere declares that it does appeal.

It thus clearly appears that no appeal has been taken in this case, unless it was taken by virtue of the notice filed on March 7, 1918. In Estate of Faber, 168 Cal. 491, 143 Pac. 737, it was held that a notice purporting to be given under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, might serve the dual purpose of a notice to prepare transcript under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure, and a notice of appeal under section 941b, Code of Civil Procedure, where apt words were used to constitute a notice of appeal. The language there used in the notice was that the person giving the notice "desires to appeal and does hereby appeal" to the Supreme Court from the order. Referring to Lent v. California, etc., Association, supra, Boling v. Alton, supra, and Marcucci v. Vowinkel, supra, the court said that this notice differed from the notices of appeal held insufficient in those cases in this, that it expressly stated that the party "does hereby appeal" from the order, etc., describing it with sufficient accuracy. "The fact that it is drawn so as to serve the double office of a notice of appeal and a notice to the clerk, under section 953a, as appears from the subsequent parts of the notice (not above quoted), does not destroy its effect as a notice of appeal, nor is the statement that it is given 'pursuant to section 953a' fatal to its sufficiency as a notice of appeal."

[3] If a notice that the losing party to an action intends to appeal or that he desires to appeal or that he has appealed from a judgment is not sufficient to constitute a notice of appeal, and if, therefore, it is not sufficient to give this court jurisdiction of the appeal, we are unable to see that a notice stating that such party "will appeal" can be of any greater effect. All of the decisions to which we have referred go upon the theory that there must be an actual compliance, in the statutory language or its equivalent, with the requirement contained in section 941b that the notice "shall state that the person giving the same does thereby appeal," etc., before such notice will be held to constitute a notice of appeal within the terms of that section. This actual compliance must be in words expressive of a present act, since the giving of the notice is the very act of taking the appeal.

There is one decision of the Supreme Court which possibly is inconsistent with those to which we have referred. In the case of In re Nutt's Estate (Sup.) 181 Pac. 661, there was a motion to dismiss an appeal upon the ground that the appeal was not taken within 60 days after the entry of judgment, and upon the further ground that no sufficient notice of appeal was ever filed. After disposing of the first contention adversely to the respondent, the opinion of the Supreme Court closes as follows:

"The other ground of the motion to dismiss was that no sufficient notice of appeal was ever filed. As to this ground we orally stated our views from the bench at the time of the hearing of the motion to the effect that the notice should be held to be sufficient. No useful purpose would be subserved by further discussion of this point."

[4] The motion to dismiss the appeal was denied. There being in the opinion no statement of facts concerning the point last mentioned, we have examined the record in that action. We find that the only notice given was a notice to the clerk to prepare transcript, which notice was headed, "Notice of Appeal and Instructions to Clerk," and in the body of the notice it was stated that the person giving the notice "desires to appeal" from the judgment. We further find that the court had before it, in addition to said notice, a certain affidavit of the attorney for appellant and a counter affidavit of attorney for respondent referring to certain negotiations and stipulations entered into between said attorneys, by virtue of which stipulations apparently the attorney for appellant was contending either that he should not be bound by the usual construction of the notice given or that he should be relieved from his default incurred by reason of having given such insufficient notice. We recognize that this is a jurisdictional matter, and that probably the Supreme Court would have held that, if there was not a notice of appeal, the failure to give such notice could not be overcome by proof of waiver by the adverse party. If this was the opinion of the court, then its refusal to dismiss the appeal must have been based upon the opinion that the notice of appeal was sufficient. But, if that case can be held to constitute a decision that the notice of appeal there before the court was sufficient, its effect was to overrule the previous decisions to which we have referred. However that may be, we feel bound by the decisions which repeatedly have passed upon the question and which have not been directly overruled.

The appeal is dismissed.

ROSS et al. v. FLYNN et al. (Civ. 3219.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 2, 1920.)

1. Pleading ⚡252(2)—Amended complaint supersedes original.

Where an amended complaint is filed, it supersedes the original; hence, where the original complaint was one in claim and delivery and the amended complaint one in conversion, the action after amendment became strictly one of conversion.

2. Appeal and error ⚡870(5)—Order striking amended complaint and directing judgment reviewable on appeal from judgment.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 956, an order striking the amended complaint from the files and directing judgment for plaintiff as prayed in the original is one affecting the rights of the parties and subject to review on appeal from judgment entered.

3. Pleading ⚡238(2) — Court not authorized without notice to strike amended complaint filed under leave.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 937, the trial court has no power without notice to strike an amended complaint filed under order of court duly made, though such order was inadvertent.

4. Pleading ⚡356(1) — Discretionary power does not authorize striking amended complaint filed with leave.

The discretionary power of the trial court over amendments does not authorize it of its own motion without notice to strike plaintiff's amended complaint filed with the court's permission and enter judgment in accordance with the prayer of the original complaint.

5. Appeal and error ⚡151(2)—Plaintiffs held aggrieved by striking amended complaint and entry of judgment.

Where plaintiffs' original complaint in claim and delivery was superseded by one asserting conversion, the distinction between the two actions, and relief to be granted, is so distinct that plaintiffs must be deemed aggrieved by an order striking from the files the amended complaint and directing entry of judgment in accordance with the prayer of the original.

6. Appeal and error ⚡277—Plaintiffs deemed to have excepted to striking of amended complaint.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 647, an order striking the amended complaint from the files and directing judgment in accordance with the prayer of the original must be deemed excepted to.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by John C. Ross and Linus M. Burr, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Ross-Burr Laundry Machinery Company, against John H. Flynn, Wisnon Company, a corporation, and another. From a judgment in their favor, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Courtney L. Moore, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Joseph J. Bullock, of Redwood City, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff has appealed from a judgment in its own favor, seeking a review of an order of the lower court striking its amended complaint from the files, and directing the entry of judgment as prayed for in the original complaint.

The plaintiff first filed a complaint in claim and delivery, and the defendants answer separately. Thereafter the plaintiff gave notice of motion for permission to file an amended complaint changing its cause of action to one in conversion, and praying for damages therefor. On the hearing the court, over the objection of the defendants, granted the motion. Counsel for the respective parties then stipulated that the answers on file be considered as answers to the complaint as amended, and on the issues thus presented the action was tried. Both oral and documentary evidence was introduced in support of the allegations of the amended complaint, and the cause was submitted for decision. Thereupon the court, by an order entered on the minutes, directed that judgment be entered in favor of the plaintiff.

Before any findings were filed, and judgment thereon entered, the court, of its own motion, and without notice to the plaintiff, struck the amended complaint from the files and ordered the cause to stand submitted upon the original complaint and answers thereto. Judgment was thereupon ordered, and subsequently entered, for plaintiff, for the return of the property, or, in case delivery could not be had, for its value, found to be the sum of $1,242. No damages were awarded for the detention.

[1-3] The action of the lower court was clearly erroneous. Whether or not it was wrong in permitting the amended complaint to be filed in the first instance does not enter as an element in considering the question. When the amended complaint was filed, in pursuance of the permission granted by the trial court, the original complaint in claim and delivery ceased to be the complaint in the case, and the action became strictly one in conversion. Kelly v. McKibben, 54 Cal. 192, 195; Miles v. Woodward, 115 Cal. 308, 316, 46 Pac. 1076. The amended complaint superseded the original and thereby completely disposed of it. Estudillo v. Security Loan, etc., Co., 149 Cal. 556, 558, 87 Pac. 19. The ruling of the court, embodied in the order permitting the amended complaint to be filed, was the judgment or conclusion of the court upon the matter then before it. In re Rose, 80 Cal. 166, 170, 22 Pac. 86; In re Smith, 98 Cal. 636, 641, 33 Pac. 744. It was one affecting the rights of the parties, and the judgment, subject to review on appeal from the judgment in the case. Code Civ. Proc. § 956. Even if the ruling was inadvertently made, and although, as the court stated in its written order, filed with the clerk, it was "convinced from the evidence that the amended complaint should not have been filed," the parties interested had a right to be heard on the question and were entitled to notice before the court struck it from the files. Wunderlin v. Cadogan, 75 Cal. 617, 619, 17 Pac. 713. The power of the court to vacate, without notice, an order previously made in an action, is limited by section 937 of the Code of Civil Procedure to such orders as the judge has made without notice in the first instance. To allow a court to give directions or make orders and then, after the parties have acted thereon, to permit it, without statutory power or implied authority, to change its rulings or vacate its orders, would lead to great uncertainty, inconvenience, and in some cases, perhaps, to wrong and injustice. Lee Chuck v. Quan Wo Chong Co., 81 Cal. 222, 228, 22 Pac. 594, 15 Am. St. Rep. 50.

[4, 5] The situation is not in the least clarified by the liberal discretion vested in trial courts in the matter of allowing amendments to pleadings. Respondents' theory that the court's action in this case amounted to no more than an amendment to the complaint is not sound. Perhaps, as was suggested in Riciotto v. Clement, 94 Cal. 105, 108, 29 Pac. 414, the plaintiff might have been allowed, on application after notice to the defendants, if the evidence warranted, to amend after trial and before judgment, so as to again claim a return of its property. But permission to do so was not asked, and the court had no jurisdiction to endeavor to effect that result on its own motion. Parish v. Pensacola & A. R. Co., 28 Fla. 251, 9 South. 696. The plaintiff had the right to choose whether it would content itself with damages for the conversion of its property or seek to recover it in claim and delivery. There is a marked distinction between the two actions and the remedies are very different. Kelly v. McKibben, 54 Cal. 192, 195; Richards v. Morey, 133 Cal. 437, 439, 65 Pac. 886. If the plaintiff chose the wrong action, or if upon the trial the court was convinced from the evidence that it was not entitled to the remedy sought, the responsibility rested upon plaintiff and its counsel. It was not the province of the court to order a correction of error or the removal of defects of its own motion although it might have done so on timely application for the exercise of its discretion. Ten Broeck v. Orchard, 79 N. C. 518. The relief actually awarded plaintiff under the original count is so radically different from that which should have been awarded under the amended complaint that we feel the plaintiff was aggrieved thereby. Estate of Colton, 164 Cal. 1, 5, 127 Pac. 643; Quint v. McMullen, 103 Cal. 381, 383, 37 Pac. 381.

[6] The order striking the amended complaint from the files was one deemed excepted to under section 647, Code of Civil Procedure. It necessarily affected the judgment and may be reviewed upon this appeal from the judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 956; Alpers v. Bliss, 145 Cal. 565, 569, 79 Pac. 171.

The findings of the trial court which are sustained by substantial evidence are binding on appeal.

2. Guaranty ⇨ 25(3)—Evidence held to support finding that goods were furnished on credit of guaranty.

Evidence that plaintiff refused to sell goods on credit to a corporation until it received the guaranty of defendant, who was the corporation's vice president, and that thereafter it delivered goods on credit, as admitted by defendant, held sufficient to show the sale and delivery of the goods on the faith of the guaranty.

3. Guaranty ⇨ 6, 16(2)—Extension of credit on faith of guaranty is consideration.

A written guaranty of payment for goods to be sold to a corporation, waiving notice of acceptance thereof, is an offer of guaranty, which is accepted by delivery of the goods on the faith thereof, and such delivery is sufficient consideration to support the guaranty.

4. Guaranty ⇨ 6—Ordinary rules of offer and acceptance govern.

A contract of guaranty is governed by the usual rules applicable to contracts in general, with reference to an offer and acceptance thereof.

5. Guaranty ⇨ 25(1)—Written guaranty presumed to be based on consideration.

A written guaranty is presumed to have been based on sufficient consideration, and the burden is on defendant seeking to avoid liability thereon to show want of consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by the R. H. Herron Company against C. L. Flack. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Dockweiler & Mott, of Los Angeles (G. C. O'Connell and Albert M. Cross, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Geo. E. Whitaker, of Bakersfield, and Davis, Kemp & Post, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against him for $2,334.75. The judgment was upon a written guaranty of the indebtedness of the Gate City Oil Company (a corporation in which defendant was a large stockholder) to the plaintiff, which indebtedness arose from the purchase of goods, wares, and merchandise used by the oil company in its business.

The guaranty signed by Flack was as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 9, 1911.

"R. H. Herron Co., Los Angeles, Cal.—Gentlemen: In consideration of your extending credit at our request to Gate City Oil Co., in which company we are interested and for value received, we hereby jointly and severally guarantee the full payment to you when due of all its indebtedness. Notes or other evidence of indebtedness or securities may be received by you on account, or in adjustment of said indebtedness, and may be renewed and extended as you think advisable without notice and without impairing the liability under this guarantee and are hereby expressly included hereunder until finally paid,

"Notice of acceptance of this guarantee and of sales made or of any default is waived. This guarantee is to be a continuing one and remain in full force until written revocation is received by you. C. L. Flack. [Seal.]

"Witness: Don H. Petty."

It appears from the testimony that goods were delivered after the execution of the guaranty, and in payment therefor, the corporation through Flack, its vice president, and one J. H. Lindsey, its secretary, executed and delivered to the plaintiff a promissory note of the corporation for the amount recovered in this action. The corporation failed to pay its note at maturity, and defendant was sued upon his guaranty. The defendant set up as a defense that he had never legally executed and delivered the guaranty, because, as he alleges, he signed said guaranty upon the express condition that it was not to become operative until it had been signed jointly by W. R. Jacobs, another stockholder of the company.

[1] Upon this appeal the defendant urges upon our attention the portions of the record which sustain his contentions upon this question, and contends that the finding of the trial court to the effect that the defendant did not sign said guaranty upon the condition that it should also be signed by Jacobs is unsupported by the evidence. It is true that the defendant testified in accordance with the allegations set up in his answer, and that the bookkeeper in his office corroborated him in this testimony. We have carefully read the record, and we find considerable testimony in aid of defendant's defense; but the record also reveals substantial evidence in favor of the finding of the trial court, and we are accordingly bound thereby. These remarks are also applicable to the objection of the appellant to certain other findings of the trial court.

[2] Appellant is insistent that the evidence is insufficient to support the allegation of the complaint and the finding of the court that goods were furnished to the oil company by the plaintiff to the amount of $2,334.75 on the credit of the guaranty. As to the reliance upon the guaranty by the plaintiff when it furnished the goods, we have the testimony of the various employes of the plaintiff company that the goods were furnished; that they were furnished because of the guaranty and in reliance thereon; and that credit had been refused to the oil company until the guaranty was executed. Upon the question of the delivery of the goods, the record also discloses the testimony of the defendant himself, who was the vice president of the oil company, as follows:

"I know that those goods had been delivered between August, 1911, and November 3, 1911, to the Gate City Oil Company. * * *

This acknowledgment by the defendant himself would remedy any weakness in the proof of the plaintiff upon this point.

[3, 4] The remaining question to be considered is whether or not the guaranty is supported by a sufficient consideration. The guaranty set out herein was in effect an offer to guarantee the debt incurred if the plaintiff would extend credit to the oil company. Until acted upon by the plaintiff, it constituted a mere offer. But when the plaintiff acted upon it and extended the credit it became a completed contract, the consideration being the extension of the credit according to the terms of the offer. The guaranty expressly waived notice of acceptance of the same. It was a continuing guaranty, and it went into effect immediately upon acceptance by the plaintiff, which was evidenced by the furnishing of goods on credit. A contract of guaranty is governed by the usual rules applicable to contracts in general with reference to an offer and acceptance thereof.

The principle of the present case is discussed in 12 R. C. L. p. 1068, where it is said:

"Contracts of guaranty may fall under that class, as when a person solicits another to employ a particular individual as his agent for a specified period, and engages that if the person addressed will do so, he, the applicant, will be responsible for the moneys the agent shall receive and neglect to pay over during that time. The party indemnified in such a case is not bound to employ the party designated by the guarantor; but if he does employ him in pursuance of the promise, the guaranty attaches and becomes binding upon the party who gave it."

Similarly, in the present case, we think the plaintiff was not bound to extend credit to the oil company, but when it did extend credit in reliance upon the offer and promise in the guaranty, it accepted such offer, and the guaranty was binding upon the defendant.

[5] Furthermore, the guaranty is a written instrument. The legal presumption is that such an instrument is based upon a sufficient consideration. The defendant offered no evidence to overcome this presumption. The burden of showing a want of consideration is upon the party attacking the instrument. Rogers v. Schulenburg, 111 Cal. 281, 284, 43 Pac. 899.

The judgment is affirmed.

JOHNSON v. JOHNSON. (Civ. 3273.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 4, 1920.)

1. Homestead §84—Homestead cannot be declared on property held in joint tenancy.

Since the adoption of the Codes repealed St. 1867-68, p. 116, enlarging the homestead laws so as to allow filing on an estate held in joint tenancy, the wife of one owning only a small interest in property so held cannot file a homestead declaration thereon.

2. Homestead §47 — Where property was held in joint tenancy, subsequent conveyance of all interests to defendant's husband did not validate her declaration.

Where, at the time defendant filed a homestead declaration, the property was held in joint tenancy, and so not subject to homestead claim, a subsequent conveyance of the other joint tenants to defendant's husband could not validate the homestead declaration.

Action by Joseph Johnson against Grace Johnson. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

George P. Cary and Frank C. Dunham, both of Pasadena, for appellant.

A. G. Allen, of Pasadena, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment rendered against her in an action to quiet title, tried upon an agreed statement of facts.

The sole question to be determined in this action is the validity of a homestead declared upon property held in joint tenancy. At the time of the declaration of homestead, plaintiff and his wife, Minnie Johnson, were the owners of the property in controversy in this action, holding the title thereto as joint tenants. Their son, Chester Johnson, who was also defendant's husband, had an interest in the property to the extent of $700, which he had paid on the purchase price of $5,200. Defendant and Chester Johnson resided upon the property and were in the exclusive possession thereof from about the time of its purchase, on August 25, 1915, until February 24, 1916, at which time Chester Johnson left defendant and went to live with his parents in Pasadena. On May 26, 1916, defendant filed her declaration of homestead upon the property. Thereafter, and on April 19, 1917, Joseph and Minnie Johnson, by grant deed, conveyed the property to Chester Johnson, and on the same day he reconveyed the property by grant deed to his parents. These deeds were recorded June 25, 1917, in the order in which they were executed.

[1, 2] That a homestead in this state cannot be declared on property held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common has been established by a long line of decisions. But a statute adopted by the Legislature in 1868 (Stats. 1867-68, p. 116) enlarged the scope of the homestead law so that whenever a party entitled to a homestead under the laws of the state is in exclusive occupation of a tract of land, having the same inclosed, and shall select and record and reside upon the same as a homestead, he shall be entitled to such homestead, although such land be held in joint tenancy, or tenancy in common, or such claimant own only an undivided interest therein. Defendant claims that, under the provisions of this statute, she was entitled to declare a homestead upon the property in suit, regardless of the fact that her husband had only about a one-eighth interest in property held by his father and mother jointly.

This precise question was very recently passed upon by the Supreme Court in Estate of Carraghar, 183 Pac. 161, in which it is remarked that the decisions of the courts of this state since the adoption of the Codes in 1872, as well as prior to the adoption of the statute of 1868 (St. 1867-68, p. 116), have been uniform in holding that a valid homestead cannot be declared upon property held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common. For the purpose of showing that that statute has never been recognized by the Supreme Court since the adoption of the Codes in 1872, the opinion in Estate of Carraghar reviews many cases on this subject, decided since then, including those in which the facts were such as to make the act of 1868 applicable if still in force. It discusses the homestead law as embraced in the Civil Code and Code of Civil Procedure, and, after elaborating upon its reasons therefor, holds that the statute of 1868 was abrogated by the adoption of the Codes. This case finally determines that a homestead cannot be impressed upon property held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common. Neither does it avail defendant that the property was afterwards deeded to her husband.

"Unless the land was impressed with the characteristics of a homestead at the time of making and filing her declaration, it did not become a homestead by any subsequent act of a third party, or by the subsequent conveyance from the cotenant to her husband." Rosenthal v. Merced Bank, 110 Cal. 198, 203, 42 Pac. 640, 641.

DE VILLE v. DE VILLE. (Civ. 3238.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 5, 1920.)

1. Appeal and error ⇨1011(1)—Decision on conflicting evidence conclusive.

Where the evidence is conflicting, the appellate court will not disturb the trial court's decision.

2. Divorce ⇨133(1)—Evidence held to sustain judgment for divorce for desertion.

In an action for divorce, testimony both of plaintiff and defendant, as well as letters introduced in evidence held to sustain the trial court's finding that defendant had deserted plaintiff within the meaning of Civ. Code, §§ 96, 107.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Ernest P. De Ville against Lola De Ville. From an interlocutory decree of divorce granted to the plaintiff, the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John L. Richardson and Nathan Newby, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Stahl & Sayles, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

GASBEY, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant from an interlocutory decree of divorce granted to the plaintiff in this action.

The plaintiff sought by his complaint herein, filed on the 14th day of November, 1916, to obtain a divorce from the defendant upon the ground of desertion. The defendant in her answer denied that she had deserted the plaintiff, but set up in a cross-complaint that the plaintiff had deserted her; had failed to supply her with the common necessities of life, and had been guilty of treating her with extreme cruelty. The plaintiff denied these allegations of the cross-complaint.

The appellant's contentions are that the evidence produced at the trial of the action was insufficient to sustain the findings, or to justify the decision, that the decision is against law, and that errors in law were committed by the court.

The record in this case discloses the following facts: The plaintiff is a druggist. He was living with his wife on the 22d day of May, 1915, at Redondo Beach, Cal. His place of business was located at No. 336 South Main street in the city of Los Angeles. On the above date he told his wife that for business reasons they should remove to Los Angeles. He packed up and removed his personal effects to that city and there took up his abode. He consented that his wife might remain at Redondo Beach for a short time. Soon after he had become settled in his new home, his wife called on him; but he saw her for only a few minutes. He did not see her again for several months. He wrote her several letters asking her to come to the store to talk over their affairs. She paid no attention to his requests. He was unable to make an appointment with her. She removed to another dwelling place, which he could not locate and the address of which she did not give to him. He had a conversation with her over the telephone and endeavored to get her to meet him at some place in Redondo Beach, but this she absolutely refused to do. In the months of June and July, 1915, the plaintiff sent several letters to his wife. In these letters he addressed her in endearing terms and sought by earnest appeals to persuade her to come to Los Angeles, take up her abode with him, and live as husband and wife. To his entreaties she paid no heed. Several checks were introduced in evidence showing that during the months of June and July, 1915, the plaintiff had supplied his wife with money. He testified he had paid her $65 a month from May 22, to July 22, 1915. About August 15, 1915, the plaintiff met his wife at Redondo Beach, when they talked matters over. He again requested her to live with him in Los Angeles, but she would not consent. He did not talk with her after this. He published a notice that he would not be responsible for her bills.

These parties had been married before and were divorced. They remarried on the 23d day of December, 1914.

The wife testified that their troubles began about two weeks after their second marriage. To support her allegations she testified that her husband had called her vile names, accused her of being intimate with a man not her husband, had threatened to kill her, and in his marital relations was a degenerate; that he did not pay her bills for the necessities of life. To corroborate her testimony some witnesses were produced in her behalf, who said they had heard Mr. De Ville and his wife quarreling. One witness testified that he had heard the plaintiff call his wife a vile name, and threatened to kill her on account of some other man. The plaintiff denied that he had called his wife the name in question, or that he had threatened to kill her, or was a degenerate in his conduct towards her. He did not, however, pay her bills after she had repeatedly refused to live with him.

The trial court considered this conflicting testimony, made its finding in favor of the plaintiff thereon, and refused to grant an interlocutory decree to the defendant.

[1] Where the evidence is conflicting, we will not disturb the decision of the trial court. Baucom v. Baucom, 25 Cal. App. 108, 142 Pac. 902; Donnelly v. Donnelly, 26 Cal. App. 577, 147 Pac. 582.

[2] We are satisfied from the testimony of both the plaintiff and the defendant, as well as from the letters which were introduced in evidence, that the trial court committed no error in finding in favor of the plaintiff that the defendant had deserted him within the meaning of sections 96 and 107 of the Civil Code.

The judgment is affirmed.

ENGELKEN v. JUSTICE COURT OF EDEN TP. et al. (Civ. 3348.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 10, 1920.)

Appeal and error $\S$ 436—Motion to dismiss appeal must be made in appellate court.

A motion to dismiss an appeal can be made only in the appellate court.

Application by F. W. Engelken for supersedeas, directed against W. J. Gannon, Justice of the Peace of Eden Township, Alameda County, to restrain him from proceeding further with a motion to dismiss an appeal. Writ granted.

J. C. Thomas, of Oakland, for petitioner.

Charles Quayle, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of supersedeas to restrain the respondent from proceeding further with a motion (dated February 5, 1920) to dismiss an appeal which has been taken to this court. Said motion, made in the trial court, was based upon the ground that the undertaking which was filed by appellant was not properly filed.

It is not necessary at this time to pass upon the question of the propriety of the filing of the undertaking. But a motion to dismiss an appeal can be made in this court only, and such motion must be denied if a proper undertaking, approved by a justice of this court, is filed.

It is ordered that a writ of supersedeas issue, commanding the respondent to proceed no further with the hearing or determination of said motion, and, to avoid question as to the sufficiency of the undertaking, it is ordered that the same may be presented to a justice of this court for approval.

Where in divorce proceedings the court found that the person in whom title to land had been quieted as against the husband and wife was in fact the husband, the decree allotting the land to the wife as community property was not a collateral attack on the decree quieting the title.

3. Judgment $\S$ 951(1)—Findings necessary to support default decree must be assumed.

Where a decree of divorce, adjudicating rights to property, was rendered on default of the defendants, so that findings were not required, it must be assumed that the court found in favor of the plaintiff all facts essential to support the judgment.

4. Divorce $\S$ 156—Interlocutory decree after time for appeal is notice to subsequent purchaser.

An interlocutory decree of divorce, awarding property to the wife, becomes final after the expiration of the time for appeal, and is notice to a subsequent purchaser of the property.

5. Appeal and error $\S$ 1078(1)—Point not argued on appeal will be deemed abandoned.

A question decided adversely to appellant in the trial court, and not urged on appeal, so that no argument thereon was presented by either side, is deemed to have been abandoned by appellant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; W. H. Thomas, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Hugh J. McGee against Carrie Hoffman. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Ryckman, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Halsey W. Allen, of Redlands, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant in an action to quiet title to certain real property situate in the county of Orange in this state.

The facts material to the opinion are that defendant and one J. W. Hoffman intermarried in February, 1909, and that soon thereafter Hoffman purchased the property in controversy, taking the deed thereto in the name of W. S. Jones. In June, 1911, defendant, while still the wife of the said Hoffman, recorded her declaration of homestead upon the property. In February, 1913, at the instance of J. W. Hoffman, an action was brought in the superior court of Orange county in the name of W. S. Jones against this defendant, Carrie Hoffman, and her husband, J. W. Hoffman, to quiet title to this property. Personal service of process was had therein upon said Carrie Hoffman, and she suffered her default to be entered. J. W. Hoffman filed a disclaimer, and in August, 1913, judgment was entered, quieting title in the name of W. S. Jones. In July, 1914, the said Carrie Hoffman instituted proceedings in Orange county for a divorce from her husband, J. W. Hoffman, alleging in her complaint that the said J. W. Hoffman and W. S. Jones were one and the same person, and that the property in controversy was the community property of the parties involved in the action for divorce. Service of process in the divorce action was obtained by publication only, and in January, 1915, the default of the defendant in that action was entered. In March of that year an interlocutory decree of divorce was rendered in favor of Carrie Hoffman, wherein all the property was awarded to her. In September, 1915, J. W. Hoffman, under the name of Jones, executed the deed to plaintiff upon which he bases his claim of title to the land. Upon the trial plaintiff rested upon proof of title under this deed. Defendant rested upon her claim of title, based upon the award contained in the interlocutory decree of divorce, the showing that J. W. Hoffman and Jones were one and the same, and that plaintiff was fully aware of all the facts above stated, that he paid no consideration for the property, and that the deed from Jones to him was in fact made to him by J. W. Hoffman without actual transfer of title, and for the purpose of defeating the award to plaintiff under the interlocutory decree. The trial court found in favor of the contentions of defendant upon all these disputed points. Having specially rejected the testimony of McGee and J. W. Hoffman as given upon the stand, and having found that J. W. Hoffman and Jones were the same person, the court was justified in disregarding the written evidence contained in the deed from Jones to plaintiff as being discredited by the testimony given at the trial. It fully appears from the record that in this respect the trial court committed no error.

[1] The brief filed by appellant contains a recital that a number of the findings of the trial court are not supported by the evidence, without any citation of authority or argument beyond the bare statement that error was made. This court is not required to consider points so presented. Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 184 Pac. 672. The appeal is taken under the alternative method, and no portion of the evidence is printed in appellant's brief. As the only evidence on the part of appellant was disregarded by the trial court as unreliable, and as the evidence on the part of respondent was apparently accepted by the trial court as true, an examination of the record fails to disclose any merit in appellant's contentions.

[2] The only point of law discussed by appellant is the elementary one that a judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter cannot be collaterally attacked. This argument is urged in support of appellant's claim that the judgment of the superior court in favor of W. S. Jones rendered in August, 1913, quieting title in him to the property in controversy, was conclusive upon the trial court in this proceeding, and rendered ineffectual the judgment of the superior court entered in March, 1915, awarding the property to Mrs. Hoffman. Inasmuch as the trial court found upon unimpeached testimony that Jones and J. W. Hoffman were the same person, and as this fact was put in issue in the divorce proceeding, if the process in the divorce proceeding was sufficient to give the court jurisdiction of the persons and of the subject-matter therein, it cannot be doubted that the court had power in that proceeding to adjudicate the rights of the parties to the community property.

[3] The defendant in the divorce proceeding having defaulted, thereby doing away with the necessity of findings, it must be assumed that the court there found all facts in favor of the plaintiff which would be essential to support the judgment. Therefore, it must be assumed that the court in the divorce proceeding found that Jones and J. W. Hoffman were the same person, and that the property was community property, as alleged in the complaint therein, and that the record title stood in the name of W. S. Jones, although the property was in fact the community property of J. W. Hoffman and Carrie Hoffman. There was therefore no collateral attack upon the judgment in favor of Jones. The interlocutory decree of March, 1915, merely accepted that judgment, and awarded the property to Mrs. Hoffman upon the theory that J. W. Hoffman was in fact the plaintiff in the judgment obtained under the name of Jones.

[4] The time for appeal from the interlocutory decree having expired before the trial of this action, that judgment became final and conclusive as to J. W. Hoffman, and was notice to the appellant in this proceeding. This interlocutory decree cannot be attacked in this proceeding unless its invalidity is apparent upon its face.

[5] Although it appears from the written opinion of the learned trial judge that, in the argument before him, the interlocutory decree in the divorce proceeding was attacked upon jurisdictional grounds, appellant has not urged this point upon this appeal, and consequently respondent has made no argument in support of her claim that the court had jurisdiction to award her the property in the interlocutory decree. This court, therefore, has not had the assistance of counsel for either party in the determination of this question, and appellant will be deemed to have abandoned it. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society v. Farnham, 153 Cal. 578, 584, 96 Pac. 9, 126 Am. St. Rep. 129.

The judgment is affirmed.

GAFFEY v. WELK. (Civ. 2107.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 1, 1920.)

1. Covenants $\hookrightarrow$ 14—Vendor and purchaser $\hookrightarrow$ 343(3)—Failure of title through no fault of grantor not within covenants implied from word "grant"; no right of recovery under conveyance without general warranty.

Where property is conveyed by deed of grant, bargain, and sale, which imports only the covenants implied by the word "grant," the grantee cannot recover from the grantor a proportion of the consideration because of failure of title to an undivided interest in the property through no fault of the grantor; for neither would the covenant so implied cover any defect or failure of title not due to the grantor's acts, nor, in the absence of fraud, would the grantor be liable in damages for defect in or failure of title.

2. Vendor and purchaser $\hookrightarrow$ 343(3)—Failure of consideration authorizing recovery of payment for deed without warranty must be entire.

The failure of consideration which would entitle the grantee in a deed of grant, bargain, and sale without warranty to recover the amount paid must be an entire failure of consideration, for the payment and failure of title to an undivided interest in the property does not authorize any recovery, at least without rescission and tender of reconveyance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Philip M. Gaffey against Theodore J. Welk. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Drew Pruitt, of Los Angeles, for appellant. Jesse E. Stephens and Anderson & Anderson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an action for money had and received, based upon the failure of title to an undivided three-fourths interest in and to a parcel of land sold and conveyed by the defendant to the plaintiff.

We take the following from the defendant's brief as giving a general impression of the case:

"In April, 1910, one H. H. McCord owned an undivided one-fourth interest in the land, J. A. Crandall owned an undivided one-fourth interest, and Alex. Moncrieff owned an undivided half interest therein. In that month McCord forged a deed from Crandall and Moncrieff and their wives, purporting to convey their interest in the property to himself, which deed was duly recorded. The apparent title was vested in McCord as to the entire property. In May, 1910, McCord executed a deed to the defendant, Theodore J. Welk, purporting to convey the entire property. On August 7, 1911, the defendant herein executed a grant, bargain, and sale deed to the plaintiff, Philip M. Gaffey, without any covenant warranting the title or any other express covenants therein, purporting to convey the property for the consideration of $3,500, which was at that time paid by the plaintiff to the defendant. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendant knew of said forgeries. This was not ascertained until about two years later, when the plaintiff for the first time discovered that there was a forged deed in the chain of title, and that he only acquired an undivided one-fourth interest in the land, being the original interest owned by McCord. The property consisted of 42 lots and one block of land situated in the city of San Pedro in Los Angeles county. The property was vacant and unimproved and remained in that condition."

[1] The plaintiff, upon discovering that he had no title to three-fourths of the property, without rescinding or offering to reconvey the title he had obtained by the deed, brought this action against the defendant to recover three-fourths of the $3,500 he had paid for the land, with interest thereon, and costs. After trial the court rendered a judgment for that amount, to wit, $2,625, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the date of sale, aggregating $3,865. The defendant appeals from such judgment.

His position, broadly stated, is that, where there is a partial failure of consideration for a deed, having no other covenants in it than those implied by the use of the word "grant," the grantee cannot, without restoring the consideration, and offering to reconvey, recover from the vendor any part of the money which he has paid for the property; that he is bound by the deed as the final contract of the parties, and if it contains no warranty, a partial failure of title gives him no right to bring an action for all or a part of the purchase money paid.

The decisions rendered by the Supreme Court of California seem to be in harmony with the position taken by appellant. Thus, in Peabody v. Phelps, 9 Cal. 213, it is said:

"In the usual course of business, men insert covenants in their conveyances of real estate, when it is intended that the vendor shall answer for the goodness of the title, and it is easy to see that bad consequences may follow if the vendee shall be allowed to lay aside his deed, and have an action founded upon the conversations about the title pending the bargain." * * * When by the express terms of his conveyance, the vendor has fixed the extent of his liability, upon the failure of title, and the conveyance is accompanied with the delivery of possession of the premises sold, and there have been no false representations as to their quality, quantity, or condition, or as to the incumbrances upon them, or the rights or privileges appurtenant to them, or rents or profits arising from them, we cannot perceive any just ground upon which the purchaser, for a defect of title, instead of seeking his remedy upon the covenants of his deed, should be permitted to maintain an action for representations respecting such title, made in the negotiation for the purchase."

In Bryan v. Swain, 56 Cal. 616, it appeared that the plaintiff had sold to the defendant a certain piece of real estate, and in part payment thereof had taken a note from the vendee secured by a mortgage upon the property. The same not having been paid, he brought a suit to foreclose his mortgage, and the defendant set up as a defense to the action on the note and mortgage that the title had wholly failed as to one of the tracts of land conveyed to him. In deciding the case the Supreme Court used this language:

"This deed was in form a grant, bargain, and sale deed, and contained an express covenant, viz. for quiet and peaceable enjoyment. At the time of the execution of this deed, defendants gave plaintiff their note, which was secured by a mortgage on the land conveyed; and, the defendants failing to pay an installment that fell due upon the note, this suit was brought to foreclose the mortgage. * * * The defense is that the title to one of the tracts of land embraced in the deed was, and still is, in the government of the United States, and the only question before us is, Did that fact constitute any defense to this suit?"

"The evidence shows that there was no fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation respecting the plaintiff's title. * * *

"There can be no doubt that the plaintiff was obliged, under the agreement, to execute a good and sufficient deed, conveying the title; and if this case depended upon such agreement, the matter pleaded would be a good defense to the action. But the finding of the court is that the deed was taken and accepted in execution of the contract of August 10th. * * * The rights of the defendants, therefore, depend upon the deed, and not upon the agreement—the latter being merged in and extinguished by the former. * * *

"The deed is deemed to express the final and entire contract between the parties." * * * Therefore the defendants must look to its covenants for a defense to this action. The deed executed by plaintiff to defendants contains the covenants implied from the use of the words 'grant, bargain, and sale,' contained therein. From the use of the word 'grant' in any conveyance by which an estate of inheritance or fee simple is to be passed, the following covenants, and none other, on the part of the grantor for himself, and his heirs, to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, are implied, unless restrained by express terms contained in such conveyance:

"(1) That previous to the time of the execution of such conveyance, the grantor has not conveyed the same estate, or any right, title, or interest therein, to any person other than the grantee.

"(2) That such estate is, at the time of the execution of such conveyance, free from all incumbrances done, made, or suffered by the grantor, or any person claiming under him."

* * *

"The case fails to show a breach of any of these implied covenants; and it is not pretended that there was any breach of the express covenant for quiet enjoyment."

And the defendant was denied any relief.

See, also, Gates v. McLean, 70 Cal. 42, 11 Pac. 489; Rhorer v. Bila, 83 Cal. 54, 23 Pac. 274; Worley v. Nethercott, 91 Cal. 512, 27 Pac. 767, 25 Am. St. Rep. 209; Marshall v. Caldwell, 41 Cal. 611.

In other jurisdictions the decisions are to the same effect, thus: In Hawkins v. Wells, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 360, 43 S. W. 816, it is said:

"The deed expressed the contract between the parties; and the presumption of law is that Hawkins acted upon his own knowledge of the title, and he will not be heard to complain that he did not receive a perfect title, unless some misrepresentation was made, upon which he was authorized to, and did, rely in making the contract, that will entitle him to relief. * * * Even where there are no covenants as to title, none will be implied in this state, except as to a prior conveyance by the grantor, and that such estate is free from incumbrances, 'which include taxes, assessments and all liens upon real property.' * * * 'Where there has been no fraud, mistake, or accident, a purchaser who has taken a deed without covenants has no right, for a defect in his title, * * * to detain the purchase money, or to recover it in case of payment.'"

In Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699, it is said:

"In this class of cases, both upon principle and authority, no defect of title that does not amount to a total failure of consideration can be set up as a defense to the suit for the purchase money."

[2] Respondent, in his brief, apparently concedes the position that where there is only a partial failure of consideration the vendee cannot recover back a part of the money paid, but must rely upon the covenants of his deed, but, his position in this case is that—

"There was a total failure of consideration as to a distinct and obviously and easily severable part of the property which the defendant purported and attempted to convey to plaintiff."

And, again he states:

"It is an action for a total failure of consideration as to a definite, distinct, and several property interest, the ascertainment of which is a mere matter of mathematical computation."

There are some cases holding that where a contract relates to personal property a partial want or failure of consideration of title may be shown in reduction of damages, but we have found no well-considered case, and certainly none in this state, holding that the same rule applies as to real estate conveyed by an ordinary grant deed. The distinction is clearly stated in Bowley v. Holway, 124 Mass. 395, wherein it is said:

"In an action for the price of land sold and conveyed by a deed with the usual covenants of title, the defendant cannot, in the absence of fraud, avail himself, in defense, of a partial failure of title by way of recoupment or in reduction of damages, but his only remedy is on the covenants of the deed. * * *

"In suits to recover the price of personal property sold, it is well settled that a partial want or failure of the consideration, or a breach of the warranty of title or quality, may be shown in defense, in reduction of damages. This rule is adopted to avoid circuity of action, because all the rights of the parties growing out of the same transaction can be justly and conveniently settled in one suit."

The error, it seems to us, in the plaintiff's position, is found in the erroneous application of the phrase, "a total failure of consideration." There are cases holding that where there is a total failure of consideration no rescission is necessary before bringing an action to recover back the money paid. The consideration for what? The answer must be the consideration for the contract existing between the parties. Thus, in Richter v. Union Land & Oil Stock Co., 129 Cal. 367, 62 Pac. 39, the expression is used:

"Nor, where the failure of the consideration is total—which implies, of course, that nothing of value has been received under the contract by the party seeking to rescind—is it necessary that a formal rescission be made before bringing suit."

The consideration referred to is the consideration for the contract—in this case the deed. There was not a total failure of consideration for the deed which the plaintiff received from the defendant. It conveyed to him an undivided one-fourth interest in the property which he still retains, and does not offer to surrender.

Counsel's argument is based upon the theory that there must have been a consideration for the three-fourths of the money which he paid, and that, not having received any consideration for that part of the money, there was a total failure of consideration, but, as stated, the consideration referred to is the consideration for the delivery to him of the deed, and by no process of reasoning can it be held that the deed was without consideration.

The opening sentence of respondent's brief states his position, wherein it is said:

"This is an action for money had and received, and is based upon the total (not as stated by appellant's counsel a partial) failure of title to a distinct and severable interest in real property which defendant attempted to, but failed to, convey to plaintiff."

The error in plaintiff's position, running all through his argument, is in assuming that the expression "total failure of title to a distinct and severable interest in real property" is the equivalent of the expression "a total failure of consideration for the deed." They are not the same in meaning, and bear little resemblance to each other.

We have examined all the cases cited by counsel, but do not find any sustaining his position when the facts are carefully considered. Some of them relate to sales of personal property (as to which the rule seems to be different) and some of them were cases where there was a total failure of consideration. We deem it unnecessary to review them. The law in California seems to be settled that where there is a partial failure of consideration for a grant deed without other covenants the vendee cannot maintain assumpsit for the money paid. He is restricted to his remedy on the covenants of the deed.

Whether, under the facts disclosed by this record, the plaintiff could have rescinded the whole transaction and maintained an action to recover back the money paid, we need not consider, as it is not claimed there has been a rescission. On the record before us, we are of opinion the plaintiff was not entitled to recover anything, and therefore the judgment is reversed.

KILFOIL v. WARDEN et al. (Civ. 3157.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 10, 1920.)

1. Quieting title ☞ 10(1)—Plaintiff must succeed on strength of his own title.

The plaintiff in an action to quiet title must succeed on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of that of his adversary.

2. Quieting title ☞ 10(2)—Plaintiff must prove paper title from patentee or grantor in possession.

Where plaintiff in an action to quiet title relies solely on a paper title, the chain must be from the original patentee or some grantor in possession; and, where plaintiff merely introduced the deed to himself from M. and a deed to M. from persons not shown to have had possession or anything to do with the property at the date of their deed, the proof was insufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by John F. Kilfoil against Julia P. Warden and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

J. Irving McKenna and Catherine A. McKenna, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Joseph W. Mowell, Alex W. Davis, and Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action to quiet title. The complaint is in the usual form. The answer denies all the material allegations of the complaint, except that it is asserted that defendant Julia P. Warden "claims and asserts some right, title, or interest in and to said property adverse to plaintiff, and denies that the same are without any right, and alleges that the defendant Julia P. Warden acquired said property under and by virtue of a conveyance from the city tax and license collector of the city of Los Angeles for a delinquent assessment for the improvement of Alhambra avenue from the east boundary line of the city of Los Angeles to the southeasterly line of Mission road and other streets, as will more fully appear in the attached copy of said conveyance, and marked 'Exhibit A,' and by reference thereto made a part of this answer." Defendants asked that the title be quieted in them.

On the trial, in addition to oral testimony, the plaintiff introduced in evidence a deed to the property in question, dated January 11, 1916, and recorded with the county recorder on January 21, 1916. The grantor in this deed was one Mary Myers, a widow, and the plaintiff here was the grantee. Plaintiff then introduced a certified copy of deed executed by G. A. Dobinson and Giacomo Tononi to said Mary Myers, which deed was dated August 1, 1888, and recorded August 16, 1888. Defendants offered no evidence at the close of plaintiff's case in chief, but relied entirely on "Exhibit A," attached to their answer, and moved the court for a judgment on the following grounds:

"We have set up our deed in full and have pleaded it, and no affidavit has been filed denying it; and on the face of the pleadings we have a prima facie case."

The motion was denied, whereupon defendants rested. On rebuttal plaintiff introduced an affidavit of defendant C. D. Warden, as agent "of the owner of the certificate of sale referred to in the attached notice to redeem," showing the posting of the notice to redeem on the property, etc. In view of the record before us we think it unnecessary to quote such affidavit here. The court found in favor of the plaintiff and against defendants on all the issues, judgment was entered accordingly, and this appeal is taken therefrom.

[1, 2] Many points are urged by appellants, but under the circumstances we think it unnecessary to consider any of them. Plaintiff must succeed only on the strength of his own title, and not on the weakness of his adversary. Di Nola v. Allison, 143 Cal. 106, 76 Pac. 976, 65 L. R. A. 419, 101 Am. St. Rep. 84. When reliance is placed solely upon a paper title, the chain thereof must be from the original patentee or some grantor in possession. 32 Cyc. 1331. The plaintiff here has failed to furnish such proof. The deed offered in evidence by him, dated August 1, 1888, does not show how the grantors therein came to have anything to do with the property, and there is no evidence that they were in possession of the land so pretended to be conveyed by them at the time of the execution and delivery of such deed. Failing in these essentials, plaintiff must fail in this case. Winter v. McMillan, 87 Cal. 256, 25 Pac. 407, 22 Am. St. Rep. 243; Martin v. Lloyd, 94 Cal. 195, 29 Pac. 491; Redd v. Murry, 95 Cal. 48, 24 Pac. 841, 30 Pac. 132; Heney v. Pesoli, 109 Cal. 53, 111 Pac. 819; Di Nola v. Allison, supra; Williams v. San Pedro, 153 Cal. 44, 94 Pac. 234.

With the record before us it is legally impossible for this court to direct judgment for defendants.

EWING v. EWING. (Civ. 3172.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 5, 1920.)

Divorce — 303(3)—Evidence held to sustain order granting custody of child to father.

On appeal by a mother from an order in divorce proceedings taking from her the custody of her four year old daughter and giving it to the father, conflicting evidence held to support an order granting the custody of the child to the father.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Suit by Ople Marie Ewing against Harry Elmar Ewing. From decree awarding defendant the custody of a child in divorce proceedings, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur L. Born, of San Diego, for appellant.

Frederick A. Preston, of Los Angeles, and Clarence S. Preston, of San Diego, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. Plaintiff has appealed from an order of court in divorce proceedings taking from her the custody of her four year old daughter and giving it to the defendant, her husband.

Plaintiff was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce upon default of the defendant, and the order giving her the custody of the child was made in such interlocutory decree. Subsequently, on application by the defendant, and upon a hearing of the matter in which the claims of the respective parties were supported by numerous affidavits, the trial court changed the original order as above indicated by transferring the custody from the mother to the father. The only question raised is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the order appealed from.

The facts shown on the hearing without dispute indicate that the plaintiff and her little girl, prior to and after the interlocutory decree of divorce, lived with plaintiff's parents, who had chiefly supported and cared for the child. The evidence also tended to show that subsequent to the interlocutory decree, and before the hearing, the plaintiff had spent the night in a hotel in Pasadena with a man not her husband, and that the couple had registered as husband and wife.

There is no denial of this circumstance by the plaintiff. In the proceedings she petitions the court in the event that she is deprived of the custody of the child that it be given to the grandparents. She also, by affidavits, attacks the reputation of the defendant, by charging that he is dissipated, shiftless, and a confirmed thief, and alleges that he is arranging to take the child to Hollywood and place her in a boarding house frequented by motion picture actresses, a prizefighter, and other characters who the plaintiff thinks are unfit associates for a young child. Defendant, by his own and other affidavits, disputes the aspersions upon his own reputation and that of the boarding house in question, and, in turn, charges the grandparents with intemperate use of liquor and indulgence in vile language in the presence of the child, and as being generally unfit to be intrusted with her care and custody. On the other hand, several affidavits on behalf of the plaintiff give the grandparents a most excellent reputation.

If all that is said to the discredit of the various parties concerned could be credited, none of them would be fit to have the custody of a little girl. If all that is said in their favor is accepted as truth, either the father or the grandparents would be acceptable, and the mother seems to have only the serious indiscretion at the Pasadena hotel to her charge. Although we have the same affidavits before us as did the trial court on the hearing, it was the province of that court to pass upon the evidence, and it had some, at least, of the parties before it. Where there is such a glaring conflict in the evidence, particularly in view of the undisputed misconduct of the plaintiff, we cannot undertake to overrule the decision of the trial court.

There was no appearance for respondent on this appeal, and we are informed, outside the record, that respondent has paid no attention to the child since the order in his favor, and that she is now in the custody of the mother, who is again married. These are matters properly to be brought to the attention of the trial court, if a further change of custody is desired. We feel bound by the record as we find it.

Order affirmed.

CARTER et ux. v. BLENKIRON. (Civ. 3150.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 4, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 3, 1920.)

1. Trusts ⇨110—Evidence held insufficient to establish a constructive trust.

Evidence held to show that, when defendant purchased premises without consideration, other than an agreement to pay off the mortgage, he practiced no fraud or deceit, that the transfer was voluntary on plaintiffs' part, to prevent a purchaser of first mortgage from securing the property, on which plaintiffs had foreclosed a junior mortgage by sale, and wholly insufficient to establish a constructive trust.

2. Appeal and error ⇨843(2)—Matters not necessary to decision not considered.

Where, in an action to establish a parol trust and for accounting by alleged trustee, where a judgment for defendant should be affirmed because no trust could have been created, it becomes unnecessary to discuss other technical grounds urged to support affirmance of judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by J. H. Carter and wife against J. E. Blenkiron. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. L. Albert, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

James P. Clark, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action to establish a parol trust in real estate, and in connection therewith to compel an accounting by the alleged trustee. Judgment went for defendant, from which plaintiffs appeal.

As appears from the complaint, the action is founded upon the alleged fact that plaintiffs, relying upon defendant's promises, did, by unconditional grant deed, convey the land to defendant upon his oral agreement to pay certain indebtedness against the property, secured by a trust deed thereon, after which he would sell the same and pay to plaintiffs the purchase money received therefor, less the sum paid in satisfaction of the deed of trust and reasonable expenses in effecting such sale, all of which allegations were denied by the answer.

The court, in substance, found that, while plaintiffs made the deed to defendant, the making thereof was not accompanied, preceded, or followed by any agreement between plaintiffs and defendant, or promises made by defendant, either verbal or written, that plaintiffs, or either of them, should have or retain any interest in said land or the proceeds of the sale thereof; that said deed was not made or delivered in trust for the benefit of plaintiffs or either of them, and that defendant never agreed that he would protect plaintiffs from the indebtedness so secured by deed of trust upon said land and under which it was to be sold, or that he would sell said property and pay to plaintiffs any sum of money in excess of the mortgage debt, less the reasonable expenses of effecting such sale; that plaintiffs did not believe or rely upon any promises or agreements alleged in the complaint to have been made by defendant when they made the deed to him, and did not convey the property to defendant in trust or for the benefit of plaintiffs or either of them; and that defendant did not deceive or mislead plaintiffs in any matter or thing connected with the making of said deed, and did not practice any fraud or deceit upon plaintiffs to procure the making thereof, but that said deed was voluntarily made by plaintiffs, without consideration, "and because plaintiffs would rather that defendant should own said property than that the same should be entirely lost to them by sale" under said first deed of trust.

As disclosed by the record, these findings are based upon the following facts clearly established by ample evidence: The land in question, prior to the transactions here involved, was subject to four deeds of trust given to secure the payment of promissory notes. The first deed of trust, for some $23,000, was for the benefit of one Haas, the second and third were for the benefit of these plaintiffs, and the fourth was for the benefit of Ordway. Plaintiffs caused the property to be advertised for sale under the terms of the second and third deeds of trust, which sale took place a few days prior to October 1, 1912, at which time they as purchasers under said deeds of trust acquired title to the lands, subject, however, to the prior deed of trust given to secure payment of the note for $23,000 payable to said Haas. Realizing the effect which this sale would have upon his rights under the fourth deed of trust, Ordway acquired the note secured by the first deed of trust and proceeded to advertise the property for sale under the terms thereof, which sale, as advertised, was to be made at 11 o'clock a. m. on October 1, 1912. For the purpose of raising money to protect their interest in the property, and after futile efforts to procure a loan elsewhere, plaintiff J. H. Carter, on September 30, 1912, in company with a broker, went to an office, where he for the first time met defendant, and from whom he solicited a loan of money wherewith to pay the indebtedness for which the property was about to be sold. Defendant declined to consider the making of the loan, and thereupon Carter proposed to sell to him plaintiffs' interest in the land for $500. The representations as to the condition and character of the land were such that defendant caused Charles Nowlin to go to Imperial county, where the land was located, to examine the same and verify plaintiffs' representations. In the forenoon of October 1, 1912, plaintiffs went to the office of defendant, where they caused a grant deed to be prepared, which they signed and acknowledged, leaving it with defendant for his acceptance, subject to a favorable report by Nowlin. On the morning of October 1st the sale was postponed to 11 o'clock a. m. the next day, prior to which time, and on October 1st, Nowlin made an adverse report as to the character and condition of the land, in addition to which defendant learned the acreage of the land was considerably less than as represented by plaintiffs, and as a means of obtaining water for irrigation it carried no water stock, contrary to Mr. Carter's representations.

By reason of these facts defendant declined to purchase the property, or have anything further to do with the matter, and returned the deed to said plaintiff. During the negotiations Carter repeatedly expressed a feeling of bitterness towards Ordway, saying in substance that the land was worth more than the debt, and that Ordway, whom he designated as "that skinner," had gone over his head and bought the first trust deed, to beat him out of the property, due to which fact he said he would rather anybody other than Ordway should have the land, and that he would rather defendant take it as a gift than that Ordway should profit by the sale. Apparently with no purpose other than curiosity, the parties, with their respective friends, proceeded to the place where the land was to be sold, and on the way Carter tendered the deed to defendant, who said, "Now, Mr. Carter, I tell you right now, if I take hold of this deal, I want it distinctly understood I am under no obligations to you whatever," to which Carter replied, "All right;" the making of which statement is not denied by Carter, but in substance admitted. On their arrival, the trustee was preparing to call the sale, and Ordway, who was the owner of the water stock attached to the property, was present, ready to bid the sum due him under his deed of trust. Not only plaintiff Carter and his friends, but friends of defendant, were expressing and had theretofore expressed the opinion that the land was worth more than the indebtedness, even without the water stock; and, thus urged, defendant inquired of Ordway what he would take for the water stock, and, the price fixed being satisfactory to him, he then concluded to and did agree to pay some $24,000 in liquidation of the indebtedness, as a result of which the making of the sale was abandoned, and defendant acquired title to the property through the deed given him by plaintiffs, subject, however, to certain amounts due for taxes.

These and other minor facts which the evidence tends to prove justified the court in concluding that plaintiffs, since they were unable to protect the land from the sale, and prompted by a desire at all events to circumvent the supposed design of Ordway in buying the note secured by the deed of trust and procuring a sale of the property as a means of acquiring title thereto, gave the deed to defendant knowingly and intentionally, making their interest in the property the subject of a gift to him, who, when the deed thereto was tendered, and in order to prevent any misunderstandings due to the former negotiations, admittedly told plaintiffs that, if he took hold of the deal, he wanted it distinctly understood that he was under no obligation whatever to them.

[1] As found by the court, there were no promises made by defendant for plaintiffs' benefit, and he practiced no fraud or deceit whereby they were induced to convey the property to him. Their act in so doing was voluntary and prompted by the desire and for the avowed purpose of circumventing Ordway in deriving any benefit or profit from acts which they felt were unwarranted and oppressive towards them. Hence there is no ground for appellants' claim that a constructive trust in favor of plaintiffs was created.

[2] There are other technical grounds urged by respondent, upon which it is claimed the judgment should be affirmed; but since, upon our view of the findings, no trust of any kind could be deemed to have been created, it is unnecessary to discuss the same.

The judgment is affirmed.

Settlement agreement of insurance carrier with dependent of deceased employé, that payment of a certain amount per week in accordance with the Workmen's Compensation Act should be made so long as required by that act, not being based on consideration of forbearance to sue, but on mutual mistake that the employé, though injured while engaged in interstate commerce, was within the scope of the act, was without consideration.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Josephine W. Nelson against the London Guarantee & Accident Company, Limited. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. D. Schaffer, of San Francisco (Anthony Podesta, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Walter H. Linforth, of San Francisco, and Carroll S. Bucher, of Salt Lake City, Utah, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant after an order of the trial court sustaining its demurrer to plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend.

The allegations of the complaint are that on the 12th day of May, 1914, plaintiff's husband, during the course of his employment as a stevedore for the Matson Navigation Company, was killed while loading a vessel of that company in the port of San Francisco, that his average weekly wage at that time was $20, and that plaintiff was his sole dependent. It is also alleged:

That prior to that time the defendant had entered into an agreement with the Matson Navigation Company, promising to pay to the dependents of employes of that company all sums of money due under the "Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act" arising out of personal injuries, including death, sustained by such employes in the course of their employment. That for a period of 20 weeks subsequent to May 12, 1914, defendant paid to plaintiff the sum of $13 a week, or a total of $260, and that on the 30th day of September, 1914, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement in writing respecting the further payment of compensation to plaintiff, and adjusting the amount and manner of payment thereof. That such agreement provided in part as follows:

"The payment of $13 each week in accordance with Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act [Laws 1913, p. 279] will be made so long as required by said act."

That said agreement was approved by the Industrial Accident Commission of the state of California, and for a period of 139 weeks subsequent to the 30th day of September, 1914, defendant paid to plaintiff $13 per week, or a total sum of $1,807, and that on the 29th day of May, 1917, defendant notified plaintiff that it had abandoned and repudiated said agreement and that no further payments would be made thereunder. It is then alleged that the sum of $1,053 is still due under the agreement by reason of the terms of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, which called for the payment of three times the average annual earnings of the decedent, and demand was made for judgment in that amount.

Respondent justifies its repudiation of the agreement upon the ground that subsequent to its execution the Supreme Court of the United States ruled that the Industrial Accident Commission of the state had no jurisdiction over accidents occurring upon vessels engaged in interstate commerce in navigable waters. Southern Pacific Co. v. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205, 37 Sup. Ct. 524, 61 L. Ed. 1086, L. R. A. 1918C, 451, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 900. It is conceded that appellant's husband was employed in interstate commerce at the time of the injury. From this it is argued that no liability attached to the respondent for the payment of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of this state, and that therefore there was no consideration for the settlement agreement made in 1914. The purpose of the settlement agreement undoubtedly was to fix the amount of compensation to be paid on account of the accident and the time and manner of payment. It was not a settlement of any disputed claim or a compromise of a doubtful right, both parties at the time having assumed that the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act applied to accidents of this nature, and that the liability of the respondent to pay was fixed by the terms of that act. The liability of the respondent was not disputed at that time, and the right of the appellant to receive compensation in accordance with the terms of the said act was not doubted until after the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding that the state commission had no jurisdiction over accidents of that nature.

But it appears from the allegations of the complaint that respondent never contracted to make any payments, except of such sums as the Matson Navigation Company might be obligated to pay under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act. Under the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Jensen Case, that company was not obligated to pay under the act for injuries to its employes sustained while engaged in interstate commerce; but its liability, if any, was a common-law liability only, which was not covered by respondent's insurance contract. Thus neither the appellant nor the Matson Navigation Company could have maintained an action on the insurance contract for compensation for such injury. The settlement agreement was therefore without consideration. It was in no sense a contract based on the consideration of forbearance to sue, but was based upon a mistake of both law and fact. City Street Improvement Co. v. Pearson, 185 Pac. 962.

For these reasons the judgment is affirmed.

Where a building erected by plaintiff's husband, from whom she traced title, covered the small strip in controversy and the deed under which plaintiff's husband took was at least color of title, five years' possession and payment of taxes entitled plaintiff to the premises, regardless of whether the building had been located by plaintiff's husband on an agreed line, and hence, in suit to quiet title, a finding that the building was located on the agreed line, etc., could be rejected as surplusage without affecting judgment for plaintiff.

2. Appeal and error §1042(1)—Striking of cross-complaint harmless error, where facts were provable under answer.

Where defendants might under their answer have proven any facts which they could have proven under the cross-complaint and could have been afforded the same relief, the granting of plaintiff's motion to strike out the cross-complaint, if technically erroneous, was harmless.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Merle J. Rogers, Judge.

Action by Mahalla Gallentine against F. J. Hickey and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Argabrite & Drapeau, of Ventura, for appellants.

Bowker & Sheridan, of Ventura, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The defendants appeal from a decree quieting the plaintiff's title to a lot of land in the principal business block in the town of Ojai, formerly known as Nordhoff, in Ventura county. The decree also required the removal of a wall built within the exterior boundaries of the plaintiff's lot.

The dispute concerned a strip of land 1.67 feet wide along the division line between the lots of the plaintiff and the defendants. According to an old map, these lots were near the middle of a block shown on the map to have a frontage of 472 feet, but by actual measurement it was only 470.33 feet long. Early deeds called for measurements from the southeast corner of the block to the nearest corners of lots conveyed, or boundary lines of earlier conveyed lots so located. The descriptions used in the deeds in the plaintiff's chain of title all related directly or indirectly to the southeast corner of the block. So, also, did the earlier deeds in the defendants' chain of title; but in a deed containing such a reference a predecessor of the defendants added a recital calling for a distance from the southwest corner of the block computed from the erroneous map call, and therefore 1.67 feet too long. Subsequent grantees reversed the old descriptions, using the erroneous call from the southwest corner of the block and thereby causing an apparent overlapping of the western lot 1.67 feet on the eastern lot.

The plaintiff's husband, from whom she derived title and possession, in 1911, acquired his lot by the ancient description. There was then a store building on the lot afterwards acquired by the defendants. The plaintiff's husband caused a survey to be made in accordance with his deed and with the plaintiff in that year built a store on his lot. In the erection of his building two things were done which have a direct bearing on the questions involved in this suit: A concrete foundation was built for the Gallentine store, and overhanging eaves of the older store were cut away to permit the erection of the Gallentine building on the west line of the plaintiff's lot. At that time there was some talk between Mrs. Gallentine, acting on behalf of herself and her husband, with one of the predecessors in interest of the defendants, then a record owner of the land and an occupant of the old store, concerning the cost of the survey, and he said he made no claim against the Gallentines. One of the defendants testified, in effect, that when they bought they had a survey made and got their full frontage without considering any part of the land covered by the Gallentine building. Both buildings were destroyed by fire in 1917, but the concrete foundation built by Gallentine remained in place. Thereafter, and shortly before the commencement of this suit, the defendants started to build a new east wall 1.67 feet east of the old division line, marked by the old buildings, as shown by the remaining concrete foundation. The plaintiff testified that, from 1911 until her building was burned in 1917, it was occupied by tenants from whom she collected all rents, and that for the same period, and thereafter until the time of the trial, she had paid all taxes on the lot to which she claimed title.

The findings were in favor of the plaintiff as to ownership and against the claims of the defendants. The court also found the facts concerning the construction of the concrete foundation; that at that time there was a dispute in regard to the true location of the division line which was settled by the agreement of the then owners; and that the plaintiff had been in open, peaceable, notorious, and continuous occupation of the property for more than five years paying taxes. Conclusions of law and judgment followed the findings.

APPROVED FOR PUBLICATION

[1] The appellants' chief contention is in relation to the finding concerning the agreement locating the true line between the lots. The finding may be entirely disregarded as surplusage without affecting the judgment. The ultimate finding of ownership is supported by the deeds, as well as by the evidence that the plaintiff and her husband entered at least under color of title and remained in complete domination of the land under a claim of right openly, notoriously, and peaceably, paying taxes for the full period which would have given the plaintiff title by prescription. Under the deeds, if there was no dispute in regard to the location of the division line, there was no basis for an agreement concerning what both parties recognized as the fact, namely, that the plaintiff's west lot line was where both her predecessor's deed and the survey showed it to be. That line was marked on the ground by the foundation, and the trial court was correct in determining in effect that there is no more reason now for a dispute on the subject than there was in 1911.

There are numerous contentions concerning claimed errors in rulings on evidence. Counsel for the appellants have contented themselves largely in asserting that the trial court erred. The entire record has been carefully examined, and it does not appear that any of the rulings was erroneous or injurious to the appellants. It is wholly unnecessary to set forth the evidence in detail or to discuss at length the contentions on the part of the appellants in this regard.

It is contended that the defendants' motion for nonsuit should have been granted and that their motion for a new trial should not have been denied. The same argument was made under each of these contentions as that made concerning the claimed insufficiency of the evidence, and on the motion for a new trial the rulings on evidence were no doubt considered. In view of what has been said, it does not appear that there was error in either matter.

[2] It is also contended that the trial court erred in granting the plaintiff's motion to strike out a cross-complaint filed with the answer. In their answer the defendants affirmatively alleged that they owned the lot described in such a manner as to overlap the plaintiff's lot. In the cross-complaint the same allegations were made. The defendants were afforded an opportunity under their answer to prove any facts they might have proved under the cross-complaint. If the judgment had been against the plaintiff, the defendants would have been as completely protected as by a judgment in their favor. If there was technical error, after the trial in such a case as this, judgment for the plaintiff will not be reversed on that ground alone. This exact question has heretofore been decided by the Supreme Court adversely to the claim of the appellants. Hanson v. Goldsmith, 170 Cal. 512-518, 150 Pac. 364.

The judgment is affirmed.

RAMIREZ v. UNITED FIREMEN'S INS. CO. OF PHILADELPHIA et al.
(Civ. 2751.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 6, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 3, 1920.)

1. Insurance ⇨282(8)—Condition of ownership in fire policy not breached by one in possession under contract to purchase.

There was no breach of the policy condition of ownership of the property insured, because he was in possession merely under a contract to purchase the property on monthly installments, though, owing to its informal character, he and the seller later entered into a more formal and complete contract in reference to the sale.

2. Insurance ⇨558(2)—Preliminary proof of loss within 60 days held waived by fire insurer.

Statement of fire insurer's agent, after loss to insured, that he would attend to giving notice to company, followed by appearance of adjuster, who instructed insured as to making plat of rooms, with inventory of contents, held a waiver of policy provision insured should render preliminary proof of loss within 60 days, though adjuster later induced insured to sign stipulation, which he did not understand, on representation it was act necessary in effecting settlement.

Appeal from Superior Court; San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by A. C. Ramirez against the United Firemen's Insurance Company and the British America Assurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. W. Hindman, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

A. S. Maloney and Fred A. Wilson, both of San Bernardino, for respondent.

SHAW, J. On June 16 and 17, 1915, the defendant United Firemen's Insurance company of Philadelphia issued to plaintiff two policies of fire insurance, one in the sum of $350 upon his dwelling house, and one for $1,000 on the furniture therein. Thereafter, by a contract of reinsurance, the defendant British America Assurance Company entered into a contract whereby it assumed the obligations of said first-named company. Nearly two years thereafter, to wit, May 2, 1917, the house and contents were destroyed by fire, and, in an action brought by plaintiff upon the policies, judgment was rendered in his favor for $1,000, from which defendants appeal.

[1] Appellants base their position upon two clauses of the policy; one relating to the title of the insured, and the other to the furnishing by him of sworn proofs of loss within a certain time. The policy contained, among other provisions, the following:

"This entire policy shall be void, * * * if the interest of the insured be other than unconditional and sole ownership."

Following the allegation of the complaint, the court found:

"That at the time of the issuance of said policies of insurance the plaintiff was, and continuously thereafter up to the time of the destruction thereof by fire on the 2d day of May, 1917," was the unconditional and sole owner of the property insured.

This finding is attacked upon the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the same. While there is some conflict in the testimony, it appears from that produced by plaintiff that, while not the record owner of the property, he was at the time of the issuance of the policies in possession thereof under a contract to purchase the same upon monthly payments therefor, which agreement or contract was entered into and possession of the property taken prior to the issuance of the policies. This agreement was destroyed in the fire, but plaintiff's testimony tends to show that under the memorandum he entered into possession of the property, and was thereby obligated to pay $1,150 for the same, $50 of which was paid in cash and the remainder thereof to be paid at the rate of $10 per month, in consideration of which the vendor obligated himself, upon the completion of such payments, to convey the property to plaintiff. The fact that, owing to its informal character, the vendor and vendee, at a later date, entered into a more formal and complete contract in reference to the sale, in no wise detracts from the legal effect of the first contract under which, as appears from plaintiff's testimony, such mutual obligations were assumed by the parties, and, upon the authority of McCullough v. Home Insurance Co., 155 Cal. 659, 102 Pac. 814, 18 Ann. Cas. 862, and cases there cited, this must be deemed sufficient to justify the finding of the court that there was no breach of the condition of ownership of the property in plaintiff.

[2] The policies contained a provision that—

"Within sixty days after the commencement of the fire the insured shall render to the company at its main office in California named herein preliminary proof of loss consisting of a written statement signed and sworn to by him setting forth: (a) His knowledge and belief as to the origin of the fire; (b) the interest of the insured and of all others in the property."

This condition was not complied with, but the court found, in substance, that defendants and each of them had actual knowledge and notice of said loss and actual knowledge of the extent thereof, and that defendants and their agents, by reason of their conduct and statements to plaintiff, misled him as to the necessity of furnishing such proofs, and their acts, statements, and conduct constituted a waiver of the performance by plaintiff of the condition of said policies as to the making of such proofs. These findings are likewise attacked upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support them. The evidence bearing upon this issue shows that immediately after the fire plaintiff saw Mr. Poole, the agent through whom he had procured the insurance policies, and had a conversation with him in regard to the giving and making of proof, wherein Poole told him "the company had by law 60 days, and he said, 'You will hear from them,'" and that Poole said he would attend to giving the notice; and in response to the question, "Did you rely upon him to inform the company?" answered, "I did; I relied upon him all the time." Mr. Poole did notify the company of the loss, in response to which Mr. Cote, the company's adjuster, appeared on the scene two or three days after the fire, and, ascertaining that the result of the fire was a total loss of the property, drew a plan of the rooms in the house and told plaintiff to list the articles in each room, with the value thereof, and give it to him, or send it to the company, with which demand plaintiff, after making the inventory in the manner required by the adjuster, complied. Thereafter the adjuster met plaintiff while he was engaged in driving a delivery wagon, and presented to him a document which, upon representation that it was necessary that he sign it in order "to get this thing straightened up, fire insurance straightened up," he signed. Thereupon Mr. Cote left, and plaintiff did not see him again.

This paper which plaintiff signed was a stipulation to the effect that no step or measure taken and no act of the company or its agents should be deemed a waiver upon the part of the company of any of the conditions of the policies, unless the same were waived in writing by the president of the company. This agreement has no bearing upon the question before us. It has no reference to representations, acts, or conduct of the company or its agents calculated to lead the insured into the belief that such proofs were not required; indeed, to so hold would be in effect to sustain what might be the very means of accomplishing an intentional fraud upon plaintiff. In Joyce on Insurance, vol. 5, § 3354, it is said:

"The general rule seems to be, however, that any act or series of acts upon the part of the insurer which tend to create a belief in the mind of the claimant under the policy that notice need not be given, or that proofs of loss will be unnecessary, will operate as a waiver, and release such claimant from a compliance with the provision."

And in Cooley's Briefs on Insurance, vol. 4, p. 3526, it is said:

"If the company investigates the loss on its own account, and so conducts itself with relation thereto as to show a satisfaction with the knowledge thus obtained, or to induce reasonable belief in insured that it is so satisfied, and does not desire formal notice or proofs, it will amount to a waiver of such formalities."

To the same effect see Ætna Insurance Co. v. Shryer et al., 85 Ind. 364, Massock v. Royal Insurance Co., 196 Ill. App. 394, and Sidebotham v. Merchants' Fire Association, 41 Wash. 436, 83 Pac. 1028.

That the statement of the insurance agent to the effect that he would attend to the matter of giving notice to the company, followed a few days thereafter by the appearance of the adjuster, who instructed plaintiff as to the making of a plat of the rooms, and directed him to make out an inventory showing the articles in each room, together with the value thereof, and to either give it to him or send it to the company, with which demand plaintiff complied, was well calculated to and did lead him to believe that a settlement would be made without further notice or proof, there can be no doubt; indeed, it is a fair inference that such was the purpose of the adjuster. The subsequent act of the adjuster in having plaintiff sign the stipulation, the words of which he says he did not understand, upon the representation that it was an act necessary in effecting the settlement, led him to believe that the company was demanding all that he was to do in order to obtain compensation for the loss of his property. Thus misled, he took no further steps until the expiration of the 60 days, when, hearing nothing further from the company, he wrote them, in response to which letter Mr. Cote, the adjuster, tersely stated that the "company denies all liability under the policies."

Where the question of the waiver of such provision is involved, an appellate court should not, in order to reverse the judgment, scan too closely the evidence upon which the trial court refused to declare a technical forfeiture. This is especially true where, as in the instant case, the plaintiff, due to the acts and conduct of defendants and their agents in assuming a duty toward him not devolving upon them, was thereby led to believe they had directed his attention to the doing of all that was required to entitle him to compensation for the loss sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

SEELYE v. HARVEY. (Civ. 2555.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 5, 1920.)

1. Assault and battery ☞35—Evidence in civil action held to sustain findings for plaintiff.

Evidence in civil action held amply sufficient to support findings of an unprovoked, willful, and malicious assault and battery to plaintiff, resulting in his injury.

2. Assault and battery ☞35—Evidence that plaintiff was abusive and threatening held insufficient.

That plaintiff, in civil action for assault and battery, entered a room where defendant was at work, although it was placarded "no admission," even though plaintiff was a trespasser, though he testifies he did not know such notice was posted, where the evidence showed that he promptly tried to leave and to escape defendant on being told to get out, the claim that he was abusive and threatening in his manner is not substantiated.

3. Appeal and error ☞1050(2)—Testimony in assault case that injury affected plaintiff's business, and that his disposition was good, held harmless.

In a civil action for assault and battery, testimony that plaintiff's business was affected by his injuries, and that his natural disposition for peace and quiet was good, held immaterial and harmless in the light of all the facts.

4. Depositions ☞13—Admission upon showing that witness unable to attend is within court's discretion.

The admission of a deposition of a witness on the showing made of her being unable to attend court was well within the discretion of the trial court.

5. Assault and battery ☞40—$815 held excessive, where injuries slight and testimony of financial loss vague.

In a civil action for assault and battery, where the testimony of plaintiff's physician did not present a serious condition—some bruises and contusions, no bones broken, no fractures or dislocations, no permanent injuries, but some mental suffering—and plaintiff's own testimony as to amount of financial loss was vague and indefinite, an allowance of $815 as actual damages held excessive.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by O. L. Seelye against A. C. Harvey. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed if plaintiff within 30 days files a remittitur; otherwise reversed, and new trial granted.

Paul W. Schenck, and Richard Kittrelle, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. H. Jolliffe and Archie D. Mitchell, both of Ontario, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This appeal is upon a judgment for damages from assault and battery. The court on the trial found that the assault and battery had been committed by defendant upon the plaintiff, that the acts complained of were without cause or provocation, and that they were done maliciously and with intent to humiliate, vex, annoy, and injure the plaintiff. Judgment was for $815 actual damages, and $500 exemplary damages.

[1] The evidence is amply sufficient to support the findings of an unprovoked, willful, and malicious assault and battery. According to plaintiff's testimony, he visited the fruit-canning establishment of which the defendant was manager to see him regarding some peaches consigned to the cannery by plaintiff, which had been rejected. Not finding defendant in the office, he hunted him up on the grounds, and was told by defendant that he (defendant) was busy, and to wait for him. After waiting a considerable time, plaintiff again sought the defendant, and this time was directed to the workroom of the cannery. He again approached defendant and asked to see him in the office, whereupon, as plaintiff testifies, "he went into a rage; he says, 'Damn you; get out of here or I will kill you,' and commenced working his fists." Plaintiff turned away and started for the door, the defendant following him, striking him in the back with his fist; and his wife, who was present, having caught him by the arm, told him not to make a fool of himself. He continued, however, to pursue plaintiff, kicking and striking at him. The evidence further shows that plaintiff was bruised and injured, suffered humiliation and nervous shock, was confined to his bed a number of days under the care of a physician, and was for a long period more or less incapacitated for his work as manager of a fruit ranch. Plaintiff's own narrative is substantially corroborated by other witnesses, and the rebuttal is not very complete or convincing.

[2] The claim that plaintiff was abusive and threatening in his manner is not substantiated. It is alleged that the room where the assault occurred was placarded "No Admission," and that plaintiff was a trespasser. Even so, he testifies that he did not know it was so posted, and the evidence shows that he promptly tried to leave and to escape defendant on being told to get out.

[3, 4] There was no prejudicial error in the admission of evidence. The testimony that plaintiff's business was affected by his injuries, and that his natural disposition for peace and quiet was good, was immaterial and harmless, in the light of all the facts of the case. The admission of the deposition of the witness Edna Bennett Allen, on the showing made of her being unable to attend in court, was well within the discretion of the court.

[5] We are of the opinion that the court was justified in its judgment of $500 as exemplary damages. Our only doubt as to the correctness of the judgment is with regard to the allowance of $815 as actual damages. The testimony of plaintiff's physician did not present a very serious condition—some bruises and contusions; no bones broken; no fractures or dislocations; no permanent injuries; some mental suffering. The plaintiff's own testimony as to the amount of financial loss occasioned is rather vague and indefinite. His claim that he paid out about $800 for extra help in excess of that which would have been necessary had he been personally fit is rather conjectural. Our conclusion is that the judgment is excessive.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial granted, unless plaintiff, within 30 days after filing of remittitur, remits from his judgment the sum of $500. If such amount be so remitted, the judgment as so reduced will stand affirmed.

BOTWIN v. WISE et al. (Civ. 3239.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 9, 1920.)

1. Estoppel $\S$ 68(5)—Contest of government land claim by purchaser from claimant no defense to specific performance.

Where grantee, under a contract for transfer of land after payment of pre-emption money to the government, contested grantor's right on the ground that he was not a citizen, and the contest was settled in grantor's favor, purchaser had cleared grantor's title, and such contest is not a defense to an action for specific performance of the sale contract.

2. Public lands $\S$ 139—Contract to sell homestead land claim after receiving patent not void.

A contract to sell an undivided one-half interest in a homestead claim which grantor was holding in good faith, transfer to be made after grantor had exercised his right of pre-emption and secured government patent, is not illegal and void, and not in violation of United States statutes.

3. Costs $\S$ 260(4)—Damages allowed for appeal without merit, made for delay.

Where appellant filed no briefs replying to respondent's brief, and no stipulation was entered that the matter should be submitted on the briefs as filed, and respondent diligently defended the appeal in which the court found there was no merit and no reason except for delay, the respondent may be allowed damages on account of the appeal.
